his liberalitie toward vs: Yet because he of his tender kindnesse doth not examine them by extremitie of lawe, he taketh them as if they were most pure, and therefore though without merite, he rewardeth them with infinite benefis both of this present life and of the life to come. For I doe not allowe the distinction set by men otherwise learned and godly: that good workes deserue the graces that are giuen vs in this life, & that eternall life is the reward of faith alone. For the Lord doth commonly alwaie set in heauen the reward of labours and the crowne of battel. Againe, to giue it so to the merite of workes, that it be taken away from grace, that the Lord heapeth vs with graces vpon graces, is against the doctrine of the Scripture. For though Christ saith that to him that hath, shall bee giuen, and that the faithfull and good seruant which hath shewed himselfe faithfull in fewethings, shall bee set ouer many: yet he also sheweth in another place, that the encreases of the faithfull are the giftes of his free goodnes. All yee that thirst (saith he) come to the waters: and yee that haue not money, come and buy nulke and hony without money & without any exchange. Whatsoeuer therefore is nowe giuen to the faithfull for helpe of saluation, yea and blessednes it selfe, is the meere liberalitie of God: yet both in this and in those he testifieth that he hath consideration of workes: because to testifie the greatnesse of his loue toward vs, he vouchsafeth to graunt such honour not onely to vs, but also to the gifts which he hath giuen vs.

Matth. 25. 21. & 29

Esa. 55. 1.

5 If these things had in the ages past bene handled and disposed in such order as they ought to haue bene, there had neuer risen so many troubles and dissensions. Paul saith, that in the building of Christian doctrine, we must keepe still that foundation which he had laid among the Corinthians, beside which no other can be laide: and that the same foundation is Iesus Christ. What manner of foundation haue wee in Christ? is it that he was to vs the beginning of saluation: that the fulfilling thereof should follow of our selues? and hath he but onely opened the way, by which wee should go foreward of our owne strength? Not so: but, as he said a litle before, when we acknowledge him, he is to vs righteousnes. No man therefore is well founded in Christ, but he that hath full righteousnesse in him: forasmuch as the Apostle saith not that he was sent to helpe vs to obtaine righteousnesse, but that he himselfe might be our righteousnes. Namely, that wee are chosen in him from eternitie before the making of the worlde, by no deseruing of ours, but according to the purpose of the good pleasure of God: that by his death we are redeemed from the damnation of death, and deliuered from destruction: that in him we are adopted of the heauenlic father into children and heires: that by his blood we are reconciled to the Father: that being giuen to him to be kept we are deliuered from perill of perishing and of being lost: that being so engrafted in him, we are alreadie after a certaine manner partakers of eternall life, being entred into the kingdome of God by hope: and yet more: that hauing obtained such partaking of him, howsoeuer we be yet fooles in our selues, he is wisdom for vs before God: howsoeuer we be sinners, he is righteousnesse for vs: howsoeuer wee be vncleane, he is cleainnesse for vs: howsoeuer wee be weake, howsoeuer vnarmed & lying open in danger of Sathan, yet ours is the power which is giuen him in heauen and earth, whereby he may tread downe Sathan for vs, and breake the gates of hels: howsoeuer we still carie about with vs the body of death, yet he is life for vs: briefly that all his things are ours, and we in him haue all things, in our selues nothing. Vpon this foundation, I say, it behooueth that we be bulded, if we will encrease into a holy temple to the Lord.

Christ is such a foundation that being bulded vpon him wee cannot rest any thing vpon the worthinesse of our own works.

force, that whatsoever is done without faith, is sinne : as though there may be good fruites of an euil tree. But what haue these most pestilent Sophisters left to Christ wherein he may shew foorth his power? They say that he hath deserued for vs the first grace, namely the occasion of deseruing : that it is now our part not to faile the occasion offered. O desperate shamelesse of yugodlinesse. Who would haue thought that men profeking the name of Christ, durst to strip him naked of his power, and in a maner tread him vnder foote? This testimonie is ech where spoken of him, that all they are iustified that beleue in him : these fellowes teach, that there commeth from him no other benefite, but this, that the way is opened to euery man to iustifie himselfe. But I would to God they tasted what these sayings meane : that all they haue life that haue the Sonne of God : that whosouer beleueth, is already passed from death into life, that we are iustified by his grace, that we might be made heires of eternall life : that the faithfull haue Christ abiding in them, by whom they cleane fast to God : that they which are partakers of his life, do sit with him in heauenly places : that they are transplanted into the kingdome of God, and haue obtained saluation and innumerable other such. For they do not declare, that there commeth by the faith of Christ nothing but the power to obtaine righteoufnesse or saluation, but that they are both giuen to vs. Therefore so soone as thou art by faith engrafted into Christ, thou art already made the sonne of God, the heire of heauen, partaker of righteousnes, possessor of life, and (that their lies may be better confuted) thou hast not obtained the fit ability to deserue, but euen all the deseruings of Christ : for they are communicated to thee.

7 So the Sorbonicall schooles, the mothers of all errours, haue taken from vs the iustification of faith which is the summe of all godlinesse. They grant verily in word, that man is iustified by formed faith : but this they afterward expound, because good workes haue of faith this that they auaille to righteoufnesse : that they seeme in a manner to name faith in mockage, sith without great enuiousnesse it could not be passed ouer in silence, seeing it is so oft repeated of the Scripture. And not yet contented, they do in the praise of good workes priuily steale from God somewhat to giue away to man. Because they see that good workes little auaille to aduance man, and that they cannot be properly called Merits, if they be accounted the fruites of the grace of God : they picke them out of the strength of free will, oyle forsooth out of a stone. And they denie not in dedde that the principall cause of them is in grace : but they affirme that thereby is not excluded free will, by which is all merite. And this not onlie the latter Sophisters do teach, but also their Pythagoras, Lombard : whom if you compare with these men, you may say to be found witted and sober. It was truly a point of maruellous blindness, that when they had Augustine so oft in their mouth, they sawe not with how great carefullnesse that man provided that no peece of the glorie of good workes were it neuer so little, should be conueyed to men. Here before where we entreated of free will, we recited certaine testimonies of his to this purpose, of which sort there are oftentimes founde manie like in his writings, as when he forbiddeth vs that we should no where boast of our merites, because euen they also are the giftes of God : And when he writeth that all our merite is only of grace, that it is not gotten by our sufficiency, but is all made by grace, &c. It is no maruell that Lombard was blind at the light of the Scripture, in which it appeareth that he was not so well practised. Yet nothing could be desired more plainly against him and his disciples, than this word of the Apostle. For when he forbiddeth Christians all glorying, he adioineth a reason why it is not lawfull to glorie : because we are that handwoike of God, created to all good workes, that we should walke in them. Sith therefore there commeth out of vs no good thing, but in so much as we be regenerate : and our regeneration is wholie of God without exception : there is no right why we should claime to our selues one ounce in good workes. whereas they continually call vpon good workes, in the meane time they so instruct consciences, that they neuer dare haue affiance, that they haue God well pleased and fauourable to their workes. But contrariwise we, without making mention of any Merite, do yet by our doctrine raise vp the courages of the faithfull with singular comfort, when we teach them that in their workes they please God, and are undoubtedly accepted vnto him. Yea and also here we require that no man attempt or go about any worke without faith, that is to saie, vnlesse he do first with assured confidence of mind determine that he shall please God.

8 Wherefore let vs not suffer our selues to be led so much as one haire breadth away from this onely foundation: which being laid, wise builders do afterward well and orderly build vpon it. For if there be neede of doctrine and exhortation, they put men in mind, that the sonne of God hath appeared to this end, that he might destroy the workes of the diuell: that they should not sin which are of God, that the time past is enough for the fulfilling of the desires of the Gentiles: that the elect of God are vessels of mercy chosen out vnto honour, which ought to be made cleane from all filthinesse. But all is spoken at once, when it is shewed that Christ will haue such disciples, which forsaking themselves, and taking vp their crosse, doe followe him. He that hath forsaken himselfe, hath cut off the roote of all euils, that he may no more seeke those things that are his owne. He that hath taken vp his crosse, hath framed himselfe to all patience and mildnesse. But the example of Christ containeth both these and all other duties of godlines and holinesse. He shewed himselfe obedient to his father, euen to the death: he was wholly occupied in doing the workes of God: he with his whole heart breathed out the glorie of his father: he gaue his soule for his brethren: he both did good and wished good to his enemies. If there be neede of comfort, these will bring maruelous comfort, that we be in affliction, but we are not made carefull: that we labour, but we are not forsaken: we are brought low, but we are not confounded: we are throned downe, but we do not perish: alway bearing about with vs in our body the mortifying of Iesus Christ, that the life of Iesus may be manifestly shewed in vs, that if we be dead with him, we shall also liue together with him: if we suffer with him, we shall also reigne together with him: that we be so fashioned like to his sufferings, till we attaine to the likenesse of his resurrection: For as much as the Father hath predestinate these to be fashioned like the image of his sonne, whom, in him he hath chosen, that he may be the first begotten among all his brethren: and therefore that neither death, nor present things, nor things to come, shall seuer vs from the loue of God which is in Christ: but rather all things shall turne to vs to good and to saluation. Lo, we do not iustifie a man by workes before God: but we say, that all they that are of God, are regenerate and made a new creature, that they may passe out of the kingdome of sinne into the kingdome of righteousnes, and that by this testimonie they make their calling certaine, and are iudged as trees by the fruites.

The xvj. Chapter.

A consultation of the slanders, whereby the Tapsis go about to bring this doctrine in hatred.

WITH this one word may the shamelesnesse of certaine vngodlie men be confuted, which slander vs with saying that we destroy good workes, and doe draw men awaie from the following of them, when we say that they are not iustified by workes: nor doe deserue saluation: and againe, that we make too easie a way to righteousnesse, when we teach that it lieth in the free forgiveness of finnes, and that we doe by this enuencement allure men to sinne, which are of their owne will too much enclined thereto already. These slanders (I say) are with that one word sufficiently confuted: yet I will briefly answer to them both. They alleage that by the iustification of faith, good workes are destroyed. I leaue vnspoken, what manner of men be these zealous louers of good workes which doe so backbite vs. Let them haue licence as freely to raile as they doe licentiously infect the whole world with the filthinesse of their life. They saie that they be grieved, that when faith is so gloriously aduanced, workes are driuen downe out of their place. What if they be more raised vp, and stablished? For neither doe we dreame of a faith voide of good workes, nor a iustification that is without them. This onely is the difference, that when we confesse that faith and good workes doe necessarily hang together, yet we set iustification in faith not in workes. For what reason we doe so, we haue in readinesse easily to declare, if we doe but turne to Christ vnto whom our faith is directed, and from whom it receiueh her whole strength. Why therefore are we iustified by faith? because by faith we take holde of the righteousnesse of Christ, by which alone we are reconciled to God. But this thou canst not take holde of, but that thou must also therewithall take holde of sanctification. For he was giuen to vs, for righteousnesse, wisdom, sanctification, and redemption. Therefore Christ iustificieth none whom he doth not also sanctifie. For these benefites are coupled together with a perpetuall and vnseparable knot, that whom he enlighteneth with his wisdom, them he redeemeth: whom he redeemeth, he iustificieth: whom he iustificieth, he sanctifieth. But for as much as our question is onely of righteousnesse and sanctifying, let vs stay vpon these. We may put difference betweene them, yet Christ containeth them both vnseparably in himselfe. Wilt thou therefore obtaine righteousnesse in Christ? Thou must first possesse Christ: and thou canst not possesse him, but that thou must be made partaker of his sanctification: because he cannot be torne in peeces. Sith therefore the Lord doth graunt vs these benefites to be enioyed none otherwise than in giuing himselfe, he giueth them both together, the one neuer without the other. So appeereth how true it is, that we are iustified not without workes, and yet not by workes: because in the partaking of Christ, whereby we are iustified, is no lesse contained sanctification than righteousnesse.

Neither is the affection of well-doing hereby cooled in men when they are taught that the good which they doe, meriteth not the rewarde which they shall receiue for doing: the scripture hath other motions: thā shew when it prouoketh vnto good workes.

2 That also is most false, that the mindes of men are withdrawn from the affection of well-doing, when we take from them the opinion of meriting. Here by the way the readers must be warned, that they foolishly reason from rewarde to merite, as I shall afterwarde more plainly declare: namely, because they knowe not this principle, that God is no lesse liberal when he assigneth rewarde to workes, than when he giueth power to doe well. But this I had rather deferre to the place fit for it. Now it shall be enough to touch how weake their obiection is: which shall be done two waies. For first whereas they say that there shall be no care of well framing of life, but when hope of reward is set before them: they erre quite from the truth. For if this onely be intended when men serue God, that they looke to rewarde or let out to hire or sell their labours to him, they little preuaile: for God wil be freely worshipped, freely loued: he (I say) alloweth that worshipper, which when all hope of receiuing reward is cut off, yet ceaseth not to worship him. Moreouer, if men be to be pricked forward, no man can put sharper spurres vnto them, than those that are taken of the end of our redemption and calling: such as the worde of God spurreth men withall, when it teacheth, that it is too wicked vnthankfulnesse, not mutually to loue him againe which first loued vs: that by the blood of Christ our consciences are cleansed from dead workes to serue the liuing God: that it is a hainous sacrilege, if being once cleansed, wee defile our selues with newe filthinesse, and prophane that holy blood: that we are deliuered from the handes of our enemies, that we may without feare serue him in holinesse and righteousnesse before him all the daies of our life: that we are made free from sinne, that we may with a free Sprite follow righteousnesse: that our olde man is crucified, that we may rise againe into newnesse of life:

againe,

Heb. 9. 14.
Luk. 1. 77.

Rom. 6. 18.

again, that if we be dead with Christ (as becommeth his members) we must seeke those things that are aboue, and must in the world be waifaring men from home, that we may long toward heauen where is our treasure: that the grace of God hath appeared to this end, that forsaking all vngodlinesse and worldlie desires, we may liue soberly, holily, and godly in this world, looking for the blessed hope and the appearing of the glorie of the great God and saviour: therefore that we are not appointed that we should stirre vp wrath to our selues, but that we may obtaine saluation by Christ: that we are the temples of the holie Ghost, which it is not lawfull to be defiled: that we are not darknesse, but light in the Lord, which must walke as children of light: that we are not called to vncleannesse, but to holinesse: because this is the will of God, our sanctification, that we abstaine from vnlawfull desires: that our calling is holie, that the same is not fulfilled but with purenesse of life: that we are for this purpose deliuered from sinne, that we should obey to righteousnesse. Can we be pricked forward to charitie with anie more liuely argument then that of Iohn, that we should mutually loue one another as God hath loued vs? that herein his children do differ from the children of the Diuell, the children of light from the children of darkenesse, because they abide in loue? Again, with that argument of Paul, that we if we cleaue to Christ, are the members of one bodie, which it is meete to be holpen one of another with mutuall duties? Can we be more strongly prouoked to holinesse then when we heare againe of Iohn, that all they that haue this hope, doe sanctifie themselues, because their God is holie? Againe of the mouth of Paul: that hauing the promise of adoption, we should cleanse our selues from all the defiling of the flesh and spirit? then when we heare Christ setting forth himselfe for an example vnto vs that we should follow his steps?

3 And these few things I haue set forth for a rest: For if I should intend to goe through all, I should be driue to make a long volume. The Apostles are all full of encouragements, exhortations and rebukings, whereby they may instruct the man of God to euery good worke, and that without any mention of merite. But rather they fetch their chiefe exhortations from this, that our saluation standeth vpon the onlie mercie of God and vpon no merite of ours. As Paul, after that he hath in a whole Epistle discoursed that there is no hope of life for vs but in the righteousnes of Christ, when he commeth downe to morall exhortations, he beseecheth them by that mercie of God which he hath vouchsafed to extend to vs. And trulie this one cause ought to haue bin sufficient, that God may be glorified in vs. But if anie be not so vehemently moued with the glorie of God, yet the remembrance of his beneficnes ought to haue bin most sufficient to stirre vp such men to do well. But these men, which do peraduenture with thrusting in of merites beate out some seruile and constrained obediences of the law, doe falsly saie that we haue nothing whereby we may exhort men to good workes, because we go not the same way to worke. As though God were much delighted with such obediences which protesteth that he loueth a cheerefull giuer, and forbiddeth any thing to be giuen as it were of heauinesse or of necessitie. Neither do I speake this for that I doe either refuse or despise that kinde of exhortation, which the Scripture oftentimes vseth, that it may leaue no meane vnattempted euery way to stirre vp our mindes. For it recheareth the reward which God will render to euerie man according to his workes. But I denie that that is the onlie thing, yea or the chiefe among manie. And then I graunt not that we ought to take beginning thereat. Merouer I affirme that it maketh nothing to the setting vp of such merites as these men boast of, as we shall hereafter see. Left of all I saie that is to no profitable vse, vnlesse this doctrine haue first taken place, that wee are iustified by the onlie merit of Christ, which is conceiued by faith but by no merites of our workes, because none can be fit to the endeuour of Iohannes, vnlesse they haue first digested this doctrine. Which thing also the Prophie very well signifieth, when he thus speaketh to God: With thee is mercie that thou maist be feared. For he sheweth that there is no worshipping of God, but when his mercie is acknowledged, vpon which alone it is both founded and stablished. Which is verie worthy to be noted, that we may know not onely that the beginning of worshipping God aright is the affiance of his mercy, but also that the fear of God (which the Papists will haue to be meritorious) cannot haue the name of merite, because it is grounded vpon the pardon and forgiuenes of sins.

To teach that God doth freely pardon sinners is no at-

4 But it is a most vaine slander, that men are allured to sinne, when we affirme the free forgiuenes of sins, in which we say that righteousnes consisteth. For, we say that it is of so great value, that it can with no good of ours be recompens'd, and that therefore it should neuer be obtained, vnlesse it were freely giuen. Moreouer, that it is to vs indeede freely giuen, but not so to Christ which bought it so deere, namely with his owne most holy bloode, beside which there was no price of value enough that might be paide to the iudgement of God. When men are taught these things, they are put in minde that it is no thanke to them that the same most holy blood is not shed to oft as they sinne. Furthermore, we learne, that our filthines is such, as is neuer washed away but with the fountaine of this most pure blood. Ought not they that heare these things, to conceiue a greater horrour of sinne, than if it were said that it is wiped away with the sprinkling of good works? And if they haue any thing of God, how can they but dread being once cleansed, to allow themselves againe in the mire, as much as in them lieth to trouble and infect the purenes of this fountaine? I haue washed my feete (saith the faithfull soule in Salomon) how shall I againe defile them? Now it is euident, whether sort do both more abase the forgiuenes of sinnes, and do more make vile the dignitie of righteousnes. They babble that God is appeas'd with their owne trifling satisfactions, that is, their doing: We affirme that the gulfines of sin is more grieuous than can be purged with so light trifles: that the displeasure of God is more heauie than can be releas'd with these satisfactions of no value, and that therefore this is the prerogatiue off the onely blood of Christ. They say that righteousnes (if it faile at any time) is restored and repaired by satisfactorie workes: wee thinke it more precious than that it can be match'd with any recompence of workes, and that therefore for the restoring thereof we must flie to the onely mercie of God. As for the rest of those things that pertaine to the forgiuenes of sinnes, let them be sought out of the next Chapter.

Can. 3. 5.

The xvij. Chapter.

The agreement of the promises of the law and the Gospel.

Iustification by faith alone doth not make the promises of the law fruitlesse.

Nowe let vs also go through the other arguments wherewith Satan by the souldiers of his garde, goeth about either to ouerthrow or batter the iustification of faith. This I thinke we haue already wrung from the scaunderers, that they can no more charge vs as enemies of good workes. For, iustification is taken away from good workes, not that no good workes should be done, or that those which be done should be denied to be good, but that we should not put affiance in them, nor glorie in them, nor ascribe saluation vnto them. For this is our affiance, this is our glory, and the onely author of our saluation, that Christ the sonne of God is ours, and we likewise are in him the sonnes of God, and heires of the heauenly kingdome, being called by the goodnesse of God, not by our owne worthinesse into the hope of eternal blessednesse. But because they do beside these assaile vs, as we haue saide, with other engines, goe to, let vs go forward in bearing away these also. First they come backe to the promises of the lawe, which the Lorde did set forth to the keepers of his lawe: and they aske whether we will haue them to be vtterly void or effectuall.

Because

Because it were an absurditie and to be scorned to say that they are voidē, they takē it for confessed that they are of some effectualnesse. Hereupon they reason that wee are not iustified by onely faith. For thus saith the Lord : and it shall be, if thou shalt hear these commaundements and iudgements, and shalt keepe them and doe them, the Lord also shall keepe with thee his couenant and mercie which he hath ssworne to thy fathers, he shall loue thee and multiplie thee, and blesse thee, &c. Againe, if yee shall well direct your waies and your endeuours, if yee walke not after strange Gods, if ye doe iudgement betwene man and man, and goe not backe into malice, I will walke in the midst of you. I will not recite a thousand peeces of the same sort, which sith they nothing differ in sense, shall be declared by the solution of these. In a summe, Moses testifieth that in the lawe is set forth blessing and curse, death and life. Thus therefore they reason, that either this blessing is made idle and fruitlesse, or that iustification is not of faith alone. We haue alreadie before shewed, how if wee sticke fast in the lawe, ouer vs being destitute of all blessing, hangeth only curse which is threatened to all transgressors. For the Lord promiseth nothing but to the perfect keepers of his lawe, such as there is none found. This therefore remaineth, that all mankiude is by the lawe accused, and subiect to curse and the wrath of God : from which that they may be loosed, they must needes goe out of the power of the lawe, and be as it were brought into libertie from the bondage thereof : not that carnall libertie which shoulde withdrawe vs from the keeping of the lawe, should allure vs to thinke all things lawfull and to suffer our lust, as it were the staires being broken and with loole reines to run at riot : but the spirituall libertie, which may comfort and raise vp a dismared and ouerthrowen conscience, shewing it to be free from the curse and damnation wherewith the lawe helde it downe bound and fast tied. This deliuerance from the subiection of the lawe, and Manumission (as I may callit) wee obtaine when by faith we take holde of the mercie of God in Christ, whereby we are certified and assured of the righteousnes of finnes, with the seeing whereof the lawe did prick and bite vs.

2. By this reason euen the promises that were offered vs in the law shoulde bee all vneffectuall and voidē, vnlesse the goodnesse of God by the Gospell did helpe. For this condition that we keepe the whole lawe, vpon which the promises hang, and whereby alone they are to be performed, shall neuer be fulfilled. And the Lorde so helpeth, not by leauing part of righteousnes in our workes, and supplying part by his mercifull bearing with vs, but when hee setteth onely Christ for the fulfilling of righteousnesse. For the Apostle, when he had before said that he and other Iewes beleued in Iesus Christ, knowing that man is not iustified by the workes of the lawe, addeth a reason : not that they shoulde be holpen to fulnesse of righteousnesse by the faith of Christ, but by it should be iustified not by the workes of the law. If the faithfull remouee from the law into faith, that they may in faith finde righteousnesse which they see to be absent from the law : truly they forsake the righteousnesse of the law. Therefore now let him that list, amplifie the rewardings which are saide to be prepared for the keeper of the lawe, so that he therewithall consider that it commeth to passe by our peruerfenesse, that we feele no fruite thereof till we haue obtained an other righteousnesse of faith. So Dauid when he made mention of the rewarding which the Lorde hath prepared for his seruants, by and by descendeth to the reknowledging of finnes, whereby that same rewarding is made voidē. Also in the xix. Psalme, he gloriously setteth forth the benefits of the lawe, but he by and by crieth out : Who shall vnderstand his faults? Lord cleanse me from my secret faults : This place altogether agreeth with the place before, where when he had saide that al the waies of the Lorde are goodnes and truth to them that feare him, he addeth : For thy names sake Lorde, thou shalt be mercifull to my peruerfenes, for it is much. So ought wee also to reknowledge, that there is indeede the good will of God set forth

3 How then? are they giuen that they should vanish away without fruit? I haue euen now already protested that the same is not my meaning. I saie verily that they vtter not their effectualnes towards vs, so long as they haue respect to the merite of works, and that therefore if they be considered in themselves, they be after a certaine maner abolished. If the apostle teacheth that this noble promise: I haue giuen you commandments, which who so shall do shall liue in them, is of no value if we ft and still in it, and shall neuer a whit more profite than if it had not bene giuen at all: because it belongeth not euen to the most holy seruants of God, which are all farre from the fulfilling of the law, but are compassed about with manie transgressions. But when the promises of the Gospell are put in place of them, which doe offer free forgiuenesse of sins, they bring to passe that not onely wee our selues be acceptable to God, but that our workes also haue their thanke: and not this onely that the Lorde accepteth them, but also extendeth to them the blessings which were by covenant due to the keeping of the law. I grant therefore, that those things which the Lorde hath promised in his law to the followers of righteousness and holinesse, are rendered to the workes of the faithfull: but in this rendering the cause is alwaies to be considered that powreth grace to workes. Now causes we see that there be three. The first is, that God turning away his sight from the workes of his seruants, which alway deserue rather reprob than praise, embraceth them in Christ, and by the onely meane of faith reconcileth them to himselfe without the meane of workes. The second, that of his fatherly kindnes and tender mercifullnes, he listeth vp workes to so great honor, not weying the worthines of them, that he accounteth them of som value. The third, that he receiuethe the very same workes with pardon, not imputing the imperfection, wherewith they all being defiled should otherwise be rather reckoned among sins than vertues. And hereby appeereth how much the Sophistes haue bin deceiued, which thought they had gaily escaped all absurdities, when they saide that workes do not of their owne inward goodnesse auaille to deserue saluation, but by the forme of the couenat, because the Lord hath of his liberalitie so much esteemed them. But in the meane time they considered not, how farre those workes which they would haue to be meritorious, were from the condition of the promises, vnlesse there went before both iustification grounded vpon onely faith, and the forgiuenes of sinnes, by which euen the good workes themselves haue need to be wiped from spots. Therefore of three causes of Gods liberalitie, by which it is brought to passe that the workes of the faithfull are acceptable, they noted but one one, and suppressed two, yea and those the principall.

Act. 10. 34.*

4 These alleage the saying of Peter, which Luke reherseth in the Actes: I finde in truth that God is not an accepter of persons: but in euery nation he that doth righteousnes is acceptable to him. And hereupon they gather that which seemeth to be vndoubted, that if man doth by right endeouours get himselfe the fauour of God, it is not the beneficiall gift of God alone that he obtaineth saluation: yea that God doth so of his mercy helpe a sinner, that he is by works bowed to mercy. But you can in no wise make the Scriptures agree together, vnlesse you note a double accepting of man with God. For, such as man is by nature, God findeth nothing in him whereby hee may be inclined to mercie, but onelic miserie. If therefore it bee certaine that man is naked and needie of all goodnesse, and on the other full stuffed and loaden with all kindes of euils, when God listeth to receiue them: for what quality, I praie you, shall we saie that he is worthe of the heauenly calling? Away therefore with the vaine imagining of merits, where God so euidently setteth out his free mercifullnesse. For, that which in the same place is saide by the voice of the Angels to Cornelius, that his prayers and almes had ascended into the sight of God, is by these men men most lewdly wrested, that man by endeuour of good workes is prepared to receiue the grace of God. For it must needes be that Cornelius was already enlightened with the spirite of wisdom, sith he was endued with true wisdom, namely with the feare of God: that he was sanctified with the same Spirite, sith he was a follower of righteousness, which the Apostle teacheth to be a most certaine fruit thereof. All these things therefore which are saide to haue pleased God in him, he hath of his grace, so farre is it off that he did by his owne endeuour prepare himselfe to receiue it. Truly there cannot one syllable of the scripture be brought foorth, that agreeth not with this doctrine, that there is none other cause for God to accept man vnto him, but because he seeth that man should be euery way lost, if he be left to himselfe: but because he will not haue him lost, he vseth his owne mercie in deliuering him. Now we see how this accepting hath not regarde to the righteousness of man, but is a mere token of the goodnesse of God toward men being miserable and most vnworthy of so great a benefite.

Gal. 5. 5.

5 But after that the Lord hath brought man out of the bottomlesse depth of destruction, and secured him to himselfe by grace of adoption: because he hath newly begotten him and newly formed him into a new life, he now embraceth him, as a new creature with the gifts of his spirite. This is that accepting wherof Peter maketh mention, by which the faithfull are after their vocation allured of God euén in respect also of workes: for the Lord cannot but loue & kisse those good things which he worketh in them by his Spirite. But this is alway to be remembred, that they are none otherwise acceptable to God in respect of workes, but in as much as for their cause and for their sakes, whatsoeuer good workes he hath giuen them in increasing of his liberalitie, he also vouchsafeth to accept. For whence haue they good workes, but because the Lord, as he hath chosen them for vessels vnto honour, so will garnish them with true godlinesse? Whereby also are they accounted good, as though there were nothing wanting in them, but because the kinde Father tenderly granteth pardon to those deformities and spots that cleaue to them? Summarily, he signifieth nothing elsé in this place, but that to God his children are acceptable and louely in whome hee seeth the markes and features of his owne face. For we haue in another place taught that regeneration is a repairing of the image of God in vs. For as much as therefore whersoever the Lorde beholdeth his owne face, he both woorthily loueth it and hath it in honour: it is not without cause saide, that the life of the faithfull being framed to holinesse and righteousness pleaseth him, but because the godly being clothed with mortall flesh, are yet sinners, and their good workes are but begun and fauouring of the faultinesse of the flesh: hee cannot bee fauourable neither to those nor to these: vnlesse hee more embrace them in Christ than in themselues. After this manner are those places to be taken, which testifie that God is kinde and mercifull to the followers of righteousness. Moses saide to the Israelites, The Lord thy God keepeth covenant, to a thousand generations: which sentence was afterward vsed of the people for a common manner of speech. So Salomon in his solemne praier, saith, Lord God of Israell, which keepeth covenant and mercie to thy seruants which walke before thee in their whole hart. The same wordes are also repeated of Nehemias. For, as in all the covenants of his mercie, the Lorde likewise on their behalves requirith of his seruants vprightnesse and holinesse of life, that his goodnesse shoulde not be made a mockerie, and that no man swelling with vaine reioycing by reason thereof should blesse his owne soule, walking in the meane time in the perversenesse of his owne hart: so his will is by this way to keepe in their duetic them that are admitted into the communion of the covenant: yet neuertheless the covenant it selfe is both made at the beginning free, and perpetually remaineth such. After this manner Dauid when hee glorieth that there was rendered to him rewarde of the cleannesse of his handes, yet omitte not that fountain which I haue spoken of, that he was drawn out of the wombe, because God loued him: where he so fettereth out the goodnes of his cause, that he abateth nothing from the free mercie which goeth before all gifts, whereof it is the beginning.

The various actions of faithfull men are assurances of their rewards, and tokens shew they are in the favour of God, but no causes for the worthinesse whereof. God should favour them.

6 And hereby by the way it shall be profitable to touch what these formes of speaking doe differ from the promises of the lawe. I call promises of the lawe, not those which are eachwhere commonly written in the bookes of Moses: (for as much as in them also are found many promises of the Gospell) but those which properly belong to the ministerie of the lawe. Such promises, by what name soeuer you list to call them, doe declare that there is reward ready vpon condition, if thou doe that which is commaunded thee. But when it is saide, that the Lord keepeth the covenant of mercie to them which loue him, therein is rather shewed what manner of men be his seruants which haue faithfully received his covenant, than the cause is expressed why the Lord should doe good to them. Now this is the manner of shewing it. As the Lord vouchsafeth to graunt vs the grace of eternal life, to this end that he should be loued, feared, and honored of vs: so whatsoeuer pronuseth there are of his mercie in the Scriptures, they are rightfully directed to this end that wee should reuerence and worship the author of the benefites. So oft therefore as we heare that he doth good to them that keepe his lawe, let vs remember that the children of God are there signified by the dutie which ought to be continuall in them: that we are for this cause adopted, that we should honour him for our Father. Therefore least wee shoulde ditherite our selues from the right adoption, we must alway endeour to this whereunto our calling tendeth. But let vs againe keepe this in minde, that the accomplishment of the mercie of God hangeth not vpon the workes of the faithfull: but that he therefore fulfilleth the promise of saluation to them which answer to their calling in vprightnesse of life, because in them he acknowledgeth the naturall tokens of his children which are ruled with his spirite vnto good. Herunto let that be referred which is in the xv. Psalme spoken of the Citizens of the Church, Lord who shall dwell in thy tabernacle, and who shall rest in thy holy hill? The innocent in hands and of a cleane hart, &c. Againe in Esaie, Who shall dwell with deuouring fire? He that doth righteoufnesse, he that speaketh right things, &c. For there is not described the stay whereupon the faithfull may stand before the Lord, but the manner wherewith the most mercifull father bringeth them into his fellowship, and therein defendeth and strengtheneth them. For, because hee abhorreth sinne, hee loueth righteoufnesse: whom he ioyneth to himselfe, them he cleanseth with his spirite, that he may make them of like fashion to himselfe and his kingdome. Therefore if the question be of the first cause whereby the entrie is made open to the holy ones into the kingdome of God, from whence they haue that they may staunde fast and abide in it, we haue this answer ready, because the Lorde by his mercie both hath once adopted them, and perpetually defendeth them. But if the question be of the manner, then we must come downe to regeneration and the frutes thereof, which are rehearsed in that Psalme.

In whose sense the commaundements of God are called righteoufnesse.

Deut. 6. 25.

Psal. 106. 30.*

7 But there seemeth to be much more hardnesse in these places, which doe both garnish good workes with the title of righteoufnesse, and affirmeth that man is iustified by them. Of the first sort there be very many places where the obseruings of the commaundements are called iustifications or righteoufnesse. Of the other sort, that is an example which is in Moses. This shall be our righteoufnesse, if we keepe all these commaundements. And if thou take exception and say that this is a promise of the law, which being knit to a condition impossible, prooueth nothing. There be other of which you cannot make the same answer, as this: And that shall be to thee for righteoufnesse before the Lord to redeluer to the poore man his pledge, &c. Againe, that which the Prophet saith, that the zeale in reuenging the shame of Israell, was imputed to Phinees for righteoufnesse. Therefore the Pharisees of our time time thinke that here they haue a large matter to triumph vpon. For when we saie, that when the righteousnes of faith is set vp, the iustification of works giueth place, by the same right they make this argument: if righteousnes be of workes, then it is false that we are iustified by faith onely. Though I grant that the commandments of the law are called righteousnes: it is no maruell: for they are so indeed. Howbeit we must warne the Readers that the Grecians haue not fitly translated the Hebrew word Huani, Dikaiomata, righteousnes for commandments. But for the worde, I willingly release my quarell. For neither doe wee denie this to the lawe of God, that it conteineth perfect righteousnes. For although, because we are debtors of all the things that it commandeth, therefore euen when we haue performed full obedience thereof, wee are vnprofitable seruants: yet because the Lord vouchsafed to graunt it the honour of righteousnes, we take not away that which he hath giuen. Therefore wee willingly confesse that the full obedience of the law is righteousnes, that the keeping of euery commandment, is a part of righteousnes, if so bee that the whole summe of righteousnes were had in the other partes also. But we denie that there is any where any such forme of righteousnes. And therefore we take awaie the righteousnes of the lawe, not for that it is maimed and vnperfect of it selfe, but for that by reason of the weakenes of our flesh it is no where seene. But the Scripture not onely calleth simple the commandments of the Lorde righteousnes: but it also giueth this name to the workes of the holy ones. As when it reporteth that Zacharie and his wife walked in the righteousnes of the Lord: truly when it so speaketh it weigheth workes rather by the nature of the law, than by their own proper state. Howbeit here again is that to be noted, which I euen now said, that of the negligence of the Greeke translator is not a lawe to be made. But forasmuch as Luke woulde alter nothing in the receiued translation, I will also not strue about it. For God hath commanded these things that are in the lawe to men for righteousnes: but this righteousnes we performe not but in keeping the whole lawe: for by euery transgression it is broken. Whereas therefore the lawe doth nothing but prescribe righteousnes: if wee haue respect to it, all the feuerall commandments thereof are righteousnes: if we haue respect to men of whom they are done, they do not obtaine the praise of righteousnes by one worke, being trespassers in many, and by that same worke which is euery part faultie by reason of imperfection.

Luk. 1. 6.

8 But nowe I come to the second kinde, in which is the chiefe hardnesse. Paul hath nothing more strong to prooue the righteousnes of faith: than that which is written of Abraham, that his faith was imputed to him for righteousnes. Sith therefore it is saide that the act done by Phinices was imputed to him for righteousnes: what Paul affirmeth of faith, the same may wee also conclude of workes. Whereupon our aduertaries, as though they had wonne the victorie, determine that we are indeed not iustified without faith, but that we are also not iustified by it alone, and that workes accomplish our righteousnes. Therefore here I beseech the godlie, that if they know that the true rule of righteousnes is to be taken out of the Scripture onely, they will religiously and earnestly weigh with me, how the scripture may without cauillations be rightly made to agree with it selfe. Forasmuch as Paul knew that the iustification of faith is the refuge for them that are destitute of their owne righteousnes, he doth boldly conclude that all they that are iustified by faith, are excluded from the righteousnes of workes. But sith it is certaine that the iustification of faith is common to all the faithfull, he doth thereof with like boldnesse conclude that no man is iustified by workes, but rather contrariwise that men are iustified without any helpe of workes. But it is one thing to dispute of what value workes are by themselves, and another thing what account is to be made of them after the stablishing of the righteousnes of faith. If wee shall set a price vpon workes according to the r worthines, we say that they are vnworthie to come into the sight of God: and therefore that man hath no workes whereof he may glorie before God: then, that being spoiled of all helpe of workes he is iustified by onely faith. Now we define righteousness thus, that a sinner being receiued into the communion of Christ is by his grace reconciled to God, when being cleansed with his blood he obtineth forgiveness of sins, and being cloathed with his righteousness as with his owne, he standeth assured before the heauenly judgment seat. When the forgiveness of sins is set before, the good workes which follow haue now another valuation then after their owne deserting: because whatsoever is in them vnperfect, is couered with the perfection of Christ: whatsoever spots or filthines there is, it is wiped away with his cleannes, that it may not com into the examination of the judgment of god. Therefore when the guiltines of all trespasses is blotted out, whereby men are hindered that they can bring forth nothing acceptable to God, and when the fault of imperfection is buried, which is wont also to defile good workes: the good workes which the faithfull do are counted righteous, or (which is all one) are imputed for righteousness.

righteousnesse which is by faith without workes that the workes of faithfull men are accounted right-

Job. 4. 18.

9 Now if any man object this against me to assaile the righteousness of faith, first I will aske whether a man be counted righteous for one or two holy workes, being in the rest of the workes of his life a trespasser of the law. This is more than an absurditie. Then I will aske if he be counted righteous for many good workes, if hee be in any part found guiltie. This also he shall not be so bold to affirme, when the penall ordinance of the law crieth out against it, and proclaimeth all them accursed which haue not fulfilled all the commandements of the law to the vitermost. Moreover, I will goe further and aske, whether there be any worke that deserueth to be accused of no vncleannes or imperfection. And howe could there be any such before those eyes, to whom euen the verie staires are not cleane enough, nor the Angels righteous enough? So shall he be compelled to grant that there is no good work which is not so defiled with transgressions adioyned with it, and with the corruptnes of it selfe, that it cannot haue the honour of righteousness. Now if it be certaine that it proceedeth from the righteousness of faith that workes which are otherwise vnpure, vncleane, and but halfe workes, not worthie of the sight of God, much lesse of his loue, are imputed to righteousness, why do they with boasting of the righteousness of workes destroye the iustification of faith, whereas if this iustification were not, they should in vaine boast of that righteousness? Will they make a vipers birth? For they to tend the saying of the vngodly men. They cannot denie that the iustification of faith is the beginning, foundation, cause, matter, and substance of the righteousness of workes: yet they conclude that man is not iustified by faith, because good workes also are accounted for righteousness. Therefore let vs passe these follies and confesse as the truth is, that if the righteousness of workes of what sort soeuer it be accounted, hangeth vpon the iustification of faith, it is by this not onely nothing minished but also confirmed, namely whereby the strength thereof appeared more mightie. Neither yet let vs thinke that workes are so commended after free iustification, that they also afterward come into the place of iustifying a man, or doe part the office betweene them and faith. For vntill the iustification remaine alway whole, the vncleannesse of workes shall be vncouered. And it is no absurditie, that a man is to iustified by faith that not onely he himselfe is righteous, but also his workes are esteemed righteous, about their worthines.

*Not onely wee but our workes are ius-tified by faith in Christ: and therefore the righteous-nesse of workes is thing both vnder and after the re-

10 After this manner we will graunt in workes not onely a righteousness in part (as our aduersaries themselves would haue) but also that it is allowed of God as if it were a perfect and full righteousness. But if we remember vpon what foundation it is vpholden, all the difficultie shall be dissolved. For then and not till then it beginneth to be an acceptable worke, when it is receiued with pardon. Now whence cometh pardon, but because God beholdeth both vs and all our things in Christ?

Therefore.

Therefore as we, when we are grafted into Christ, doe therefore appeare righteous before God, because our wickednesses are covered with his innocencie, so our workes are and be taken for righteous, because whatsoever faultinesse is otherwise in them, being buried in the cleannes of Christ, it is not imputed. So we may rightfully say, that by onely Faith not onely we but also our workes are iustified. Now if this righteousness of workes of what sort soever it be, hangeth vpon Faith and free iustification, and is made of it: it ought to be included vnder it, and to be set vnder it as the effect vnder the cause thereof, as I may so call it: so farre is it off that it ought to be raised vp either to destroy or darken it. So Paul to drue men to confesse that our blessednes consisteth of the mercie of God, not of workes, chiefly enforce th that saying of Dauid. Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose finnes are covered. Blessed is he to whom the Lord hath not imputed sin. If any man doe thrust into the contrary innumerable sayings wherem blessednesse seemeth to be giuen to workes, as are these: Blessed is the man which feareth the Lord, which hath pity on the poore, which hath not walked in the counsell of the wicked, which beareth temptation: Blessed are they which keepe iudgement, the vndefiled, the poore in Spirit, the meeke, the mercifull, &c. They shall not make but that it shall be true which Paul sayeth, For because those things that are there commended are neuer so in man, that he is therfore allowed of God, it followeth that man is away miserable, yflesse he be deliuered from misery by forgiveness of finnes. Forasmuch as therefore all the kinds of blessednes which are extolled in the Scriptures, doe fall downe void, so that man receiveth figure of none of them, till he haue obtained blessednesse by forgiveness of finnes, which may afterwards make place for them: it followeth that this is not onely the highest and the chiefe but also the onely blessednes: yflesse peradventure you will haue that it be weakened of those which consist in it alone. Now there is much lesse reason why the calling of men righteous should trouble vs, which is commonly giuen to the Faithfull. I graunt verily that they are called righteous of the holines of life: but forasmuch as they rather endeavour to the following of righteousness, than doe fulfill righteousness in selfe, it is meete that this righteousness such as it is, giue place to the iustification of Faith, from whence it hath that which it is.

It But they say that we haue yet more businessse with James, namely which with open voice fighteth against vs. For he teacheth both that Abraham was iustified by workes, and also that all we are iustified by workes, not by Faith onely. What then? will they draw Paul to fight with James? If they hold James for a minister of Christ, his saying must be so taken that it disagree not from Christ speaking by the mouth of Paul, The holy Ghost affirmeth by the mouth of Paul, that Abraham obtained righteousness by Faith, not by workes: and we also doe teach that all are iustified by Faith without the workes of the law. The same holy Ghost teacheth by James that both Abrahams righteousness and ours consisteth of workes, not of onely Faith. It is certaine that the holy Ghost fighteth not with himselfe. What agreement shall there be therfore of these two? It is enough for the aduersaries, if they plucke the righteousness of Faith which we would haue to be fastened with most deepe roots: but to render to consciences their quietnes, they haue no great care. Whereby verily you may see that they gnawe the iustification of Faith, but in the meane time doe appoint no marke of righteousness where consciences may stay. Therefore let them triumph as they list, so that they may boast of no other victorie than that they haue taken away all certaintie of righteousness. And this wretched victorie they shall obtaine, where the light of truth being quenched, the Lord shall suffer them to ouerspread the darkenes of lies. But wheresoever the truth of God shall stand, they shall nothing preuaile. I denie therefore that the saying of James which they still continually holde vp against vs as it were the shield of Achilles doth any thing at all make for them. That this may be made plaine, first we must looke at the marke that the Apostle shooteth at: and then we must note where they be deceiued. Because there were then manie (which mischiefe is wont to be continuall in the Church) which openly bewrayed their infidelitic, in neglecting and omitting all the proper workes of the faithfull, and yet ceased not to boast of the false name of faith: Iames doeth heere mocke the foolish boldnes of such men. Therefore it is not his purpose in any point to diminish the force of true faith, but to shew how fondly those triflers did challenge so much the vaine image of it, that being contented heere with they carelessly ranne dissolately abroade into all licentiousnes of vices. This ground being conceiued, it shall be easie to perceiue where our aduerfaries doe misse. For they fall into two deceits in the worde, the one in the name of faith, the other in the worde of iustifying. Whereas the Apostle nameth faith a vaine opinion far distant from the truth of faith, it is spoken by way of granting, which is no derogation to the matter: which he sheweth at the beginning in these words. What profiteth it, my brethren, if any man say that he hath faith, and hath no workes? Hee doth not say, if any haue faith without workes, but, If any man boast. More plainly also he speaketh a little after, where he in mockerie maketh it worse than the diuels knowledge: last of all, when he calleth it dead. But by the definition you may sufficiently perceiue what he meaneth. Thou beleueest (saith he) that there is a God. Truly if nothing be contained in this faith but to beleuee that there is a God, it is now no maruell if it do not iustifie. And when this is taken from it, let vs not thinke that any thing is abated from the christian faith, the nature whereof is far otherwise. For after what maner doth true faith iustifie vs, but when it conioyneth vs with Christ, that being made one with him we may enioy the partaking of his righteousnes? It doth not therefore iustifie vs by this that it conceiueth a knowledge of the being of God, but by this that it resteth vpon the assurednes of the mercie of God.

12 We haue not yet the worke, vnlesse we examine also the other deceit in the word, forasmuch as Iames setteth part of iustification in workes. If you will make Iames agreeing both with the rest of the Scriptures, and with himselfe, you must of necessitie take the word of iustifying in another signification than it is taken in Paul. For Paul saith that we are iustified, when the remembrance of our vnrighteousnes being blotted out, we are accounted righteous. If Iames had meant of that taking, he had wrongfully alleged that out of Moses: Abraham beleued God, &c. For he thus frameth it together. Abraham by workes obtained righteousnes, because he stuck not at the commaundement of God, to offer vp his sonne. And so the scripture was fulfilled, which saith, that he beleued God, and it was imputed to him for righteousnes. If it be an absurditie, that the effect is before his cause, either Moses doth in that place falsly testifie, that faith was imputed to Abraham for righteousnes: or he deserued not righteousnes by that obedience which he shewed in offering vp of Isaac. Abraham was iustified by his faith, When Ismael was not yet conceiued, which was now growen past child hood before that Isaac was borne. How therefore shall we say, that hee got to himselfe righteousnes by obedience which followed long afterwarde? Wherefore either Iames did wrongfully misturne the order (which it is a wickednesse to thinke) or he meant not to say that he was iustified, as though he deserued to be accounted righteous. How then? Truly it appeareth that he speaketh of the declaration of righteousnes and not the imputation: as if he had said: Who so are righteous by true faith, they do proue their righteousnes with obedience and good workes, not with a bare and image like visor of faith. In a summe, he disputeth not by what meane we are iustified, but he requireth of the faithfull a working righteousnes. And as Paul affirmeth that men bee iustified without the helpe of workes: so Iames doeth here suffice them to be accounted righteous which want good workes. The considering of this shall deliuer vs out of all doubt. For our aduerfaries are hereby chiefly deceiued, that they thinke that Iames defineth the manner of iustifying, whereas he traucelleth gaileth about nothing but to ouerthrow their peruerse carelesnesse, which did vainly pretend faith to excuse their despising of good workes. Therefore into howe manie waies foer they wrest the words of Iames, they shall wring out nothing but two sentences: that a vaine bodilesse shew of faith doth not iustifie, and that a faithfull man not contented with such an imaginatiue shewe, doth declare his righteousnesse by good workes.

Neither doth S. Iames use the word Iustification, as S. Paul doth, but in a meaning far different: S. Paul meaning thereby the imputation of righteousnes and S. Iames the declaration of the righteousnes by workes, which was imputed.

13 As for that which they alleage out of Paul, the same meaning, that the dooers of the law, not the hearers, are iustified, it nothing helpeth them. I will not escape away with the solution of Ambrose, that that is therefore spoken because the fulfilling of the law is faith in Christ. For I see that it is but a meere starting hole, which nothing needeth where there is abroad way open. There the Apostle throweth downe the Iewes from foolish confidence, which boasted themselues of the onely knowledge of the law, when in the meane tme they were the greatest despisers of it. Therefore that they should not stand so much in their own conceit for the bare knowledge of the lawe, he warneth them, that if righteousnes be fought out of the lawe, not the knowledge but the obseruing of it is required. We vtily make no doubt of this that the righteousnes of the law standeth in workes: nor yet of this also, that the righteousnesse consisteth in the worthines and merites of workes. But it is not yet prooued, that we are iustified by workes, vnlesse they bring forth some man that hath fulfilled the law. And that Paul meant none otherwise, the hāging together of the text shal be a sufficient testimonie. After that he had generally condemned the Gentiles and the Iewes of vnrighteousnes, then he descended to the particular shewing of it, and saith, that they which sinned without the Law, do perish without the Law: which is spoken of the Gentiles: but they which haue sinned in the law, are iudged by the law: which pertaileth to the Iewes. Now because they winking at their owne trespassings proudly gloried of the onely lawe: hee adioyneth that which most sily agreed, that the law was not therefore made, that men should be made righteous by onely hearing of the voice thereof: but then and not till then when they obeyed, as if he should say: Seekest thou righteousnes in the law: alleage not the hearing of it, which of it selfe is of small importance, but bring workes, by which thou maist declare that the law was not set for thee in vaine. Of these workes because they were all destitute, it followed that they were spoiled of glorying of the lawe. Therefore we must of the meaning of Paul rather frame a contrarie argument. The righteousnes of the lawe consisteth in the perfection of workes. No man can boast that he hath by workes satisfied the law. Therefore there is no righteousnes by the lawe.

14 Now they alleage also these places, wherein the faithfull doe boldly offer their righteousnes to the iudgement of God to be examined, and require that sentence be giuen of them according to it. Of which sort are these: Iudge me O Lord according to my righteousnes, and according to my innocencie, which are in me. Again, Hear me righteousnes, O God: Thou hast prooued my heart, and hast visited it in the night, and there was no wickednes found in me. Again, The Lord shall render to me according to my righteousnes, and he shall recompence me according to the cleanness of my hands. Because I haue kept the wayes of the Lord, & haue not wickedly departed from my God. And I shall be vnspotted, and shall keepe me from my iniquity. Again, Iudge me, Lord, because I haue walked in mine innocencie. I haue not fit with lying men, I will not enter in with them that do wicked things. Destroy not my soule with the vngodly, my life with men of blood: in whose hands are iniquities: whose right hand is filled with gifts. But I haue walked innocently. I haue about spoken of the assurance which the holy ones do seeme simply to take to themselues of workes. As for these testimonies that we haue heere alleaged, they shall not much accombre vs if they be vnderstanded according to their compasse, or (as they commonly call it) their circumstance. Now the same is double. For neither would they haue them to be wholly examined that they should be either cōdemned or acquitted according to the continuall course of their whole life: but they bring into iudgement a speciall cause to be debated. Neither do they claime to themselves righteousnes in respect of the perfection of God, but by comparison of naughtie and wicked men. First when the iustifying of man is entreated of, it is not onely required that he haue a good cause in some particular matter, but a certaine perpetuall agreement of righteousnes in his whole life. But the holy ones, when they cal vpō the iudgement of God to approoue their innocencie, doe not offer themselves free from all guiltines and in curie behalfe faultlesse: but verily when they haue fastened their affiance of saluation in his goodnes onely, yet trusting that he is the reuenger of the poore afflicted against right and equitie, they commend to him the cause wherein the innocent are oppressed. But when they set their aduersaries with them before the iudgement seate of God, they boast not of such an innocencie as shall answer to the purenesse of God if it be seuerely searched, but because in comparison of the malice, obstinacie, furtletie and wickednes of their aduersaries, they know that their plainnesse, righteousnes, simplicitie, and cleannesse is known and pleasing to God: they feare not to call vpon him to be iudge betweene themselves and them. So when Dauid said to Saul: The Lord render to euery man according to his righteousnesse and truth: he meant not that the Lord should examine by himselfe and reward euery man according to his deservings, but he tooke the Lord to witness, how great his innocencie was in comparison of the wickednes of Saul. And Paul himselfe, when he boasteth with this glorying that he hath a good witness of conscience, that hee hath trauelled with simplicitie and vprightnesse in the Church of God, meaneth not that he standeth vpon such glorying before God, but being compelled with the standers of the wicked, he defendeth his faithfull and honest dealing, which he knew to be pleasing to the mercifull kindnesse of God, against all euill speaking of men whatsoeuer it be. For we see what he saith in another place, that he knoweth no euill by himselfe, but that he is not thereby iustified, namely because he knewe that the iudgement of God farre surmounteth the blear-eyed sight of men. Howsoeuer therefore the godly doe defend their innocencie against the hypocricie of the vngodly, by the witnessing and iudgement of God: yet when they haue to do with God alone, they all crie out with one mouth: If thou marke iniquitie, Lorde, Lord whose shall abide it? Enter not into iudgement with thy seruants: because euery one that liueth shall not be iustified in thy sight: and distrusting their owne workes, they gladly sing, Thy goodnes is better than life.

15 There are also other places not vnlke to these before, in which a man may yet tarie. Salomon saith, that he which walketh in his vprightnesse, is righteous. Again, That in the path of righteousnesse is life, and that in the same is not death. After which manner Ezechiel reporteth that hee shall liue life that doth iudgement and righteousnes. None of these do we either deny or darken. But let there come forth one of the sons of Adam with such an vprightnes. If there be none, either they must perish at the sight of God, or flee to the sanctuarie of mercy. Neither do we in the meane time deny but that to the faithfull their vprightnesse, though it be but half and vnperfect, is a steppetowarde immortallitie. But whence cometh that but because whom the Lord hath taken into the couenant of grace, he searched not their workes according to their deservings, but lisseth them with fatherly kindnesse? Whereby we do not onely vnderstand that which the schoolemen do teach, that workes haue their value of the accepting grace. For they meane that workes which are otherwise insufficient to purchase righteousnesse by the couenant of the lawe, are by the accepting of God auanced to the value of equalitie. But I say that they being defiled both with other trespassings & with their owne; ours, are of no other value at all, than inso much as the Lord tenderly graunteth pardon to both: that is to say, giueth free righteousness to man. Neither are heere those prayers of the Apostle seasonably thrust in place, where he wisheth so great perfection to the faithfull, that they may be faultlesse & vnblamable in the day of the Lord, These words in deed the Celestines did in old time turmoile, to affirme a perfection of righteousness in this life. But, which we thinke to be sufficient, we answer briefly after Augustine, that all the godly ought in deede to endeouour towards this marke, that they may one day appeere spotlesse and faultlesse before the face of God: but because the best and most excellent manner of this life is nothing but a going forward, wee shall then and not till then attaine to this marke, when being vnclouthed of this flesh of sinne wee shall fully cleaue to the Lorde. Yet will I not stiffely strue with him which will giue the title of perfection to the holy ones, so that he also limit the same with the wordes of Augustine himselfe. When (saith he) we will call the vertue of the holic ones, perfect: to the same perfection also belongeth the acknowledging of imperfection both in truth and humilitie.

The xvij. Chapter.

That of the rewarde, the righteousness of workes is ill gathered.

NOwe let vs passe ouer to those sayings which affirme, that God will render to euery man according to his workes: of which sort are these. Euery man shall bear away that which he hath done in the body, either good or euill. Glorie and honour to him that worketh good: trouble and distresse vpon euery soule of him that worketh euill. And they which haue done good things, shall goe into the resurrection of life: they which haue done euill, into the resurrection of iudgement. Come yee blessed of my father: I haue hungered, and yee gaue mee meate: I haue thirsted, and yee gaue me drinke, &c. And with them let vs also ioyne these sayings, which call eternall life the reward of workes. Of which sort are these. The rendering of the hands of a man shall be restored to him. He that feareth the commandment shall be rewarded. Be glad and reioice, behold, your reward is plentiful in heauen. Euery man shall receiue reward according to his labour. Where it is saide that God shall render to euery man according to his workes, the same is easily asloyled. For that manner of speaking doth rather shewe the order of following, than the cause. But it is out of doubt, that the Lord doth accomplish our saluation by these degrees of his mercie, when those whom he hath chosen he calleth to him: those whome he hath called, he iustificeth: those whom he hath iustified, he glorifieth. Although therefore he do by his onely mercie receiue them that be his into life, yet because he bringeth them into the possession thereof by the race of good workes, that he may fulfill his worke in them by such order as he hath appointed: it is no maruill if it be saide that they be crowned according to their workes, by which without doubt they are prepared to receive the crowne of immortalitie. Yea and after this maner it is sily saide that they worke their owne saluation, when in applying themselves to good workes, they practise themselves toward eternall life: namely as in another place they are commanded to work the meate which perisheth not, when by beieeuing in Christ they get to themselves life: and yet it is by and by afterwarde added: Which the sonne of man shall giue you. Whereby appeereth that the worde of Working is not set as contrarie to grace, but is referred to endeouour: & therefore it followeth not, that either the faithfull are themselves authors of their owne saluation, or that the same proceedeth from their workes. How then? So soone as they are taken into the fellowship of Christ, by knowledge of the Gospel, & the enlightening of the holy Ghost, eternall life is begun in them. Now the same good worke which God hath begun in them, must also be made perfect vntill the date of the Lorde Iesu. And it is made perfect, when referenbling the heavenly father in righteousnes and holines, they proue themselues to be his children not tiarued out of kinde.

2 There is no cause why we should of the name of reward gather an argument that our workes are the cause of saluation. First let this be determined in our hearts, that the kingdome of heauen is not a reward of seruants, but an inheritance of children, which they only shall enjoy, that are adopted of the Lord to be his children: and for no other cause, but for this adoption. For, the sonne of the bondwoman shall not be heire, but the sonne of the free woman. And in the very same places, in which the holy Ghost promisseth to workes eternall glorie for reward, in expressing the inheritance by name, he sheweth that it cometh from else where. So Christ reherseth works, which he recompenseth with the rewarding of heauen, when he calleth the elect to the possession thereof: but he therewithall adioyneth that it must be possessed by right of inheritance. So Paul biddeth seruants, which do their dutie faithfully, to hope for reward of the Lord: but he addeth, of inheritance. We see how they do as it were by expresse words prouide that we impure not eternall blessednes to workes, but to the adoption of God. Why therefore do they therewithall together make mention of workes? This question shalbe made plainc with one example of Scripture. Before the birth of Isaac, there was promised to Abraham a seed in which all the nations of the earth should be blessed; and a multiplying of his seede, which should match the starres of the skie, and the sands of the sea, and other like. In many yeres afterward, Abraham, as he was commanded by the oracle, prepared himselfe to offer vp his sonne in sacrifice. When he had performed this obedience, he received a promise. I haue sworne by my selfe (saith the Lord) because thou hast done this thing, and hast not spared thine owne onely begotten sonne, I will blesse thee, and multiply thy seede as the starres of the skie, and the sands of the sea: thy seede shall possesse the gates of their enemies, and all the nations of the earth shall be blessed in thy seede, because thou hast obeyed my voice. What heare we? Hath Abraham by his obedience deserued the blessing, the promise whereof he had receiued before that the commandement was giuen? Here verily we haue it without circumstances shewed, that the Lorde rewardeth the works of the faithfull with those benefites which he had already giuen them before that the works were thought of, hauing yet no cause why he should do good to them but his owne mercie.

3 Yet doth the Lord not deceiue nor mock vs when he saith that he rendereth for reward to workes the same thing which he had before workes freely giuen. For, because he will haue vs to be exercised with good workes, to thinke vpon the deliery or enjoying (as I may so call it) of these things which he hath promised, and to runne through them to the blessed hope set before vs in heauen, the fruite of the promises is also rightly assigned to them, to the ripeness whereof they do not bring vs. The Apostle very sily expressed both these points, when he said that the Colossians apply themselues to the duties of charitie, for the hope which is laide vp for them in heauen, of which they had before heard by the word of the true speaking Gospell. For when he saith that they knew by the Gospell, that there was hope laide vp for them in heauen, he declareth that the same is by Christ only, not vnderpropped with any workes. Wherewith accordeth that saying of Peter, that the godly are kept by the power of God, through faith, vnto the saluation which is readie to be manifestly shewed at the time appointed for it. When he saith that they labour for it, he signifieth that the faithfull must runne all the time of their life, that they may attaine to it. But least we should thinke that the reward which the Lord promisseth vs, is reduced to the measure of merite, he did put forth a parable, in which he made himselfe a houtholder, which sent all them that he met, to the trimming of his vineyard, some at the first houre of the day, some at the second, some at the third, yea and some also at the 11. At euening he paid to euery one equall wages. The exposition of which parable, that same old writer whatsoever he was, whose booke is carried abroad vnder the name of Ambrose of the calling of the Gentiles, hath briefly and truly set out. I will vse rather his words than mine owne. The Lord (saith he) by the rule of this comparison hath stablished the diuersitie of manyfold calling, belonging to one grace: where without doubt they which being let into the vineyard at the 11. houre, are made equall with them that had wrought the whole day, do represent the estate of them, whome for the aduancing of the excellencie of grace, the tender kindnesse of the Lord hath rewarded at the waning of the day, and at the ending of their life: not paying wages for their labor, but pouring out the riches of his goodnes vpon them whom he hath chosen without works, that euen they also which haue sret in great labour, and haue receiued no more than the last, may vnderstand that they haue receiued a gift of grace, not a reward of works. Last of all, this also is worthy to be noted in these places, where eternall life is called the reward of workes, that it is not simply taken for the communicating which we haue with God to blessed immortalitye, when he embraceth vs with fatherly good will in Christ: but for the possessing or enjoying (as they call it) of blessednes, as also the very words of Christ do found, In time to come life euerlasting. And in another place, Come and possesse the kingdome, &c. After this manner Paul calleth adoption, the reucaling of the adoption which shall be made in the resurrection: and afterward expoundeth it the redemption of our bodie. Otherwise as estranging from God is eternall death, so when man is receiued of God into fauour, that he may enjoy the communicating of him and be made one with him, he is receiued from death to life: which is done by the beneficiall meane of adoption only. And if, as they are wont, they stily enforce the reward of workes, we may turne against them that saying of Peter, that eternall life is the reward of faith.

4 Therefore let vs not thinke, that the holy Ghost doth with such promise set forth the worthines of our workes, as if they deserued such reward. For the Scripture leaueth nothing to vs, whereof we may be aduanced in the sight of God: But rather it wholly endeuoureth to beate downe our arrogancie, to humble vs, to throw vs downe, and altogether to breake vs in peeces. But our weakenesse is so iuccoured, which otherwise would by and by slip and fall downe, vnlesse it did susteine it selfe with this expectation, and mitigate her tedious grieues with comfort. First how hard it is for a man to forsake and deny not only all his things, but also himselfe, let every man consider for himselfe. And yet with this introduction Christ traineth his scholars, that is, all the godly. Then throughout all their life he so instructeth them vnder the discipline of the crosse, that they may not set their heart either to the desire or confidence of present good things. Briefely he so handleth them for the most part, that which way soeuer they turne their eyes throughout the whole widenesse of the world, they haue on eury side nothing but desperation present before them: so that Paul saith, that we are more miserable than all men if our hope be only in this world. That they should not faint in these so great distresses, the Lord is present with them, which putteth them in mind to lift vp their head higher, to cast their eyes further, that they find with him the blessednesse which they see not in the world. This blessednesse he calleth, reward, wages, recompence, not weying the meire of workes, but signifying that it is a recompensing to their troubles, sufferings, slanders, &c. Wherefore nothing withstandeth, but that we may after the example of the Scripture, call eternall life a rewarding, because in it the Lord receiueth his from labors into rest, from affliction into prosperous and happie state, from sorow into gladnes, from pouertie into flowing wealth, from shame into glorie, and changeth all the euils which they haue suffered for greater good things. So it shall also be no inconuenience, if we thinke holinesse of life to be a way, not which openeth an entrie into the glorie of the heavenly kingdome, but whereby the elect are led of their God into the disclosing of it: for as much as this is his good will to glorifie them whome he hath sanctified. Onely let vs not imagine a correlation of merite and reward, wherein the Sophisters do fondly stick fast, because they consider not this end which we set foorth. But how vnorderly is it, when the Lord calleth vs to one end, for vs to looke to another? Nothing is more euident, than that reward is promised to good workes, to releue the weaknesse of our flesh with some comfort, not to puffe vp our mindes with glorie. Whosoever therefore doth thereby gather the merit of workes, or doth in one balance way worke with reward, he creeth faure from the right marke of God.

God as a iust iudge shall render a crowne to our righteousnesse but not vnlesse he doe first graunt vnto our vnrighteousnesse a gracious pardon.
2. Tim. 4. 8.
Aug. ad Valent. de grat. & lib. arbit.

5 Wherefore when the Scripture saith that God the iust iudge will one day render to his a crowne of righteousnesse, I doe not onely take exception with Augustine, and say: To whom should he being a iust iudge, render a crowne, if he had not being a mercifull father giuen grace? and how should there be righteousnesse, vnlesse grace went before which iustificth the vnrighteous? How should these due things be rendered, vnlesse these vndue things were first giuen? But also I adde another thing. How should he impute righteousnesse to our workes, vnlesse his tender mercifulnesse did hide the vnrighteousnesse that is in them? How should he iudge them woorthie of reward, vnlesse he did by immeasurable bountifulnes take away that which is worthy of punishment? For he is wont to call eternall life, grace: because it is rendered to the free gifts of God when it is repaid to workes. But the scripture doth further humble vs, and therewithall raise vs vp. For besides this that is forbidden vs to glorie in workes, because they are the free gifts of God, it therewithall teacheth that they are alwaies defiled with some dregs, that they cannot satisfie God, if they be examined by the rule of his iudgement: but least our courage should faint, it teacheth that they please by onely pardon. But although Augustine speaketh somewhat otherwise than we doe: yet that he doth not so disagree in the matter, shall appere by his wordes in his third booke to Boniface. Where when he had compared two men together, the one of a life euen miraculously holy and perfect, the other honest in deede and of vncorrupt manners, but not so perfect but that much wanteth in him: at the last hee concludeth thus. Euen this man which in manners seemeth much inferior, by reason of the true faith in God whereof he liueth and according to which he accuseth himselfe in all his offences, in all his good workes praiseth God, giuing to himselfe the shame, and to his glorie, and taking from himselfe both the pardon of finnes, and the loue of weldoings, when he is to be deliuered out of this life, he passeth into the fellowship of Christ. Wherefore, but because of faith? Which although it saue no man without workes, (for it is it, which worketh by loue, not a reprobate faith) yet by it also finnes are released, because the righteous man liueth of faith: but without it euen the same which seeme good workes are turned into finnes. Here verily he doth plainly confesse that which we so much trauell to prouue, that the righteousnesse of good workes hangeth hereupon, that they are by pardon allowed of God.

Cap. 5.

Heb. 2. 4.

By seruing God we doe eternally enrich our selues, not that our seruice is worthy as much as ouce to be regarded, but that his mercie sufficeth not his seruants to losse their labors.
Luk. 16. 9.
1. Tim. 6. 17.

6 A very neere sense to the places aboue recited, haue these: Make to your selues friendes of the Mammon of wickednesse, that when you shall faile, they may receiue you into euerlasting tabernacles. Commaund the rich men of this world not to be proudly minded, nor to trust in vncertaine riches but in the liuing God, to doe well, to become rich in good workes, to lay vp in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may obtaine eternall life. For good workes are compared to the riches, which we may enjoy in the blessednesse of eternall life. I answer, that we shal neuer come to the true vnderstanding of them, vnlesse we turne our eyes to the marke whereunto the holy Ghost directeth his words. If it be true which Christ saith that our mind abideth there where our treasure is, as the children of the world are wont to be earnestly bent to the getting of those things which serue for the delights of this present life: so the faithful must looke sith they haue learned that this life shall by & by vanish away like a dreme, that they send those things which they would enioy, thither where they shall haue perfect life. We must therefore do as they do which purpose to remoue into any place, where they haue chosen to rest their whole life. They send their goods before, and do not discontentedly want them for a time : because they thinke themselves so much more happie, how much more goods they haue where they shall tarie long. If we beleue that heauen is our country, it behooueth vs rather to send away our riches thither than to keepe them here where we must loose them with sudden remouing. But how shall we send them thither? If we communicate to the necessities of the poore : to whome whatsoever is giuen, the Lord accounteth it giuen to himselfe. Whereupon cometh that notable promise, He that giueth to the poore, lendeth for vs in his hand? The Lord. Againe, he that liberally soweth, shall liberally reape. For those things are deliuered into the hand of the Lord to keepe, which are bestowed vpon our brethren by the dutie of charitie. He, as he is a faithfull keeper of that which is deliuered to him, will one day restore it with plentifull gaine. Are then our dutifull doings of so great value with God, that they be as riches laide vp in store for vs in his hand? Who shall feare so to say, when the scripture doth so oft and plainly witness it? But if any man will leape from the meere goodnes of God to the worthines of workes, he shall be nothing holpen by their testimonies to the stablishing of his error. For you can gather nothing rightly thereof but the meere inclination of Gods tendernes toward vs: For as much as to encourage vs to well doing although the seruices which we do to him are not worthie of so much as his only looking vpon them, yet he suffreth none of them to be lost.

2. Cor. 9.6.

7 But they more enforce the words of the Apostle, which when he comforteth the Thessalonians in troubles, teacheth that the same are sent to them, that they may be accounted worthie of the kingdome of God, for which they suffer. For (saith he) it is righteous with God, to render trouble to them that trouble you : but to you, rest with vs when the Lord Iesus shall be shewed from heauen. But the author of the Epistle to the Hebrewes saith, God is not vnrighteous, that he should forget your worke, and the loue which you haue shewed in his name, for that you haue ministered to the Saints. To the first place I answer, that there is no worthines of merits spoken of: but because God the father willeth that we whome he hath chosen to be his children, should be made like to Christ his first begotten sonne: as it behooued that he should first suffer, and then enter into the glorie appointed for him: so must we also by many tribulations enter into the kingdome of heauen. Therefore when we suffer tribulations for the name of Christ, there are as it were certaine marks printed vpon vs, wherewith God vseth to marke the sheepe of his flocke. After this manner therefore we are accounted worthie of the kingdome of God, because we beare in our body the marks of our Lord and master which are the signes of the children of God. To this purpose make these sayings. That we beare about in our body the mortification of Iesus Christ that his life may be shewed in vs. That we be fashioned like to his sufferings, that we may come to the likenes of his resurrection from the dead. The reason which is adioyned serueth not to prooue any worthines, but to confirme the hope of the kingdome of God: as if he had said, As it agreeth with the iust iudgement of God to take vengeance of your enemies for the vexations that they haue done to you: so agreeth it also to giue to you release & rest fro vexations. The other place, which teacheth that it so becommeth the righteousnes of God not to forget the obedience of the that be his, that it declareth it to be in a maner vnrighteous if he should forget them, hath this meaning: God to quicken our slothfulness, hath giuen vs assurance that the labour shall not be vaine which we shall take for his glorie. Let vs alway remember that this promise, as all other should bring vs no profit, vnlesse the free covenant of mercie went before, wherewith the whole assurednes of our saluation should rest. But standing vpon that covenant, we ought assuredly to trust, there shall also not want reward of the liberalitie of God to our workes howsoever they bee vnworthie. The Apostle to confirme vs in that expectation, affirmeth that God is not vnrighteous, but will stande to his promise once made. Therefore this righteousnes is rather referred to the truth of Gods promise, than to his iustice of rendering due. According to which meaning there is a notable saying of Augustine, which as the holy man sticketh not to rehearse often as notable, so I thinke it not vnworthie that we shoulde continually remeber it. The Lord (saith he) is faithfull, which hath made himself detter to vs, not by receiuing any thing of vs, but by promising al things to vs.

This doctrine not shaken by the Apostle, either when he teacheth that afflictions are sent that they which are afflicted may be accounted worthy of a kingdom, nor when he denieth that God is so vnrighteous so forgets the good we do for his sake.

In Psal. 32. & 109.

The aduancements of Charitie is no disgrace to the doctrine of iustification by faith.

1. Cor. 13.

Col. 3. 14.

8 There are also alleaged these sayings of Paul. If I haue all faith, so that I remove mountains out of their place, but haue not charitie, I am nothing. Again, Now there remaine hope, faith & charitie, but the greatest among these is charitie. Again, About all things haue charitie, which is the bond of perfection. By the first two places our Pharisees affirme that we are rather iustified by charitie than by faith, namely by the cheefer vertue, as they say. But this fond argument is easily wiped away. For we haue in another place already declared, that those things which are spoken in the first place pertaine nothing to true faith. The other place wee also expounde of true faith, than which hee saith that charitie is greater: not that it is more meritorious, but because it is more fruitfull, because it extendeth further, because it serueth more, because it remaineth alway in force, whereas the vse of faith continueth but for a time. If we haue regard to excellency, the loue of god should worthily haue the cheef place, of which Paul here speaketh not. For hee enforceth this thing onely that wee shoulde with mutuall charitie edifie one another in the Lorde, but let vs imagine that charitie doth euery where excell faith: yet what man of sound iudgement, yea, or of sound braine, will gather hereof that it doth more iustifie? The power of iustifying which faith hath, consisteth not in the worthines of the work. Our iustification standeth vpon the onely mercy of God and the deseruing of Christ, which iustification whē faith taketh hold of it, is said to iustifie. Now if you aske your aduersaries in what sense they assigne iustification to charitie, they will answer that because it is a dutifull doing acceptable to God, therefore by the deseruing thereof righteousnes is imputed to vs by the acceptation of the goodnes of God. Here you see how wel the argument proceedeth. We say that faith iustifieth, not because by the worthines of it selfe it deserueth righteousnes to vs, but because it is an instrument by which we freely obtaine the righteousnes of Christ. These men, omitting the mercy of God, and passing ouer Christ (where the sum of righteousnes standeth) do affirme that we are iustified by the benefit of charitie because it excelleth aboue faith: euen as if a man should reason that a king is fitter to make a shooe than is a shoemaker, because he is an infinit way more excellent. This onely argument is a plaine example that all the Sorbonicall schooles do not so much as taste with the vtermoost part of their lips what the iustification of faith is. But if any wrangler do yet carpe & aske, why in so small distance of place we take the name of faith in Paul so diuersly: I haue a weightie cause of this exposition. For sith those gifts which Paul rehearseth are after a certaine manner vnder faith & hope, because they pertaine to the knowledge of god, he comprhendeth them all by way of recapitulation vnder the name of faith & hope: as if he should say both prophetic, & toongs, & the grace and knowledge of interpretation tend to this mark to lead vs to the knowledge of God. And we knowe God in this life none otherwise but by hope & faith. Therefore when I name faith & hope, I comprehend all these things together. And so there remaine these three Hope, Faith, Charitie: that is to say, how great diuersitie of giftes fouer there be, they are all referred to these. Among these the chiefe is Charitie, &c. Out of the third place they gather, If Charitie bee the bond of perfection, then it is also the bond of righteousnes which is nothing else but perfection. First, to speake nothing howe Paul there calleth perfection, when the

the members of the Church well set in order doe cleaue together, and to graunt that we are by charitie made perfect before God: yet what new thing bring they forth? For I will alway on the contrarie side take exception and say that we neuer come to this perfection vnlesse we fulfill all the partes of charitie, and thereupon I wil gather, that sith all men are most far from the fulfilling of charitie, therefore all hope of perfection is cut off from them.

9 I will not goe through all the testimonies which at this day the foolish Sorbonistes rashly snatch out of the scriptures, as they first come to hande, and doe throwe them against vs. For, some of them are so woorthie to be laughed at, that I my selfe also cannot rehearfe them, vnlesse I would woorthily be counted fond. Therefore I will make an ende, when I shall haue declared the saying of Christ, wherewith they maruellously please themselus. For, to the lawyer which asked him what was necessaric to saluation, he answered, if thou wilt enter into life keepe the commaundements. What would we more (say they) when we are commaunded by the author of grace himselfe to get the kingdome of God by the keeping of his commaundements? As though, forsooth it were not certaine, that Christ tempered his answers to them with whom he sawe that he had to doe. Here a doctour of the law asketh of the meane to obtaine blessednesse, and not that onely, but with doing of what thing men may attaine vnto it. Both the person of him that spake and the question it selfe led the Lord so to answer. The Lawyer being filled with the persuasion of the righteousness of the lawe, was blinde in confidence of workes. Againe, he sought nothing else but what were the works of righteousness, by which saluation is gotten. Therefore he is woorthily sent to the lawe, in which there is a perfect mirour of righteousness. We also doe with a loude voice pronounce that the commaundements must be kept, if life be sought in workes. And this doctrine is necessary to be knowne of Christians. For how should they flee to Christ if they did not acknowledge that they are fallen from the way of life into the headlong downfall of death? But how should they vnderstand how farre they haue straid from the way of life, vnlesse they first vnderstand what is that way of life? For then they are taught that the sanctuarie to recouer saluation is in Christ, when they see how great difference there is between their life and the righteousness of God which is contained in the keeping of the lawe. The summe is this, that if saluation be sought in workes, we must keepe the commaundements by which we are instructed to perfect righteousness. But we must not stick fast here, vnlesse we will faint in our mid course: for none of vs is able to keepe the commaundements. Sith therefore we are excluded from the righteousness of the lawe, we must of necessitie resort to another helpe, namely to the faith of Christ. Wherefore as here the Lord calleth backe the doctour of the lawe, whom he knew to swell with vaine confidence of workes, to the law, whereby he may learne that he is a sinner subiect to the dreadfull iudgement of eternall death: so in other places, without making mention of the lawe, he comforteth other that are already humbled with such knowledge, with promise of grace, as, Come to me all ye that labour and are loaden, and I will refresh you, and ye shall finde rest for your soules.

10 At the last when they are wearie of wresting the Scripture, they fall to subtleties and sophisticall arguments. They caull vpon this that faith is in some places called a worke, and thereupon they gather that we doe wrongfully set faith as contrarie to workes. As though forsooth faith in that it is an obeying of the will of God, eoth with her owne deservings procure vnto vs righteousness, and not rather because by imbracing the mercie of God, it salet in our hearts the righteousness of Christ offered to vs of it in the preaching of the Gospell. The readers shall pardon me if I doe not tarric vpon confuting of such follies, for they themselues without any assault of other, are sufficiently overthrowen with their owne feblenesse. But I will by the way confute one obiection which seemeth to haue some shew of reason, least it shoulde

trouble some that are not so well practised. Sith common reason teacheth that of contraries is all one rule, and all particular finnes are imputed to vs for vnrighteousnes, they say it is meete that to all particular good works be giuen the praise of righteousness. They do not satisfie me which answer, that the damnation of men properly proceedeth from onely vnbeleefe, not from particular sins. I doe indeede agree to them, that vnbeleefe is the fountaine and roote of all euils. For it is the first departing from God, after which do follow the particular trespassings against the lawe. But whereas they seeme to set one selfe-same reason of good and euill workes in weying of righteousness or vnrighteousnes, therein I am compelled to disagree from them. For the righteousness of workes is the perfect obedience of the lawe. Therefore thou canst not be righteous by workes, vnlesse thou doe followe it as a straight line in the whole continuall course of thy life. From it so soone as thou hast swarued thou art fallen into vnrighteousnes. Hereby appeereth that righteousness cometh not of one or a few workes, but of an vnswaruing and vnwearied obseruing of the will of God. But the rule of iudging vnrighteousnes is most contrarie. For hee that hath committed fornication, or hath stolen, is by one offence guiltie of death, because hee hath offended against the maiestie of God. Therefore these our subtle arguers cometh to stumble, for that they marke not this saying of Iames, that he which sinneth in one, is made guiltie of all, because hee that hath forbidden to kill, hath also forbidden to steale, &c. Therefore it ought to seeme no absurditie, when we saie that death is the iust reward of euery sin, because they are euery one worthe of the iust displeasure and vengeance of God. But thou shalt reason foolishly, if on the contrary side thou gather that by one good worke man may be reconciled to God, which with many finnes deserueth his wrath.

The xix. Chapter.

Of Christian libertie.

The necessitie of handling the question that concerneth Christians libertie.

NOW we must entreate of Christian libertie: the declaration whereof hee must not omit whose purpose is to comprehend in an abridgement the summe of the doctrine of the Gospell. For it is a thing principally necessarie, and without the knowledge whereof consciences dare in a manner enterprise nothing without doubting, they stumble and start backe in many things, they alway stagger and tremble: but especially it is an appendant of iustification, and availeth not a litle to the vnderstanding of the strength thereof. Yea they that earnestly feare God, shall hereby receiue an incomparable fruite of that doctrine which the wicked and Lucianicall men doe pleasantly taunt with their scoffes, because in the spirituall darkenesse wherewith they be taken, euery wanton railing is lawfull for them. Wherefore it shal now come forth in fit season: and it was profitable to differre to this place the plainer discoursing of it, (for we haue already in diuerse places lightly touched it) because so soone as any mention is brought in of Christian libertie, then either filthie lusts do boyle, or mad motions do rise, vnlesse these wanton wits be timely met withall, which do otherwise most naughtily corrupt the best things. For, some men by pretence of this libertie, shake off all obedience of God, and breake forth into an vnbridled licentiousnes: and some men disdain it, thinking that by it all moderation, order and choise of things is taken away. What should we here do, being compassed in such narrow straites? Shall we bid Christian libertie farewell, and so cutte off all fit occasion for such perils? But, as we haue said, vnlesse that bee fast holden, neither Christ, nor the truth of the Gospell, nor the inward peace of the soule is rightly knowen. Rather we must endeouour that so necessarie a part of doctrine be not suppressed, and yet that in the meane time those sonde objections may be mette withall which are woont to rise thereupon.

2 Christian libertie (as I thinke) consisteth in three partes. The first, that the consciences of the faithfull, when the assurance of their iustification before God is to be sought, may raise and aduance themselues above the lawe, and forget the whole righteousnesse of the lawe. For sith the lawe (as we haue already in another place declared) leaueth no man righteous: either we are excluded from all hope of iustification, or we must be looked from the lawe, and so that there be no regarde at all had of works. For whoso thinketh that he must bring somewhat be it neuer so little of good workes to obtaine righteousness, he cannot appoint any ende or measure of them, but maketh himselfe detter to the lawe. Therefore taking away all mention of the lawe, and laying aside all thinking vpon workes, we must embrace the only mercie of God, when we intreat of iustification: and turning away our sight from our selues, we must behold Christ alone. For there the question is not how we be righteous: but how although we be vnrighteous and vnwoorthie, we be taken for woorthie. Of which thing if consciences will attaine any certaintie, they must giue no place to the lawe. Neither can any man hereby gather that the lawe is superfluous to the faithfull, whom it doth not therefore cease to teach, & exhort, & prick forward to goodnes, although before the iudgement seate of God it hath no place in their consciences. For these two things, as they are most diuers, so must they bee well and diligently distinguished of vs. The whole life of Christians ought to be a certaine meditation of godlinesse, because they are called into sanctification. Herein standeth the office of the lawe, that by putting them in minde of their dutie, it should stirre them vp to the endeavour of holinesse and innocencie. But when consciences are carefull how they may haue God mercifull, what they shall answer, and vpon what assurance they shall stand if they be called to his iudgement, there is not to be reckoned what the lawe requireth, but onely Christ must be set forth for righteousness, which passeth all perfection of the lawe.

The first part of Chr. libertie, the freedom from the bondage and tyrannie of the lawe.

1. The. 4.5.*

4 Vpon this point hangeth almost all the argument of the Epistle to the Galatians. For, that they be fond expositors which teach that Paul there contendeth onely for the libertie of ceremonies, may be proued by the places of the arguments. Of which sort are these. That Christ was made a curte for vs, that he might redeme vs from the Curse of the lawe. Again, Stand fast in the libertie wherewith Christ hath made you free, and be not againe entangled with the yoke of bondage. Beholde, I Paul say, if ye be circumcised, Christ shall nothing profite you. And he which is circumcised is detter of the whole lawe. Christ is made idle to you whosoever ye be that are iustified by the lawe: ye are fallen away from grace. Wherein truly is contained some higher thing than the libertie of ceremonies. I graunt in deede that Paul there intreateth of ceremonies, because he contendeth with the false Apostles, which went about to bring againe into the Christian Church the old shadowes of the law which were abolished by the comming of Christ. But for the discussing of this question, there were higher places to be disputed, in which the whole controuersie stood. First because by those Iewish shadowes the brightnesse of the Gospell was darkened, he sheweth that wee haue in Christ a full giuing in deede of all those things which were shadowed by the ceremonies of Moses. Secondly, because these deceiuers filled the people with a most naughtie opinion, namely that this obedience auailed to deserue the fauour of God: Here he standeth much vpon this point, that the faithfull should not thinke that they can by any workes of the lawe, much lesse by those little principles, obtaine righteousness before God. And therewithall he teacheth, that they are by the crosse of Christ free from the damnation of the law, which otherwise hangeth ouer all men, that they shoulde with full assurednesse rest in Christ alone. Which place properly pertaineth to this purpose. Last of all he maintaineth to the consciences of the faithfull their libertie, that they shoulde not be bound with any religion in things not necessaric.

The libertie distressed of in the Epistle to the Galatians. Gal. 3.13. & 5.1.

Cap. 19. Of the maner how to receiue

*The second part of Christian libertie
free and by the lawe unconstrained obedience.*

Deut. 6. 5.

4 The second part, which hangeth vpon that former part, is that consciences obey the law, not as compelled by the necessitie of the lawe: but being free from the yoke of the law it selfe, of their owne accord they obey the will of God. For because they abide in perpetuall terrors, so long as they be vnder the dominion of the lawe, they shall neuer be with cheerefull readinesse framed to the obedience of God, vnlesse they first haue this libertie giuen them. By an example we shal both more briefly, and more plainly perceiue what these things meane. The commandment of the law is, that we loue our God with all our hart, with all our soule, with all our strengthes. That this may be done, our soule must first bee made voide of all other sense and thought, our hart must be cleansed of all desires, all our strengthes must be gathered vp and drawen together to this onely purpose. They which haue gone most farre before other in the way of the Lord, are yet very farre from this marke. For though they loue God with their minde, and with sincere affection of heart, yet they haue still a great part of their hart and soule possessed with the desires of the flesh, by which they are drawen backe and staid from going forwarde with hastie course to God. They doe in deede trauell forward with great endeouour: but the flesh partly feebleth their strengthes, and partly draweth them to it selfe. What shall they here doe, when they seele that they doe nothing lesse then performe the lawe? They will, they couet, they endeouour, but nothing with such perfection as ought to be. If thou looke vpon the lawe, they see that whatsoeuer worke they attempt or purpose, is accursed. Neither is there any cause why any man should deceiue himselfe with gathering that the worke is therefore not altogether euill, because it is vnperfect: and therefore that God doth neuertheless accept that good which is in it. For, the law requiring perfect loue, condemneth all imperfection, vnlesse the rigour of it be mitigated. Therefore his works should fall to nought which he would haue to seeme partly good: and he shall finde that it is a transgression of the law, euen in this because it is vnperfect.

Man freed from the exactions of the lawe are as children sweetly woun into cheere-full obedience by the fatherly gen-tlenesse wherewith they knowe that God hath promised to inuente them.

Mal. 3. 17.

5 Loe, how all our works are subiect to the curse of the lawe, if they be measured by the rule of the lawe. But howe shoulde then vnhappy soules cheerefully applie themselves to worke, for which they might not trust that they could get any thing but curse? On the other side, if being deliuered from this seuerer exacting of the lawe, or rather from the whole rigour of the lawe, they heare that they be called of God with fatherly gentlenesse: they will merily and with great cheerefulnesse answer his calling and follow his guiding. In a summe, they which are bound to the yoke of the lawe, are like to bondseruants, to whom are appointed by their lords certaine taskes of worke for euery day. These seruants thinke that they haue done nothing, nor dare come in the sight of their Lords, vnlesse they haue performed that full taske of their works. But children, which are more liberally and more freemanlike handled of their fathers, stick not to present to them their beguall and halfe vnperfect works, yea and those hauing some fault, trusting that they will accept their obedience and willingnesse of minde, although they haue not exactly done so much as their good will was to do. So must we be as may haue sure affiance, that our obediences shall be allowed of our most kinde father, how little soeuer, and how rude and vnperfect soeuer they be. As also he assureth to vs by the Prophet: I will spare them (saith he) as the father is woun to spare his sonne that serueth him. Where this word Spare, is set for to beare withall, or gently to winke at faulres, for as much as he also maketh mention of seruice. And this affiance is not a little necessaric for vs, without which we shall goe about all things in vaine. For God accounteth himselfe to be worshipped with no worke of ours but which is truly done of vs for the worshipping of him. But how can that be done among these terrors, where it is doubted whether God be offended or worshipped without our worke?

The libertie which we haue in the state of grace a

6 And that is the cause why the author of the Epistle to the Hebrewes, referreth all the good works which are read of in the holy fathers, to faith, and weicth them onely by by faith. Touching this libertie there is a place in the Epistle to the Romanes, where Paul reasoneth that sinne ought not to haue dominion ouer vs, because wee are not vnder the law, but vnder grace. For when hee had exhorted the faithfull that sinne should not reigne in their mortall bodies, and that they shoulde not giue their members to be weapons of wickednes to sinne, but should dedicate themselues to God, as they that are aliuie frō the dead, & their members, weapons of righteousnes to god: and whereas they might on the other side obiect that they doe yet carrie with them the flesh full of lults, and that sin dwelleth in them, hee adioyneth that comfort by the libertie of the law, as if he should say. Though they doe not yet throughly feele sinne destroyed and that righteousnes yet liueth not in them, yet there is no cause why they should feare and be discouraged, as though he had bene alway displeas'd with them for the remnants of sinne, forasmuch as they are by grace made free from the lawe, that their workes shoulde not bee examined by the rules of the lawe. As for them that gather that wee may sinne because wee are not vnder the lawe, let them knowe that this libertie pertaineth nothing to them, the end whereof is to encourage vs to good.

7 The third part is, that we be bound with no conscience before God of outward things which are by themselues indifferent, but that we may indifferently sometime vse them, and sometime leaue them vnused. And the knowledge of this libertie also is very necessarie for vs, for if it shall be absent, there shall be no quiet to our consciences, no end of superstitions. Many at this day do thinke vs fond to moue disputation about the free eating of flesh, about the free vse of daies, and garments, & such other small trifles as they indeed thinke the: but there is more weight in them than is commonly thought. For when consciences haue once cast themselues into the snare, they enter into a long and cumbersome way, from whence they can afterward finde no easie way to get out. If a man begin to doubt whether he may occupie linnen in theetes, shirts, handkerchiefs, and napkins, neither will he be out of doubt whether he may vse hempe, and at the last he will also fall in doubt of matters, for he will wey with himselfe whether hee cannot sup without napkins, whether hee may not be without handkerchiefs. If any man thinke deintie meate to be vnlawfull, at length he shall not with quietnes before the Lorde eate either bro; vn-bread or common meates, when he remembereth that he may yet sustaine his bodie with baser food. If he doubt of pleasant wine, afterward he will not drinke dead wine with good peace of conscience, last of al he will not be so bold to touch sweeter & cleaner water than other. Finally, at the length he will come to this point, to thinke it vnlawfull (as the common saying is) to tread vpon a straw lying a crosse. For here is begun no light strife, but this is in question, whether God will haue vs to vse these or those things, whose will ought to guide all our counsels and doings. Heereby some must needs be carried with desperation into a confus'd denouring pit: some must, despising God, and casting away his feare, make themselues awaie through destruction when they haue no ready way: For whoeuer are entangled with such doubting, which way to ouer they turne themselues, they see euery where present offence of conscience.

8 I know (saith Paul) that nothing is common (meaning by common, vnholie) but who so thinketh any thing common, to him it is common. In which wordes hee maketh all outward things subiect to our libertie, provided alway that our mindes haue the assurance of the libertie before God. But if any superstitious opinion cast into vs any doubt, those things which of their owne nature were cleane, are defiled to vs. Wherefore he addeth: blessed is he that iudgeth not himselfe in that which he alloweth. But he that iudgeth, if he eate, is condemned, because hee eateth not of faith. And that which is not of faith, is sin. Among such narrow straits, who so neuertheless with carelessly venturing on all things thewe themselues boulder, do they Speciall encouragement to striue that we be not ouerwhelmed with sinne.

Rom. 11. 2.
Rom. 6. 12.

The thirde part of christian libertie is freedom of conscience touching the vse of indifferent things, as cloth, meate, drink, wherein it is unnecessary to know how much is permitted vs, least too much strentesse driue vs to incontinence.

If we are not with thankfulness to God enioy the vse of our members, we lose the benefit of our libertie.
Rom. 14. 14.

not as such turne themselves away from God? But they which are throughly pearced with some feare of God, when they themselves also are compelled to do many things against their conscience, are discouraged and do fall downe with feare. All that are such, doe receiue none of the giftes of God with thanksgiuing, by which alone yet Paul testifieth that they all are sanctified to our vse: I mean the thanksgiuing that proceedeth from a hart that acknowledgeth the liberality & goodnes of God in his gifts. For many of them indeed do vnderstand that those are the benefites of God which they vse, & they praise God in his workes: but sith they are not perswaded that they are giuen to themselves, how should they thanke God as the giuer of them? Thus in a summe we see, whereto this libertie tendeth, namely that we should vse the giftes of God to such vse as he hath giuen them vnto vs, without any scruple of conscience, without any trouble of minde, by which confidence our soules may both haue peace with him, and acknowledge his liberality toward vs. For here are comprehended all ceremonies that are at libertie to be obserued, that our consciences should not be bound with any necessitie to keepe them, but should remember that the vse of them is by Gods benefite subiect to themselves vnto edification.

*The vse and abuse of the doctrine

9 But it is diligently to be noted, that Christian libertie is in all the parts of it a spirituall thing, the whole strength whereof consisteth in appeasing fearefull consciences before God, if either they bee vnquieted, or carefull for the forgiuenesse of finnes, or if they be pensiué whether our imperfect workes and defiled with the faults of our flesh do please God, or if they be troubled about the vse of indifferent things. Wherefore they doe wrongfully expounde it, which either doe make it a cloke for their owne desires, that they may abuse the giftes of God to their owne lust, or which do thinke that there is no libertie but that which is vsed before men, and therefore in vsing it haue no regard of the weake brethren. In the first kinde, men do at this day much offend. There is almost no man which may by his abilitie of wealth be sumptuous, which deliteth not in excessiue gorgiounesse, in furniture of bankets, in apparell of bodie, in building of houses, which hath not a will to excell other in all kind of stateliness: which doth not manuellously flatter himselfe in his finnes. And all these things are defended vnder the pretence of Christian libertie. They say that they are things indifferent, I graunt, so that a man indifferently vse them. But when they are too greedily coveted, when they are proudly boasted, when they are wastfully spent, it is certaine that those things which otherwise were of themselves lawful, are by these faults defiled. This saying of Paul doth very well put difference betweene things indifferent. All things are cleane to the cleane: but to the defiled and vnbeleeuing, nothing is cleane, because their mind and conscience is defiled. For why are accursed the rich men, they which haue their comfort, which are satisfied with meate, which do now laugh, which sleepe in beds of iuorie, which ioyne lande to land, whose bankets haue Lute, Harpe, taber and wine? Verily both iuorie, and gold, and riches, are the good creatures of God, permitted yea and appointed by the prouidence of God for men to vse. Neither is it any where forbidden either to laugh, or to be satisfied with meate, or to ioyne new possessions to their owne olde possessions or of their auncesters, or to be delired with musicall melodie, or to drinke wine. This is true indeed. But when they haue plentie of things, to wallow in delights, to glut themselves, to make their wit and minde drunke with present pleasures and alway no gape for new, these doings are most farre from the lawfull vse of the giftes of God. Therefore let them take away immeasurabable desire, let them take away immeasurabable wasting, let them take away vanity and arrogancie, that they may with a pure conscience purely vse the giftes of God, When the minde shall be framed to this sobrietie, they shall haue a rule of the lawfull vse. On the other side let this moderation bee wanting, euen base and common delicates are too much. For this is truly saide, that oftentimes in frise and courie cloth dwelleth a purple heart, and sometime vnder silke and and purple, lyeth simple humilitie. Let every man in his degree so liue either poorely, or meanelly, or plentifully, that they all remember that they are fed of God to liue, not to be riotous: and let them thinke, that this is the law of Christian liberty: if they haue learned with Paul to be contented with those things which they presently haue: if they can skill both to be humble and to excell: if they be taught in all places and in all things to be both full and hungrie, to haue plentie and to suffer want. Philip. 4.

10 Herein also many men doe erre, because as though their libertie should not be found and fare vnlesse it had men witnesses of it, they doe vndiscreetely and vnwisely vse it. By which vnreasonable vsing they many times offend the weake brethren. You may see at this day some, which thinke that their libertie can not stand, vnlesse they take possession of it by eating of flesh on Friday. I blame not that they eate: but this false opinion must be driuen out of their mindes. For they ought to thinke that by their libertie they obtaine no new thing in the sight of men but before GOD, and that it standeth as well in abstaining as in vsing. If they vnderstand that it maketh no matter before GOD, whether they eate flesh or egges, whether they wear red or black garments, that is enough. The conscience is now free, to which the benefite of such liberty was due. Therefore although they doe afterward abstaine al their life long from flesh, and wear alway but one colour, yet they are no lesse free. Yea therefore because they are free, they doe with a free conscience abstaine. But they doe most hurtfully offend because they nothing regard the weakenesse of their brethren, which we ought so to beare with, that we rashly commit nothing with offence of them. But sometime also it behooueth that our libertie be set forth before men. And this I graunt. But there is a measure most heedfully to be kept, that we cast not away the care of the weake of whom the Lord hath so earnestly giuen vs charge.

11 I will in this place therefore speake somewhat of offences, in what difference they are to be taken, which are to be auoided, and which to be neglected: whercupon we may afterward determine what place there is for our libertie among men. I like well that common diuision, which teacheth that there is of offences one sort giuen, another taken: for asmuch as it both hath a plaine testimony of the Scripture, and doth not vnfitly expresse that which it meaneth. If ihou doe anything by vnreasonable lightnesse, or wantonnesse, or rashnes, not in order, not in fit place, whereby the ignorant and weake are offended, that same may be called an offence giuen by thee: because it came to passe by thy fault that such offence was stirred vp. And it is alway called an offence giuen in any thing, the fault wherof came from the doer of the thing it selfe. It is called an offence taken, when a thing which is otherwise not euilly done nor out of time is by euill will or by some wrongfull maliciousnes of mind drawn to occasion of offence. For in this case was not offence giuen, but these wrongfull contriuers doe without cause take one. With that first kind of offence none are offended but the weake: but with this second kinde sower natures & Pharisaicall scornefull heads are offended. Wherefore we shall call the one, the offence of the weake: the other of the Pharisees: and we shall so temper the vse of our libertie, that it ought to giue place to the ignorance of the weake brethren, but in no wise to the rigorousnesse of the Pharisees. For, what is to be yeilded to weakenes, Paul sheweth in very many places. Beare (saith he) the weake in Faith. Againe, Let vs not hereafter iudge one another, but this rather, let there not be laid before our brother any offence or occasion of falling: and many other sayings to the same intent, which are more fit to be read in the place it selfe, than to be here rehearsed. The summe is, that we which are strong should beare with the weakenes of our brethren, and not please our selues, but every one of vs please his neighbour vnto good for edifying. In another place, But see that your libertie be not in any wise an offence to them that are weake. Againe, Eate ye all things that are sold in the thambles, asking no question for conscience: of your conscience (I say) not another mans. Finally be ye such, that ye giue no offence, neither to the Iewes, nor to the Greekes, nor to the Church of God. Also in another place, Yee are called, brethren, into libertie: onely giue not your libertie to be an occasion to the flesh, but by charitie setue yee one another. Thus it is. Our libertie is not giuen towards our weake neighbours, whose seruants charitie maketh vs in all things: but rather, that hauing peace with God in our minds, we may also liue peaceably among men. As for the offence of the Pharisees, how much it is to be regarded, we learne by the words of the Lord, wherely he biddeth them to be let alone, because they are blind, and guides of the blind. The disciples had warned him, that the Pharisees were offended with his sayings: he answered that they were to be neglected, and the offending of them not to be cared for.

How far our liberty extendeth in respect of others whom it may offend.

Cor. 9. 19. & 21

12 But yet still the matter hangeth doubtfull, vntill we know who are to be taken for weake, and who for Pharisees: which difference being taken away, I see not among offences what vse at all of libertie remaineth, which might neuer be vsed without great danger. But it seemeth to me that Paul hath most plainly declared both by doctrine and by examples, how far our libertie is either to be tempered or to be defended though with offences. When he tooke Timothee into his companie, he circumcised him: but he could not be brought to circumcise Titus. Heere were diuers doings, and no change of purpose or of minde: namely in circumcising Timothee, when he was free from all men, he made himselfe a seruant to all men: and he was made to the Iewes, as a Iew, that he might win the Iewes: to them that were vnder the lawe, as if he himselfe were vnder the lawe, that he might winne them which were vnder the law: all things to all men, that he might saue many, as hee writeth in another place. Thus we haue a right moderation of libertie, if it may be indifferently restrained with some profit. What he had respect vnto, when hee stoutly refused to circumcise Titus, he himselfe testifieth, writing thus: But neither was Titus, which was with me, although he was a Grecian compelled to be circumcised, because of the false brethren which were come in by the way, which had priuily crept in to espie our libertie which we haue in Christ Iesus, that they might bring vs into bondage, to whom we gaue not place by subiection so much as for a time, that the truth of the Gospell might continue with you. There is also a time when we must of necessitie defend our libertie, if the same be in weake consciences endangered by the vniust exactings of false Apostles. We must in euery thing studie to preferue charitie, and haue regarde to the edifying of our neighbour. All things (saith he) are lawfull for me, but not all things are expedient: all things are lawfull for me, but all things do not edifie. Let no man seeke that which is his owne, but that which is anothers. There is nothing new plainer by this rule, then that we must vse our libertie, if it may tune to the edifying of our neighbour: but if it be not so expedient for our neighbour, then we must forbear it. There be some which counterfait the wisdom of Paul in forbearing of libertie, while they do nothing lesse than apply the same to the duties of charitie. For so that they may prouide for their owne quietnes, they with all mention of libertie to be buried, whereas it is no lesse behouefull for our neighbours, sometime to vse libertie for their benefit and edification, than in fit place to restraime it for their commoditie. But it is the part of a godly man to thinke, that free power in outward things is therefore granted him, that he may be the truer to all duties of charitie.

Gal. 2. 4.

1. Cor. 10. 23.

Incollerable halting course with pruden not of sending the weak.

13 But what foecur I haue spoken of auoiding of offences, my meaning is that it be referred to meane and indifferent things. For those things that are necessarie to be done, are not to be left vndone for feare of any offence. For as our libertie is to be submittid to charitie, so charitie it selfe likewise ought to bee vnder the purenesse of truth: Verilie heere also ought to be had regarde of charitie, but so farre as to the altars, that is, that for our neighbours sake we offend not God. Their intemperance is not to be allowed, which doe nothing but with troublesome turmoiling, and which had rather rashly to rend all things, than leisurely to rip them. Neither yet are they to be harkned to, which when they be leaders of men into a thousand sortes of vngodlinesse, yet doe faine that they must behaue them selues so that they be none offence of their neighbours. As though they doe not in the meane edifie the consciences of their neighbours to euill, specially whereas they sticke fast in the same mire without any hope of getting out. And the pleasant men forsooth, whether their neighbour to be instructed with doctrine or example of life, say that he must be fed with milke, whom they fill with most euill and poysonous opinions. Paul reporteth that he fed the Corinthians with drinking of milke: but if Popish Masse had then bene among them, would he haue sacrificed to giue them the drinke of milke? No: For milke is not poyson. Therefore they lie in saying that they feede them whom vnder a shew of flattering allurements they cruelly kill. But, granting that such dissembling is for a time to be allowed, how long yet will they feede their children with milke? For if they neuer grow bigger, that they may at the least be able to beare some light meate, it is certaine that they were neuer brought vp with milke. There are two reasons that moue me why I doe not now more sharply contende with them: first, because their follies are scarcely worthy to be confuted, sith they worthily seeme filthie in the sight of all men that haue their sound wit: secondly, because I haue sufficiently done it in peculiar bookes, I will not now doe a thing already done. Onely let the readers remember this, that with whatsoever offences Satan and the world goe about to turne vs away from the ordinances of God, or to stay vs fro following that which he appointeth, yet we must neuertheless goe earnestly forward: and then, that whatsoever dangers hang vpon it, yet is it not at our libertie to swaue one haire breadth from the commandment of the same God, neither is it lawfull by any pretence to attempt any thing but that which he giueth vs leaue.

1. Cor. 3. 2.

14 Now therefore sith faithfull consciences hauing received such prerogative of libertie as we haue about set forth, haue by the benefite of Christ obtained this that they be not entangled with any snares of obseruations in those things in which the Lord willed that they should be at libertie: we conclude that they are exempt from all power of men. For it is vnmeet, that either Christ should lose the thanke of his so great liberality, or consciences their profite. Neither ought we to thinke it a slight matter, which we see to haue cost Christ so deere: namely which he valued not with gold or siluer, but with his owne blood: so that Paul sticketh not to say, that his death is made voide, if we yeeld our soules into subiection to men. For he trauelleth about nothing else in certaine Chapters of the Epistle to the Galathians, but to shew that Christ is darkned or rather destroyed to vs, vnlesse our consciences stande fast in their libertie, which verily they haue lost if they may at the wil of men be snared with the bonds of lawes and ordinances. But as it is a thing most worthie to be knowne, so it needeth a longer and plainer declaration. For so soone as any word is spoken of the abrogating of the ordinances of men, by and by great troubles are raised vp partly by seditious men, partly by slanderers, as though the whole obedience of men were at once taken away and ouerthrowne.

The consciences of faithfull men exempted from humane power.

1. Pet. 1. 18.
Gal. 5. 1. & 4.

15 Therefore that none of vs may stumble at this stone, first let vs consider, that there are two sortes of gouernement in man: the one spiritual, whereby the conscience is framed to godlines and to the worship of God: the other ciuill, whereby man is trained to the duties of humanity and ciuility which are to be kept among men. They are commonly by not vnfit names called the Spirituall and Temporall iurisdiction, whereby is signified, that the first of the two formes of gouernment pertaineth to the life of the Soule, and the latter is occupied in the things of this present life: not onely in feeding and clothing, but in setting forth of lawes whereby a man may spend his life among men holily, honestlie, and soberly. For, that first kinde hath place

Christians are not therefore according to the outward behaviour of their persons prouided from subiection to the law of men, because their consciences are at libertie before Gal.

in the inward minde, this latter kinde ordereth onely the outward behauiours. The one we may call the spirituall kingdome, the other, the Ciuill kingdome. But these two, as wee haue diuided them, must be either of them alway generally considered by themselves, and when the one is in considering, we must withdrawe and turne away our mindes from the thinking vpon the other. For there are in man as it were two worldes, which both diuers kings and diuers lawes may gouerne. By this putting of difference shall come to passe, that that which the Gospell teacheth of the spirituall libertie, we shall not wrongfully draw to the ciuill order, as though Christians were according to the outward gouernement lesse subiect to the lawes of men, because their consciences are at libertie before God: as though they were therefore exempt from all bondage of the flesh, because they are free according to the spirit. Again, because euen in those ordinances which seeme to pertaine to the spirituall kingdome, there may be some error, we must also put difference betweene these, which are to be taken for lawfull as agreeable to the word of God, & on the other side which ought not to haue place among the godly. Of the Ciuill gouernement there shall be else where place to speake. Also of the Ecclesiasticall lawes I omit to speake at this time, because a more full entreating of it shal be fit for the fourth booke, where we shall speake of the power of the Church. But of this discourse, let this be the conclusion, The question being (as I haue saide) of it selfe not very darke or entangled, doth for this cause accumber many, because they doe not fully enough put difference between the outward court as they call it, and the court of conscience. Moreover this encreaseth the difficultie, that Paul teacheth that the magistrate ought to be obeyed, not onely for feare of punishment, but for conscience. Whereupon followeth that consciences are also bound by the ciuill lawes. If it were so, all should come to nought which we both haue spoken and shall speake of the spirituall gouernment. For the loosng of this knot, first it is good to know what is conscience. And the definition thereof is to be fetched from the deriuation of the word. For, as when men do with minde and vnderstanding conceiue the knowledge of things, they are thereby saide (Sere) to knowe, whereupon also is deriued the name of Science: Knowledge: so when they haue a feeling of the iudgement of God, as a witness ioynd with them, which doth not suffer them to hide their sinnes but that they be drawn accused to the iudgement seate of God, that same feeling is called Conscience. For it is a certaine meane betweene God and man, because it suffereth not man to suppress in himselfe that which he knoweth but pursueth him so far till it bring him to guiltines. This is it which Paul meaneth, where he saith that conscience doth together witness with men, when their thoughts do accuse or acquite them in the iudgement of God. A simple knowledge might remaine as enclosed within man. Therefore this feeling which presenteth man to the iudgement of God, is as it were a keeper ioynd to man, to marke and espie all his secrets, that nothing may remaine buried in darknes. Whereupon also cometh that olde Prouerbe, Conscience is a thousand witnesses. And for the same reason Peter hath set the examination of a good conscience for the quietnes of minde, when being perswaded of the grace of Christ, we do without feare present our selues before God. And the author of the Epistle to the Hebrewes, setteth to haue no more conscience of sin, in steed of, to be deliuered or acquitted that same may no more accuse vs.

16 Therefore as works haue respect to men, so conscience is referred to God, so that a good conscience is nothing else but the inward purenesse of the heart. In which sense Paul writeth that charitie is the fulfilling of the law out of a pure conscience and faith not fained. Afterward also in the same chapter he sheweth how much it differeth from vnderstanding, saying that some had sinned shipwracke from the faith, because they had forsaken good Conscience. For in these words he signifieth it is a lively affection to worship God, and a sincere endeouour to liue holly and godly.

Tit. 1. 5.

Sometime in deede it extendeth also to men, as in Luke where the same Paul protesteth that he endeoured himselfe to walke with a good conscience towarde God & men. But this was therefore said, because the fruites of good conscience do flowe and come euen to men. But in speaking properly, it hath respect to God onely, as I have already said. Hereby it cometh to passe that the law is said to bind the conscience, which simply bindeth a man without respect of men, or without hauing any consideration of them. As for example: God commandeth not onely to keepe the minde chaste and pure from all lust, but also forbiddeth all manner of filthinesse of wordes and outward wantonnes whatsoeuer it be. To the keeping of this law my conscience is subiect although there liued not one man in the world. So he that behaueth himself intemperately, not only sinneth in this that he giueth an euil example to the brethren, but also hath his conscience bound with guiltines before God. In things that are of themselves meane, there is another consideration. For wee ought to abstaine from them if they breede any offence, but the conscience still being free, So Paul speaketh of flesh consecrate to Idols. If anie (saith he) moue any doubt, touch it not for conscience sake: I say for conscience, not thine but the others. A faithfull man shoulde sinne, which being first warned should neuertheless eate such flesh. But howsoeuer in respect of his brother, it is necessarie for him to abstaine as it is prescribed of God, yet he ceaseth not to keepe still the libertie of conscience. Thus we see how this law binding the outward worke, leaueth the conscience vnbound.

The xx. Chapter.

Of Prayer, which is the chiefe exercise of faith, and whereby we daily receive the benefits of God.

OF these things that haue beene hitherto spoken, we plainly perceiue how needy and voide man is of all good things, and how he wanteth all helpes of saluation. Wherefore if he seeke for relectes whereby he may sue out his needinesse, hee must go out of himselfe and get them elswhere. This is afterward declared vnto vs, that the Lord doth of his owne free will and liberally giue himselfe to vs in his Christ, in whom he offereth vs in steede of our miserie all felicitie, in steede of our neede welthinesse, in whom he openeth to vs the heavenly treasures: that our whole faith shoulde beholde his beloued sonne, that vpon him our whole expectation should hang, in him our whole hope should sticke and rest. This verily is the secret and hidden Philosophie, which cannot be wrung out with Logieall arguments: but they learne it whocies God hath opened that they may see light in his sight. But since that we are taught by faith to acknowledge that whatsoeuer we haue neede of, whatsoeuer wanteth in vs, the same is in God and in our Lord Iesus Christ, namely in whom the Lord willed the whole fulnesse of his largesse to rest, that from thence we should all drawe as out of a most plentiful fountaine: now it remaineth that we seeke in him, and with praiers craue of him that which we haue learned to be in him. Otherwise to know God to be the Lord and giuer of all good things, which allureth vs to pray to him, and not to go to him and pray to him: should so nothing profite vs, that it should be all one as if a man should neglect a treasure shewed him buried and digged in the ground. Therefore the Apostle to shewe that true faith cannot bee idle from calling vpon God, hath set this order: that as of the Gospell springeth faith, so by it our harts are framed to call vpon the name of God. And this is the same thing which he had a little before said, that the spirit of adoptiō, which sealeth in our harts the witness of the Gospell, raiseth vp our spirits that they dare shewe forth their desires to God, stirre vp vnspeakable gronings, and crieth with confidence Abba Father. It is meete therefore that: this last point, because it was before but onely spoken of by the way and as it were lightly touched, should now be more largely entreated of.

Our owne empires and the fulnesse of riches laid up in Christi shoulde allure vs vnto prayer.

Rom. 8. 26.

Cap. 20. Of the maner how to receiue

By prayer we are both enriched with grace, and in distresse quieted.

2 This therefore we get by the benefit of prayer, that we attaine to those riches which are laid vp for vs with the heauenlie father. For there is a certaine communicating of men with God, whereby they entering into the sanctuarie of heauen, do in his owne presence call to him touching his promises: that the same thing which they beleueed him affirming only in word not to be vaine, they may when neede so requireth finde in experience. Therefore we see that there is nothing set forth to vs to be looked for at the hand of the Lord, which we are not also commanded to craue with prayers: so true it is that by prayer are digged vp the treasures, which our faith hath looked vpon being shewed to it by the gospell of the Lord. Now how necessarie and how manie waies profitable this exercise of praier is, it can by no words be sufficientlie declared. Vndoubtedly it is not without cause that the heauenly father testifieth, that the only fortres of saluation is in the calling vpon his name, namely whereby we call to vs the presence both of his prouidence, by which he watcheth to take care of our matters: and of his power, by which he sustaineth vs being weake and in a manner fainting: and of his goodnes, by which he receiueth vs into fauour being miserably loaden with sinnes: finally whereby we call him all whole, to giue himselfe present to vs. Hereby groweth singular rest and quietnesse to our consciences. For when we haue disclosed to the Lord the necessitie which distressed vs, we largely rest though it were but in this onely that none of our euils is hidden from him, whom we are perswaded both to be most well willing toward vs, and most able to prouide well for vs.

It is not a needlesse thing to pray euen for those things which before we pray we know that God is purposed to bestow.

3 But (will some man say) did not he know without any to put him in mind of it, both in what part we be distressed, and what is expedient for vs: so that it may seeme after a certaine manner superfluous, that he should be troubled with our prayers, as though he winked or slept, vntill he were awaked with our voice? But they which so reason, marke not to what end the Lord hath instructed them that be his to pray: for he ordeined it not so much for his owne cause as rather for ours. He willet in deede, as right it is, that his due be rendred to him, when they acknowledge to come from him whatsoever men require or do perceiue to make for their profite, and do testifie the same with wishings. But the profite also of this sacrifice wherewith he is worshipped, cometh to vs. Therefore how much more boldly the holy fathers gloriously talked both to themselues and other of the benefites of God, so much the more sharply they were pricked forward to pray. The onely example of Elias shall be enough for vs, which being sure of the countell of God, affer that he not rashly had promised raine to Achab, yet busily prayeth betwene his knees, and sendeth his seruant seven times to espie it: not for that he did discredit the oracle of God, but because he knew that it was his dutie, least his faith should waxe drowlie and sluggish, to lay vp his desires with God. Wherefore although while we lie senselesse and so dull that we perceiue not our owne miseries, he waketh and watcheth for vs, and sometime also helpeth vs vndefired, yet it much behooueth vs, that he be continually called vpon of vs, that our heart may be enflamed with earnest and feruent desire to seeke, loue, and worship him, while we accustome our selues in eury necessitie to flee to him as to our shoote-anchor. Againe, that no desire and no with at all may enter into our mind, whereof we should be ashamed to make hauyn witnesse, while we learne to present our wishes, yea and to poure out our whole heart before his eyes. Then that we may be framed to receiue all his benefites with true thankfulness of mind, yea and with outward thanksgiving, of which we are put in mind by our prayer that they come to vs from his hand. Morcouer, that when we haue obtained that which we desired, being perswaded that he hath answered to our prayers, we may be thereby the more feruently casted to thinke vpon his kindnes, and therewithall embrace with greater pleasure those things which we acknowledge to haue bene obtained by praier. Last of all, that verie vse and experience may according to the measure of our weaknes assure our minds of his providence when we vnderstand that he not only promisseth that he will neuer faile vs, and that he doth of his owne accord open vs the entrie to call to him in the verie point of necessitie, but also hath his hand alway stretched out to helpe them that be his, and that he doth not feede them with words, but defendeth them with present help. For these causes, the most kind Father, although he neuer sleepech or is sluggish, yet oftentimes maketh a shew as though he slept and were sluggish, that so he may exercise vs, which are otherwise slothfull and sluggish to come to him, to aske of him, to require him to our owne great benefite. Therefore they do too foolishly, which to call away the minds of men from prayer, babble that the providence of God, which maketh for the safekeeping of all things, is in vaine wearied without callings vpon him: Whereas the Lord contrariwise not in vaine testifieth that he is nigh to all them that call vpon his name in the truth. Psal. 145. 18.

And of none other sort is that which other do triflingly say, that it is superfluous to aske those things which the Lord is of his owne will readie to giue: whereas euen the verie same things which flowe to vs from his owne free liberalitie, he will haue vs acknowledge to be graunted to our prayers. Which thing that notable sentence of the Psalme doeth testifie, wherewith many like sayings do accord. The eyes of the Lord are vpon the righteous, and his eares vnto their prayers. Which saying setteth out the providence of God bent of his owne accord to provide for the safetie of the godly, that yet he omittech not the exercise of faith, whereby slothfulness is wiped from the mindes of men. The eyes of God therefore do wake, that he may succour the necessitie of the blinde: but he will againe on our behalves heare our groanings, that he may the better prooue his leue toward vs. And so both are true, that the watchman of Israel sleepech not, nor slumbereth, and yet that he sitteth still as hauing forgotten vs when he seeth vs dull and dumme. Psal. 34. 15.

4 Now, to frame prayer rightly and well, let this be the first rule, that we be no otherwise framed in minde and heart, than in becommeth them that enter into talke with God. Which verily we shall attaine as touching the minde, if the same being free from fleshly cares and thoughts wherewith it may be called away or withdrawn from the right and pure beholding of God, do not only bend it selfe wholly to prayer, but also so much as is possible be lifted vp and caried about it selfe. Neither doe I here require a mind so at libertie, that it be pricked and nipped with no care, whereas contrariwise the feruentnesse of prayer must by such carefulnesse be kindled in vs (as we see that the holy seruants of God do sometime declare great torments, much more carefulnesse, when they say they vtter to the Lord a bewailing voice out of the deepe depth, and out of the midst of the iawes of death.) But I say that all strange and foraine cares must be driuen away, wherewith the minde it selfe wandring hither and thither is carried about, and being drawn out of heauen is pressed downe to the earth. I meane by this that it must be lifted vp about it selfe, that it may not bring into the sight of God any of those things which our blinde and foolish reason is wont to imagine, nor may hold it selfe bound within the compasse of her owne vanitie, but rise vp to purenes worthis for God.

5 Both these things are specially worthie to be nored, that whosocuer prepareth himselfe to pray, should thereto applye all his senses and endeuours, and not (as men are wont) be diuersly drawn with wandering thoughts: because there is nothing more contrarie to the reuerence of God, than such lightnesse which is a witnesse of too wanton licentiousnesse and loose from all feare. In which thing we must so much more earnestly labour as we find it more hard. For no man can be bent so to praie, but that he shall feele many by thoughts to creepe vpon him, either to breake off, or by some bowing and swaruing to hinder the course of his prayer. But here let vs call to mind, how great an vnworthinesse it is, whē God receueth vs vnto familiar talk with him, to abuse his so great gentlenesse, with mingling holie and prophane things together,

The first rule of framing rightlie our prayers is to vnde our cogitations as much as may be from all fleshlie & earthlie cares.

The preparation of the minde vnto prayer is a thing of great both weight and difficultie.

together, when the reuerence of him holdeth not our mindes fast bounde vnto him : but as if we talked with some meane man, we do in the midst of our praier, forsaking him, leape hither and thither. Let vs therefore knowe that none doe rightly and well prepare themselues to praier, but they whom the maiestie of God pearceth, that they come to it vncumbred of earthly cares and affections. And that is meant by the ceremonie of lifting vp of handes, that men should remember that they be farre distant from God, vnlesse they lift vp their senses on high. As also it is said in the Psalm. To thee haue I lifted vp my soule. And the Scripture oftentimes vseth this maner of speech, to lift vp praier : that they which desire to be heard of God, should not sit still in their dregs. Let this be the summe : that how much more liberally God dealeth with vs, gently alluring vs to exload our cares into his bosome, so much lesse excusable are we vnlesse his so excellent and incomparable benefite doe with vs ouerwey all other things and drawe vs vnto it selfe, that we may earnestly applie our endeouours and senses to pray : which cannot be done vnlesse our minde by strongly wrastring with the hinderances doe rise vp aboue them. Another point we haue set forth, that we aske no more than God giueth leaue. For though he biddeth vs to poure out our harts, yet he doth indifferently giue loose reines to foolish and froward affections : and when he promiseth that he wil doe according to the wil of the godly, he proceedeth not to so tender bearing with them that he submitteth himselfe to their will. But in both these points men doe commonly much offend. For not onely the most part of men presume without shame, without reuerence, to speake to God for their follies, and shamelesly to present to his throne whatsoeuer liked them in their dreame : but also so great foolishnesse or senselesse dulnesse possesseth them, that they dare thrust into the hearing of God, euen all their most filthy desires, whereof they would greatly be ashamed to make men priuie. Some prophane men haue laughed to scorne, yea and derided this boldnesse, yet the vice it selfe hath alway reigned. And hereby it came to passe that ambitious men haue chosen Iupiter to be their Patrone : couetous men, Mercurie: the desirous of learning Apollo and Minerua: warriors, Mars: and lecherous folke, Venus. Like as at this day (as I haue euen now touched) men doe in praiers graunt more licence to their vnlawfull desires, than when they sportingly talke with their egals. But God suffereth not his gentlenesse to be so mocked : but claiming to himselfe his right, maketh our praiers subiect to his authoritie, and restraineth them with a bridle. Therefore we must keepe fast this saying of Iohn. This is our affiance; that if we aske any thing according to his will, he heareth vs. But for as much as our abilities are farre from being sufficient to performe so great perfection, we must seeke a remedie to helpe vs. As wee ought to bend the sight of our minde to God, so the affection of the hart ought also to followe to the same ende. But both doe staie farre beneath it, yea rather doe faint and faile or bee caried a contrarie waie. Wherefore God to succour this weaknesse, in our praiers giueth the spirit to be our schoolemaster, to instruct vs what is right, and to gouerne our affections. For, because we know not what we ought to pray as we ought, the spirit cometh to our succour, and maketh intercession for vs with vnspeakable gronings, not that it in deede either praierth or groneth but stirreth vp in vs affiance, desires, and sighings, which the strength of nature were not able to conceiue. And not without cause Paul calleth them vnspeakable gronings which so the faithfull send forth by the guiding of the spirit, because they which are truly exercised in praiers, are not ignorant that they bee so holden in perplexitie with blinde cares, that they scarcely finde what is profitable for them to speake : yea while they goe about to vter stammering wordes they sticke fast incumbred. Whereupon it followeth, that the gift of praying rightly is a singular gift. These things are not spoken to this purpose, that we fauouring our owne slothfulnesse should giue ouer the charge of praying to the spirit of God, and lie dull in that carelesnesse, to which we are too much inclined (as

Psal. 25. 14.

Psal. 62. 9.

1. Iohn. 5. 14.

Rom. 8. 26.

there are heard the wicked sayings of some, that we must lie negligentlie gaping to waite vntill he preuent our mindes occupied elsewhere) but rather that we loathing our owne slothfulnesse and sluggishnesse, should craue such help of the Spirit. Neither doeth Paul, when he biddeth vs to pray in Spirit, therefore cease to exhort vs to wakefulnesse: meaning that the instinct of the Spirit so vseth his force to frame our prayers, that it nothing hindereth or slacketh our owne endeavour: because God will in this behalfe proue how effectually faith moueth our hearts.

2. Cor. 14. 26.

6 Let also another lawe be, that in praying we alway feele our owne want, and that earnestly thinking how we stand in neede of those things that we aske, we ioyne with our prayer an earnest yea feruent affection to obtaine. For many do slightly for manners sake recite prayers after a prescribed forme, as though they rendered a certaine taske to God: and although they confesse that this is a necessarie remedie for their euils, because it is to their destruction to be without the help of God which they craue: yet it appeareth that they doe this duetic for custome, forasmuch as in the meane time their mindes are cold, and do not wey what they aske. The generall and confuse feeling indeede of their necessitie leadeth them hereunto: but it doth not stirre them as it were in a present case to aske releefe of their neede. Now what thinke we to be more hatefull or more detestable to God than this faining, when a man asketh forgiveness of sinnes, in the meane time either thinking that he is not a sinner, or not thinking vpon this that he is a sinner, euen wherewith God himselfe is plainly mocked? But of such peruersenesse (as I haue saide) mankind is full, that for manners sake they manie times aske many things of God, which they certainly iudge that without his liberality to come to them from some other where, or that they haue them already remaining with them. The fault of some other seemeth to be lighter and yet not tollerable, that they which haue onche conceiued this principle that we must sacrifice to God with prayers, do mumble vp prayers without any musing of minde vpon them. But the godly must principally take heede, that they neuer come into the sight of God to aske any thing, but because they do both boyle with earnest affection of heart, and do therewithall desire to obtaine it of him. Yea, and also though in those things which we aske onely to the glorie of God, we seeme not at the first sight to prouide for our owne neede, yet the same ought to be asked with no lesse feruentnesse and vehemencie of desire. As, when we pray that his name be hallowed, we must (as I may so speake) feruently hunger and thirst for that hallowing.

A second rule for direction of prayer is the sense and feeling of our owne wants.

7 If any man object, that we are not alway driuen with like necessitie to pray, I graunt the same indeede: and this difference is profitably taught vs of Iames: Is any man heauiie among you? Let him pray. Who so is merie, let him sing. Therefore euen common feeling teacheth vs, that because we are too slothfull, therefore, as the matter requireth we are the more sharply pricked forward of God to pray earnestly. And this Dauid calleth the fit time, because (as he teacheth in many other places) how much more hardly troubles, discommodities, feares, and other kinds of tentations do presse vs, so much freer access is open for vs, as though God did call vs vnto him. But yet no lesse true is that saying of Paul, that we must at all times: because how soeuer things prosperously flow according to our hearts desire, and matter of mirth doeth compass vs on euery side, yet there is no minute of time wherin our neede doth not exhort vs to pray. If a man haue abundance of wine and wheate: yet sith he cannot enjoy one morcell of bread but by the continual grace of God, whole cellers or barnes full shall be no let why he should not craue daily bread. Now if wee call to minde how many dangers do euery moment hang ouer vs, the verie feare it selfe will reach vs that we haue no time free from prayer. But this we may better perceiue in spirituall things. For, when shall so many sinnes, wherof wee knowe our selues guiltie, suffer vs to sit still without care and not in humblewise craue pardon

Although there be no time where in prayer needeth not, yet at sometime we see a speciall necessitie thereof, but we see no benefit thereby at any time without a loathing of our owne faultnesse which cannot be in vs but by repentance.

Ephes. 6. 19.

both of the fault and the paine? When doe tentations graunt vs truce, so that we need not to haue vnto help? Moreouer the desire of the kingdome and glory of God ought so to plucke vs to it selfe, not by sittes but continually, that it should alway be fit time for vs. Therefore not without cause we are so oft commanded to pray continually. I doe not yet speake of perseuerance in prayer, whereof mention shall be made hereafter: but when the Scripture warneth vs that we ought to pray continually, it accuseth our slothfulness, because we doe not perceiue how necessarie this care and diligence is for vs. By this rule all hypocrisie and craftines of lying to God, is debarred, yea driuen farre away from prayer. God promiseth that he will be neere to all them that call vpon him in truth, and he pronounceth that they shall finde him which seeke him with their whole hart. But they aspire not thither which please themselues in their owne filthines. Therefore a right prayer requireth Repentance. Whereupon this is commonly said in the Scriptures, that God heareth not wicked doers, and that their prayers are accursed, like as their sacrifices also be: because it is rightfull that they finde the cares of GOD thut, which doe locke vp their owne harts, and that they should not finde God easie to bow, which doe with their owne hardnes prouoke his stiffenesse. In Esay he threatneth after this manner. When yee shall multiply your prayers, I will not heare you: for your hands are full of blood. Againe in Jeremie: I haue cried and they haue refused to heare: they shall likewise crie, and I will not heare: because he taketh it for a most high dishonor, that wicked men should boast of his couenant, which doe in all their life defile his holy name. Wherefore in *Esai*e he complaineth that when the Iewes come neere to him with their lips, their hart is farre from him. He speaketh not this of onely prayers, but affirmeth that he abhorreth faining in all the pates of worshipping him. To which purpose maketh that saying of Iames. Yee aske, and receiue not: because yee aske ill, that yee may spend it vpon your pleasures. It is true in deede (as we shall againe shew a little hereafter) that the prayers of the godly which they putre out, doe not rest vpon their owne worthinesse: yet is not that admonition of Iohn superfluous, if we aske any thing we shall receiue it of him, because we keepe his commandments: forasmuch as an euill conscience shutteth the gate against vs. Whereupon followeth that none doe rightlie pray, nor are heard, but the pure worshippers of God. Therefore whosoever prepareth himselfe to pray, let him be lothfull to himselfe in his owne euils, and (which cannot be done without Repentance) let him put on the person and minde of a begger.

8 Hereunto let the third rule be ioyned, that whosoever presenteth himselfe before God to pray, should forsake all thinking of his owne glory, put off all opinion of worthines, and finally giue ouer all trust of himselfe, giuing in the abacing of himselfe the glory wholly to God: least if we take any thing be it neuer so little to our selues, we doe with our owne swelling fall away from his face. Of this submission which throweth downe all height, we haue often examples in the seruants of God: among whom the holier that euery one is, so much the more he is throwne downe when he commeth into the sight of the Lord. So Daniel, whom the Lord himselfe commended with so great title of praise, said: We power not out our prayers before thee in our righteousnesses, but in thy great mercy. Heare vs Lord, Lord be merciful to vs: Heare vs, and do these things that we aske, For thine own sake: because thy name is called vpon ouer the people and ouer thy holy place. Neither doth he by a crooked figure (as men sometime speake) mingle himselfe with the multitude as one of the people, but rather seuerally confesseth his owne guiltinesse and humbly fleeth to the sanctuary of forgiveness, as he expressly saith: When I confessed my sins and the sins of my people. And this humblenes Dauid also seareth out with his own example, when he saith, Enter not into iudgement with thy seruant, because in thy sight euery one that leueth shall not be iustificed. In such manner Esay praeth: Loe, thou art angrie because we haue sinned, the world is founded in thy waies, therefore we shall be saued:

The third rule of prayer is the vniuersally humbled and abasing of our selues.

And we haue been all filled with vncleaneſſe, and all our righteousneſſe as a defiled cloth: and we haue all withered away as a leafe, & our iniquities do ſcatter vs abroad as the wind: and there is none that calleth vpon thy name, that raiſeth vp himſelfe to take hold of thee: becauſe thou haſt hid thy face from vs, and haſt made vs to pine away in the hand of our wickednes. Now therefore O Lord, thou art our father, we are clay, thou art our fashioner, and we are the worke of thy hande. Be not angrie O Lord, neither remember wickednes for euer. Behold, looke vpon vs, we are al thy people. Lo, how they ſtand vpon no aſſurance at all, but vpon this only, that thinking vpon this that they be Gods, they deſpaigne not that he will haue care of them. Likewiſe Ieremie. If our iniquities anſwere againſt vs, doe thou for thy names ſake. For it is both moſt truly & moſt holy written, of whomſoeuer it be, which being written by an vnknown author is fathered vpon the Prophet Ezra: A ſoule heauie and deſolate for the greatnes of euill, crooked, and weak, a hungrie ſoule, and fainting eies giue glorie to thee O Lord. Not according to the righteousneſſes of our fathers do we poure our prayers in thy ſight, and aſke mercie before thy face O Lord our God: but becauſe thou art mercifull, haue mercie vpon vs, becauſe we haue ſinned before thee.

Ier. 14. 7.

9 Finally the beginning and alſo the preparing of praying rightly, is craving of pardon, with an humble and plaine confeſſion of fault. For neither is it to be hoped, that euen the holieſt man may obtaine any thing of God, vntill he be freely reconciled to him: neither is it poſſible that God may be fauourable to any but them whom he pardoneth. Wherefore it is no maruell if the faithfull doe with this lye open to themſelues the dore to pray. Which we learne out of many places of the Pſalmes. For Dauid when he aſketh another thing, ſaith: Remember not the finnes of my youth, remember me according to thy mercie for thy goodneſſes ſake O Lord. Again, Look vpon my affliction and my labour, and forgiue all my finnes. Where we alſo ſee that it is not enough, if we euery ſeueral day do call our ſelues to account for our new ſins, if we do not alſo remember thoſe ſins which might ſeem to haue bin long ago forgotten. For, the ſame Prophet in another place, hauing confeſſed one heinous offence by this occaſion returneth euen to his mothers wombe wherein he had gathered the infection: not to make the fault ſeem leſſe by the corruption of nature, but that heaping together the finnes of his whole life, how much more notorious he is in condemning himſelfe, ſo much more eaſie he may finde God to entreat. But although the holie ones doe not alwaie in expreſſe wordes aſke forgiveness of finnes, yet if we diligently weigh their prayers which the Scripture rehearſeth, wee ſhall eaſily finde that which I ſay, that they gathered a minde to pray of the onely mercy of God, and ſo alway tooke their beginning at appeaſing him: becauſe if euery man examine his owne confeſſion, ſo farre is he from being bolde to open his eares familiarly with God, that he trembleth at euery coming toward him, except that he ſtandeth vpon truſt of mercy and pardon. There is alſo another ſpeciall confeſſion, where they aſke releaſe of paines, that they alſo pray to haue their ſins forgiven, becauſe it were an abſurditie to will that the effect be taken away while the cauſe abideth. For wee muſt beware that God be fauourable vnto vs, before that hee teſtifie his fauour with outward ſignes: becauſe both he himſelfe will keepe this order, and it ſhould little profit vs to haue him beneficiall, vnleſſe our confeſſion feeling him appeaſed ſhoulde throughly make him louely vnto vs. Which wee are alſo taught by the anſwere of Chriſt. For when he had decreed to heale the man ſick of the Palfie, he ſaid, Thy ſins are forgiven thee: ſiſting vp our mindes thereby to that which is chiefly to be wiſhed, that God ſhould receiue vs into fauour, and then ſhew forth the fruite of reconciliation in helping vs. But beſide that ſpeciall confeſſion of preſent guiltines, whereby the faithful make ſupplication to obtaine pardon of euery ſpeciall fault & paine, that generall preface, which procureth fauour to prayers, is neuer to be omitted, vnleſſe they be grouaded vpon the free mercie of God, they ſhall neuer obtaine any thing of God.

The preface of our prayer muſt be the humble acknowledgement of finnes.

1. Ioh. 1. 9.

God. Whereunto may be referred that saying of Iohn: If we confesse our sins, hee is faithfull and righteous to forgine vs, and cleanse vs from al iniquitie. For which cause it behooued praiers in the time of the law to be hallowed with expiation of bloude, that they might be acceptable, and that to the people should be put in mind that they are vnwoorthie of so great a prerogatiue of honor, till being cleansed from their defiling they should of the onely mercy of God conceiue affiance to pray.

Prayer is fruitlesse where there is not an vnfaigned aspiring vnto godlines, such as Dauid and Ezechiah mention in their praying as warranted thereby: but they coulde not pray in vaine.

*Pfal. 85.
2 Reg. 20. 2.
Pfal. 34. 16.
1. Ioh. 2. 3.
Ioh. 9. 21.*

10 But whereas the holy ones seeme sometime for the entreating of God to alleage the helpe of their owne righteousness (as when Dauid saith: Keepe my soule, because I am good. Againe Ezechias: Remember Lord I beseech thee, that I haue walked before thee in truth, and haue done good in thine eyes) by such formes of speaking they meane nothing else than by their very regeneration to testifie themselves to be the seruants and children of God, to whom he himselfe pronounceth that hee will be mercifull. He teacheth by the Prophet (as we haue already seene) that his eyes are vpon the righteous, and his cares vnto their praiers. Againe by the Apostle, that wee shall obtaine whatsoever we aske, if we keepe his commandments. In which sayings he doth not value prayer by the worthines of works: but his will is so to stablish their affiance, whose owne conscience well assureth them of an vnfaigned vp-rightnes and innocencie, such as all the faithfull ought to be. For the same is taken out of the very tuth of God, which the blinde man that had his sight restored, saith in Iohn, that God heareth not sinners: if we vnderstand sinners after the common vse of the Scripture, for such as without al desire of righteousness do altogether sleepe and rest vpon their sins: forasmuch as no hart can euer breake forth into vnfaigned calling vpon God which doth not also aspire to godlines. Therefore with such promises accord the prayes of the holy ones, wherein they make mention of their own purenes or innocencie that they may feele that to bee giuen them which is to bee looked for of all the seruants of God. Againe it is then commonly found that they vse this kind of praier, when they do in the presence of the Lorde compare themselves with their enemies, from whose vniust dealing they wished themselves to be deliuered by his hand. In this comparison it is no maruell if they brought forth their righteousnesses, and simplicitie of hart to moue him rather by the rightfulness of their cause to helpe them. This therefore we take not away from the godly hart of a good man, but that he may vse the purenes of his conscience before the Lord, to strengthen himselfe in the promises wherewith the Lord comforteth & vpholdeth his true worshippers: but our meaning is, that the trust of obtaining stande vpon the onely mercy of God, laying away all thinking of their owne deservings.

The fourth rule of praier is courage grounded vpon certaine hope and trust to obtaine the thing we pray for.

11 The fourth rule is, that being so thrown downe and subdued with true humilitie, wee should neuertheless with certaine hope of obtaining be encouraged to praie. These be things indeed contrary in shewe to ioine with the feeling of the iust vengeance of Gods sure affiance of fauour: which things do yet very well agree together, if the onely goodnes of God raise vs vp being oppressed with our owne euils. For as we haue before taught that repentance and faith are knit as companions together with an vnseparable bond: of which yet the one afraieith vs, the other cheareth vs: so in praiers they must mutually meete together. And this agreement Dauid expresseth in fewe words: I (saith he) will in the multitude of thy goodnes enter into thy house: I will worship in the Temple of thy holines with feare. Vnder the goodnes of God he comprehendeth faith, in the meane time not excluding feare: because not onely his maiesty driueth vs to reuerence, but also our own vnworthines holdeth vs in feare forgetting all pride and assurednes. But I meane not such affiance, which should stroke the minde loosed from all feeling of carefulnesse with a sweete and full quietnesse. For, to rest so peaceable is the dooing of them which hauing all things flowing as they would wish it, are touched with no care, are kindled with no desire, doe swell with no feare. And it is a verie good spurre to the holie ones to call vpon
God,

God, when being distressed with their owne necessitie, they are vexed with most great vnquietnesse, and are almost dismaide in themselves, till faith come in fit time to their succours, because in such distresses the goodnesse of God shuneth to them, that they doe in deede grone being wearied with weight of present euils, they are also in paine and greued with feare of greater: yet being so vpholden by it, they both releue and comfort the hardnesse of bearing them, and doe hope for escape and deliuerance. Therefore the praier of a godly man must arise out of both affecti- ons, must also containe and shew both: namely to grone for present euils, and to be carefully afraide of new, and yet therewithall to lye to God, not doubting that he is ready to reach his helping hand. For God is maruellously prouoked to wrath by our distrustfulness, if we aske of him the benefits which we hope not to obtaine. Therefore there is nothing more agreeable with the nature of praiers, than that this law be pre- scribed and appointed to them, that they breake not forth rashly, but follow faith going before them. To this principle Christ calleth vs al with this saying: I say vnto you, Mat. 11. 26. whatsoeuer things ye require, beleue that ye shall receiue them, and they shall happen to you. The same also he confirmeth in another place. Whatsoeuer ye aske in praier beleeuing, ye shall receiue. Mat. 21. 22. Wherewith agreeth Iames saying, If any neede wife- Iam. 5. 15. dome, let him aske it of him which giueth to all men freely, and vpraideh not: but let him aske in faith not doubting. Wherein setting doubting as contrarie to faith, he doth most fitly expresse the nature of it. And no lesse is that to be noted which he ad- deth, that they obtaine nothing which call vpon God in waueing and doubt, and do not determine in their harts whether they shall be heard or no. Whom he also com- pareth to waues which are diuersly tossed and druen about of the wind. Whereupon in another place he calleth a right praier, the praier of faith. Again when God so oft affirmeth that he will giue to euery one according to his faith, he signifieth that we obtaine nothing without faith. Finally it is faith that obtaineth whatsoeuer is granted by praier. This is ment by that notable saying of Paul, which the foolish men do take no heed vnto. How shall any man call vpon him, in whom he hath not beleued? But Rom. 10 14 who shall beleue, vnlesse he haue heard? But faith commeth of hearing, and hearing of the word of God. For conueying by degrees the beginning of praier from faith, he plainly affirmeth that God cannot be sincerely called vpon of any other, than them to whom by the preaching of the Gospell his mercifulnesse and gentlenesse hath been made known, and familiarly declared.

12 This necessitie our aduersaries doe not thinke vpon. Therefore when we bid the faithful to hold with assured confidence of mind that God is fauourable and beareth good will to them, they thinke that we speake a most great absurditie. But if they had any vse of true praier, they would truly vnderstande that God cannot be rightly called vpon without that stedfast feeling of Gods good will. Sith no man can wel per- ceiuie the force of faith, but he which by experience feeleth it in his hart: what may a man profite by disputing with such men which doe openly shew, that they neuer had any thing but a vaine imagination? For of what force, and how necessarie is that as- suridnesse which we require, is chiefly learned by inuocation. Which who so seeeth not, he beivraeth that he hath a very dul conscience. Let vs therefore, leauing this kinde of blinde men, sticke fast in that saying of Paul, that God cannot be called vpon of any other, but them that know his mercie by the Gospell, and are surely perswaded that it is ready for them. For what manner of saying should this be? O Lord, I am verily in doubt whether thou wilt heare me: but because I am distressed with carefulness, I flee to thee, that thou maist helpe me if I be worthy. This was not the wonted maner of al the holy ones, whose praiers we reade in the scriptures. Neither hath the holy Ghost Heb. 4. 16, thus taught vs by the Apostle which biddeth vs to go to the heavenly throne with Eph. 3. 12. confidence, that we may obtaine grace, and when in another place he teacheth that we haue boldnes and access in confidence by the faith of Christ. We must therefore hold

It is a thing most absurd but most necessarie, that they which call vpon God haue an assured confidence in his fauour, and a stedfast feeling of his good will.

hold fast with both hands this assurednes to obtaine what we aske (sith both the Lord with his owne voice so commandeth vs, and all the holy ones teach it by their example) if we will pray with fruit. For, that onely praiser is pleasing to God which springeth out of such a presumption of faith (as I may so call it) & is grounded vpon a dreadlesse certainty of faith. He might haue bin content with the bare name of faith, but he not onely added confidence, but also furnished the same with libertie or boldnes, by this mark to put difference betwene vs and vnbeleeuers, which doe in deede also pray to God as we doe, but at aduenture. For which reason the whole Church praiereth in the psalme: Let thy mercy be vpon vs, as we put our trust in thee. The same condition is also spoken of in another place by the Prophet: In what day I shall crie, this I knowe that God is with me. Again, In the morning I will direct my selfe to thee, and I will watch. For of these words we gather, that praieres are in vain cast into the aire, vnlesse hope be adioined, from whence as out of a watch tower we may quietly waite for the Lord. Wherewith agreeth the order of Pauls exhortation. For before that he moue the faithfull to pray in sp rite at all times with wakefulnesse and diligence, he first of all biddeth them to take the shield of faith, the helmet of saluation, and the sword of the spirite, which is the word of God. Now let the readers here call to remembrance that which I haue before saide, that faith is not ouertrowne where it is ioyned with acknowledging of our misery, needinesse, and filthinesse. For with how heauie weight foerer of euill doings the faithfull feele themselves to be ouerladen or greeued, and that they be not onely voide of all things which may procure fauour with God, but also that they be burdened with many offences which may woorthily make him dreadfull to them: yet they cease not to present themselves, neither doth this feeling make them so afrayde but that they still resort to him, for as much as there is no other way to come to him. For praier was not ordained, whereby we should arrogantly aduance our selues before God, or esteeme at great value any thing of our owne, but whereby confessing our guiltinesse, we woulde bewaile our miseries to him, as children doe familiarly open their complaints to their parents. But rather the vnmeasurable heape of our euils ought to be full of spures or pricks to pricke vs forward to pray. As also the Prophet teacheth vs by his example, saying: Heale my soule, because I haue sinned against thee. I graunt in deede that in such sayings should be deadly prickings vnlesse God did helpe: but the most good father of his incomparable tender kindnesse hath brought remedie in fit season, whereby appealing at trouble, as swaging all cares, wiping away feares, he might gently allure vs to him, yea, and taking away all doubts much more all stops) he might make vs an easie way.

13 And first when he commandeth vs to pray, he doth by the very same commandement accuse vs of wicked obstinacie, vnlesse we obey him. Nothing could be more precisely commanded, than that which is in the Psalme: Call vpon me in the day of trouble. But for as much as among all the duties of godlinesse, the Scripture commendeth none more often, I neede not to tarric longer vpon this point. Aske (saith our master) and ye shall receiue: knock, it shall be opened to you. Howbeit here is also with the commandement ioined a promise as it is necessary. For though al men confesse that the commandement ought to be obeyed, yet the most part would flie from God, whē he calleth, vnlesse he promised that he woulde be easie to be intreated, yea & woulde offer himselfe. These two things being established, it is certaine that whosoeuer make delaies that they come not straight to God, are not only rebellious & disobedient, but also are proued guiltie of infidelitic, because they distrust the promises. Which is so much more to be noted, because hypocrites vnder the colour of humilitie & modestie do as well proudly despise the commandement of God, as discredit his gentle calling, yea & defraud him of the chiefe part of his worship. For after that he hath refused sacrifices, in which at that time all holinesse seemed to stand, he declareth that this is the chiefe thing & most precious to him aboue al other, to be called vpon in the

the day of need. Therefore where he requireth his owne, and encourageth vs to cheerfulnesse of obeying, there are none so gay colours of doubting that may excuse vs. Wherefore how many testimonies are commonly found in the scriptures whereby we are commanded to call vpon God, so many standards are set vp before our eyes to put assurance into vs. It were rashnes to rush into the sight of God, vntlesse hee did preuent vs with calling vs. Therefore he openeth vs the way with his owne voice, saying: I will say to them, Yee are my people: and they shall say to me, thou art our God. Wee see how he preuenteth them that worship him, and willet them to follow him, and therefore it is not to be feared that this should not be a verie sweete melodie which hee turneth. Specially let this notable title of God come in our minde, whereupon if we stay, we shall easily passe ouer all stops. Thou God that hearest praier, euen to thee shall all flesh come. For what is more louely or more alluring, than that God be garnished with this title which may ascertaine vs that nothing is more proper to his nature, than to grant the desire of humble suiters? Hereby the Prophet gathereth that the gate standeth open not onely to a few, but to all men: because he speaketh euen to all in this saying: Call vpon mee in the day of trouble: I will deliuer thee, and thou shalt glorifie mee. According to this rule Dauid laich for himselfe that a promise was given him, that he may obtaine what hee asketh: Thou Lord hast reuealed into the eare of thy seruant: therefore thy seruant hath found his hart to praie. Whereupon we gather that he was fearefull, saying in so much as the promise had encouraged him. So in another place hee armeth himselfe with this generall doctrine. Hee will doe the will of them that feare him. Yea, and this wee may note in the Psalmes, that as it were breaking his course of praying he passeth ouer somtime to the power of God, somtime to his goodnes, somtime to the truth of his promises. It might seeme that Dauid by vnseasonable thrusting in of these sentences, made mangled prayers: but the faithfull know by vse and experience, that feruentnesse fainteth vntlesse they put newe nourishments vnto it, and therefore in praying the meditation both of the nature of God, and of his worde is not superfluous. And so by the example of Dauid: let it not greue vs to thrust in such things as maye refresh fainting heartes with newe liuelie strength.

14 And it is woonderfull that with so great sweetnesse of promises we are either but coldly or almost not at all moued, that a great part of men wandring about by compasses had rather leauing the fountaine of liuing waters, to digge for themselues drie pits, than to embrace the liberalitie of God freely offered them. An inuincible tower is the name of the Lord (saith Salomon) to it the righteous man shall flee, and he shall be saued. And Ioel, after that he had prophecied of that horrible destruction which was at hande, addeth this notable sentence. Whosoever calleth vpon the name of the Lorde, shall bee safe: which sentence wee knowe to pertaine properly to the course of the Gospell. Scarcely euerie hundreth man is moued to go forward to meete God. He himselfe crieth by Esay: Yee shall call vpon me, and I will heare you, yea, before that yee crie, I will answer you. And the same honour also in another place he vouchsaureth to giue in common to the whole Church, as it belongeth to all the members of Christ. He hath cried to me, I will heare him, I am in trouble with him, that I may deliuer him. Neither yet (as I haue already said) is it my purpose to reckon vp all the places, but to chooseth out the cheefe, by which we may take a taste how kindly God allureth vs vnto him, and with howe strait bondes our vnthankfulnesse is bounde, when among so shapely prickings our sluggishnesse still maketh delaie. Wherefore let these sayings alway sounde in our eares: The Lord is nic to all them that call vpon him, that call vpon him in truth: also these sayings which wee haue alleagad out of *Esai*e and Ioel, by which God affirmeth that he is heedfull to heare prayers, yea and is delited as with a sacrifice of sweete fauour, when wee cast our cares vpon him. This singular fauour wee receiue of the promises of

God, when we make our prayers not doubtingly and fearefully: but trusting vpon his worde, whose maiestie would otherwise make vs afraide, we dare call vpon him by the name of Father, for as much as he vouchsafeth to put this most sweete name into our mouthes. It remaineth that we hauing such allurements shoulde know that we haue thereby matter enough to obtaine our prayers: for as much as our praier stande vpon no merite of our owne, but all their woorthines and hope of obtaininge are grounded vpon the promises of God, and hang vpon them: so that it needeth none other vnderpropping, nor looketh vward hither or thither. Therefore we must determine in our mindes, that although we excell not in like holinesse as is prayed in the holy fathers, Prophets and Apostles, yet because the commaundement of prayer is common to vs, and faith is also common, if we rest vpon the word of God, in this right we are fellowes with them. For God (as we haue before shewed) promising that he will be gentle, and mercifull to all, giueth cause of hope to all euen the most miserable that they shall obtaine what they aske. And therefore the generall formes are to bee noted, from which no man (as they say) from the first to the last is excluded: onely let there bee present a purenesse of heart, mistaking of our selues, humilitie, and faith: let not our hypocritie vnholilie abuse the name of God with deceitfull calling vpon it: the most good father will not put backe them, whom he not only exhorteth to come to him, but also moueth them by all the meanes that he can. Hereupon commeth the manner of praying of Dauid which I haue euen now rehearsed. Lo thou hast promised, Lord, to thy seruant: for this cause thy seruant at this day gathereth courage, and hath found what praier he might make before thee. Now therefore O Lord God, thou art God, and thy wordes shall be true. Thou hast spoken to thy seruant of these benefits: begin therefore, and do them. As also in another place, Perseuerme to thy seruant according to thy word. And all the Israelites togither, so oft as they arme themselves with remembrance of the couenât, do sufficiently declare that we shoulde not pray fearefully, whereas the Lord so appointeth. And herein they followed the examples of the fathers, specially of Iacob, which after that he had confessed that he was vnworthie of so many mercies which he had receiued at the hand of God, yet he saith that he is encouraged to require greater things because God had promised that he would do them. But whatsoever colours the vnbeleeuers do pretend, when they flee not to God so oft as necessitie presseth them, when they seeke not him nor craue his helpe, they do as much defraud him of his due honor as if they made to themselves new Gods and idols: for by this meane they denie that he is to them the author of all good things. On the other side, there is nothing stronger to deliuer the godly from all doubt, than to be armed with this thought, that no stop ought to stay them while they obey the commaundement of God, which pronounceth that nothing is more pleasing to him than obedience. Here againe that which I said before more clearly appeareth, that a dreadles spirit to pray agreeth well with feare, reuerence, and carefulnes: and that it is no absurditie to say that God raiseth vp the overdrowen. After this manner those formes of speech agree well togither which in seeming are contrarie. Jeremie and Daniel say that they throw downe praier before God. In another place Jeremie saith: Let our prayer fall downe in the sight of God, that he may haue mercie on the remnant of his people. On the other side, the faithful are oftentimes said to lift vp prayer. So speaketh Ezechias, requiring the prophet to make intercession for him. And Dauid desireth that his praier may ascend as incense. For although they being perswaded of the fatherly loue of God, cheerefully commit themselves into his faithfull keeping, and doubt not to craue the helpe which he freely promiseth: yet doeth not an alle carefulnesse lift them vp, as though they had cast away shame, but they ascend to vwarde by degrees of promises, that they still remaine humble suppliants in the abacement of themselves.

15 Here are questions objected more than one. For the Scripture reporteth that the Lord granted certaine desires which yet brake forth of a minde not quiet nor well framed. Verily for a iust cause: Ioatham had auowed the inhabitants of Sichem, to the destruction which afterward came vpon them: but yet God kindled with feruency of anger and vengeance following his execration seemeth to allow all tempered violent passions. Such heate also carried Sampson when he said, Strengthen me O God, that I may take vengeance of the vncircumcised. For though there were some peece of good zeale mingled with it: yet a hote, and therefore faultie greedinesse of vengeance did beare rule therein. God granted it. Whereupon it seemeth that it may be gathered, that although the prayers be not framed according to the prescribed rule of the word, yet they obtaine their effect. I answer first that a generall lawe is not taken away by singular examples: againe, that sometime speciall notions haue been put into a few men, whereby it came to passe that there was another consideration of them than of the common people. For the answer of Christ is to be noted, when the Disciples did vndiscreetly desire to counterfait the example of Eli, that they knew not with what Spirit they were endued. But we must goe yet further, and say that the prayers doe not alway please God which he graunteth: but that, so much as serueth for example that is by cleere praise made plaine which the Scripture teacheth, namely that he succoureth the miserable, heareth the groanings of them which being vniustly troubled do craue his helpe: that therefore he executeth his iudgements, when the complaintes of the poore rise vp to him, although they be vnworthie to obtaine any thing be it neuer lithe. For how oft hath he taking vengeance of the cruelties, robberies, violence, filthy lusts, and other wicked doings of the vngodly, subduing their boldnes and rage, and also ouerthrowing their tyrannous power, testified that he helpeth the vnworthily oppressed, which yet did beate the ayre with praying to an vncertaine Godhead? And one Psalm plainely teacheth that the prayers want not effect, which yet doe not pearce into heauen by faith. For he gathereth together those prayers which necessarily winneth no lesse out of the vnbelecuers than out of the godly by the very feeling of nature: to which yet he proueth by the effect, that God is fauourable. Is it because he doth with such gentlenesse testify that they be pleasing to him? No. But to enlarge or to set out his mercy by this circumstance, for that euen to vnbelecuers their prayers are not denied: and then the more to pricke forward his true worshippers to pray, when they see that prophane wallings sometime want not their effect. Yet there is no cause why the faithfull should swarue from the law laid vpon them by God, or should enuie the vnbelecuers, as though they had gotten some great gaine, when they obtained their desire. After this manner we haue saide, that the Lord was bowed with the Repentance of Ahab, that he might shew by this example how easie he is to entreat toward his elect, when true turning is brought to appease him. Therefore in the Psalm he blameth the Jewes, that they hauing by experience proued him so easie to graunt their prayers, yet within a little after returned to the stubbornesse of their nature. Which also plainely appeareth by the historie of the Judges: namely that so oft as they wept, although their teares were deceitfull, yet they were deliuered out of the hands of their enemies. As therefore the Lord indifferently bringeth forth his Sunne vpon the good and the euill: so doth he also not despise their weepings, whose cause is righteous and their miseries worthie of helpe. In the meane time he no more heareth these to saluation, than herein ministreth foode to the despisers of his goodnes. The question seemeth to be somewhat harder of Abraham and Samuel: of whom the one being warranted by no word of God, prayed for the Sodomites: the other against a manifest forbidding prayed for Saul. Likewise is it of Jeremie which prayed that the City might not be destroyed. For though their requestes were denied, yet it seemeth hard to take faith fro them. But this solution shal (as I trust) satisfie sober readers: that they being instructed with the generall principles, wherby God comandereth them to be mercifull euen also to the vnworthie, were not altogether without faith, although in a speciall case their opinion deceived them. Augustine writeth wisely in a certaine place. How (saith he) do the holy ones pray by faith, to aske of God contrarie to that which hee hath decreed? Euen because they pray according to his will: not that hidden and vchangeable will, but the will which he inspireth into them, that he may heare them after another maner: as he wisely maketh difference. This is well said: because after his incomprehensible counsell he so tempereth the suites of things, that the pray-ers of the holy ones be not void which are wrapped both with faith and error to-gether. Neither yet ought this more to auail to be an example to follow, than it excu-sets the holy ones themselues, whom I denie not to haue passed measure. Wherefore where appeareth no certaine promise, we must aske of God with a condition adioy-ned. To which purpose serueth that saying of Dauid. Watch to the iudgement which thou hast commanded: because he telleth what he was warranted by a speciall oracle to aske a temporall benefit.

Lib. de ciuit. Dei
22. cap. 7.

Psal. 7. 7.

The rules of prayer must not be too rigorously applied.

16 This also it is profitable to note, that those things which I haue spoken of the fewer rules of right prayer, are not so exactly required with extreme rigour, that God refuseth the prayers in which he shall not finde either perfect faith or perfect repentance together with a feruentnes of zeale and well ordered requestes. We haue said that although prayer be a familiar talke of the godly with God, yet we must keepe a reuerence and modestie, that we giue not loose reines to all requestes whatsoever they be, & that we desire no more, than God giveth leaue: and then, least the maiestie of God should grow in contempt with vs, that wee must lift our mindes ywarde to a pure and vdefiled worshipping of him. This no man hath euer performed with such purenesse as it ought to be. For (to speake nothing of the common sort) how many complaintes of Dauid do suour of vtemperance: not that hee meant of purpose to quarrell with God, or carpe against his iudgements: but because hee fainting for weaknesse, found no other better comfort, than to cast his sorrowes into his bosome. Yea and God beaeth with our childish speech and pardoneth our ignorance, so oft as any thing vnadvisedly escapeth vs: as truly without this tender bearing, there should be no libertie of praying. But although Dauid's mind was to submit himselfe wholly to the will of God, and he praised with no lesse patience than desire to obtaine: yet there arise yea boile out sometimes troublous affections, which are much disagreeing from the first rule that we haue set. Specially we may perceiue by the conclusion of the xxxix. Psalm, with how great vehemencie of sorrow that holy man was carried away, that he could not keepe measure. Cease (saith he) from me, till I goe away and be not. A man would say that he like a desperate man desi-reth nothing else but that the hand of God ceassing, he might rot in his curls. Hee saith it not for that he with an auowed minde runneth into such outrage, or (as the reprobate are wont) would haue God to depart from him: but onely he complaineth that the wrath of GOD is too heauie for him to beare. In these tentations also there fall out oftentimes requestes not well framed according to the rule of the word of God, and in which the holy ones do not sufficiently weigh what is lawfull and expedient. Whi soeuer prayers are spotted with these faults, they deserue to be refused: yet if the holy ones do beware, correct themselues, and by and by come to themselues againe, God pardoneth them. So they offend also in the second rule, because they are oftentimes drinen to wastle with their owne coldnesse, and their need and miserie doth not sharply enough pricke them to pray earnestly. And oftentimes it happeneth that their mindes do slippe aside, and in a maner wander away into vani-
tie. Therefore in this behalfe also there is neede of pardon, least our faint, or vn-perfect, or broken and wandering prayers haue a deniall. This God hath naturally planted in the mindes of men, that prayers are not perfect but with mindes lifted vppward,

vpward. Hereupon came the ceremony of lifting vp of hands, as we haue before said, which hath bene vsed in all ages and nations, as yet it is in vre. But how many a one is there, which when he lifteth vp his hands doth not in his own conscience find himselfe dull, because his hart resteth vpon the ground? As touching the asking of forgiveness of finnes, although none of the faithfull doe ouerpass it, yet they which are truly exercised in prayers doe feele that they bring scarcely the tenth parte of that sacrifice, of which Dauid speaketh. An acceptable sacrifice to God is a troubled Spirit: a broken and humbled hart. O God thou wilt not despise. So there is alway a double pardon to be asked, both bicause they know themselves gilty in consciences of many faultes, with feeling whereof they are not yet so touched, that they mislike themselves so much as they ought: and also that, so much as it is giuen them to profit in repentance and in the feare of God, they being throwne downe with iust sorrow for their offences, should pray to escape the punishment of the Iudge. Cheefely the feeblesnes or imperfection of faith corrupteth the prayers of the faithful, vnlesse the tender mercie of God did helpe them. But it is no maruell that God pardoneth this default, which doth oftentimes exercise the that be his with sharp instructions, as if he should of purpose quench their faith. This is a most hard tentation, whē the faithfull are compelled to cry: How long wilt thou be angry vpon the prayer of thy seruant? as though the very prayers made God more angrie. So when Ieremie sayeth: The Lord hath shut out my prayer, it is no doubt that he was shaken with a violent pang of trouble. Innumerable such examples are commonly found in the Scriptures, by which appeareth that the Faith of the holy ones was oftentimes mingled and tised with doubtings, that in beleeuing and hoping they betrayed yet some vnfaithfulness: but because they come not so far as it is to be wished, they ought to indeuour so much the more that their faultes being amended, they may dayly come neerer to the perfect rule of praying, & in the meane time to feele in how great a depth of euils they be drowned, which euen in the very remedies doe get to themselves new diseases: sith there is no praiser, which the Lord doth not worthily loth, vnlesse he winke at the spots wherewith they are all besprinkled. I rehearse not these things to this end that the Faithfull should carelesly pardon themselves any thing, but that in sharpelie chastising themselves they should trauell to ouercome these stops, and although Satan labour to stop vp all the waies, that he may keep them from praying, yet neuertheless they should breake through, being certainly perswaded, that although they be not vncombred of all hinderances, yet their indeuours doe please God, and their prayers are allowed of him, so that they trauaile and bend themselves thitherward, whether they doe not by and by attaine.

17 But forasmuch as there is no man worthie to present himselfe to God, and to come into his sight: the heauenly Father himselfe to deliuer vs both from shame and feare which should haue throwne down all our courages, hath giuen to vs his Sonne Iesus Christ our Lord, to be an Advocate & Mediator with him for vs, by whose leading we may boldly come to him, trusting that we haue such an intercessor, nothing shall be denied vs which we aske in his name, as nothing can be denied him of the Father. And hereunto must all be referred whatsoeuer we haue heretofore taught concerning Faith: because as the promise setteth out vnto vs Christ for our Mediator, so vnlesse our hope of obtaining stay vpon him, it taketh from it selfe the benefite of praying. For so soone as the terrible maiestie of God commeth in our minde, it is impossible but that we should tremble for feare, and the acknowledging of our owne vnworthinesse should driue vs farre away, till Christ come meane betweene vs and him, which may change the throne of dreadfull glory into the throne of grace: as also the Apostle teacheth that we may be bold to appeare with all confidence which shall obtaine mercy and find grace in helpe comming in fit season. And as there is a law set that we should call vpon God like as there is a promise giuen, that they shall be heard which call vpon him: so are we peculiarly commanded to call vpon him in the name of Christ, and we haue a promise set fourth, that we shall obtaine that which we shall aske in his name. Hitherto (saith he) ye haue not asked any thing in my name: aske & ye shall receiue. In that day ye shall ask in my name, & whatsoever ye aske, I will do that the father may be glorified in the son. Hereby it is plaine without controuersie, that they which call vpon God in any other name than of Christ, do stubbornly breake his commandements, and regard his wil as nothing, & that they haue no promise to obtaine any thing. For (as Paul saith) al the promises of God are in Christ, yea and Amen, that is to say, they are confirmed and fulfilled.

18 And the circumstance of the time is diligently to be marked, where Christ commandeth his disciples to flee to intercession to him after that he is gone vp into heauen. In that hower (saith he) ye shall aske in my name. It is certaine that euen from the beginning none were heard that prayed, but by meane of the Mediatour. For this reason the Lord had ordained in the lawe, that the Priest alone entering into the sanctuarie, should beare vpon his shoulders the names of the tribes of Israel, and as many precious stones before his breast: but the people should stand a far off in the porch, and from thence should ioyne their prayers with the priest. Yea and the sacrifice auailed hereto, that the prayers should be made sure and of force. Therefore that shadowish ceremonie of the law taught that we are all shut out from the face of God, and that therefore wee neede a Mediatour, which may appeare in our name, and may beare vs vpon his shoulders, and hold vs fast bound to his breast, that wee may be heard in his person: then that by sprinkeling of blood our prayers are cleansed, which (as wee haue already saide) are neuer void of filthinesse. And wee see that the holy ones, when they desired to obtaine any thing, grounded their hope vpon sacrifices, because they knewe them to bee the stablishings of all requestes. Let him remember thy offering (saith David) and make thy burnt offering fatte. Hereupon is gathered that God hath bene from the beginning appeased by the intercession of Christ, to receiue the prayers of the godly. Why then doth Christ appoint a new heire, when his Disciples shall beginne to praie in his name, but because this grace, as it is at this day more glorious, so deserueth more commendation with vs. And in this same sense he had saide a little before, Hitherto yee haue not asked any thing in my name, now aske. Not that they vnderstood nothing at al of the office of the Mediator (whereas all the Iewes were instructed in the principles) but because they had not yet clearly knowen that Christ by his ascending into heauen should be a surer patron of the Church than he was before. Therefore to comfort their griefe of his absence with some speciaall fruit, he claimeth to himselfe the office of an advocate, and teacheth that they haue hitherto wanted the chiefe benefit, which it shall be graunted them to enioy, when being aided by his mediation, they shall more freely call vpon GOD: As the Apostle saith that his new way is dedicate in his blood.

And so much lesse excusable is our stouernesse, vnlesse we doe with both armes (as the saying is) embrace so inestimable a benefit, which is properly appointed for vs.

Tit. 2. 13.

19 Now whereas he is the onely way, and the onely entrie by which it is granted vs to come into God: who so do swarue from this way and forsake this entrie, for them there remaineth no way nor entrie to God: there is nothing left in his throne but wrath, iudgement, and terrour. Finally sith the Father hath marked him for our head, and guide, they which do in any wise swarue or goe away from him, do labour as much as in them lieth to race out and disfigure the marke which God hath imprinted. So Christ is set to be the onely Mediator, by whose intercession the Father may be made to vs fauourable and easie to be entreated. Howbeit in the meane time the holy ones haue their intercessions left to them, whereby they do mutually commende the safetie one of another to God, of which the Apostle maketh mention:

but those be such as hang vpon that one onely intercession: so farre is it off, that they minish any thing of it. For as they spring out of the affection of loue, wherewith wee embrace one another, as the members of one body: so they are also referred to the vnitie of the head. Sith therefore they also are made in the name of Christ, what doe they elsie but testifie that no man can be holpen by any prayers at all, but with the intercession of Christ? And as Christ with his intercession withstand, th not, but that in the Church we may with prayers be aduocates one for another: so let this remain certaine, that all the intercessors of the whole church ought to be directed to that onely one. Yea and for this cause we ought specially to beware of vnthankfulness, because God pardoning our vntwoorthines, doth not onely giue leaue to euery one of vs to praie for himselfe, but also admitteth vs to be entreaters one of another. For, where God appointeth aduocates for his Church which deserue worthily to bee reiecte d if they pray priuately euery one for himselfe: what a pride were it to abuse this libertie to darken the honour of Christ?

20 Nowe it is a meere trifling, which the Sophisters babbles, that Christ is the Mediatour of redemption, but the faithfull are Mediatours of intercession. As though Christ hauing performed a Mediation for a time, hath giuen to his seruants that eternall Mediatourship which shall neuer die. Full courteously forsooth they handle him, that cut away so litle a portion of honor from him. But the Scripture saith farre otherwise, with the simplicitie whereof a good man ought to be contented, leauing these deceiuers. For where Iohn saith, that if any doe sinne, wee haue an aduocate with the Father, Christ Iesus: doth he meane that he was once in olde time a patrone for vs, and not rather assigned to him an euerlasting intercession? How say we to this that Paul also affirmeth, that he sitteth at the right hande of God the father and maketh intercession for vs? And when in another place he calleth him the onely Mediatour of God and men: meaneth hee not of prayers, of which hee had a litle before made mention? For when he had before saide that intercession must bee made for all men: for prooffe of that saying, he by and addeth, that of al men there is one God and one Mediatour. And none otherwise doth Augustine expound it, when he saith thus: Christian men do mutually commend themselues in their prayers. But hee for whom none maketh intercession, but hee for all, he is the onely and true Mediatour. Paul the Apostle, though he were a principall member vnder the head (yet because he was a member of the body of Christ, and knew that the greatest and truest priest of the Church entred, not by a figure, into the inward places of the vaille, to the holy of holie places, but by expresse and stedfast truth into the innermost places of heauen, to a holinesse not shadowish but eternall) commendeth himselfe also to the prayers of the faithfull. Neither doeth hee make himselfe a Mediatour betweene the people and God, but prayeth that all the members of the bodie of Christ should mutually praie for him: because the members are carefull one for another: and if one member suffer, the other suffer with it. And that so the mutuall prayers one for another of all the members yet traouailing in earth, may ascend to the head which is gone before into heauen, in whom is appeasement for our sinnes. For if Paul were a Mediatour, the other Apostles should also be Mediatours: and if there were manie Mediatours, then neither shoulde *Paul*es owne reason stande fast, in which hee had said, For there is one God, one Mediatour of one GOD and men, the man Christ, in whom we also are one if we keepe the vnitie of faith in the bond of peace. Againe in another place. But if thou seeke for a Priest, hee is aboute the heauens, where he maketh intercession for thee, which in earth died for thee. Yet do we not dreame that he falleth downe at the fathers knees and in humble wise entreateth for vs: but wee vnderstande with the Apostle, that he so appeereth before the face of God, that the vertue of his death auaileth to bee a perpetuall intercession for vs: yet so that being entred into the sanctuarie of heauen, vnto the end of the ages of the world he alone carrieth to God the prayers of the people abiding a farre off in the porch.

No Saint hath entrie vnto God but by Christ: and therefore we cannot without iniurie vpon him, make them our intercessors.

21 As touching the Saints, which being dead in the flesh do liue in Christ, if we giue any prayer at all to them, let vs not dreaime that they themselues haue any other way of asking than Christ which onlie is the waie, or that their prayers be acceptable to God in anie other name. Therefore sith the Scripture calleth vs backe from all to Christ onlie: sith the heauenly fathers will is to gather together all in him: it was a point of too much dulnesse, I will not say madnesse, so to desire to make for our selues an entrie by them, that we should be led away from him without whom euen they themselues haue no entrie open. But, that this hath bene vsually done in certaine ages past, and that it is at this day done where euer Papistry reigneth, who can denie? Their merites are from time to time thrust in, to obtaine the good will of God: and for the most part, Christ being passed ouer, God is praised to by their names. Is not this, I beseech you, to conuey awaie to them the office of that onlie intercession, which we haue affirmed to belong to Christ alone? Againe, what Angell or Diuell euer reueiled to any man anie one syllable of this their intercession which these men saie? For in the Scripture is nothing of it. What is the reason therefore of inuenting it? True it is when the wit of man so seeketh for it selfe succours, wherewith we are not certified by the word of God, it plainly bewraich his owne distitfulness. If we appeale to all their consciences that are delighted with the intercession of Saints, we shall finde that the same commeth from no other ground, but because they are grieued with carefulness, as though Christ were in this behalfe either too weake or too rigorous. By which doubtfulness first they dishonor Christ, and rob him of the title of only Mediatour, which as it is giuen him of the Father for a singular prerogative, so ought not also to be conueyed away to any other. And in this verie doing they daken the glorie of his birth, they make void his crosse, finally what he hath done or suffered they spoile and defraud of the due praise thereof: for all tend to this end that he may be in deede and be accompted the only Mediatour. And there with they cast away the goodnesse of God, which gaue himselfe to be their Father. For he is not their father, vnlesse they acknowledge Christ to be their brother. Which they vicerly denie vnlesse they thinke that he beareth a brotherly affection toward them, than which there can nothing be more kinde or tender. Wherefore the Scripture offereth only him to vs, sendeth vs to him, and stayeth vs in him. He (saith Ambrose) is our mouth, by which we speake to the Father: our eye, by which we see the Father: our right hand, by which we offer vs to the father, otherwise than by whose intercession neither we nor all the Saints haue any thing with God. If they answer that the common prayers which they make in Churches, are ended with this conclusion adioyned, Through Christ our Lord: this is a trifling shift: because the intercession of Christ is no lesse prophaned when it is mingled with the prayers and merites of dead men, than if it were vtterly omitted and only dead men were in our mouth. Againe, in all their Letanies, Hymnes, and Profes, where no honour is left vn giuen to dead Saints, there is no mention of Christ.

How farre superstition hath gone in prayer vnto Saints.

22 But their foolish dulnesse proceeded so farre, that here we haue the nature of superstition expressed, which when it hath once shaken off the bridle, is wont to make no end of running astray. For after that men once begun to looke to the intercession of Saints, by little and little there was giuen to euery one his special doing, that according to the diuersitie of businesse, sometime one and sometime another should be called vpon to be intercessor: then they tooke to themselues euery one his peculiar Saint, into whose faith they committed themselues as it were to the keeping of safe-guarding Gods. And not only (wherewith the Prophet in the old time reproched Israel) gods were set vp according to the number of Cities, but euen to the number of persons. But sith the Saints referre their desires to the onely will of God, and behold hold it and rest vpon it: he thinketh foolishly, and fleshly, yea and slanderously of them, which assigneth to them any other prayer, than which by they pray for the coming of the kingdome of God: from which that is most faire distant which they faue to them, that euery one is with priuat affection more partially bent to his owne worshippers. At length many abstained not from horrible sacriledge, in calling now vpon them not as helpers but as principall rulers of their saluation. Loe whereunto foolish men do fall when they wander out of their true standing, that is, the word of God. I speake not of the grosser monstrousnesses of vngodlinesse, wherein although they be abhominable to God, Angels, and men, they are not yet ashamed nor wearie of them. They falling downe before the image or picture of Barbara, Catherine, and such other, doe mumble Pater noster, Our father. This madnes the Pastors do so not care to heale or restraints, that being allured with the sweete sauour of gaine they allow it with reioysing at it. But although they turne from themselves the blame of so hainous an offence, yet by what colour will they defend this that Loy or Medard are prayed vnto, to looke downe vpon and help their seruants from heauen? that the holy Virgin is prayed vnto, to commaund her sonne to do that which they aske? In the old time it was forbidden in the Councell at Carthage, that at the altar no direct prayer should be made to Sanctes. And it is likely that when the holy men could not altogether suppress the force of the naughty custome, yet they added at least this restraint that the publike prayers should not be corrupted with this forme: Saint Peter pray for vs. But how much further hath their diuinish importunacie ranged, which stricke not to giue away to dead men that which properly belongeth onely to God and Christ?

23 But whereas they trauell to bring to passe that such intercession may seeme to be grounded vpon the authoritie of Scripture, therein they labour in vaine. We reade oftentimes (say they) of the prayers of Angels: and not that onely: but it is saide that the prayers of the faithfull are by their hands caried into the sight of God. But if they list to compare holy men departed out of this present life, to angels: they should proue that they are ministering spirits, to whom is committed the ministerie to looke to our safetie, to whom the charge is giuen to keepe vs in all our wayes, to go about vs, to admonish and counsell vs, to watch for vs: all which things are giuen to Angels, but not to them. How wrongfully they wrap vp dead holy men with Angels, appeareth largely by so many diuers offices, whereby the scripture putteth difference betwene some and other some. No man dare execute the office of an aduocate before an earthly iudge, vnlesse he be admitted, from whence then haue wormies so great libertie, to thrust vnto God those for patrons to whome it is not read that the office is inioyned? Gods will was to appoint the Angels to looke vnto our safetie, wherefore they do both frequent holy assemblies, and the Church is a stage to them, wherein they wonder at the diuerse and manifold wisdom of God. Who so conuey away to other that which is peculiar to them, verily they confound and peruert the order set by God, which ought to haue been inuiolable. With like handiomesse they proceede in alleaging other testimonies. God said to Ieremie: If Moses and Samuel should stand before me, my soule is not to this people. How (say they) could he haue spoken thus of dead men, vnlesse he knew that they made intercession for the liuing? But I on the contrarie side gather thus, that sith it thereby appeareth that neither Moses nor Samuel made intercession for the people of Israel, there was then no intercession at all of dead men. For which of the Saints is to be thought to be carefull for the safetie of the people, when Moses ceaseth, which in this behalfe farre passed all other while he liued. But if they follow such sleight subtleties, to say that the dead make intercession for the liuing, because the Lord said, If they should make intercession: I will much more colourable reason in this manner: In the extreme necessitie of the people Moses made not intercession, of whom it is said, if he shall make intercession. Therefore it is likely that none other maketh intercession, sith they are all so farre from the gentleness, goodnesse, and fatherly carefulnesse of Moses. This forsooth they get with caulling, that they be wounded with the same weapons, wherewith they thought themselues gaily fenced. But it is very fond that a simple sentence should so be wrested, because the Lord pronounceth onely that he will not spare the offences of the people, although they had scene Moses to be their patron, or Samuel, to whose prayers he had shewed himselfe so tender. Which sense is most cleerely gathered out of a like place of Ezechiel. If (saith the Lorde) these three men were in the citie, Noe, Daniel, and Iob, they shall not deliuer their sonnes and daughters in their righteousnesse: but they shall deliuer onely their owne soules. Where it is no doubt that he meant if two of them should happen to reuiue againe, for the thirde was then aliue, namely Daniel, who (as it is knowne) did in the first flourishing of his youth shew an incomparable example of godlinesse: let vs then leaue them whome the Scripture plainly sheweth to haue ended their course. Therefore Paul, when he speaketh of Dauid, teacheth not that he doth with prayers helpe his posteritie, but onely that he serued his owne time.

Ezec. 14. 14.

A. 2. 13. 36.

A thirde argument for intercession of Saints answered.

24 They answer againe: shall we then take from them all prayer of charitie, which in the whole course of their life breathed nothing but charitie and mercie? Verily as I will not curiously search what they doe, or what they muse vpon: so it is not likely that they are carried about hither and thither with diuers and particular requests: but rather that they doe with a staied and vnmooued wil, long for the kingdom of God, which standeth no lesse in the destruction of the wicked, than in the saluation of the godlie. If this be true, it is no doubt that their charitie is contained in the communion of the body of Christ, and extendeth no further, than the nature of that communion beareth. But now though I graunt that they pray in this maner for vs, yet they doe not therefore depart from their owne quietnesse, to be diuersly drawen into earthly cares: and much lesse must we therefore by and by call vpon them. Neither doth it thereby followe that they must so doe, because men which liue in earth may commend one another in their prayers. For this doing serueth for nourishing of charitie among them, when they doe as it were part and mutually take vpon them their necessities among themselues. And thus they doe by the commandment of the Lord, and are not without a promise, which two things, haue alway the chiefe place in prayer. All such considerations are farre from the dead, whome when the Lord hath conueied from our companie, he hath left to vs no interchange of doings with them, nor to them with vs, so farre as we may gather by coniectures. But if any man alleage, that it is impossible but that they must keepe the same charitie toward vs, as they be ioyned in one faith with vs: yet who hath reuealed that they haue so long eares to reach to our voices? and so peering eyes to watch our necessities? They prate in their shadowes I wot not what of the brightnesse of the countenance of God extending his beames vpon them, in which as in a mirror they may from on high behold the matters of men beneath. But to affirme that, specially with such boldnesse as they dare, what is it else but to goe about by the drunken dreames of our owne braine, without his word to pearce and breake into the hidden iudgements of God, and to tread the Scripture vnder feete which so oft pronounceth that the wisdom of the flesh is enemy to the wisdom of God, which wholly condemneth the vanitie of our natural wit, which willet all our reason to be throwen downe, and the onely will of God to be looked vnto of vs.

Rom. 8. 6.

A fourth argument.
Gen. 48. 16.

25 The other testimonies of Scripture which they bring to defend this their lie, they most naughtily wrest. But Jacob (saide they) praieth that his name and the name of his Fathers Abraham and Isaac be called vpon ouer his posteritie. First let vs see what forme of calling vpon this is among the Israelites. For they call not vpon their Farthers, to help them: but they beseech God to remember his seruants Abraham, Isaac and

and Jacob. Therefore their example maketh nothing for them that speake to the Saintes themselves. But because those blocks (such is their dulnes) neither vnderstand what it is to call vpon the name of Jacob, nor why it is to be called vpon, it is no maruell if in the verie forme also they so childishly stumble. This maner of speech is not feldome found in the Scriptures. For Esay saith that the name of the men is called vpon ouer the women, when they haue them as their husbands vnder whose charge and defence they liue. Therefore the calling vpon of the name of Abraham vpon the Israelites, standeth in this when they conuey their pedegree from him, and do with solemne memorie honor him for their author and parent. Neither doth Jacob this because he is carefull for the enlarging of the renoume of his name: but forasmuch as he knew that the whole blessednesse of his posteritie consisted in the inheritance of the couenant which God had made with him: he wished that that which he seeth should be the chiefe of all good things to them, that they be accounted in his kintred: For, that is nothing els but to conuey to them the succession of the couenant. They againe when they bring such remembrance into their prayers, do not flee to the intercessions of dead men: but do put the Lord in mind of his couenant, whereby the most kinde father hath promised that he will be fauorable and beneficiall to them for Abraham, Isaac, and Jacobs sake. How little the holy ones did otherwise leane vpon the merits of their father, the common saying of the Church in the Prophet testified, Thou art our Father, and Abraham knew vs not, and Israel was ignorant of vs. Thou Lord art our Father and our redcemer. And when they say thus, they adde therewithall, Returne O Lord for thy seruants sakes: yet thinking vpon no intercession, but bending their mind to the benefice of the couenant. But now sith we haue the Lord Iesus, in whose hand the eternall couenant of mercie is not onlie made, but also confirmed to vs: whose name should we rather vse in our praiers? And because these good masters will haue the Patriarches to be by these words made intercessours, I would faine knowe of them why in so great a rout Abraham the Father of the Church hath no place at all among them. Out of what linke they fetch their aduocates, it is not vnknown. Let them answer me, how sit it is that Abraham, whome God preferred aboue all other, and whom he aduanced to the highest degree of honor, should be neglected and suppressed. Verily when it was euident that such vse was vnknown to the old Church, they thought good for hiding of the newnesse to speake nothing of the old Fathers: as though the diuersitie of names excused the new and forged manner. But wheras some obiekt that God is praied vnto, to haue mercie on the people for Dauids sake, it doth so nothing at all make for defence of their error, that ~~is~~ is a most strong prooffe for the confutation thereof. For if we consider what person Dauid did beare: he is seuered from all the assembly of the Saintes, that God should stablish the couenant which he hath made in his hand. So both the couenant is rather considered than the man and vnder a figure the onely intercession of Christ is affirmed. For it is certaine that that which belouged only to Dauid, in so much as he was the image of Christ, accordeth not with any other.

26 But this forsooth moueth some, that it is often times read that the praiers of Saintes haue bene heard. Why so? Euen because they praied. They trusted in thee (saith the Prophet) and they were saued: they cried, and they were not confounded. Therefore let vs also pray as they did, that we may be heard as they were. But these men, otherwise than they ought, do wrongfullie reason, that none shall be heard but they that haue once bene heard. How much better doth Times say? Elias (saith he) was a man like to vs: and he prayed with praiere that it should not raue, and it rained not vpon the earth in three yeeres and sixe monthes. Againe he praied, and the heauen gaue raue, and the earth gaue her fruite. What? doth he gather any singular prerogatiue of Elias, to which we ought to flee? No. But he teacheth what is the continuall strength of godly and pure praiere, to exhort vs likewise to pray. For we do

niggardly construe the readines and gentleness of God in hearing them, vnlesse we be by such experiences confirmed into a more sure affiance of his promises, in which he promisseth that his eare shall be inclined not to one, or two, nor yet to a few, but to all that call vpon his name. And so much lesse excusable is this foolishnes, because they seeme as it were of set purpose to despise so many admonitions of Scripture. Dauid was oft deliuered by the power of God. Was it that he should draw that power to himselfe, that we should be deliuered by his helpe? He himselfe affirmeth faire otherwise: The righteous looke for me, till thou render to me. Againe, The righteous shall see, and they shall reioyce, and trust in the Lord. Behold, this poore man hath cried to God, and he hath answered him: There be in the Psalmes many such prayers, in which to craue that which he requireth, he moueth God by this manner, that the righteous be not made ashamed, but many by his example be raised vp to hope well. Let vs now be contented with this one example. Therefore every holy one shall pray to thee in fit time. Which place I haue so much the more willingly rehearsed, because the lewd babblers which doe let out to hire the seruice of their waged roonge haue not bene ashamed to alleage it to prooue the intercession of the dead. As though Dauid meant any thing else, than to shew the fruite that shall come of the mercifulnes and gentlenes of God, when he shall be heard. And in this kind we must learne, that the experience of the grace of God, as well toward our sekies as other, is no slender helpe to confirme the credite of his promises. I haue vnreheard many places, where Dauid setteth before himselfe the benefits of God for matter of confidence, because the readers of the Psalmes shal commonly find them without seeking. This selfe same thing had Iacob before taught by his owne example: I am vnworthie of all thy mercies, and of the truth which thou hast performed to thy seruant. I with my staffe haue passed ouer this Jordane, and now I come forth with two bands. He alleageth in deed the promise, but not alone: but he also ioyneth the effect, that he may the more courageously in time to come trust that God will be the same toward him. For he is not like to mortall men, which are weary of their liberalitie, or whose abilitie is wasted: but he is to be weighed by his owne nature, as Dauid wisely doth, where he saith, Thou hast redeemed me, O God that speakest truth. After that he hath giuen to God the praises of his saluation, he addeth that he is a true speaker: because vnlesse he were continually like him selfe, there could not be gathered of his benefits a sufficiently strong reason of affiance and calling vpon him. But when we know that so oft as he helpeth vs, he sheweth an example and prooue of his goodness, we neede not to feare that our hope shall be put to shame or disappoint vs.

27 Let this be the summe. Whereas the Scripture setteth out this vnto vs for the cheefe point in the worshipping of God, (as refusing all sacrifices, he requireth of vs this duetie of godlines) prayer is not without manifest sacrifice directed to other. Wherefore also it is said in the Psalm. If we stretch forth our handes to a strange God, shall not God require these things? Againe, whereas God will not be called vpon but of Faith, and expressly commandeth prayers to be framed according to the rule of his word: finally whereas Faith founded vpon the word, is the mother of right prayer: so soone as we swaue from the word, our prayer must needs be corrupted. But it is already shewed, that if the whole scripture be sought, this honor is therein challenged to God only. As touching the office of intercession, we haue also shewed that it is peculiar to Christ, and that there is no praiser acceptable to God, but which that Mediator halloweth. And though the faithful do one for another offer prayers to God for their brethren, we haue shewed that this abateth nothing from the onely intercession of Christ: because they altogether standing vpon it do comend both themselves and other to God. Moreouer we haue taught that this is vnfitly drawne to dead men, to whom we neuer read that it hath bene comanded that they should pray for vs. The Scripture doth oftentimes exhort vs to mutuall dooings of this duty one for another:

but of dead men there is not so much as one syllable: yea and Iames ioyning these two things together, that we should confesse our felues among our felues, and mutually pray one for another, doth secretly exclude dead men. Therefore to condemne this error, this one reason sufficeth, that the beginning of praying rightly, springeth out of faith, and that Faith cometh of the hearing of the worde of God, where is no mention of the fained intercession, because superstition hath rashly gotten to it selfe patrones which were not giuen them of God. For whereas the Scripture is full of many formes of praier, there is no example found of this patroneship, without which in the Papacie they beleeue that there is no praier. Moreouer it is certaine that this superstition hath grown of distrustfulnesse either because they were not content with Christ to be their intercessor, or haue altogether robbed him of his praise. And this latter point is easily prooued by their shamelesse: because they haue no other stronger argument to prooue that we haue neede of the intercession of Saints, than when they obiect that we are vnworthie of familiar access to God. Which we in deede graunt to be most true: but thereupon we gather, that they leaue nothing to Christ, which esteeme his intercession, nothing woorth, vnlesse there be adioyned George, Hypolite, or such other visors.

28 But although praier properly signifieth onely wishes and petitions: yet there is so great affinitie betweene petition and thanksgiuing, that they may be fitly comprehended both vnder one name. For, these speciall sortes which Paul rehearseth, fall vnder the first part of this diuision. With asking and craving we poure forth our desires before God, requiring as well those things that seeme to spread abroad his glorie and set forth his name, as the benefites that are profitable to our vse. With giuing of thanks, we doe with due praise magnifie his good doings towarde vs, acknowledging to be receiued of his liberalitie whatsoeuer good things do come to vs. Therefore Daniell comprehended these two parts together, saying: Cal vpon me in the day of neede: I will deliuer thee, and thou shalt glorifie me. The Scripture not in vaine commandeth vs to vse both. For we haue said in another place, that our neede is so great, and the experience it selfe crieth out that we are on euery side pinched and pressed with so many and so great distresses, that all haue cause enough why they should both sigh to God, and in humble wise call vpon him. For though they be free from aduersities, yet the guiltines of their wicked doings, & their innumerable assaults of tentations ought to prick forward the most holy to aske remedie. But in the sacrifice of praise & thanksgiuing there can be no interruption without hainous sin, forasmuch as God ceaseth not heape vpon diuerse men diuerse benefites to driue vs though we be slacke & slowe, to thankfulness. Finally so great & so plenteous largesse of his benefites doth in a maner ouerwhelme vs: there are so many and so great miracles of his scene on euery side which way soeuer thou turne thee, that we neuer want ground and matter of praise and thanksgiuing. And that these things may be somewhat plainlier declared: sith all our hopes & wealth stande in God (which wee haue before sufficiently prooued) that neither we nor all our things can be in prosperitie but by his blessing: wee must continually commit our felues and all our things to him. Then whatsoeuer we purpose, speake, or do, let vs purpose, speake, & do vnder his hand & will, finally vnder the hope of his helpe. For all are pronounced accused of God, which deuise or determine any purposes vpon trust of themselves or of any other, which without his will, & without calling vpon him doe enterprise or attempt to begin any thing. And when as we haue diuerse times already said, that he is duelie honored when he is acknowledged the author of all good things: thereupon followeth that all those things are to be receiued at his hand, that we yeelde continuall thanks for them: & that there is no other right way for vs to vse his benefites; which flow & proceed from his liberality to no other end, but that we should be continually busied in confessing his praise & giuing of thanks. For Paul, when he testifieth that they more to the opinion of men than to the secrete iudgement of God. In the meane time, that the common praers of the Church should not growe into contempt, God in olde time garnished them with glorious titles, specially where he called the temple the house of praier. For, by this saying he both taught that the chiefe part of the worshipping of him is the dutie of praier: and that to the ende that the faithfull should with one consent exercise themselves in it, the temple was set vp as a standard for them. There was also added a notable promise: There abideth for thee, O God, praise in Sion: and to thee the vow shall be paid. By which words the prophet telleth vs, that the praers of the Church are neuer void: because the Lord alway minifreth to his people matter to sing vpon with joy. But although the shadowes of the law are ceased: yet because the Lords will was by this ceremonie to nourish among vs also the vnitie of faith, it is no doubt that the same promise belongeth to vs, which both Christ hath stablished with his owne mouth, and Paul teacheth that it is of force for euer.

34 Now as the Lorde by his worde commaunded the faithfull to vse common praier: so there must be common temples appointed for the vsing of them: where who so refuse to communicate their praier with the people of God, there is no cause why they should abuse this pretence, that they enter into their chamber that they may obey the commaundement of the Lord. For he that promiseth that he will doe whatsoever two or three shal aske being gathered together in his name, testifieth that he despiseth not praers openly made: so that boasting and seeking of glorie of men be absent, so that vnfaigned and true affection be present which dwelleth in the secret of the hart. If this be the right vse of temples (as truly it is) we must againe beware that neither (as they haue begun in certaine ages past to be accounted) we take them for the proper dwelling places of God from whence he may more neerely bende his care vnto vs: nor faime to them I wote not what secrete holintisse, which may make our praier more holy before God. For sith we our selues be the true temples of God we must pray in our selues if we will call vpon God in his owne holy temple. As for that grossenesse, let vs which haue a commaundement to call vpon the Lord in spirit and truth without difference of place, leaue it to the Iewes or the Gentiles. There was in deede a Temple in olde time by the commaundement of God for offering of praers and sacrifices: but that was at such time as the truth lay hid figured vnder such shadowes, which being now liuely expressed vnto vs doth not suffer vs to sticke in any materiall temple. Neither was the temple giuen to the Iewes themselves with this condition, that they should inclose the presence of God, within the wals thereof, but whereby they might be exercised to behold the image of the true temple. Therefore they, which in any part thought that God dwelleth in temples made with hands, were sharply rebuked of Esaï and Stephen.

31 Here moreouer it is more than euident, that neither voice nor song, if they be vsed in praier, haue any force, or doe any whit profite before God, vniess they proceede from the deepe affection of the hart. But rather they prouoke his wrath against vs, if they come onely from the lips and out of the throte: for as much as that is to abuse his holy name, and to make a mockerie of his maiestie: as we gather out of the wordes of Esaï, which although they extend further, yet pertaine also to reprocue this fault. This people (saith he) commeth neere to me with their mouth, and honoureth me with their lips: but their hart is farre from me: and they haue feared me with the commaundement and doctrine of men. Therefore behold I will make in this people a miracle great and to be wondered at. For, wisdome shall perish from their wise men, and the prudence of the Elders shall vanish away. Neither yet doe we here commend any voice or singing, but rather doe highly commend them, so that they accompanie the affection of the minde. For so they exercise the minde and holde it intentiue in thinking vpon God: which as it is slipperie and rolling, easily slacketh and is diuersely drawn vniclesse it be staied with diuersel helps, Moreover whereas the glorie of God ought after a certaine manner to shine in all the partes of our bodie, it specially behooueth that the tooing be applied and aouwed to this seruice both in singing and in speaking which is properly created to shew forth and display the praise of God: But the cheefe vse of the tooing is in publike prayers, which are made in the assembly of the godly: which tende to this ende, that we may all with one common voice, and as it were with one mouth together glorifie God whom we worshippinge with one spirite and one faith: and that openly, that all men mutually, every one of his brother, may receiue the confession of Faith, to the example whereof they may bee both allured and stirred.

32 As for the vse of singing in Churches (that I may touch this also by the way) it is certain that it is not onely most auncient: but that it was also in vse among the Apostles, we may gather by these words of Paul, I will sing in Spirite, I will sing also in minde. Againe to the Colossians, Teaching and admonishing you, mutually in Hymnes, Psalmes, and spirituall songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lorde. For in the first place he teacheth that we should sing with voice and hart: in the other he commendeth spirituall songs, wherewith the godly doe mutually edifie themselves. Yet that it was not vniuersall, Augustine testifieth, which reporteth that in the time of Ambrose the Church of Millean first began to sing, when while Iustina the mother of Valentinian cruelly raged against the true faith, the people more vied watchings than they were wont: and that afterward the other westerne Churches followed. For he had a little before said that this manner came from the Easterne Churches. He telleth also in his second booke of Retractions that it was in his time received in Africa. One Hilarie (saith he) a ruler did in cuetie place whersoever he coule, with malicious blaming raille at the manner which then began to be at Carthage, that the Hymnes at the altar should be pronounced out of the booke of Psalmes, either before the oblation, or when that which had been offered was distributed to the people. Him I answered at the commandment of my brethren. And truly if song be tempered to that grauitie which becommeth the presence of God and Angels, it both procureth dignitie and grace to the holy actions, and much auileth to stirre vp the hertes to true affection and seruencnes of praying. But we must diligently beware that our eares be not more heedfully bent to the note, than our mindes to the spirituall sense of the wordes. With which peril Augustine in a certaine place saith that he was moued, that he sometime wished that the maner which Athanasius kept should be established, which commanded that the Reader should sound his words with so small a bowing of his voice, that it should be liker to one that readeth than to one that singeth. But when he remembered how much profite he himselfe had receiued by singing, hee inclined to the other side. Therefore vsing this moderation there is no doubt that it is a most holy and profitable ordinance. As on the other side what songs to euer are framed onely to sweetnes and delight of the eares, they both become rot the maiestie of the Church, and cannot but highly displeas God.

33 Whereby it also plainly appeereth that common praycis are to bee spoken not in Greeke among Latine men, not in Latine among Frenchmen or Englishmen (as it hath heretofore been each where commonly done) but in the peoples mother tooing, which commonly may be vnderstood of the whole assemblie: inasmuch as it ought to be done to the edifying of the whole Church, which receiue no fruit at all of a sound not vnderstanded. But they which haue no regard neither of charity nor of humanitie, should at least haue been somewhat moued with the authority of Paul, whose words are nothing doubtfull. If thou blest (saith he) in spirit, how shall he that filleth the place of an vnlearned man answer Amen to thy blessing, sith he knoweth not what thou saiest? For thou in deed giuest thanks, but the other is not edified. Who therefore can sufficiently wonder at the vnbridled licentiousnes of the Papists, which, the Apostle so openly crying out againſt it, feare not to roare out in a ſtrange tooꝅg moſt babling prayers, in which they themſelues ſometime vnderſtand not one ſyllable, nor would haue other folks to vnderſtand it? Bet Paul teacheth that we ought to do otherwiſe. How then? I will pray (ſaith he) with ſpīte, I will pray alſo with minde: I will ſing with ſpīte: I will ſing alſo with mind: ſignifying by the name of ſpīte, the ſingular gift of tooꝅgs, which many being endued with, abuſed it, when they ſeuered it from the minde, that is, from vnderſtanding. But this we muſt altogether thinke, that it is by no meane poſſible, neither in publicke nor in priuate prayer, but that the tooꝅg without the heart muſt highly diſpleaſe God. Morcouer we muſt thinke that the minde ought to be kindled with feruentnes of thought, that it may far ſurmount all that the tooꝅg may expreſſe with vtterance. Finally that the tooꝅg is not neceſſarie at all for priuate prayer, but ſo farre as the inward feeling either is not able to ſuffice to enkindle it ſelfe, or the vehemencie of inkindling violently carieth the worke of the tooꝅg with it. For though verie good prayers ſometime be without voice, yet oftentimes betideth, that when the affection of the minde is feruent, both the tooꝅg breaketh forth into voice, and the other members into geſturing without exceſſiue ihew. Herupon came the muttering of Hanna, and ſuch a like thing all the holy ones alway feele in themſelues, when they burſt out into broken and vnperfect voyces. As for the geſtures of the bodie which are wont to be vſed in prayer (as kneeling and vncouering of the head) they are exerciſes by which we endeouour to riſe vp to a greater reuerencing of God.

34 Now we muſt learne not onely a more certaine rule, but alſo the verie forme of praying: namely the ſame, which the heauenly father hath taught vs by his beloved ſonne: wherein we may acknowledge his vnmeaſurable goodnes and kindnes. For beſide this he warneth and exhorteth vs to ſeeke him in all our neceſſitie (as children are wont to ſtie to their fathers defence, ſo o't as they be troubled with any diſtreſſe) becauſe he ſawe that he did not ſufficiently perceiue this, how ſlender our pouertie was, what were mee to be aſked, and what were for our profit: he prouided alſo for this our ignorance, and what our capacitie wanted, hee ſupplied and furniſhed of his owne. For he hath preſcribed to vs a forme wherein he hath as in a Table ſet out whatſoever we may deſire of him, whatſoever vaileth for our profit, and whatſoener is neceſſarie to aſke. Of which his gentlenes we receiue a great fruit of comfort that we vnderſtand that we aſke no inconuenient thing, no vnſeeming or vnfit thing, finally nothing that is not acceptable to him, ſith we aſke in a manner after his owne mouth. When Plato ſaw the follie of men in making requeſtes to God, which being granted, it many times beſell much to their owne hurt: he pronounced that this is the beſt maner of praying taken out of the old Poet. King Iupiter giue vnto vs the beſt things both when we aſke them, and when we do not aſke them, but command euil things to be away from vs euen when we aſke them. And verily the heathen man is wiſe in this, that he iudgeth how perillous it is to aſke of the Lord that which our owne deſire moueth vs: and therewithall he bewrayeth our unhappie caſe, that we cannot once open our mouthes before God without danger, vnleſſe the ſpīte do inſtruct vs to a right rule of praying. And in ſo much greater eſtimation this priuiledge is worthe to be had of vs, ſith the onely begotten ſon of God miniſtretch words into our mouth which may deliuer our mind from all doubting.

35 This whether you call it forme or rule of praying is made of fixe petitions. For the cauſe why I agree not to them that diuide it into ſeuen parts, is this, that by putting in this aduerſatiue word (But) it ſeemeth that the Euangelift meant to ioine beſe two peeces together, as if he had ſaid. Suffer vs not to be oppreſſed with temptation, but rather helpe our weakenes, and deliuer vs, that we faile not. The old writers alſo thinke on our ſide, ſo that now that which is in Mattheu added in the ſeuenth place is by way of declaratiō to be ioined to the ſixt petition. But although the whole prayer prayer is such that in every part of it regard is specially to be had of the glory of God, yet the three first petitions are peculiarly appointed to Gods glory, which alone we ought in them to looke vnto without any respect (as they say) of our owne profit. The other three haue care of vs, and are properly assigned to aske those things that are for our profit. And when we pray that the name of God be hallowed: because God will prouoe whether he be loued and honored of vs freely or for hope of reward, we must then thinke nothing of our own comoditie, but his glory must be set before vs, which alone we must behold with fixed eyes: and no otherwise ought we to be minded in the other prayers of this sort. And euen this turneth to our great profit, that when it is sanctified as we pray, it is also likewise made our sanctification. But our eyes (as it is said) must winke and after a certaine manner be blind at such profite, so as they may not once looke at it: that if all hope of our priuate benefite were cut off, yet we should not cease to wish and pray for this sanctification and other things which pertaine to the glory of God. As it is seene in the examples of Moses and Paul, to whom it was not greuous to turne away their mindes and eyes from themselves, and with vehement and inflamed zeale to wish their owne destruction, that though it were with their owne losse they might aduance the glory and kingdome of God. On the other side when we pray that our dayly bread be giuen vs: although we wish that which is for our owne comoditie, yet here also we ought chiefly to seeke the glory of God, so that we should not aske it vnlesse it might turne to his glory. Now let vs come to the declaring of the prayer it selfe.

Exod. 32. 32.
Rom. 9. 3.

Our Father which art in heauen.

36 First in the very entry we meeete with this which we said before that all prayer ought none otherwise to be offered of vs to God than in the name of Christ, as it can by no other name be made acceptable vnto him. For since we call him Father, truly we alleadge for vs the name of Christ. For by what boldnesse might any man call God, Father? who should but it forth into so great rashnesse, to take to himselfe the honor of the Sonne of God, vnlesse we were adopted the children of grace in Christ? Which being the true Sonne, is giuen of him to vs to be our brother: that that which he hath proper by nature, may by the benefite of adoption be made ours, if we doe with sure Faith embrace so great bountifullnesse. As Iohn saith, that power is giuen to them which beleue in the name of the onely begotten Sonne of God, that they also may be called the children of God. Therefore he both calleth himselfe our Father, and will be so called of vs, by this sweetenesse of name deliuering vs from all distrait, for there can no where be found any greater affection of loue than in a Father. Therefore he could by no surer example testifie his vnmeasurable deare loue toward vs than by this that we are named the Sonnes of God. But his loue is so much greater and more excellent toward vs than all loue of our parentes, as he passeth all men in goodnesse and mercie: that if all the Fathers that are in the earth, hauing thaken off all feeling of Fatherly naturalnesse, would forsake their children, yet he will neuer faile vs, because he cannot deny himselfe. For we haue his promise, If you being euill can giue good gifts to your children, how much more can your Father which is in heauen? Again in the Prophet, Can a mother forget hir children? Though she forget them, yet I will not forget thee. If we be his children: then as a child cannot giue himselfe into the tuition of a stranger and forcin man, vnlesse he complaine either of the cruelty or pouertie of his Father: so we cannot seeke succours from else where than from him alone, vnlesse we reproch him with pouertie and want of abilitie, or with cruelty or too extreme rigorousnesse.

displeas'd. For if among men the sonne can with no better aduocate plead his cause to his Father, and by no better meane get and recouer his fauour being lost, than if he himselfe humbly and lowly, acknowledging his fault, do beseech his fathers mercie (for then the fatherly bowels cannot hide themselves but must bee moued at such prayers) what shall that father of mercies do, and the God of all comfort? shall not he rather heare the teares and groanings of his children inuincing for themselves (specially sith he doth call and exhort vs to do so) than any other intercessions whatsoever they be to the succour whereof they do so fearefully flee, not without some shew of despaire, because they distrust of the kindnes and mercifulnes of their father? This ouerflowing plenty of fatherly kindnes he depainteth and setteth out vnto vs in the parable, where the Father louingly embraceth the sonne that had estranged himselfe from him, that had riotously wasted his substance, that had euery way grievously offended against him, and he tarieth not till he do with wordes craue pardon, but he himselfe preuenteth him, knoweth him a farre off returning, of his owne will goeth to meete him, comforteth him and receiueh him into fauour. For, setting out in a man this example of so great gentlenes, he minded to teach vs how much more plentifull kindnes we ought to looke for at his hand, who is not onely a Father, but also the best and most mercifull of all Fathers, howsoeuer we be vnkinde, rebellious and naughtie children: so that yet we cast our selues vpon his mercie. And that he might make it to be more assuredly beleueed, that he is such a Father to vs, if we be Christians: he willed not onely to be called Father, but also by expresse name Our Father: as if we might thus talke with him, O Father which hast so great naturall kindnesse toward thy children, so great easinesse to pardon, we thy children call to thee & pray to thee, being assured and fully perswaded, that thou bearst no other affection to vs than fatherly, howsoeuer we be vnworthie of such a father. But because the small capacities of our heart conceiue not so great vnmeasurable benefite of fauour, not onely Christ is to vs a pledge and earnest of our adoption, but also he giueth vs the spirit for witness of the same adoption, through whom we may with a free and lowd voice crie Abba, Father. So oft therefore as any deliuy shall with stand vs, let vs remember to aske of him, that correcting our fearfulness he will set before vs that spirit of couraigouines to be our guide to pray boldly.

Luk. 15. 20.

Gal. 4. 6.

When we call God our Father the holy fellowship which we haue one with another is commended and we admonished to pray for others not onely for our selves.
Mat. 23. 9.

38 Whereas wee are not so taught that euery one should seuerally call him his owne father, but rather that we should all in common together call him Our Father: thereby we are put in mind, how great affection of brotherly loue ought to be among vs, which are altogether by one same right of mercie and liberalitie, the children of such a father. For we all haue one common Father, from whom cometh whatsoever good thing may betide vnto vs. there ought to be nothing severall among vs, which we are not readie with great cheerefulness of minde to communicate one to another, so much as neede requireth. Now if we be so desirous, as we ought to be, to reach our hand and helpe one to another, there is nothing wherein we may more profit our brethren, than to commend them to the care & prouidence of the most good father, who being well pleased and fauouring, nothing at all can be wanted. And verily euen this same we owe to our father. For as he that truly and hartly loueth any father of household, doth also embrace his whole household, with loue and good will: likewise what loue and affection we beare to this heauenly Father, we must shew toward his people, his household and his inheritance, which he hath so honored, that he hath called it the fulnesse of his onely begotten Sonne. Let a Christian man therefore frame his prayers by this rule, that they be common, and may comprehend all them that bee brethren in Christ with him: and not onely those whom he presently seeth and knoweth to be such, but all men that liue vpon earth: of whom, what God hath determined, it is out of our knowledge: saying that it is no lesse godly than naturall to wish the best to them, & hope the best of them. Howbeit we ought with a certain singular affection to beare a speciall inclination to them of the household of Faith, whom the Apostle hath in euery thing peculiarly commended vnto vs. In a summe, All our praier ought to be so made, that they haue respect to that community which our Lord hath stablished in his kingdome and his house.

39 Yet this withstandeth not, but that we may specially pray both for our selues and for certaine other: so that yet our minde depart not from hauing an eie to this community, nor once swarue from it, but apply all things vnto it. For though they be singularly spoken in forme, yet because they are directed to that marke, they cease not to be common. All this may be easily vnderstoode by a like example. The commandement of God is generall, to relieue the neede of all poore: and yet they obey this commandement which to this end doe helpe their pouertie whom they know or see to be in neede, although they passe ouer many whom they see to be pressed with no lesse necessitie: either because they can not know all, or be not able to helpe all. After this manner they also doe not against the will of God, which hauing regard vnto and thinking vpon this common fellowship of the Church, doe make such particular praier, by which they do with a common mind in particular words, commend to God themselues or other, whose necessitie God willed to be more neerely known to them. Howbeit all things are not like in praier and in bestowing of goods. For, the liberalitie of giuing cannot be vsed but toward them whose need we haue perceiued: but with praier we may helpe euen them that are most strange and most vnknown to vs, by how great a space of ground soeuer they be distant from vs. This is done by the generall forme of praier, wherein all the children of God are contained, among whom they also are. Hereto we may apply that which Paul exhorteth the faithfull of his time, that they lift vp euery where pure hands, without strife: because when he warneth them that strife shutteth the gate against praier, he willeth them with one minde to lay their petitions in common together.

40 It is added, that he is in heauen. Whereupon it is not by and by to be gathered that he is bound fast inclosed and compassed with the circle of heauen, as within certaine barres. For Salomon also confesseth that the heauens of heauens cannot containe him. And he himselfe saith by the Prophet that heauen is his seate, and the earth his footstoole. Whereby verily he signifieth that he is not limited in any certaine coast, but is spred abroad throughout all things. But because our minde (such is the grossnesse of it,) could not otherwise conceiue his vspeakable glory, it is signified to vs by the heauen, than which there can nothing come vnder our sight more ample or fuller of maiestie. Sith therefore where soeuer our senses comprehend any thing, there they vse to fasten it: God is set out of all place, that when we will seeke him we should be raised vp about all sense both of body and soule. Again by this manner of speaking he is lifted vp about all chauce of corruption and change: finally it is signified that he comprehendeth and containeth the whole world and governeth it with his power. Wherefore this is all one as if he had been called of infinite greatness or height, of incomprehensible substance, of vnrmeasureable power, of uerlasting immortalitie. But while we haue this, we must lift vp our minde higher when God is spoken of, that we dreame not any earthly or fleshly thing of him, that we measure him not by our small proportions, nor draw his will to the rule of our affections. And therewithal is to be raised vp our affiance in him, by whose prouidence and power we vnderstand heauen and earth to be governed. Let this be the summe, that vnder the name of Father is set before vs that God which hath in his owne image appeared to vs, that he may be called vpon with assured Faith: and that the familiar name of Father is not onely applied to stablish affiance, but also aualeth to hold fast our mindes that they be not drawen to doubtfull or fained Gods, but should from the onely begotten sonne climbe vp to the onely Father of Angels and of the Church: then, that because his seate is placed in heauen, we are by the gouernance of the world put in minde that not without cause we come to him which with present care conmeth of his owne will to meete vs. Who so come to God (saith the Apostle) they must first beleuee that there is a God, then that he is a rewarder to al them that seeke him. Both these things Christ affirmeth to be proper to his father, that our faith may be staid in him: then, that we may be certainly perswaded that he is not careles of our faultie: because he vouchsafeth euē to vs to extend his providence. With which introductions Paul prepareth vs to pray rightly. For before that he biddeth our petitions to be opened before God, he saith thus. Be ye careful for nothing, the Lord is at hand. Wherby appeareth that they doubtfull and with perplexitie tosse their prayers in their minde which haue not this well settled in them, that the eie of God is vpon the righteous.

Heb. 11. 6.

The hallowing of the name of God which is the first petition both in that which he teacheth and that which he worketh, earnestly to be longed for and craved in prayer.
Psal. 33. 18.
Psal. 48. 11.

41 The first petition is, That the name of God be hallowed, the neede whereof is ioyned with our great shame. For what is more shamefull than that the glorie of God should be partly by our vnthankfulnesse, partly by our maliciousnes darkened: and (so much as in it lieth) by our boldnes & furious stubbornnes, vtrelly blotted out? Though all the wicked would burst themselues with their wilfulnes full of sacriledge, yet the holinesse of the name of God gloriously shineth. And not without cause the Prophet crieth out, As thy name O God, so is thy praise into all the ends of the earth. For wheresoever the name of God is knowne, it cannot be but that his strengths, power, goodnes, wisdom, righteousnes, mercy, and truth must shew forth themselues, which may draw vs into admiration of him, and sture vs vp to publish his praise. Sith therefore the holinesse of God is so shamefully taken from him in earth, if we be not able to rescue it, we be at the least commaunded to take care of it in our prayers. The summe is, that we with the honour to be giuen to God which he is worthe to haue, that men neuer speake or thinke of him without most high reuerence: whereunto is contrarie the vnholly abusing, which hath alway bene too common in the worlde, as at this day also it rangeth abroad. And hereupon commeth the necessitie of this petition, which if there liued in vs any godlines, though it were but a litle, ought to haue bene superfluous. But if the name of God haue his holinesse safe, when being secured from all other, it breatheth out nothing but glorie, here we are commaunded not onely to pray that God will deliuer that holy name from all contempt and dishonour, but also that he will subdue all mankinde to the reuerence of it. Now whereas God discloseth himselfe to vs, partly by doctrine, and partly by works, he is no otherwise sanctified of vs, than if we giue to him in both behalves that which is his, and so embrace whatsoeuer shall come from him: and that his sanctitie haue no lesse praise among vs than his mercifulnesse, for as much as he hath in the manifold diuersitie of his works imprinted markes of his glorie which may worthily draw out of all tongues a confession of his praise. So shall it come to passe that the Scripture shall haue full authoritie with vs, and that no good successie shall hinder the blessing which God deserueth in the whole course of the gouerning of the world. Againe, the petition also tendeth to this purpose, that all vngodlinesse which defileth this holy name, may bee destroyed and taken away: that whatsoeuer things doe darken and diminish this sanctifying, as well slanders as mockings, may bee driuen awaie: and when God subdueth all sacriledges, his glorie may thereby more and more shine abroad.

The parts and proesse of the kingdom of God amongst men: which is the second petition.

42 The second petition is, that The kingdom of God may come: which although it containe no new thing, is yet not without cause secured from the first: because if we consider our owne drowlines in a thing greater of all other, it is profitable that the thing which ought of it selfe to haue bene most well knowne, bee with many words of beaten into vs. Therefore after that we haue bene commaunded to pray to God to bring into subiection, and at length vtrelly to destroy whatsoeuer spoileth his holy name: now is added a like and in a manner the same request, that his kingdom come. But although wee haue already set forth the definition of his kingdome, yet I now breefly rehearse, that God reigneth when men as well with forsaking of themselves as with despising of the world & of the earthly life, do so yeeld themselves to his righteousnes, that they aspire to the heauenly life. Therefore there are two parts of this kingdome: the one that God correct with the power of his Spirit all corrupt desires of the flesh, which do by multitudes make warre against him: the other, that he frame all our senses to the obedience of his government. Therefore none doe keepe right order in this prayer, but they which begin at themselves, that is to say, that they be cleansed from all corruptions which trouble the quiet state of the kingdome of God, and infect the purenesse thereof. Now because the word of God is like a kingly scepter, we are heere commanded to pray hee will subdue the mindes and hartes of all men to willing obedience of it. Which is done, when with the secret instinct of his Spirit he uttereth the effectual force of his worde, that it may be advanced in such degree as it is woorthie. Afterward wee must come downe to the wicked which do obstinately and with desperate rage resist his authority. God therefore setteth vp his kingdome by humbling the whole worlde: but that in diuerse manners: because he tareth the wantonnesse of some, and of other some he breaketh the vntamed pride. This is daily to be wished that it be done, that it may please God to gather to himselfe Churches out of all the coastes of the world: to enlarge and encrease them in number, to enrich them with his graces, to stablish right order in them: on the other side to overthrow all the enemies of pure doctrine and religion, to scatter abroad their counsels, to cast downe their enterprises. Whereby appeereth that the endeour of daily proceeding is not in vaine commanded vs: because the matters of men, are neuer in so good case, that filthinesse being shaken away and cleansed, full purenesse flourisheth and is in lively force. But the finishe of it is deferred vnto the last coming of Christ, when Paul teacheth that God shall be all in all. And so this prayer ought to withdrawe vs from all the corrupt ones of the worlde, which doe seuer vs from God that his kingdome shoulde not flourish in vs, and also to kinde our endeour to mortifie the flesh, finally to instruct vs to the bearing of the crosse: forasmuch as God will in this wise haue his kingdome spread abroad. Neither ought we to take it mistakenly that the outward man be destroyed, so that the inward man be renewed. For this is the nature of the kingdome of God, when wee submit our selves to the righteousnes thereof, to make vs partakers of his glorie. This is done when brightly setting forth his light and truth with alway newe encreases, whereby the darknesse and lies of Satan and his kingdome may vanish away, be destroyed and perishe, he defendeth them that be his, with the helpe of his Spirit, directeth them to vprightnesse, and strengtheneth them to continuance: but overthroweth the wicked conspiracies of his enemies, shaketh abroad their treasons and deceits, preuenteth their malice, and beatech downe their stubbornnesse, till at length he kill Antichrist with the Spirit of his mouth and destroy all vngodlines with the brightnes of his coming.

1. Cor. 15 : 8.

43 The third petition is, That the will of God be done in earth, as it is in heauen. Which although it hangeth vpon his kingdome, and cannot be seuered from it, is not in vaine added generally, for our grossnes, which doth not easily or by and by conceiue what it is that God reigneth in the world. It shall therefore be no abundance if this be taken by way of playner exposition: that God shall then be king in the world when all things shall submit themselves to his will. Nowe heere is not meant of his secret will whereby he governeth all things and directeth them to their ende. For though Satan and men are troublefomely carried against him, yet hee can by his incomprehensible counsell not onely turne aside their violent motions, but also driue them into order that hee may doe by them that which hee hath purposed. But heere is spoken of another will of God, namely that, whereunto answereth willing obedience: and therefore the heauen is by name compared with the earth: because the Angels,

Our requesting in the thide petition that the will of god may be obeyed is a renouncing of our owne carnall wills and desires.

as it is said in the Psalme, do willingly obey God and are diligently bent to doe his commandements. We are therefore commanded to wish that as in heauen nothing is done but by the becke of God, and the Angels are quietly framed to all vprightnesse: so the earth, all stubbornnesse and perversnesse being quenched, may be subiect to such gouernement. And when we require this, we renounce the desires of our owne flesh: because whosoever doth not resigne and yeeld his affections to God, he doth as much as in him lieth set himselfe against him, forasmuch as nothing cometh out of vs but faultie. And we are againe by this praier framed to the forsaking of our selues, that God may governe vs after his will: and not that only, but that he may also create in vs new minds, and new hearts, our old being brought to nought: that we may feele in our selues none other motion of desire than a meere consent with his will: summarily that we may will nothing of our selues, but that his Spirit may gouerne our hearts, by whom inwardly teaching vs we may learne to loue those things that please him, and to hate those things that displease him. Whereupon this also followeth, that whatsoeuer affections fight against his will, he may make them vaine and void. Loe here be the first three chiefe points of this praier, in asking whereof we ought to haue the onelie glorie of God before our eyes, leauing the respect of our selues, and hauing no regard to any of our owne profit, which although it come hereof largely vnto vs, yet we ought not here to seeke it. But albeit all these things, though we neither thinke of them, nor wish them, nor aske them, must neuertheless come to passe in their due time, yet we must wish them and require them. And this to do is no small profit for our trouaile, that we may so testifie and professe our selues to be the seruants and children of God, as much as in vs lieth endeououring and being true like and thoroughly giuen to set forth his honour, which is due to him being both a Lord and a Father. Who so therefore do not with affection and zeale of auouncing the glorie of God, pray that the name of God be hallowed, that his kingdome come, that his will be done: they are not to be accounted among the children and seruants of God: and as all these things shall be done against their willes, so they shall turne to their confusion and destruction.

The sense of the fourth petition wherein our corporal & earthly necessities are commended vnto God.
1. Cor. 10 31.

44 Now followeth the second part of the prayer, in which we come downe to our owne commodities: not that bidding farewell to the glorie of God (which as Paul witnesseth, is to be regarded euen in meate and drinke) we should seeke onelie what is profitable for our selues: but we haue already giuen warning that there is this difference, that God peculiarly claiming three petitions to himselfe doth drawe vs to himselfe wholly, that he may in this wise prouee our godlines. Then he graunteth vs also to haue an eye to our owne commodities, but with this condition, that we aske nothing for our selues but to this end that whatsoeuer benefits he bestoweth vpon vs, they may set forth his gloiy: forasmuch as nothing is more rightfull than that we live and die to him. But in this petition we aske of God generally all things which the vse of the bodie needeth: vnder the elements of this world, not only wherewith we may be fed and clothed, but also whatsoeuer he foreseeth to be profitable for vs, that we may eate our bread in peace. By which prayer breefly we yeeld our selues into his care, and commit vs to his prouidence, that he may feede, cherish, and preserve vs. For the most good Father disdaineth not to receiue also our bodie into his faithfull safeguard and keeping, so exercise our Faith in these small things, when we looke for all things at his hands euen to a crumme of bread and a drop of water. For whereas it is come to passe I wote not how by our iniquitie, that we be moued and vexed with greater care of the flesh than of the soule: many which dare trust to God for their soule, are yet carefull for their flesh, are yet in doubt what they shall eate, and wherewith they shall be clothed: and if they haue not plentie of wine, wheate, and oile aforeshand, they tremble for feare. So much more do we esteeme the shadow of this life which lasteth but a moment, than that cuerlasting immortallitie, litie. But who so trusting to God have once cast away that carefulnesse for the provision of the flesh, do also by and by looke for saluation and euertlasting life at his hand, which are greater things. It is therefore no small exercise of Faith, to hope for those things of God, which otherwise do so much holde vs in care: and we haue not finally profited, when we haue put off this vnbeleeuinges which sticketh fast within the bones almost of all men. As for that which some do heere teach of transubstantiall bread, it seemeth but finally to agree with the meaning of Christ: yea but if we did not euen in this fraile life giue to God the office of a nourishing Father, our praier should be vnperfect. The reason which they bring is too much prophane: that it is not meete that the children of God, which ought to be spirituall, should not onely cast their minde to earthly cares, but also wrap God therein with them. As though his blessing and fatherlic fauour doth not also appeare in the sustenance of our life, or as though it were written in vaine that godlinesse hath promises not onelie of the life to come, but also of this present life. But although the forgiuenesse of sinnes is of much greater value than the sustenances of the body, yet Christ hath set the inferior thing in the first place, to the intent to lift vs vp by degrees to the other two petitions which do properly belong to the heauenlic life, wherein he had regard to our grossenesse. We are commaunded to aske Our bread, that we should be content with the quantity which our heauenly father vouchsafeth to giue to vs, and should not seeke for gain by vnlawfull crafty meanes. In the meane time we must learne that it is made Ours by Title of gift, because neither our diligence, nor our trauaile, nor our hands (as it is sayde in Moses) doe by themselves get vs any thing, vnlesse the blessing of God be present: yea the plenty of bread should nothing at all profite vs, vnlesse it were by God turned into nourishment. And therefore this liberalitie of God is no lesse necessarie for the rich than for the poore: because hauing their cellars and their barnes full, they should yet faint for drinesse and emptinesse, vnlesse they did by his grace enjoy their bread. The word This Day, or euery day as it is in the other Euangelist, and also the adiectiue Daily, do bridle the too much greedines of fraile things, wherewith we are wont to burne out of measure, and whereunto are ioyned other euils: such if we haue plentifull abundance, we do gloriously powre it out vpon pleasure, delights, boasting, and other kinds of riotous excesse. Therefore we are commaunded to aske only so much as is enough for our necessity, and as it were from day to day, with this assurance, that when our heauenly Father hath fed vs this day, he will also not faile vs to morrow. Therefore how great plenty of things fouer do flowe vnto vs, yea when our barnes be stuffed and our cellars full: yet we ought alway to aske our dayly bread: because we must certainlie beleue that all substance is nothing, but insonmuch as the Lord doth by powring out of his blessing with continuall increase make it fruitfull: and that the very same substance that is in our hand, is not our owne, but insonmuch as he doth euerie houre giue vs a portion and graunt vs the vse of it. This whereas the pride of men doth most hardlie suffer it selfe to be perswaded: the Lord testifieth that he hath shewed a singular example thereof for all ages, when he fed his people with Manna in the wildernesse, to teach vs that man liueth not in bread onlie, but rather in the word that commeth out of his mouth. Whereby is declared, that it is his power alone by which our life & strengths are sustained, although he do minister it vnto vs vnder hostile instruments. As he is wont also to teach vs by the contrarie example, when he so oft as he will, breaketh the strength and (as he calleth it) the staffe or bread, that men eating may pine with hunger, and drinking may be dried vp with thirst. But who so not being contented with daily bread, but with vnbrided greedinesse are gaping for endless store, or who so being full with their abundance, and careless by reason of the heape of their riches, doe neuerthelessse sue to God with this prayer, they doe nothing else but mocke him. For, the first sort of such men aske that which they would not obtaine, yea that which they most of all abhorre, that is, to haue onely daily bread, and so much as in them lieth they dissemblingly hide from God the affection of their couetousfesse: whereas true praier ought to powre out before him the very whole minde it selfe, and whatsoeuer inwardly lieth hidden. But the other sort doe aske that which they looke not for at his hande, namely that which they thinke that they haue with themselues. In this that it is called Ours the bountifullnesse of God (as we haue saide) so much more appeereth, which maketh that ours that is by no right due to vs. Yet that exposition is not to be reiected which I haue also touched, that by our bread is meant that which is earned with rightfull and harmelesse trauell, and not gotten with deceits and extortions: because that is alway other mens which we get to our selues with any ill doing. Whereas we pray that it be giuen vs, thereby is signified that it is the onely and free gift of God, from whence soeuer it cometh to vs, yea when it shall most of all seeme to be gotten by our owne policie and trauell, and earned with our owne hands: for as much as it cometh to passe by his onely blessing that our labours prosper well.

45 Now followeth. Forgiue vs our detts: in which petition and the next following, Christ hath briefly contained whatsoeuer maketh for the heavenly life: as in these two partes standeth the spirituall couenant which God hath made for the saluation of his Church, I will write my lawes in their harts, and I will be mercifull to their iniquitie. Here Christ beginneth the forgiuenesse of finnes: after this, he will by and by adioyne the second grace, that God defende vs with the power of his Spirit, and sustaine vs with his helpe, that we may stand vnouercome against all tentations. And finnes he calleth detts, because we are detbound to pay the penaltie of them, and were by no meanes able to satisfie it, vnlesse wee were acquitted by this forgiuenesse. Which pardon is of his free mercie, when he himselfe liberally wipeth out these detts, taking no payment of vs, but with his owne mercie satisfying himselfe in Christ, which hath once giuen himselfe for recompence. Therefore who so trust that God shall be satisfied by their owne or other mens merites, and that with such satisfactions the forgiuenesse of finnes is recompenced and redeemed, they haue no part of communicating of this free forgiuenesse: and when they call vpon God in this manner, they doe nothing but subscribe to their owne accusation, yea and seale their owne condemnation with their owne witness. For they confesse themselues detters, vnlesse they be acquitted by the benefite of forgiuenesse, which yet they doe not receiue, but rather refuse, when they thrust vnto God their owne merits and satisfactions. For, so they doe not beseech his mercie, but doe appeale to his iudgement. As for them that dreame of a perfection in themselues, which taketh away neede to craue pardon, let them haue such disciples whome the itching of their cares driueth to errors: so that it be certaine that so many disciples as they get, are taken away from Christ: for as much as he instructing all to confesse their guiltinesse, receiue none but sinners: not for that he cherisheth finnes with flatterings, but because hee knew that the faithfull are neuer throughly vnclouted of the vices of their flesh, but that they alway remaine subiect to the iudgement of God. It is in deed to be wished, yea and to be earnestly endeouored, that we hauing performed all the partes of our dutie may truly reioice before God that we are cleane from all spot: but for as much as it pleaseth God by litle and litle to make againe his image in vs, that there alway remaineth some infection in our flesh, the remedie ought not to haue been despised. If Christ by the authoritie giuen to him of his Father, commaundeth vs throughout the whole course of our life, to flee to crauing of pardon of our guiltinesse: who shall be able to suffer these new masters, which goe about with this imagined ghost of perfect innocencie to dazzle the eies of the simple, to make the to trust that they may be made free from all fault? Which, as Iohn witnesseth, is nothing else but to make God a lier. And with all one worke these lewd men by cancelling one article do teare in funder

and by that meane do weaken fro the verie foundation the whole couenant of God, wherein we haue shewed that our saluation is contined: so as they be not only robbers of God, because they seuer those things so conioyned, but also wicked and cruell because they ouerwhelme poore soules with despaire: and traitours to themselves and other, that be like them, because they bring themselves into a slothfulnesse directly contrarie to the mercie of God. But whereas, some obiect, that in wishing the coming of the kingdome of God, we do also aske the putting away of sinne: that is too childish, because in the first table of this praiser is set forth vnto vs most high perfection, but in this part is set forth our weaknesse. So these two things do fitly agree together, that in a spring toward the make we desire not the remedies which our necessities requireth. Finally, we pray that we may be forgien as we our selues do forgie our debtors, that is, as we do forgie and pardon all of whomsoever we haue bene in any thing offended, either vniuently handled in deede, or reprochfully vsed in word. Not that it lyeth in vs to pardon the guiltines of the fault and offence which pertaineth to God alone: but this is our forgieing, of our owne willingnesse to lay away out of our mind wrath, hatred, and desire of reuengement, and with voluntarie forgetfulnesse to treade vnder foote the remembrance of iniuries. Wherefore we may not aske forgienesse of sinnes at the hand of God, if we do not also forgie their offences toward vs which either do or haue done vs wrong. But if we keepe any hatreds in our hearts, and purpose any reuengements, and imagine by what occasion we may hurt, yea, and if we do not endeouour to come into fauour againe with our enemies, and to deserue well of them with all kinde of friendly doings, and to winne them vnto vs: we do by this prayer beseech God that he do not forgie vs. For we require that he graunt to vs the same forgienesse which we graunt to other. But this is to pray that he graunt it not to vs, vntlesse we graunt it to them. Whoso therefore be such, what doe they obtaine by their prayer but a more grieuous iudgement? Last of all it is to be noted, that this condition that he forgie vs as we forgie our debtors, is not therefore added for that we deserue his forgienesse by the forgienesse which we graunt to other, as if that cause of forgienesse to vs were there expressed: but by this word partly the Lords will was to conforit the weaknesse of our Faith, for he added this as a signe whereby we may be assured that he hath as surely graunted to vs forgienesse of our sinnes, as we surely know in our conscience that we haue graunted the same to other, if our mind be void and cleansed of all hatred, enuie, and reuengement, and partly by this as it were by a make, he wipeth them out of the number of his children that they may not be bold to call vpon him as their Father, which being headlong hasty to reuenge, and hardly entreated to pardon, do vse stiffely continuing enmities, and do cherish in themselves the same displeasure toward other which they pray to be turned from themselves. Which is also in Luke expressly spoken in the words of Christ.

Efay. 43. 29.

46 The sixt petition (as we haue said) do wereth to the promise of engrauing the lawe of God in our hearts. But because we do not without continuall warfare and hard and great strivings obey to God, we do here pray to be furnished with such weapons and defended with such succor, that we may be able to get the victorie: whereby we are warned that we stand in neede not onclie of the grace of the Spirit, which may soften, bow, and direct our hearts to the obedience of God, but also of his helpe, whereby he may make vs invincible against both all the traunterous entrapings and violent conflicts of Satan. But now of tentations there are manie and diuerse sorts. For, both the peruerse thoughts of minde prouoking vs to trespassing against the lawe, which either our owne lust doth minister vnto vs, or the deuill stirreth vp, are tentations: and also those things which of their owne nature are not euill, yet by the craft of the deuill are made tentations, when they are so set before our eyes, that by the occasion of them we be drawne away or do swaue from God.

The sixt petition of aide & succour against the power of those enemies which prouoking vnto euill we are not able of our selues to withstand.

And

Cap. 20. Of the maner how to receiue

1. Theſ. 3. 5.

And theſe tentations are either on the right hand or on the left. On the right hand, as riches, power, honours, which commonly doe with their glittering and ſhewe of good ſo daſel the ſight of men, and catch them with the baited hooke of their flattering, that being entrapped with ſuch deceites, or dronke with ſuch ſweetenes, they may forget their God. On the left hand, as pouertie, reproches, deſpiſings, troubles, and ſuch other; that they being grieved with the biternes and hardnes thereof may be vterly diſcouraged, caſt away Faith and hope, and finally be altogether eſtraunged from God. To theſe tentations of both ſortes, which fight with vs either being kindled in vs by our owne luſt, or being ſet againſt vs by the craft of Satan, we pray to our heauenly Father that he ſuffer vs not to yeelde: but rather that hee vphold vs and raiſe vs vp with his hand, that being ſtrong by his ſtrength, we may ſtande faſt againſt all the aſſaultes of the malicious enemy, whatſoever thoughtes he put into our minde: then, that whatſoever is ſet before vs on either ſide, we may turne it to good, that we neither be puffed vp with proſperitie, nor throwne downe with aduerſitie. Neither yet doe we heere require that we may feele no tentations at all, with which we haue great neede to be ſtirred vp, pricked, and pinched, leaſt by too much reſt we grow dull. For not in vaine did Dauid wiſh to be tempted: and not without cauſe the Lord dayly tempteth his elect, chaſtiſing them by ſhame, pouertie, trouble, and other kindes of Croſſe. But God tempteth after one manner, and Satan after another: Satan, to deſtroy, damne, confound, and throwe downe headlong: but God, that by proouing them that be his he may haue a triall of their vnſainedneſſe, and by exerciſing them may confirme their ſtrength, to mortifie, purge by fire, and ſeare their fleſh, which vnleſſe it were in this wiſe reſtrained, would waxe wanton, and would wildly outrage aboue meaſure. Morcouer Satan aſſaileth men vnarmed and vnreadie, that hee may oppreſſe them vnware: God euen with tempting worketh the effect, that they which be his may patiently beare whatſoever he ſendeth vpon them. By the name of the Euill, whether we vnderſtand the Deuill or ſinne, it maketh little matter. Satan in deede himſelfe is the enimic that lieth in waite for our life: but with ſinne he is armed to deſtroy vs. This therefore is our requeſt, that we may not be overcome or overwhelmed with any tentations, but may by the power of the Lord ſtand ſtrong againſt all contrarie powers wherewith we are aſſailed: which is, not to yeelde vs vanquiſhed to tentations, that being receiued into his keeping and charge, and being ſafe by his protection: we may endure vnouercome ouer ſinne, death, the gates of hell, and the whole kingdome of the deuill: which is to be deliuered from euill. Where it is alſo to be diligently marked, that it is about our ſtrength to matche with the deuill ſo great a warrier, and to beare his force and violence. Otherwiſe we ſhould but vainely or as it wer in in mockage aſke that which we had alreadie in our ſelues. Surely, they which prepare them to ſuch a battle with truſt of them ſelues, doe not ſufficiently vnderſtand with how ſieffe and well armed an enemy they haue to doe. Now we pray to be deliuered from his power, as out of the mouth of a mad & raging lion, wheras we ſhould be torn in peeces with his teeth & pawes, and ſwallowed with his throte, vnles the Lord do deliuer vs out of the middeſt of death: yet therewithall knowing this that if the Lord ſhall ſtand vs, and fight for vs when we are ouerthrowne, we ſhall in his ſtrength ſhew ſtrength. Let other truſt as they liſt to their owne abilities and ſtrengths of freewill, which they thinke that they haue of them ſelues: but let it ſuffice vs that we ſtand and are ſtrong by the onely ſtrength of God. But this prayer containeth more than at the firſt ſight it beareth in ſhew. For if the Spirit of God be our ſtrength to fight out our combat with Satan, we ſhall not be able to get the victorie vntill we being filled with that Spirit ſhall haue put off all the weakenneſſe of our fleſh. When therefore we pray to be deliuered from Satan and the Deuill, we pray to be from time to time enriched with new encreaſes of the grace of God, till being fully ſtuffed with them, we may triumph ouer all euill. It seemeth hard and rough to some, that we craue of God that he leade vs not into tentation, for as much as it is contrarie to his nature to tempt, as Iames witnesseth. But this question is already partly answered, where wee saide that our owne lust is properly the cause of all the tentations wherewith we are ouercome, and therefore woorthily beareth the blame thereof. Neither doeth Iames meane any thing else, but that the faultes are without cause and wrongfully laide vpon God, which we are driuen to impure to our selues, because we knowe our selues in our conscience guiltie of them. But this withstandeth not but that God may when it pleaseth him make vs bond to satan, cast vs away into a reprobate sence, and to filthy lustes, and so leade vs into tentation by his iudgement which is righteous in deed but yet oftentimes secret: for as much as the cause of it is often hid from men, which is yet certainly known with him. Whereupon is gathered that this is no vnfit manner of speaking, if we be perswaded that he doth not without cause so oft threaten, that when the reprobate shall be stricken with blindness and hardening of hart, these shall be sure tokens of his vengeance.

Iam. 1. 13.

47 These three petitions, wherewith we doe peculiarly commend vs and our things to God, doe evidently shew this which we haue before said, that the prayers of Christians ought to be common and to tend to the common edifying of the church, and to the encrease of the communion of the faithfull. For there doth not euery man pray to haue any thing priuately giuen, but all in common together doe pray for Our bread, for forgiuenesse of finnes, that we may not be led into tentation, that we may be deliuered from euill. There is farthermore adioyned a cause why we haue both so great boldnesse to aske, and so great trust to obtaine: which although it be not in the latine copies, yet it agreeth more fitly in this place than that it should seeme woorthy to be omitted, namely that his is the kingdome, and the power and the glory for euer. This is the perfect and quiet rest of our soule. For if our prayers were to be commended to God by their owne woorthines, who should be so bound, as once to open his mouth before him? Now how focuer we be most miserable, how focuer most vnwoorthie of all men, how focuer void of all commendation: yet wee shall neuer want cause to praie, and neuer be destitute of confidence: forasmuch as our father cannot haue his kingdome, power, & glorie taken away from him. At the end is added Amen, whereby is expressed our feruentnesse of desire to obtaine those things that wee haue asked of God, and our hope is confirmed that all such things are already obtained and shall surely be giuen vs because they are promised by God, which cannot deceiue. And this agreeth with that manner of prayer which we haue here before rehearsed, Do it Lord for thy names sake, not for our sakes or our righteousnesse: whereby the holie ones do not onely expresse the end of their prayers, but also confesse that they are vnwoorthie to obtaine whatsoever God fetch the cause from himselfe, and that their trust to speed commeth of the onely nature of God.

That which is added in the Lordes prayer, concerning his kingdome, power and glorie to whom we pray, giueth vs both boldnesse to aske and great trust to obtaine that we pray for.

48 Thus haue we whatsoever we ought yea or in any wise may aske of God, set forth in this form & as it were a rule of praying taught by the best schoolmaster Christ, whom the Lord hath set ouer vs to be our teacher, and whom alone he hath willed to be harkened vnto. For he both alway hath bene his eternall wisdome, and being made man is giuen to men the angel of great counsel. And this prayer is in all points, so fully perfect, that whatsoever forreine or strange thing is added which cannot be referred to it, it is vngodlike and vnwoorthie to be allowed of God. For in this summe he hath set forth, what is meete for him, what is pleasing to him, what is needfull for vs: finally what he will grant. Wherefore who so dare go further, and to aske any thing of God beside these, first they will adde of their owne to the wisdome of God (which cannot be done without mad blasphemie) then they holde not themselves vnder the will of God, but despising it doe with greedinesse wander further: finally they shall neuer obtaine any thing, forasmuch as they praie without faith.

The perfection of the Lordes prayer, and the danger of presuming to craue things without the compass thereof.

Cap. 20. Of the maner how to receiue faith. And there is no doubt that all such prayers are made without faith, because here wanteth the worde of God, vpon which vntlesse faith bee grounded, can in no wise stand. But they which forsaking the maisters rule, do follow their owne desires, are not onely without the worde of God, but also so much as they be able with their whole endeuour are against it. Therefore Tertullian no lesse sely than truly hath called this a lawfull prayer, secretly signifying that all other are lawlesse and vlawfull.

De fuga in persecut.

*Our requestes when we pray are not tied to the words & syllables,
but to those things which are conceiued within the compassse of the Lords prayer.*

49 We would not haue these things so taken as though we were so bound with this forme of prayer, that we may not change a worde or a syllable. For there are eech where read many prayers in the Scripture, farre differing from this in wordes, yet written by the same Spirit, and which are at this day profitable to be vsed of vs. Many are continually put into the mouthes of the faithfull by the same Spirit, which in likenes of wordes do not so much agree. This onely is our meaning in so teaching, that no man should seeke, looke for, or aske any other thing at all than that which is summarily comprehended in this prayer, and which though it most differ in wordes, yet differeth not in sense. Like as it is certaine that all the prayers which are found in the Scriptures, and which doe come out of godly harts, are applied to this, so verilie none can any where be found, which may match, much lesse passe, the perfectnes of this praier. Here is nothing left out, that might be thought vpon to the praises of God, nothing that ought to come into the minde of man for his owne profits: & the same so fully that all hope is woorthily taken away from all men to attempt to make anie better. In a sum, let vs remember that this is the doctrine of the wisdom of God, which hath taught what he willed, and willed what was needfull.

*The necessitie of prayer and of set times for that pur-

50 But although we haue aboue said, that we ought alway to breath vpward with mindes lifted vp to God, and pray without ceasing: yet forasmuch as such is our weakenes, as needeth to be vpholden with many helpes: such is our diuinesse, as needeth to be pricked forward with many spurs: it is good that enery one of vs appoint to himselfe priuately certaine houres which may not passe away without praier, and which may haue the whole affections of our minde thoroughly busied to that purpose: as, when we rise in the morning, before that we go to our daies worke, when we sit downe to meate, when we haue been fed by the blessing of God, when we take vs to rest. Onely let this not be a superstitious obseruing of houres, by which, as praying a taske to God, we may think our selues discharged for the other houres: but a training of our weakenes, whereby it may be exercised and from time to time stirred vp. Specially we ought carefully to look that so oft as either we our selues are in distresse, or we see other to be in distresse with any hardnes of aduersitie, we run straight way to him, not with secte but with harts: then, that we suffer not any prosperitie of our owne or other mens, to passe but that we testifie that we acknowledge it to bee his with praise and thankesgiuing. Finally, this is diligently to be obserued in all prayer, that we go not about to bind God to certaine circumstances, nor to appoint to him, what he shall do, at what time, in what place, and in what manner: as by this prayer we are taught to make to him no lawe, nor to appoint to him any condition, but to leaue to his will that those things which he will do, he may doe in what manner, at what time, and in what place it pleaseth him. Wherefore ere we make any praier for our selues, we first pray that his will be done: where we doe already submit our will to his: with which when it is restrained as with a bridle put vpon it, it may not presume to bring God into tute, but make him the iudge and gournour of all her desires.

*Conscience and
needfull.*

51 If we do with mindes framed to this obedience, suffer our selues to bee ruled with the lawes of Gods providence, we shall easily learne to continue in praier, and with longing desires patiently to waite for the Lord: being assured that although he appeere not, yet he is alway present with vs, and will when he seeth his time declare howe not deafe eares he gaue to the praier, which in the eyes of men seemed to be despised.

despised. And this shall be a most present comfort, that we faint not and fall downe by despaire, if at any time God doe not answer at our first requestes. Like as they are wont to doe, which while they are carried with their sudden heate, doe so call vpon God, that if he come not to them at their first brunts and bring them present helpe, they by and by imagine him to be angry and hatefully bent against them, and casting away all hope of obtaining doe cease to call vpon him. But rather deferring our hope with a well tempered cunneste of minde, let vs goe forward in that perseuerance which is so much commended to vs in Scriptures. For in the Psalmes we may oftentimes see how Dauid and other faithfull men, when they seeme in a manner wearied with praying, did beate the aire, because they threw away their words to God that heard them not, and yet they cease not from praying: because the worde of God hath not his full authoritie maintained, vnlesse the credit thereof be set aboue all successles of things. Moreouer let vs not tempt God and prouoke him against vs being wearied with our importunacie, which many vse to doe, which doe nothing but indent with God vpon a certaine condition, and binde him to the lawes of their couenanting, as though he were seruant to their desires: which if he doe not presently obey, they disdain, they chafe, they carpe against him, they murmur, they turmoile. Therefore to such oftentimes in his furor he being angry granteth that, which to other in his mercy he being fauorable denieth. An example hereof at the children of Israel, for whom it had bene better not to haue bin heard of the Lord, than with flesh to eate vp his wrath.

52 But if yet at length after long looking for it our sense do not perceiue what we haue preuailed with praying, and seeleth no fruit thereof: yet our faith shall assure vs of that, which cannot bee perceived by sense, namely that we haue obtained that which was expedient for vs, for as much as the Lord doth so oft and so certainly take vpon him that he will haue care of our grieues, after that they haue been once laide in his bosome. And so he will make vs to possesse abundancie in pouertie, comfort in affliction. For howsoeuer al other things do faile vs, yet God wil neuer faile vs, which suffereth the waiting and patience of them that be his to be disappointed. He alone shall suffice vs in steed of all things, for as much as he containeth in himselfe all good things, which he shall one day disclose vnto vs at the day of iudgement when he shall plainly shew forth his kingdome. Beside this although God graunt to vs, yet he doth not alway answer according to the expresse forme of our request, but holding vs after outward seeming in suspence, yet by a meane vnknown he sheweth that our prayers were not vaine. This is meant by the wordes of Iohn, If we knowe that hee heareth vs when we ask any thing of him, we know that we haue the petitions which we aske of him. This seemeth a weak superfluosnesse of words: but it is a singularly profitable declaration, namely that God euen when he doth not follow our desires, is yet gentle and fauourable to our prayers, that the hope which resteth vpon his worde may neuer disappoint vs. But with this patience the faithfull doe so farre neede to be sustained, that they should not long stand vnlesse they did stay vpon it. For the Lord doth by no light trials prouee them that be his, and not tenderly doth exercise them: but oftentimes driueth them into the greatest extremities, and when they are driuen thither he suffereth them long to sticke fast in the mire, ere he giue them any taste of his sweetnesse: and, as Hanna saith, he slaieth, and quickeneth: he leadeh downe to the hels, and bringeth backe againe. What could they here doe but be discouraged, and fall headlong into despaire: vnlesse when they are in distresse and desolate and already half dead, this thought did raise them vp, that God doth looke vpon them, and that there shall be at hande an ende of their euils? But howsoeuer they stande fast vpon the assurednesse of that hope, they cease not in the meane time to pray: because if there be not in praier a stedfastnesse of continuance, we nothing preuaile with praying.

Our prayers not fruitlesse though the fruit thereof be not alwayes sensible.

The xxj. Chapter.

Of the eternall Election, whereby God hath predestinate some to saluation, and other some to destruction.

The necessitie of knowing the truth in the question of predestination that God may be glorified, our mindes both humbled and confirmed, and the danger of curious reading therein beyond the bounds of scripture.

BVt now whereas the covenant of life is not equally preached to all men, and with them to whome it is preached it doth not either equally or continually finde like place: in this diuersitie the woonderous depth of the iudgement of God appeareth. For neither is it any doubt but that this diuersitie also serueth the free choise of Gods eternall election. If it be euident that it is wrought by the will of God that saluation is freely offered to some, and other some are debarred from comming to it: here by and by arise great and hard questions which cannot otherwise be discuffed, than if the godly mindes haue that certainly stablished which they ought to holde concerning election & Predcstination. This is (as many thinke) a comberfome question: because they thinke nothing to bee lesse reasonable than of the common multitude of men some be foreordained to saluation, other some to destruction. But how they wrongfully encumber themselues, shall afterwarde be euident by the framing of the matter together. Beside that in the very same darknesse which maketh men afraid, not onely the profitableness of this doctrine, but also the most sweete fruite it sheweth foorth it selfe. We shall neuer be cleerely perswaded as we ought to be, that our saluation floweth out of the fountaine of the free mercie of God, till his eternall election bee kitowen to vs, which by this comparison brightly setteth forth the grace of God, that he doth not without difference adopt al into the hope of saluation, but giueth to some that which he denieth to other. How much the ignorance of this principle diminisheth of the glorie of God, how much it withdraweth from the true humilitie, it is plaine to see. But Paul denieth that that which is so necessaric to bee known, is possible to bee known, vnlesse God leauing altogether the respect of workes doe choose them whome he hath determined with himselfe. In this time (saith hee) the remnants were sau'd according to the free election, If by grace, then not of workes: for as much as grace shoulde then not be grace. If of workes, then not of grace: for as much as worke should now not be worke. If we must be brought backe to the beginning of election, that it may be certaine that saluation commeth to vs from no other where than from the mere liberalitie of God: they which will haue this principle quenched, doe niggardly so much as in them lieth darken that which ought gloriously and with full mouth to haue beene published, and they plucke vp the very roote of humilitie. Paul, where the saluation of the remnant of the people is ascribed to free election, cleerely testifieth that onely then it is known that God doth by his mere good pleasure saue whome he will, and not render rewarde which cannot be done. They which shut the gates, that none may be bolde to come to the tasting of this doctrine, doe no lesse wrong to men than to God: because neither shall any other thing suffice to humble vs as we ought to be, neither shall wee otherwise feele from our hart how much we are bound to God. Neither yet is there any other to whome the vpholding staie of sounde affiance, as Christ himselfe teacheth, which to deliuer vs from all feare, and to make vs vnauquishable among so many dangers, ambushes, and deadly battels, promiseth that whatsoeuer he hath receiued of his father to keepe, shall be safe. Whereof we gather that they shall with continuall trembling be miserable, whosoeuer they bee that knowe not themselues to bee the proper possession of God: and therefore that they doe very ill provide both for themselves and for all the faithfull, which being blind at these three profits which we haue touched, would with the whole foundation of our saluation to be quite taken from among vs. Moreover, hereby the Church appeareth vnto vs, which otherwise (as Bernard rightly teacheth) were not possible to be found, nor to be known among creatures: because both waies in maruellous wise it lieth hidden within the bosome of blessed predestination, and within the Masse of miserable damnation. But ere I enter into the matter it selfe, I must before hand in two sorts speake to two sortes of men. That the intreating of predestination, whereas of it selfe it is somewhat cumbersome, is made verie doubtfull yea and dangerous, the curiousefne of men is the cause: which can by no stops bee restrained from wandering into forbidden compasses, & climbing vp on high: which, if it may, will leaue to God no secret which it wil not search and turne ouer. Into this boldnes and importunacie forasmuch as wee commonly see many to run headlong, and among those some that are otherwise not euill men: here is fit occasion to warne them what is in this behalfe the due measure of their dutie. First therefore let them remember, that when they enquire vpon Predestination, they pearce into the secret closets of the wisdom of God: whereinto if any man do carelesly and boldly break in, he shall both not attaine wherewith to satisfie his curiousefne, and hee shall enter into a maze whereof he shall finde no way to get out againe. For neither is it meete that man should freely search those things which God hath willed to be hidden in himselfe, and to turne ouer from verie eternitie the height of wisdom, which he willed to be honored and not be conceiued, that by it also he might be maruellous vnto vs. Those secrets of his will which he hath determined to be opened vnto vs, he hath disclosed in his word: and he hath determined, so farre as he foresaw to pertaine to vs and to be profitable for vs.

Rom. 11. 5.

5er. in Cant. 78.

2 We are come (saith Augustine) into the way of Faith, let vs stedfastly holde it. It bringeth into the Kings chamber, in which all the treasures of knowledge & wisdom are hidden. For, the Lord himselfe Christ did not enuie his excellent and most chosen disciples, when he saide, I haue many things to be saide to you, but yee cannot beare them now. We must walk, we must profit, we must encrease, that our harts may be able to conceiue those things which now we cannot conceiue. If the last day find vs profiting, there we shall learne that which here we could not. If this thought be of force with vs, that the word of the Lord is the onely way, that may leade vs to search whatsoeuer is lawfull to be learned of him, that it is the onely light, which may giue vs light to see whatsoeuer we ought to see of him: it shall easilie hold back & restraime vs from all rashnes. For we shall know that so soone as we be gone out of the bounds of the worlde we runne out of the way, and in darknes, in which race we must needs ofentimes straie, slippe, and stumble. First therefore let this bee before our eyes, that to couet any other knowledge of Predestination than that which is set foorth by the worde of God, is a point of no lesse madnesse than if a man haue a will to go by an vnpassable waie, or to see in darknesse. Neither let vs be ashamed, to be ignorant of somewhat in it wherein there is some learned ignorance. But rather let vs willingly abstaine from the searching of that knowledge, whereof the excessive coueting is both foolish and perillous, yea and deadly. But if the wantonnes of wit prouoke vs, it shall bee profitable alwaie to set this against it, whereby it may be beaten backe, that as too much of honie is not good, so the searching of glorie doth not turne vnto glorie to the curious. For there is good cause why wee shoulde bee frayed away from that boldnes, which can do nothing but throwe vs downe headlong into ruine.

3 There be other which when they haue a will to remedie this euill, doe command all mention of Predestination to be in a manner buried, at the least they teach men to flee from euery maner of questioning thereof as from a rocke. Although the moderation of these men be herein woorthily to be praised that they iudge that mysteries shoulde be tasted of with such sobrietie: yet because they descend too much beneath the meane: they little preuaile with the wit of man, which doth not lighthe sugar it selfe to be restrained. Therefore, that in this behalfe also wee may keepe a

Gods worde the onely safe waie to walke in, and the light to direct our walking in matters of so great hardnesse as this is.

Pro. 25. 27.

The doctrine of predestination not wisely to be buried in silence.

Cap. 21. Of the maner how to receiue

right ende; we must returne to the word of the Lord, in which we haue a sure rule of vnderstanding. For the Scripture is the schoole of the holy Ghost, in which as nothing is left out which is both necessarie and profitable to be knowne, so nothing is taught but that which is behoouefull to learne. Whatsoeuer therefore is vttered in the scripture concerning predestination, we must beware that we debar not the faithful from it, least we should seeme either enuiously to defraude them of the benefit of their God, or to blame and accuse the holy Ghost who hath published those things which it is in any wise profitable to be suppressed. Let vs (I say) giue leaue to a christian man; to open his mind and his eares to all the sayings of God which are directed to him, so that it be done with this temperance, that so soone as the Lord hath closed his holy mouth, he may also foreclose to himselfe all the way to inquire further. This shall be the best bond of sobriety, if not only in learning we may follow the Lord going before vs, but also when he maketh an end of teaching, we cease to will to learne. Neither is the danger which they feare of so great importance, that we ought therefore to tune away our minds from the oracles of God. Notable is the saying of Salmon, that the glorie of God is to conceale a word. But both godlines & common reason teacheth that this is not generally meant of euery thing, we must seeke a difference, least brutish ignorance should please vs vnder colour of modestie and sobriety. That difference is in few words plainly set out by Moses, To the Lord our God (saith he) belong his secrets: but to vs and to our children hee hath disclosed these things. For we see how he commendeth to the people the studie of the doctrine of the law, only by reason of the decree of God, because it pleased God to publish it: and how he exhorteth the people within those bounds, by this only reason, because it is not lawfull for mortall men to thrust the misteues into the secrets of God.

4. Profane men (I mean) do in the matter of Predestination suddenly catch hold of somewhat which they may scape, or caull, or barke, or scoffe at. But if their wardnes do fray vs away from it, the chiefe articles of the faith must be kept secret, of which there is almost none which they or such as they be do leaue vntouched with blasphemie. A forward wit will no lesse proudly outrage when he heareth that in the essence of God there are three persons, than if he heare that God foresawe what should become of man when he created him. Neither will they abstaine from laughing, when they shall vnderstand that there is little more than fise thousand yeers passed since the creation of the world: for they will aske why the power of God was so long idle and a sleepe. Finally there can be nothing brought forth, which they will not scoffe at. For the restraining of these saculeges, must wee hold our peace of the Godhead of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghost? or must we passe ouer in silence the creation of the world? Yea but the truth of God is both in this behalfe and euerie where mightier than that it need to feare the cuill speaking of the wicked: as Augustine strongly maintaineth in his woike of the good of Perseuerance. For we see that the falsie Apostles could not by defaming and slandering the true doctrine of Paul, make him to be ashamed of it. But whereas they say that this whole dissertation is perillous also for godly nundes, because it maketh against exhortations, because it shaketh faith, because it troubleth the hart it selfe: this is vaine. Augustine sticketh not to confesse that for these causes he was wont to be blamed, for that he did too freely preach Predestination: but, as he had in readines wherewithall, he largely confuteth them. But we, because many & diuers absurdities are thrust into this place, had rather to reueue euery one to be wiped away in place fit for it. Only this I desire generally to obtaine of them, that those things which the Lord hath laid vp in secret, we may not search: those things which he hath brought openly abroad, we may not neglect: least either on the one part we be condemned of vaine curiosity, or on the other part, of vnthankfulnes. For this also is verie well saide of Augustine, that we may safely follow the scripture, which as with a motherly pace goeth stoopingly, least it should forsake our weakenes. But who so are so ware and so fearefull that they would haue Predetermination to be buried, least it should trouble weake soules : with what colour, I beseech you, will they couer their arrogancie, when they indirectly accuse God of foolish vnadvisednes, as though he foresawe not the danger, which they thinke themselves to haue wisely met with? Whosoever therefore traudeleth to bring the doctrine of Predetermination into mistaking, he openly saith euill of God: as though somewhat had vnadvisedly slipped from him which is hurtfull to the Church.

5 Predetermination whereby God adopteth some into the hope of life, and iudgeth some to eternall death, no man that would be accepted godly dare simply denie: But they wrap it vp with many caullations, specially they which make foreknowledge the cause of it. We in deede doe say that they be both in God, but we say that the one is wrongfully made subiect to the other. When we giue foreknowledge to God, we meane that all things alway haue bene and perpetually doe remaine vnder his eyes, so that to his knowledge there is nothing to come or past, but all things are present, and so present that he doeth not imagine onely by conceiued formes (as those things are present to vs, whereof our mind holdeth fast the remembrance) but he truly beholdeth and seeth them as set before him. And this foreknowledge extendeth to the whole compass of the world and to all creatures. Predetermination we call the eternall decree of God, whereby he had it determined with himselfe what he willed to become of euery man. For all are not created to like estate: but to some eternall life, and to some eternall damnation is fore-appointed. Therefore as euery man is created to the one or other end, so we say that he is predetermine either to life or to death. But this Predetermination God hath not onely testified in euery seuerall person, but hath shewed an example thereof in the whole issue of Abraham, whereby might plainly appeare that it lyeth in his will what shall be the estate of euery nation. When the Highest deuided the nations, and scuered the children of Adam, his part was the people of Israel, the cord of his inheritanc. The separation is before the eyes of all men: in the person of Abraham as in a drie stocke one people is peculiarly chosen, all other being refused: but the cause appeareth not, sauing that Moses, to cut off all occasion of glorying fro posteritie, teacheth that they excell onely by the free loue of God. For he assigneth this to be the cause of their deliuerance, for that God loued the Fathers; and chose their seed after them. More plainly in another Chapter: He was pleased in you to chioice you, not because you passed other nations in number, but because he loued you. The same admoition is often repeated with him, Behold, to the Lord thy God belongeth the heauen, the earth, & whatsoever things are in it: and he hath pleased himselfe only in your Fathers, & hath loued them, and hath chosen you their seed. Again in another place sanctification is commanded them, because they are chosen to be a peculiar people. And again in another place, Loue is assigned to be the cause of protection. Which also the Faithfull doe declare with one voice, saying: He hath chosen for vs our inheritance, the glory of Israhel, whom he hath loued. For they doe all impute to free loue all the giftes wherewith they were garnished of God: not onely because they knew that they themselves had obtained them by no desertings, but also that euen the holy Patriarch was not endued with such vertue, that he could purchase to himselfe and his posteritie so great a prerogative of honor. And, the more strongly to tread downe all pride, he vbraided them that they haue deserved no such thing, forasmuch as they are a stubborne and hard-necked people. And oftentimes the Prophetes doe hatefully and as by way of reproch cast the Jewes in the teeth, with this election, because they had sowly departed from it. Whatsoeuer it be, now let them come fourth which will bind the election of God either to the worthines of men, or to the merites of workes. When they see one nation to be preferred before all other, and when they heare that God is as led with no respect to be more fauourably bent to a few and vnnoble, yea and froward and disobedient men: will they quarrell with him, because his will was to shew such an example of mercie? But they shall neither with their prating voice hinder his worke, nor with throwing stones of taunts into heauen shall hit or hurt his righteousnesse, but rather they fall backe vpon their owne heads. Morcouer the Israelites are called backe to this principle of the free couenant, when either thanks are to be giuen to God, or their hope to be raised vp against the time to come. He made vs, and not we our selues (saith the Prophet) his people and the sheepe of his pastures. The negatine is not superfluous, which is added to exclude vs, that they may know that of all the good things wherewith they excell, God is not onely the author, but fetched the cause thereof from himselfe, because there was nothing in them worthie of so great honour. Also he biddeth them to be contented with the meere good pleasure of God, in these words. The seede of Abraham are his seruants: the children of Iacob his elect. And after that he hath rehearsed the continuall benefits of God as fruits of the election, at length he concluded, that he dealt so liberally because he remembered his couenant. With which doctrine agreeth the song of the whole Church, Thy right hand and the light of thy countenance gaue the land to our Fathers, because thou wast pleased in them. But it is to be noted, that where mention is made of the lande, it is a visible signe of the secret seuering wherein the adoption is contained. To the same thankfulness David in another place exhorteth the people, saying, Blessed is the nation whose God the Lord is, the people which he hath chosen for an inheritance to himselfe. And Samuel encourageth them to good hope, saying, The Lord will not forsake you, for his owne great names sake, because they pleased him to create you for a people to himselfe. Likewise David when his faith is assailed, armeth himselfe to fight, saying, Blessed is he whom thou hast chosen, hee shall dwell in thy courts. But for as much as the election hidden in God was stablished as well by the first deliuerance as by the second, and other mean benefits: in Esaie the word of Electing is transferred to this, God shall haue mercie on Iacob; and he shall yet choose out of Israel: because he signifying the time to come, saith that the gathering together of the remnant of the people which hee seemed to haue forsaken, shall be a signe of the stable and stedfast election, which once seemed to haue bene fallen away. When also it is said in another place, I haue chosen thee and haue not cast thee away: he setteth out the continuall course of the notable liberality of his fatherly good will. And yet more plainly the Angell saith in Zacharie, God shall yet choose Ierusalem: as though in hardly chastning it, he had reiected it: or as though the exile were an interrupting of the election: which yet remaineth inuolable, although the signes thereof do not alway appeare.

6 There is to be added a second degree more narrowly restrained, or in which was seene a more ipecciall grace of God: when of the same kindred of Abraham God refused some, and other some by nourishing them in the church he shewed that he retained among his children. Ismael had at the beginning obtained egall degree with his brother Isaac, because the spirituall couenant had bene no lesse sealed in him by the signe of Circumcision. He is cut off, and then Esau: at the last an innumerable multitude and almost Israel. In Isaac was the seede called: the same calling endured in Iacob. A like example God shewed in reiecting Saul: which thing is also gloriously set forth in the Psalm. He hath put back the tribe of Ioseph, & the tribe of Ephraim he hath not chosen, but hee hath chosen the tribe of Iuda. Which the holy history diuers times repeareth, that the wonderful secret of the grace may the better appeare in this change. Ismael, Esau, and such others, (I graunt) fell from the adoption by their own fault and guiltines: because there was a condition adioyned, that they should faithfully keepe the couenant of God, which they falsly brake. But this was yet a singular benefit of God, that he vouchsafed to prefer them aboue the other Gentiles: as it is said in the Psalm, He hath not so done to other nations, nor hath opened his iudgements to them. But here I haue not without cause said that there be two degrees to be noted; noted: because now in the choosing of the whole nation God shewed that he is in his owne mere liberalitie bound to no lawes: but he is free, so that equall portion of grace is not to be required at his hand: the vnequalitie whereof sheweth that it is truly of free gift. Therefore Malachie amplifieth the vnrhankfulness of Israel, because they being not onely chosen out of all mankinde, but also seuered out of a holy house to be a peculiar people, doe vnfaithfully and wickedly despise God so benefici- all a Father. Was not Esau the brother of Jacob? (saith he) and yet Jacob I loued, but Esau I hated. For, God taketh it for confessed, that when either of them was borne of a holy Father, and successeur of the covenant, finally a branch of the holy roote: now the children of Jacob were more than commonly bond, which were taken into that dignitie. But when Esau the first begotten being refused, their Father which was by nature inferior: was made the heire, he proueth them doubly vnthankfull, and complaineth that they were not bolden with that double bond.

Psal. 44. 4.

Psal. 33. 12.

7 Although it be already sufficiently euident, that God doth by his secret coun- sell freely choose whom he will, reiecting other, yet his free election is hitherto but haife shewed, till we come to all particular persons, to whom God not onely offereth saluation, but so assigneth it, that the certaintie of the effect thereof is not in suspence or doubtfull. For, these are accounted in that onely seede, whereof Paul maketh mention. For although the adoption was left in the hand of Abraham, yet because many of his posteritie were cut off as rotten members: that the election may be effectually and truly stedfast, we must needs ascend to the head, in whom the heavenly Father hath bound together his elect one with another, and hath knit them to himselfe with a knot impossible to be loosed. So in the adoption of the kinred of Abraham, shined the liberall fauour of God, which he denied to other men: yet in the members of Christ, appeareth a much more excellent strength of grace, because they being grafted into their head doe neuer fall away from saluation. Therefore Paul doth fitly reason out of the place of Malachie which I euen now alleaged: that where God with making a covenant of eternall life calleth any people to himselfe, there is in part a special maner of election, that he doth not choose all effectually with common grace. Whereas it is said, I haue loued Jacob, this pertaineth to the whole issue of the Patriarch, which the Prophet there setteth in comparison against the posteritie of Esau. Yet this withstandeth not but that in the person of one man was set forth to vs an example of the election, which cannot slip away, but must come to the marke that it tendeth to. These Paul doth not vainely note to be called remnants: because experience teacheth that of a great multitude many slide and vanish away, so that oftentimes there remaineth but a small portion. But why the generall election of a people is not alway firme and stedfast, there is a reason offering it selfe in readines: because with whom God couenanteth he doth not by and by giue to them the spirite of regeneration, by the power whereof they may continue in the covenant to the ende: but the outward changing without the inward effectualnes of grace, which might be of force to hold them in, is a certaine meane thing betweene the forsaking of whole mankind, and the election of a small number of the godly. The whole people of Israel was called the inheriance of God, of whom yet there were many strangers. But because God had not for nothing made covenant with them that he would be their Father and Redeemer, he rather hath respect to his owne free fauour than to the vnfaithfull falling away of many: by whom also his truth was not abolished: because where he reserued any remnant, it appeared that his calling was without Repentance. For whereas God did from time to time choose vnto himselfe a Church rather out of the children of Abraham, than out of the prophane nations, he had regard to his covenant, which being broken of the whole multitude he restrained to a few, that it should not vterly fall away. Finally the common adoption of the seede of Abraham was a certaine visible image of a greater benefite, which God hath vouchsafed to graunt to fewe out of many. This is the reason why Paul so diligently purteth difference betweene the children of Abraham according to the flesh, and his spirituall children which were called after the example of Isaac. Not that it was a vaine and vnfuitfull thing simply to be the childe of Abraham (which might not bee said without dishonor of the covenent) but bicause the vnchangeable counsell of God, whereby he hath predestinate whom he would, is by it selfe effectually onely to this latter sorte vnto saluation. But I warne the readers that they bring not a foreconceiued iudgement on either side, till it appeare by the places of scripture brought forth what is to be thought. That therefore which the scripture cleerly sheweth, we say that God by eternall and vnchangeable counsell hath once appointed whom in time to come he would take to saluation, and on the other side whom hee would condemn to destruction. This counsell as touching the elect, we say to be grounded vpon his free mercie without any respect of the worthines of man, but whom hee appointeth to damnation, to them by his iust in deed and irreprehensible, but also incomprhenible iudgement, the entry of life is foreclosed. Now in the elect we set vocation, to be the testimonie of election: and then iustification to be another signe of the manifest shewing of it, till they come to glory wherein is the fulfilling of it. But as by vocation and election God maketh his elect: so by shutting out the reprobate either from the knowledge of his name or from the sanctification of his spirit, he doth as it were by these markes open what iudgement abideth for them. I will here passe ouer many tained inuentions, which foolish men haue forged to ouerthrow predestination. For they need no confutation, which so soone as they are brought forth, do largely bewray their owne fallcnesse. I will tary only vpon those, which either are in controuersie among the learned, or which may bring any hardnes to the simple, or which vngodlines with faire seeming shew pretendeth, to scoffe at the righteousnes of God.

The xxij. Chapter.

A confirmation of this doctrine by testimonies of the Scripture.

God was not troubled with the foresight of mans wickednes to predestinate, neither is to be grudged as for preferring some, and passing by others, whom particularly and freely he hath choosen.

AL these things which we haue set are not without controuersie among many, especially the free election of the faithfull: which yet cannot be weakened. For the common sort doe thinke that God, as he foreseeeth that euerie mans deserving shall be, so maketh difference betweene men: that therefore whom he foreknoweth that they shall be not vnworthy of his grace, them he adopteth into place of children: and whose natures hee espieth that they will bee bent to wickednesse and vngodlinesse, them he appointeth to the damnation of death. So by cloaking it with the veile of foreknowledge they do no onely darken election, but fame that it hath beginning from elsewhere. And this opinion receiued of the common sort is not the opinion of the common sort alone: for in all ages it hath had great maintainers. Which I do plainly confesse, to the entent that no man should trust that it shall much hurt our cause if their names be objected against vs. For, the truth of G O D herein is more certaine, than that it may be shaken: more cleare, than that it may bee darkened with the authoritie of men. But some other richer exercised in the scripture, nor worthis of any voice, doe raile at this doctrine with greater maliciousnesse, than that their forward pride ought to be suffered. Because God choosing some after his owne will, leauech other some, they picke a quarrell against him. But if the thing it selfe be knowne for true, what shall they preuaile with brawling against God? We teach nothing but that which is approved by experience, that it was alway at libertie for G O D, to bestow his grace to whom he will. I will not enquire whereby the posteritie of Abraham excelled other, but by that vouchsafing, whereof there is founde no cause elswhere than in G O D. Let them answere why why they be men rather then oxen or asses. When it was in the hand of God to make them dogs, he fashioned them after his owne image. Will they giue leaue to brute beasts to quarrell with God for their estate, as though the difference were vnrighteous? Truly it is no more righteous, that they should enioy the prerogatiue which they haue obtained by no deseruings, than for God diuersly to deale abroad his benefits according to the measure of his owne iudgement. If they skip ouer to persons, where the inequality is more hatefull to them, at the least at the example of Christ, they ought to be afraid to prate so boldly of so high a myserie. He is conceiued of the seed of Dauid, a mortall man: by what vertues will they say that hee deserued to be in the very wombe made the head of angels, the onely begotten sonne of God, the image & glory of the Father, the light, righteousness, & saluation of the world? This thing Augustine wisely noted, that in the very head of the church is a most cleer mirror of free election, least it should trouble vs in the members: and that he was not by rightously liuing made the sonne of God, but that he had so great honour freely giuen him, that he might afterward make other partakers of his gifts. Heere if any man aske why other were not the same that he was, or why all we are so faire distant from him, why all we be corrupt and he purenesse: such a man shall bewray not onely his madnesse, but therewithall also his shamelesse. But if they go forward to labour to take from God the free power to chooise and refuse, let them also take away that which is giuen to Christ. Now it is woorth the trauaile to consider what the scripture pronounceth of euery one. Paul verily, when he teacheth that wee were chosen in Christ, taketh away all respect of our owne worthines. For it is all one as if hee had said: because in the whole seed of Adam the heavenly father found nothing woorthy of his election, he turned his eyes vnto his Christ, to chooise as it were members out of his body them whom he would take into the fellowship of life. Let this reason then be of force among the faithfull, that we were therefore adopted in Christ into the heavenly inheritance, because in our selues we are not able to receive so great excellencie. Which also he touched in another place, when he exhorteth the Colossians to giuing of thanks, for this that they were by God made fit to be partakers of the estate of the holie. If election goe before this grace of God that wee be made fit to obtaine the glorie of the life to come: what shall God himselfe now finde in vs whereby he may be moued to elect vs? My meaning shall yet be more openly expressed by another saying of his. He hath chosen vs (saith he) ere the foundations of the worlde were laid, according to the good pleasure of his will, that we might be holy, and vnspotted, and vnreprochable in his sight: where hee setteth the good pleasure of God against all our deseruings whatsoeuer they be.

2 That the prooffe may be more strong, it is woorth the labour to note all the parts of that place, which being coupled together do leaue no doubt. Where hee nameth the elect, it is no doubt that he speaketh to the faithfull, as he also by and by afterward affirmeth. Wherefore they do with too soule a glorie abuse that name, which wrest it to the age wherein the Gospell was first published. Where hee saith that they were elect before the beginning of the world, he taketh away all respect of worthines. For what reason of difference is there betweene them which yet were not, and those which afterward should in Adam be egall? Now if they be elect in Christ, it followeth that not onely euery man is seuered without himselfe, but also one of them from another, forasmuch as we see that not all are the members of Christ. That which is added, that they were elect that they might be holy, plainly confuteth the error which denieth election from foreknowledge, forasmuch as Paul crieth out against it & saith that whatsoeuer vertue appeereth in men, it is the effect of election. Now if a higher cause be sought, Paul answereth that God hath so predestinate, yea and that according to the good pleasure of his will. In which wordes he ouerthroweth whatsoeuer means of their election men doe imagine in themselves. For hee also teacheth cheth that whatsoever things God giueth toward spirituall life, they flow out of this one fountaine, because God hath chosen whom he would, and ere they were borne he had seuerally laid vp for them the grace which he vouchsafed to giue them.

3 But wheresoeuer this pleasure of God reigneth, there no workes come to be considered. He doth not here in deede pursue the compaiison of contraries, but it is to be vnderstanded such as he himselfe declarereth. He hath called vs (saith he) with a holy calling, not according to our workes, but according to his purpose and the grace which is giuen of Christ before the times of the world. And we haue already shewed that all doubt is taken away in this which followeth, that we might be holy and vnspotted. For if thou say, because he foresaw that we should be holy, therefore he chose vs, thou shalt peruert the order of Paul. Thus therefore thou maist safely gather. If he chose vs that we might be holy: then he chose vs, not because he foretawe that we would be such. For these two things are contrarie the one to the other: that the godly haue it of election that they be holy, and that they come to it by meane of workes. Neither is their cauillation here any thing worth to which they commonly flee, that the Lord doth not render the grace of election to any workes going before, but yet grauneth it to workes to come. For when it is said that the faithfull were chosen, that they might be holy: therewithall is signified that the holinesse which was to come in them rooke beginning at election. And how shall this saying agree together, that those things which are deriued from election gaue cause to election? The same thing which he said he seemeth afterward to confirme more strongly, where he saith, According to the purpose of his will which he had purposed in himselfe. For, to say that God purposed in himselfe, is as much in effect as if it had bene said, that without himselfe he considered nothing whercof he had any regard in decreeing. Therefore he by and by addeth, that the whole summe of our election tendeth to this end, that we should be to the prayse of the grace of God. Truly the grace of God deserueth not to be praised alone in our election, vnlesse our election be free. But free it shall not be, if God in electing his, do consider what shall be the workes of euerie one. Therefore we find that that which Christ said to his disciples, hath place vniuersally among all the faithfull, Ye haue not chosen me, but I haue chosen you. Where he not onely excludeth deseruings past, but also signifieth that they had nothing in themselves why they should be chosen, if he had not preuented them with his mercie. Like as this saying of Paul is also to be vnderstoode: Who first gaue to him, and shall receiue recompence? For he meaneth to shew that the goodnesse of God so preuenteth men, that it findeth nothing in them neyther past nor to come, whereby he may be wonne to be fauourable to them.

4 Now to the Remanes, where he fetcheth this question further off, and followeth it more largely, he denieth that all they are Israelites, which are issued of Israel: because although by right of inheritance they were all blessed, yet the succession did not egally passe to them all. The beginning of this disputation proceeded of the pride and deceitfull glorying of the Iewish people. For when they claimed to themselves the name of the Church, they would haue the credit of the Gospell to hang vpon their will: as the Papists at this day would gladly with this fauned colour thrust themselves into the place of God. Paul, although he grant that the offspring of Abraham is holy by reason of the couenant, yet affirmeth that the most part of them are strangers in it: and that not only because they swarue out of kinde, so that of lawfull children they become bastards, but because the speciall election of God standeth aboue and reigneth in the highest top, which alone maketh the adoption thereof sure. If their owne godlinesse stablished some in the hope of saluation, and their owne falling away alone disherited other some: Paul verilie should both fondly and vnconuenientlie list vp the readers euen to the secret election. Now if the will of God (the cause whereof neither appeareth nor is to be sought, without himselfe) maketh the one sort differing from the other, so that not all the children of Israel be true Israelites, it is vainly fained that euery mans estate hath beginning in himselfe. Then he further followeth the matter vnder the example of Iacob and Esau. For when they both were the sonnes of Abraham, both together enclosed in one mothers wombe, it was a monsterlike change that the honour of first birth was remoued to Iacob, by which change Paul affirmeth that there was testified the election of the one, and the reprobation of the other. The originall and cause of it is enquired, which the teachers of foreknowledge will haue to be set out in the vertues, and vices of men. For this is an easy short way with them, that God shewed in the person of Iacob, that he chooseth the worthy of his grace: and in the person of Esau, he refuseth them whom he foreseeth to be vnworthy. Thus they say boldly. But what saith Paul? when they were not yet borne, and had not done any good or euill, that according to election the purpose of God might abide, not of workes, but of him that calleth, it is said: The elder shall serue the yonger: as it is written, Iacob I haue loued, but Esau I haue hated. If foreknowledge were of any force in this difference of the brethren, then verily mention were vsilie made of the time. Let vs graunt that Iacob was chosen, because he had worthines gotten by workes to come: to what purpose should Paul say that he was not yet borne? And this now should be vnaduisedlie added, that he had yet done no good: because this shal be a readie answere, that nothing is hidden from God, and that so the godlines of Iacob was present before him. If workes do win grace, they should then worthily haue had their price before that Iacob was borne as if he had bene growne to full age. But the Apostle goeth forward in vndoing this knot, and teacheth that the adoption of Iacob was not made of workes, but of the calling of God. In workes he enterlaceth not the time to come or time past: and then he directly setteth them against the calling of God, meaning by stablishing of the one expressly to ouerthrow the other: as if he had said that it is to be considered what hath pleased God, not what men haue brought of themselves. Last of all it is certaine that by the words of election and Purpose, all causes whatsoever men are wont to faine elsewhere than in the secret counsell of God, are quite remoued from this matter.

Rom. 9.11.

5 What colour will they bring to darken these things, who in election assigne some place to workes either past or to come? For this is vtterlie to mocke out that which the Apostle affirmeth, that the difference of the brethren hangeth not vpon any consideration of workes, but vpon the meere calling of God, because it was put betweene them when they were not yet borne. Neither had he bene ignorant of this their sutletie, if it had had any soundnes in it: but because he very well knew, that God can foresee no goodnes in man, but that which he hath first determined by the benefit of his election to giue him: he sleeth not to that vnorderlie order, to set good workes before the cause of themselves. Thus haue we by the words of the Apostle, that the saluation of the faithfull is founded vpon the will of the onely election of God: and that the same fauour is not gotten by workes, but commeth of free calling. We haue also as it were an image of that thing set before vs. Esau and Iacob are brethren, issuing both of the same parents, enclosed yet both in one wombe, not yet brought out into the world. In them all things are egall, yet of them the iudgement of God is diuers. For he taketh the one and forsaketh the other. There was nothing but the onelic first birth, by right whereof the one excelled the other. But this also being passed over, that thing is giuen to the yonger which is denied in the elder. Yea, and in other also God seemeth alway as of set purpose to haue despised first birth, to cut off from the flesh all matter of glorying, Refusing Ismael, he cast his minde to Isaac. Plucking backe Manasse, he more honoured Ephraim.

The doctrine is so cleare and the example so plain which S. Paul's produceth, that there is no place as all lests so causis

6 If any man interrupt me with saying, that we must not by these inferiour and small benefites determine of the summe of the life to come, that he which hath bin aduanced to the honor of the first birth, should therefore be reckoncd to be adopted into the inheritance of heaven: (for there be some which spare not Paul himselfe, as though in alleging these testimonies he had wrested the scripture to a strange sense:) I answered as I haue done here before, that the Apostle neither slipped by vnauisednesse, nor wilfully abused the testimonies of the Scripture. But he sawe (which they cannot abide to consider) that God minded by an earthly signe to declare the spirituall election of Jacob, which otherwise was hidden in his inaccessible throne. For vnlesse we referre the first birth graunted to him vnto the world to come, it should be a vaine and fond forme of blessing whereby he obtained nothing but manifold miseries, discomforts, griefeful banishment, and many bitternesse of sorow and cares. Therefore when Paul saw without doubting, that God by outward blessing testified the blessing which he had in his kingdome prepared spirituall and neuer decaying for his seruant: he doubted not for prooofe of this spirituall blessing, to fetch an argument from that outward blessing. This also we must remember that to the lande of Canaan was adioyned the pledge of the heauenly dwelling: so that it ought not at all to be doubted that Jacob was grafted with the Angels into the bodie of Christ, that he might be partaker of the same life. Jacob therefore is chosen, when Esau is reiected: and by the predestination of God is made different from him from whome he differed not in any deseruings. If you aske a cause, the Apostle rendreth this, because it is said to Moses, I will haue mercie vpon whom I wil haue mercie, and I will vouchsafe to graunt mercie to whom soeuer I will vouchsafe to graunt mercie. And what I beseech you meaneth this? Verily, the Lord himselfe most plainly pronounceth that men haue in themselues no cause why he should do good to them, but he fetcheth the cause from his owne mercie onely: and therefore that the saluation of his is his owne worke. When God setteth thy saluation in himselfe alone, why wilt thou descend to thy selfe? When he appointeth to thee his mercie alone, why wilt thou run to thine owne deseruings? When he holdeth thy thought wholly in his mercifulnesse alone, why wilt thou turne part to the beholding of thine owne works? Therefore we must needs come to that lesse people, which Paul in another place said to haue been foreknowen to God: not in such sort as these men imagin, to foreknow out of an idle watchtoure the things that he worketh not: but in such sense as it is oft read. For truly when Peter saith in Luke, that Christ was by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God appointed to death: he doth not bring God as a looker on but the author of our saluation. So the same Peter also, where he saith that the faithfull to whom he wrote were chosen according to the foreknowledge of God, properly expresth that secret predestination wherby God hath marked for his children whom he would. And the word Purpose, which he ioyneth for a diuers word, expressing all one thing, for as much as it doth euery where signifie a stedfast determination as they commonly call it, vndoubtedly teacheth that God when he is author of our saluation goeth not out of himselfe. In which sense he saith in the same Chapter that Christ was the lamb foreknowen before the creation of the world. For what is more fond or trifling, than to say that God from on high did stand looking whence saluation should come to mankind? Therefore in Paul the foreknowen people is as much as a small portion mingled with the multitude which falsly pretendeth the name of God. In another place also Paul to beat down their boasting which being but couered with a visor, do take vpon themselues the chiefe preeminence among the godly before the world, saith that God knoweth who be his. Finally by that saying Paul pointeth vnto vs two sortes of people: the one, of the whole kindred of Abraham: the other, seuerally chosen out of it, and which being laid vp vnder the eies of God, is hidden from the sight of men. And it is no doubt that he tooke this out of Moses, which affirmeth that God will be mercifull to whom he will (although he there spake of the elect people, whose estate in outward seeming was equal) as if he should haue said, that in the common adoptiō is included with him a speciall grace toward som, as it were a more holy treasure:

Their election whome S. Paul's speaketh of, was not onely to an earthly inheritance but an heauenly.

Rom. 9. 15.

Rom. 11. 2.

Act. 2. 23.

1. Pet. 1. 2.

3. Tim. 2. 19.

treasure: and that the common covenant withstandeth not but that the same small number may be exempt in degree: and he willing to make himselfe the free disposer and ruler of this thing, precisely demeth that he will be mercifull to one rather than to another, for any other reason, but for that it so pleaseth him: because when mercy cometh to him that seeketh it, though he in deede suffer not a denial, yet he either preuenteth or partly getteth to himselfe the fauour whereof God clameth to himselfe the prayse.

7 Now let the souereigne Iudge and master pronounce of the whole matter. When he say so great hardnes in his hearers, that he did in a maner wast his words without fruit among the multitude: to remedy this offence, he cryeth out, Whatsoeuer my Father giueth me, it shall come to me. For this is the will of my Father, that whatsoeuer my Father hath giuen me, I shall not loose any thing of it. Note that the beginning is taken at the Fathers gift, that we may be deliuered into the faithfull keeping and defence of Christ. Here some man peraduenture will turne a circle about, and will take exception, saying that they only are accounted in the proper possession of the Father, whose yeelding hath bene voluntary by faith. But Christ standeth onely vpon that point, that although the fallings away of great multitudes do shake the whole world, yet the counsell of God shall be steadfast and stand faster than the heauens themselves, that his election may neuer faile. They are said to haue bene the elect of the Father, before that he gaue to them his only begotten Sonne. They aske whether it were by nature: yea rather, them which were strangers he made his owne by drawing them to him. There is a greater cleerenesse in the words of Christ than can by lusing be couered with any darkenesse. No man (saith he) can come to me, vnlesse my Father drawe him. But who so hath heard and learned of my Father, he cometh to me. If all generally without difference should bow their knee before Christ, then the election were common: but now in the townesse of the belcuers appeareth a manifest diuersitie. Therefore after that Christ had affirmed that the disciples which were giuen him, were the peculiar possession of God the Father, within a litle after he added, I pray not for the world, but for those whom thou hast giuen me, because they are thine. Whereby is proued that the whole world belongeth not to the Creator of it, sauing that grace deliuereth a few from the wrath of God, and from eternall death, which otherwise should haue perished: but the world it selfe is left in his owne destruction to which it was appointed. In the meane time although Christ put himselfe meane betweene, yet he clameth to himselfe the power of choosing in common with the Father. I speake not (saith he) of all: I know whom I haue chosen. If any man aske from whence he hath chosen them, he answereth in an other place, Out of the world, which he excludeth out of his prayers whē he commendeth his disciples to his Father. This is to be holden, that when he affirmeth that he knoweth whom he hath chosen, there is signified some speciall sort in the generall kinde of men: then, that the same speciall sort is made to differ not by the qualitie of their owne vertues, but by the heauenly decree. Whereupon followeth that many excell by their owne force or diligence, when Christ maketh himselfe the author of election. For when in another place he reckoneth Judas among the elect, whereas he was a deull, this is referred only to the office of Apostleship which although it be a cleere mirrour of the fauour of God (as Paul so orientunes acknowledged in his owne person.) yet it contemeth not in it selfe the hope of eternall saluation. Judas therefore, when he did vnfaithfully beare the office of an Apostle, might be worse than the deull: but of those whome Christ hath once graffed into his bodie, he will suffer none to perish: because in preterung their saluation he will performe that which he hath promised, that is, he will stretch forth the power of God which is greater then all. For whereas he sayth in an other place, Father, of those whom thou hast giuen mee, I haue lost none but the sonne of perdition: although it be an abusing

Epi. ad Sixt. 106.

8 But Ambrose, Origene, and Hierome thought that GOD distributeth his grace among men, as he foreseeth that euery man will vse it well: Yea and Augustine was once in the same opinion. But when he had better profited in knowledge of the Scripture, he not onely reuoked it as euidently false, but also strongly confuted it: yea and after his reuoking of it, in reproofing the Pelagians for that they continued in the same error, saith: who cannot maruell that the Apostle knew not this most futtle sense? For when he had set out a thing to be wondrous at of these brethren, while they were not yet botne, and afterward objected a question against himselfe, saying: what then? Is there vniuersall with God? Here was fit place for him to answer, that God foresaw the merites of them both: yet he saith not this, but fieth to the iudgements and mercy of God. And in another place, when he had taken away all merites before election, Here (saith he) is confuted their vaine reasoning which defend the foreknowledge of God against the grace of God, and therefore say that we are chosen before the making of the world because God foreknew that we would be good, not that he himselfe would make vs good. He saith not this, which saith, Ye haue not chosen me, but I haue chosen you. For if he had therefore chosen vs, because he foreknew that we would be good: he should therewithall also haue foreknown that we would choose him: & so forth as followeth to that effect. Let the testimonie of Augustine be of force among them that willingly rest in the authoritie of the Fathers. Howbeit Augustine suffreth not himselfe to be seuered from the rest: but by cleere testimonies sheweth that this disageement is false with the malice wherof the Pelagians burdened him. For in the xix. Chapter of his booke of the predestination of Saints, he alleageth out of Ambrose, Christ calleth whom he hath mercy on. Againe, if he had willed, of the vndeuous he might haue made deuout. But God calleth whom he vouchsafeth, and whom he will he maketh religious. If I listed to knit together a whole volume out of Augustine, I could readily shew to the readers that I neede no other words but his: But I will not load them with tediousnes. But go to, let vs imagine that they speake not at all: but let vs giue heede to the matter it selfe. A hard question was moued, whether God did righteously in this that he vouchsafed to grant his grace but to some: Of which question Paul might haue vncombred himselfe with one word if he had alleaged the respect of workes. Why therefore doth he it not, but rather continueth on a discourse which abideth in the same hardnesse? Why, but because he ought not? For the Holy Ghost which spake by his mouth, had not the disease of forgetfulness. Therefore without any circumstances he answereth, that God therefore fauoureth his elect, because he will: therefore hath mercy, because he will. For this Oracle of God, I will haue mercie vpon whom I will haue mercie, and I will shew mercie to whom I will shew mercie, is as much in effect as if it had bene said, that God is moued to mercie by no other reason but because he will haue mercie. Therefore this saying of Augustine remaineth true, that the grace of God doth not find men fit to be chosen, but maketh them.

9 Neither doe we any thing passe vpon the futtletie of Thomas, that the foreknowing of desertings, is not in deede the cause of Predestination on the behalfe of the act of him that doth predestinate, but on our behalfe it may after a certaine maner be so called, that is, according to the particular weying of Predestination: as when it is said that God predestineth glory to man by desertings, because he hath decreed to giue to him grace by which he may deserue glory. For sith the Lord will in election haue vs to looke vnto nothing but his meere goodnesse, if any man shall couer here to see any more, it shall be a wrongfull greedinesse. If we lusted to strue in suttlerie, we want not wherewith to beate backe this silly suttletie of Thomas. He affirmeth that to the elect glorie is after a certaine manner predestinate by deseruings, because the Lord doth after a certaine manner predestinate to them the grace, by which they may deserue glorie. What if I answere on the contrarie side and say that predestination vnto grace, serueth election vnto life, and is as it were a waiting maide after it? that grace is predestinate to them, to whom the possession of glorie hath bene long agoe appointed: because it pleaseth the Lorde to bring his children from election into iustification? For thereupon it shall follow that the predestination of glorie was rather the cause of the predestination of grace, than contrariwise. But away with these struings as things superfluous for such as shall thinke that there is wisdome ynough for them in the word of God. For this was in olde time truly written of an Ecclesiasticall writer, that they which assigne the election of God to merits are more wise than they ought to be.

Ambrose vocat gent. lib. 1. cap. 1.

10 Some doe obiect that God should be contrarie to himselfe if he should vniuersally call all men to him, and receiue but a few elect. So by their opinion the vniuersalnesse of the promise taketh away the difference of speciall grace. And thus certaine sober men speake, not so much to oppresse the truth, as to debaire crabbed questions, and to bridle the curiositie of many. Their will is praise worthe, but their counsell is not to be allowed: because dallying by shiftes is neuer excusable. But their obiecting of it which doe more railingly inueigh against it, is verily too sonde a caullation, or too shamefull an error. How the Scripture maketh these two to agree together, that by our ward preaching all men are called to repentance and faith, and yet not to all men is giuen the Spirit of repentance and faith, I haue in another place already declared, and by and by somwhat of it must be repeated againe. Now that which they require I demie to them, sith it is two waies false. For, he that threateneth that while it raineth vpon one citie, there shall be drought vpon another: Hee that pronounceth that there shall in another place be famine of doctrine, bindeth not himselfe with a certaine lawe to call all men egallie. And he which forbiddeth Paul to speake in Asia, and turning him from Bithinia draweth him into Macedonia, the weth that it is in his owne power to distribute this treasure to whosoever it shall please him. Yet more plainly he sheweth by Isay, how he peculiarly directeth to the elect the promises of saluation: for he saith of them only, and not of all mankind indifferently, that they shall be his Disciples. Whereby it is certaine that the doctrine of saluation is wrongfully set open in common to all men to profite effectually, which is saide to be feuerally laide vp onely for the children of the Church. Let this suffice at this present, that although the voice of the Gospell speake generally to all, yet the gift of faith is rare.

There is no repugnancie betweene Gods calling of all and calling effectually he chosen onely.

Amos. 4. 7. & 8. 11. Act. 16. 6.

Isaie assigneth the cause, for that the arme of the Lorde is not open to all men. If he had saide that the Gospell is maliciously and frowardly despised, because many do stubbornly refuse to heare: peraduenture this colour touching vniuersall calling should preuaile. Neither is it the purpose of the Prophet to diminish the faule of men, when hee teacheth that the fountaine of blindness is, that God withholdeth not to open his arme to them: onely hee giueth warning, that because faith is a singular gift, the cares are beaten in vaine with outward doctrine. But I would faine knowe of these doctours, whether onely preaching, or faith, make the children of God. Certainly when it is saide in the first Chapter of Iohn, Whosoever beleue in the onely begotten Sonne of God, are the same also made the children of God, there is not in that place a confused heapeumbled vp together: but a speciall order is giuen to the faithfull, which are borne not of bloud, not of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God. But (saie they) there is a mutuall consent of faith with the worde, namely wheretoever is faith. But it is no newe thing that seed fall among thornes or in stonie places: not onely because the greater part appeereth indeed obstinate against God, but also because not all men haue eyes & ears. How then shall it agree that God calleth to him them whom hee knoweth will not come? Let Augustine answer for me. Wilt thou dispute with me? Maruaile with me, and crye out, O depth, Let vs both agree in feare, least we perish in error. Moreouer if election (as Paul witnesseth) be the mother of faith, I turne backe the argument vpon their own head, that faith is therefore not general, because election is special. For by the orderly hanging together of causes and effectes, it is easily gathered that where Paul saith, that we are full of all spirituall blessing, as God had chosen vs before the creation of the world: therefore these riches are not common to al, because God hath chosen onely whom he woulde. This is the reason why in another place hee commendeth the faith of the elect, least it shoulde be thought that any man doth by his owne motion get faith to himselfe: but that this glorie may remaine with God, that they are freely enlightened of him, whom hee had chosen before. For Bernard saith rightly, Friends do feuerally heare, to whom he also saith, Feare not thou smal flocke: for to you it is giuen to know the myserie of the kingdome of heauen. Who be these? euen they whom he hath foreknowen and predestinate to be fashioned like to the image of his Sonne. A great and secret counsell is made knowen. The Lorde knewe who be his: but that which was knowen to God is made manifest to men: neither doth he vouchsafe to make any other partakers of so great a myserie, but those selfe same men whom he hath foreknowen and predestinate to bee his. A litle after hee concludeth. The mercy of God is from eternitie euen to eternitie vpon them that feare him: from eternitie, by reason of predestination: to eternitie, by reason of blessed making: the one without beginning, the other without ending. But what neede I to cite Bernard for witness, when we heare of the masters owne mouth, that none do see but they which are of God? By which words he signifieth, that all they which are not begotten againe of God, do dazell at the brightnes of his countenance. And to election faith indeed is fitly ioyned, so that it keepe the second degree. Which order the words of Christ do cleerely expresse in another place, This is the will of my Father, that I loose not that which he hath giuen. For this is his will, that whosoever beleueth in the Sonne, shall not perish. If he would haue all saued, he would appoint ouer them his Sonne to be their keeper, and would graffe them all into his body with the holy bond of faith. Now it is certaine that faith is a singular pledge of his fatherly loue, laid vp for his children whom he hath adopted. Therefore Christ in another place saith that the sheepe followe the shepheard, because they know his voice: but they follow not a stranger, because they know not the voice of strangers. Whence commeth this difference, but because their eares are boared by God? For no man maketh himselfe a sheepe: but hee is made one by the heauenly grace. For which cause also the Lorde teacheth that our sisetie shall alway be certaine and free from danger, because it is kept by the inuincible power of God. Wherefore he concludeth that the vnbeleeuers are not of his sheepe: namely because they are not of the number of them, whom God hath promised by Esay that they shall be his disciples. Now because in the testimonies which I haue alleaged is exprested persequerance, they do therewithall testifie the vnmouuable steadfastnes of election.

Rom. 9. 13.
The ground of reprobation the will

non mens deseruans

II Now let vs speake of the reprobate, whom the apostle ioyneth there together. For as Iacob, hauing yet with good works defiled nothing, is taken into grace: so Esau, being yet defiled with no wicked doing, is iudged. If we turne our eyes to works, we do wrong to the Apostle, as though he sawe not the same thing which we cleerely see. It is proued that he sawe it not, forasmuch as he expressly enforce eth this point, that when they had not yet done any good or euil, the one was chosen, and the other refused, to prouee that the foundation of the predestination of God is not in works. Again when he moued the obiection, whether God be vnrighteous, hee alleageth not that which had been the most certaine and plaine defence of his righteousnesse, namely that God reduced to Esau according to his euilnesse: but he was content with another solution, that the reprobate are stirred vp to this ende, that the glorie of God may be set fourth by them. Last of all he adioyneth a concluding sentence, that God hath mercie vpon whom he will, and hardeneth whom he will. See you not how he imputeth both to the onely will of God? Therefore if we cannot declare a reason why he vouchsafeth to grant mercie to them that be his, but because it so pleaseth him: neither also shall we haue any other cause in reiecting of other, than his owne will. For when it is said that God hardeneth, or withholdeth mercie to whom he will, men are thereby warned to seeke no cause elsewhere than in his will.

The xxiiij. Chapter.

A Confutation of the slanders wherewith this doctrine hath alway bene wrongfully burdened.

BV when the wit of man heareth these things, the frowardnesse thereof cannot be restrained, but that by and by as at the bloudie blast of a trumpet sounding to battell, it diuersly and excessively turmoileth. And many in deede, as though they would driue away the malice from God, doe so grant election, that they denie that any man is reprobate: but they doe too ignorantly and childishly: for as much as election it selfe could not stande vnlesse it were set contrarie to reprobation: God is said to seuer them whom he adopteth vnto saluation: it should be more than foolishly said that other do either by chance or by their owne endeuor obtaine that which onely election giueth to a few. Therefore whom God passeth ouer, he reiecteth: and for none other cause, but for that he will exclude them from the inheritance which he doth predestinate to his children. Neither is the waiwardnesse of man tolerable, if it suffer not it selfe to be bridled with the word of God, which the incomprehensible counsell of God is intreated of, which the Angels themselves doe worship. But we haue already heard, that hardening is no lesse in the hande and will of God than mercie. Neither doth Paul (as these men doe that I haue spoken of) busily labour to excuse God with a lying defence: but onely he teacheth that it is not lawfull for the thing formed to quarrell with him that formed it. New who so do not admit that any are reiecte of God, how will they vncumber themselves from that saying of Christ, Every tree which my father hath not planted, shall be plucked vp by the roote? They plainly heare that all they are adiudged and auowed to destruction, whom the heavenly Father hath not vouchsafed to plant as holy trees in his ground. If they denie this to be a signe of reprobation, then is there nothing so leere that it may be prooued to them. But if they cease not to wrangle, let the sobriety of faith be contented with this admonition of Paul, that there is no cause to quarrell with God, if he willing on the one side to shew his wrath and to make his power knowen do with dum sufferance, and lenitie beare with the vessels of wrath prepared to destruction: and on the other side he make knowen the riches of his glorie toward the vessels of mercie which he hath prepared to glorie. Let the Readers marke, how Paul to cut off occasion from whisperings and backbirings, giueth the chiefe rule to the wrath and power of God: because it is vniust that those deepe iudgements which swallow vp all our senses, should be made subiect to our determination. Our aduersaries answer is very misling, that God doth not vtruly reiect them whom he suffereth in lenitie, but abideth with a mind hanging in suspense toward them, if peraduenture they may repent. As though Paul giueth to God a patience, to looke for their turning, whom he saith to be made to destruction. For Augustine saith rightly where he expoundeth this place, where power is ioyned to sufferance, God doth not suffer, but gouerne with his power. They further say also that it is not for nothing saide that the vessels of wrath are prepared to destruction: but, that God hath prepared the vessels of mercie: because by this meane he ascribeth and challengeth the praise of saluation to God, but the blame of destruction he casteth vpon them which by their owne will doe bring it vpon themselves. But although I graunt to them that Paul by the diuers manner of speaking did soften the roughness of the first part of the sentence, yet is it not meete to assigne the preparing vnto destruction to any other thing than to the secret counsell of God: which also is affirmed a litle before in the rest of the text. That God stirred vp Pharao: Then that he hardeneth whom he will. Whereupon followeth that the hidden counsell of God is the cause of hardening. This at the least I get which Augustine saith, that when God of woollues maketh the cepe, hee doth with a mightier grace reforme them, that their hardness may be tamed: and therefore God for this cause doth not conuert the obstinate, because he doth not shew forth in them the mightier grace, which he wanteth not if he would shew it forth.

Lib. 1. de predest. an. c. 2.

There is no stri-uing against God
in his cause.

2 These sayings in deede should be sufficient for the godly and sober, and them which remember themselves to be men. But for as much as these venomous dogs doe cast vp not onely one sort of venome against God, we will as the matter shall serue, answer to euery one particularly. Foolish men doe diuers wies quarrell with God, as though they had him subiect to their accusations. First therefore they aske, by what right the Lord is angrie with his creatures, of whom he hath not been first prouoked by any offence: for to condemne to destruction whom he will, agreeth rather with the wilfulness of a tyrant, than the lawfull sentence of a iudge. Therefore they say that there is cause why men should charge God, if by his bare wil, without their owne deseruing, they be predestinate to eternall death. If such thoughts doe at any time come into the minde of the godly, to breake their violent assaults they shall be sufficiently armed with this, although they had no more, if they consider how great wickednesse it is, euen so much as to inquire of the causes of the will of God: sith of all things that are, it is the cause, and worthily so ought to be. For if it haue any cause, then somewhat must go before it, whereto it must be as it were bound: which it is vnlawfull once to imagine. For, the will of God is so the highest rule of righteousness, that whatsoever he willeth, euen for this that he willeth it, it ought to be taken for righteous. When therefore it is asked, why the Lord did it: it is to be answered, because he willed it, But if thou go further in asking why he willed it, thou askest some greater & higher thing than the will of God: which cannot be found. Let therefore the rashnesse of man restrain it selfe, and not seeke that which is not, least peraduenture it may not finde that which is. With this bridle (I say) he shall be well withholden whosoever he be that will dispute of the secrets of God with reuerence. As for the boldnesse of the wicked, which dread not openly to speake cuill of God: against it the Lord with his owne righteousness, without any our defence shall sufficiently defend himselfe, when he shall take all shifting from their consciences, and hold them fast conuincd, & condemne them. Neither doe we yet thrust in the faded deuise of absolute power, which as it is prophane, so woorthily ought to be abhorred of vs. We faine not God lawlesse, who is a law to himselfe: because (as Plato saith) men stand in neede of lawes, who are troubled with vnlawfull lustes: but the will of God is not onely pure from all fault, but also is the highest rule of perfection, yea and the lawe of all lawes. But we denie that he is subiect to yeeld account. We denie also that we are meete iudges, which would pronounce of this cause after our owne sense. Wherefore if we attempt further than we lawfully may, let that threatning of the Psalme bring vs in feare, that God shall ouercome so oft as he is iudged of any mortall man.

Psal. 51. 6.
The truth hath sufficient to stop their mouths, who aske why
God should fore-appoint some vnto death, when they not being could not deserue the death whereunto they were appointed.

3 So can God in keeping silence, put his enemies to silence, But, that we may not suffer them freely to scorne his holy name, he deliuereth to vs out of his word weapons against them. Wherefore if any man assaile vs with such words: why God hath from the beginning predestinate some to death, which when they were not, could not yet deserue the iudgement of death: wee in steede of answere may againe on our side aske of them, what they thinke that God oweth to man, if hee will iudge him by his owne nature. In such sort as we be all corrupted with sin, we cannot but be hateful to God: and that not by tyrannous crueltie, but by most vpriight reason of iustice. If all they whom the Lord doth predestinate to death, are by the estate of nature subiect to the iudgement of death: of what vniustice against themselves, I beseech you, may they complaine? Let all the sonnes of Adam come: Let them strue and dispute with their creator, for that by his eternall prouidence they were before their generation condemned to euerlasting miserie. What shall they be able once to mutter against this defence, when God on the other side shall call them to reknowldging of themselves? If they be all taken out of a corrupt masse, it is no maruaile if they be subiect to damnation. Let them not therefore accuse God of vniustice, if by his eternall iudgement they be appointed to death, to which they themselves do feele whether they will or no, that they are willingly led of their owne nature. Whereby appeereth how wrongfull is the desire of their murmuring, because they doe of set purpose hide the cause of damnation which they are compelled to acknowledge in themselves, that the laying of the blame vpon God may acquite them. But though I doe a hundred times confesse, as it is most true that God is the author of it, yet they do not by and by wipe away the guiltines which being engrauen in their consciences from time with oft recourse, presenteth it selfe to their eyes.

4 Again they except and say: were they not before predestinate by the ordinance of God to the same corruption which is now alleaged for the cause of damnation? When therefore they perish in their corruption, they do nothing but suffer the punishment of that miserie into which by his predestination Adam fell and drew his posteritie headlong with him. Is not he therefore vniust, which doth so cruelly mock his creatures? I grant indeed that all the children of Adam fell by the will of God into that miserie of state wherein they be now bound: and this is it that I saide at the beginning, that at length we must alway returne to the determination of the will of God, the cause whereof is hidden in himselfe. But it followeth not by and by that God is subiect to this slander. For we will with Paul answer them in this manner, O man, what art thou that contendest with God? doth the thing formed say to him that formed it, Why hast thou formed me so? Hath not the potter power to make of the same lump one vessel to honour, and another to dishonour? They will saie that the righteousnesse of God is so not truly defended, but that we seeke a shift, such as they are wont to haue that want a iust excuse. For what else seemeth here to be said, than that God hath a power which cannot be hindred from doing any thing whatsoever it be as he will himselfe? But it is fare otherwise. For, what stronger reason can be brought than when we are commanded to thinke what a one God is? For how should he commit any vniustice, which is iudge of the world? If it properly pertaine to the nature of God to doe iudgement, then he naturally loueth righteousnesse, and abhorreth vniustice. Wherefore the Apostle did not, as though hee were overtaken, looke about for holes to hide him: but shewed that the reason of the righteousnesse of God is higher than that either it is to bee measured by the measure of man, or may be comprehended by the slender capacite of the wit of man. The Apostle indeed confesseth that there is such depth in the iudgements of God, wherewith the mindes of men should be swallowed, if they endeouored to pearce into it. But he teacheth also how haunous wrong it is, to binde the workes of God to such a law, that so soone as we vnderstand not the reason of them, we may be bolde to disallow them. It is a knowen saying of Salomon (which yet few do rightly vnderstande) The God not vniust though men be condemned for that corruption whereunto they were foreappointed.

5 Go to: let there now be present some Mniichee, or Celstine, a slanderer of the prouidence of God: I say with Paul that there ought no reason to bee rendered thereof: because with the greatnes of it, it farre surmounteth our vnderstanding. What manlike? or what absurditie is it? Would he haue the power of God so limited, that it might be able to worke no more, than his mind is able to conceiue? I say with Augustine, that they are created of the Lord, whom he without doubting foreknew that they should go into destruction: and that it was so done because he so willed, but why he willed, it is not our part to ask a reason of it, who cannot comprehend it: neither is it meet that the will of God should come down into controuersie among vs, of which so oft as mention is made, vnder the name of it is named the highest rule of righteousnes. Why therefore is any question moued of vnrighteousnes where righteousness clearly appeareth? Neither let vs be ashamed, after the example of Paul, to stop the mouthes of the wicked, and from time to time to oft as they shall be bold to barke against it, to repeat this, Who be ye miserable men, that lay an accusation to Gods charge and doe therefore lay it to his charge, because he doth not temper the greatnes of his workes to your dulnesse? As though they were therefore wrongful, because they are hidden from flesh. The vnmeasurableness of the iudgements of God is by cleere experiences knowne vnto you. Ye know that they are called the deepe bottomlesse depth. Now aske of the narrowe capacities of your wite, whether they comprehend that which God hath decreed with himselfe. What good doth it you therefore with mad searching to plunge your selues into the bottomlesse depth, which reason it selfe teacheth you that it shall be to your destruction? Why are ye not at the least restrained with some fear of the which both that hystorie of Iob and the bootes of the Prophets do report of the incomprehensible wisdom, and terrible power of God? If thy mind be vnquieted, let it not greene thee to embrace the counsell of Augustine. Thou being a man lookest for an answer at my hande: and I also am a man. Therefore let vs both heare him that sayeth: O man, what art thou? Better is a faithfull ignorance than rash knowledge. Seeke merits: thou shalt find nothing but paine. O depth, Peter denieth: The Theeke beleueneth. O depth: Seekest thou a reason? I will tremble at the depth. Reason thou, I will wonder, dispute thou, I will beleue: I see depth, but I reach not the bottom. Paul rested, because he found wondering. He calleth the iudgements of God vnsearchable: and art thou come to search them? Hee saith that his waies are impossible to be traced out: and doest thou trace them? with proceeding further we shall nothing profit: For neither we shall satisfie their way wanton curiosities, neither doth the Lord neede any other defence, than which he hath vsed by his spirit, which spake by the mouth of Paul: and we forget to speake well, when we cease to speake with God.

Psal. 36.

Aug de verb.
apo. serm. 20.

Necessitie of staning neither excusing the sinner, nor charging God iustly with ini-stiee for condemning them that so sinned.

6 Their other obiection this ariseth out of vngodlinesse, which yet tendeth not so directly to the accusing of God as to the excusing of the sinner. Howbeit the sinner which is condemned of God cannot be iustified without dishonour of the iudge. Thus therefore prophane toongs do barke against God, saying: why should God impute those things for sinne to men, whereof he hath by his predestination layde necessitie vpon men? For, what should they do? Should they wraastle with his decrees? But to should they do it in vaine, sith they cannot do it at all. Therefore they are not rightfully punished for those things, whereof the chiefe cause is in Gods predestination. Heere I will abtaine from that defence, whereunto the Ecclesiasticall writers do commonly flee, namely that the foreknowledge of God withstandeth not but that man may be accounted the sinner: because God foreseeeth the evils of man, not his owne. For so the caullation would not stay here, but will rather presse vs further with saying that God might if he had would, haue provided remedie for those evils which he foresaw: & that sith he hath not so done, he hath of determined purpose created men to that end that he should so behaue himselfe in earth: and if by the prouidence of God, man was created to this condition, that he should doe all those things that he doth: then he is not to be blamed for that which he cannot auoid, and which he enterprised by the will of God. Therefore let vs see how this knot ought to be well loosed. First of all this ought to bee holden certaine among all men which Salomon saith, that God hath created all things for himselfe, and the wicked man to an euill day. Behold, when the disposing of all things is in the hand of God, when in his power remaineth the rule of safetie and death: he so ordereth them by his counsell and becke, that among men there are borne some adiuaged euen from their mothers wombe to death, which with their destruction may glorifie his name. If any man answer, that there is no necessitie laid vpon them by the prouidence of God, but rather that he created them in such estate, because he foresaw their perversenes to come: he neither saith nothing at all, nor altogether. The old writers are wont in deed sometimes to vse this solution: but as it were doubtfully. But the Schoole men rest vpon it, as though nothing could be objected against it. In deed I will willingly graunt, that foreknowledge alone bringeth no necessitie to creatures, although all men doe not so agree. for there be some that will haue it also to be the cause of things. But it seemeth to me that Valla, a man otherwise not much praised in holy writings, saue both more deeply and more wisely, which shewed that this contention is superfluous: because both life and death are rather the doings of Gods will than of his foreknowledge. If God did but foresee the successes of men, and did not also dispose and order them by his will, then this question should not without cause be moued, whether his foreseeing any thing auailed to the necessitie of them. But sith he doth none otherwise foresee the things that shall come to passe, than because he hath decreed that they should so come to passe: it is vaine to moue controuersie about foreknowledge, where it is certaine that all things doe happen rather by ordinance and commandement.

Pro. 16. 4.

7 They say that this is not written in expresse words, that it was decreed of God, that Adam should perish by his falling away. As though the same God, whom the Scripture reporteth to doe whatsoever he will, created the noblest of all his creatures to an vncertaine end. They say he had freewill, that he might shape to himselfe his owne fortune: and that God decreed nothing, but to handle him according to his deseruing. If so colde a deuse be receined, where shall be that almightinesse of God, whereby he governeth all things according to his secret counsell, which hangeth vpon none other thing than it selfe? But Predestination, whether they will or no, sheweth himselfe in Adams posteritie. For it came not to passe naturally that all men should loose saluation by the fault of one Parent. What hindreth them to confesse of one man, that which against their wils they confesse of all mankind? For why should they loose their labor with dallying shifts? The Scripture crieth out that all men were in the person of one man made bound to eternall death. Sith this cannot be imputed to nature, it is plaine that it proceeded from the wondrous counsell of God. But it is too much absurditie that these good Patrones of the righteousnesse of God doe so stumble at a straw, and leape ouer great beames. Againe I aske: how came it to passe, that the fall of Adam did wrap vp in eternall death so many nations with their children being infantes without remedie, but because it so pleased God? Here their tooogs which are otherwise so prating, must of necessitie be dumbe. It is a terrible decree, I graunt: yet no man shall be able to deny, but that God foreknew what end man should haue, ere he created him, and therefore foreknew it because he had so ordained by his decree. If any man here inueigh against the foreknowledge of God, he rashly and vndiscreetly stumbleth. For, what matter is there, I beseech you, why the heavenly iudge should be accused for that he was not ignorant of that which was to come? Therefore if there be any either iust or colourable complaint, it toucheth predestination. Neither ought it to seeme an absurditie which I say, that God foresawe not onely the fall of the first man, and in him the ruine of his posteritie, but also disposed it after his owne will. For as it belongeth to his wisdom, to foreknow all things that shall be: so it belongeth to his power, to rule and gouerne all things with his hande. And this question Augustine verie well discuteth, as he doth other, saying. We most wholesomely confesse that which we most rightly beleuee, that the God and Lord of all things, which created all things very good, and forekew that euil things should spring out of good, and knew that it more pertained to his almightie goodnes euen of euil things do wel, than not to suffer them to be euill: that he so ordered the life of Angels and men, that in it he might first shew what free will cou'd do, and then what the benefit of his grace and iudgement of iustice could do.

God did not only foresee, but dispose the fall of man, and in him the ruine of his posteritie.

Cap. 23. Of the maner how to receiue

and perish not by Gods permission only, but by his will and appointment.
lib. 6. cap. 15.*

8 Here they runne to the distinction of will and permission, by which they will haue it graunted that the wicked do perish, God onely permitting but not willing it. But why should we say that he permitteth it, but because he so willeth? Howbeit it is not likely that man by himselfe, by the onely permission of God, without any his ordinance, brought destruction to himselfe: as though God appointed not, of what condition he would haue the chiefe of his creatures to be. I therefore will not doubt to confesse simply with Augustine, that the will of God is a necessitie of things, & that what he willeth, it must of necessitie come to passe: as those things shall truly come to passe which he hath foreseene. Now if for excuse of themselves and of the vngodly, either the Pelagians, or Manichees, or Anabaptists, or Epicurians (for with these fower sects we haue to do in this question) shall object against vs necessitie where-when they be bound by the predestination of God: they bring nothing fit to the purpose. For if predestination be nothing else but a dispensation of righteousness of God, which is hidden indeed, but yet without fault: Forasmuch as it is certaine that they were not vnworthy to be predestinate to that estate, it is also as certaine that the destruction is most righteous which they enter into by predestination. Moreover their destruction so hangeth vpon the predestination of God, that both cause and matter thereof is found in themselves. For the first man fell, because the Lord so iudged it to be expedient: why he so iudged, is vnknownen to vs: yet it is certaine that he so iudged for no other reason but because he saw that thereby the glorie of his name should be worthily set forth. When thou hearest mention of the glorie of God, there thinke of his righteousness: for it must be righteous that deserueth praise. Man therefore falleth, the prouidence of God so ordaining it: but he falleth by his own fault. The Lord had a litle before pronounced, that all the things which he had made were very good. Whence therefore cometh that peruerfines to man, to fall away from his God? Least it should be thought to be of creation, the Lord with his commendation allowed that which came from himselfe. Therefore by his owne euilnes he corrupted the nature which he had receiued pure of the Lord, and by his fall he drew his whole posteritie with him into destruction. Wherefore let vs rather behold an euident cause of damnation in the corrupted nature of mankind, which is neerer to vs, than feare for a hidden and vterly incomprehensible cause thereof in the predestination of GOD. Neither let it grieue vs so far to submit our wit to the vnumeasurable wisdom of God, that it may yeeld in many secrets of his. For, of those things which it is neither granted nor lawful to know, the ignorance is wel learned: the coueting of knowledge is a kind of madness.

Gen. 1. 31.

9 Some man perhaps will say, that I haue not yet brought ynough to subdue that that wicked excuse. But I verily confesse that it can neuer be brought to passe, but that vngodlinesse will alway grudge and murmure against it: yet I thinke that I haue spoken so much as might suffice to take away not onely all reason but also all colour of gaine saying. The reprobate would be thought excusable in sinning, because they cannot escape the necessitie of sinning: especially such necessity is cast vpon them by the ordinance of God. But we deny that they are thereby well excused, because the ordinance of God, by which they complaine that they are destinate to destruction, hath his righteousnesse, vnknewen in deede to vs, but yet most certaine. Wherevpon we conclude, that they beare no euill which is not laide vpon them by the most righteous iudgement of God. Then, we teach that they doe ouerthwartly, which to seeke out the beginning of their damnation, doe bend their eyes to the secret closets of the counsell of God, and winke at the corruption of nature, from whence their damnation springeth. And thus withstandeth that they cannot impute it to God, for that hee withsaith of his owne creation. For although man is create by the eternall prouidence of God to that calamitie, whereunto he is subiect: yet the matter therof he tooke of himselfe, nor of God, for in much as he is by no other meane so lost, but because he went out of kinde from the pure creation of God into a corrupt and vnpure perfectiones.

10 Now the subtleties of Gods Predestination doe slander it also with a third absurditie. For when we impute it to nothing else but to the choyse of the will of God, that they are made free from the vniuersall destruction, whom he maketh heires of his kingdome, thereby they gather that there is with him accepting of persons, which the Scripture euery where denieth: and therefore either the Scripture disagreech with it selfe, or that in the election of God there is respect of desertings. First, the Scripture in another sense denieth, that God is an accepter of persons, than as they iudge it. For by the name of person, it signifieth not a man, but those thinges which being scene with eyes in man are wont to procure either fauour, grace, and dignitie, or hatred, contempt, and shame: as riches, wealth, power, nobilitie, office, countrey, excellencie or beautie, and such other: on the other side, pouertie, neede, baseness, vilenesse, contempt, and such other. So Peter and Paul doe teach that the Lord is not an accepter of persons, because he putteth not difference betweene the Iew and the Grecian, to refuse the one and embrace the other for onely respect of nation. So James vsch the first words when he mindeth to affirme, that God in his iudgement nothing regardeth riches. But Paul in another place speaketh thus of God, that in iudging he hath no consideration of freedome or bondage. Wherefore there shall be no contrarietie if we shall say that God according to the will of his good pleasure without any deserting chooseth to his Sonnes whom he will, reiecting and refusing other. But the matter may thus be opened, that men may be more fully satisfied. They aske how it commeth to passe, that of two betweene whom no deserting putteth any difference, God in his electing passeth ouer the one and taketh the other. I on the other side doe aske them, whether they thinke that in him that is taken there is any thing that may make the minde of God to encline toward him. If they confesse (as they needes must) that there is nothing, it shall follow that God looketh not vpon man, but from his owne goodnesse fetcheth a cause why to doe good to him. Whereas therefore God chooseth one man, refusing an other, this commeth not of respect of man, but of his mercie alone, which ought to haue libertie to shew forth and vter it selfe where and when it pleaseth him. For we haue in another place also shewed, that there were not from the beginning many called noble, or wise, or honorable, that God might humble the pride of flesh: so farre is it off, that his fauour was bound to persons.

11 Therefore many do fafully and wickedly accuse God of partiall vnrighthousnes, for that he doth not in his Predestination keepe one selfe course toward all men.

The iudgement of God in punishing men for the inhor- of he hath laide a necessity on it is a righteous cause the reason how it is righteous is known on to whom he should rather be- waile I enquire in our selues, than seeke the cause thereof in God.

God not to be charged as a partiall accepter of persons.

Act 10. Rom. 2. 10. Gal. 3. 28. Iam. 2. 5. Col. 3. 25. Eph. 6. 9.

Aug. ad Rom. lib. 1. cap. 7. 1. Cor. 1. 26.

God finding all guiltie is not partiall in condemnation.

Cap. 23. Of the maner how to receiue

ning any but in faring some merciful.

If (say they) he finde all guiltie, let him equally punish all: if he finde them vnguiltie, let him withhold the rigor of his iudgement from all. But so they deale with him, as if either mercie were forbidden him, or when he would haue mercie he be compelled altogether to giue ouer his iudgement. What is it that they require? if all be guilty, that all may together suffer all one paine. We graunt the guiltines to be common, but we say that the mercie of God helpeth some. Let it helpe all, say they. But we answer, that it is rightfull that hee should also in punishing shew himselfe a rightfull iudge. When they suffer not this: what do they else but either go about to spoile God of his power to haue mercie, or at least to grant it him vpon this condition, that he vterly giue ouer his iudgement. Wherefore these sayings of Augustine do very well agree together. Sith in the first man the whole masse of mankind fell into condemnation, these vessels that are made of it to honor, are not the vessels of their owne righteousnes, but of the mercie of God: and whereas other are made to dishonour, the same is not to be imputed to vnrighteousnes but to iudgement, &c. That to those whom he refuseth, God rendreth due paine: to those whom he calleth, he giueth vnderferued grace: that they are deliuered from all accusation, after the maner of a creditour, in whose power it is, to forgiue to the one, and aske of the other. Therefore the Lord also may giue grace to whom he will, because he is mercifull: and giue it not to all, because he is a iust iudge. He may by giuing to some that which they do not deserue, shew his free grace: and by not giuing to all, declare what all deserue. For whereas Paul writeth that God enclosed all vnder sinne, that he might haue mercie vpon all, it is therewithall to be added that he is debter to no man: because no man first gaue to him, that he may require like of him.

Predestination ex-ke: h not away the care of well doing.

12 This also they often say, to overthrow predestination, that while it standeth, all carefullnesse and endeuour of well dooing falleth away. For who (say they) shall heare that either life or death is certainly appointed for him by the eternal decree of God, but that it will by and by come into his minde that it maketh no matter how he behaue himselfe, sith the predestination of God can by his worke be nothing hindered or furthered? So shall all men dissoluely throwe forth themselves, and after a desperate maner runne headlong whither their lust shall carrie them. And verily they say not altogether falsely, for there be many swine, which with filthy blasphemies defile the doctrine of predestination: and by this pretence also do mock out all admonishments and rebukings, saying, God knoweth what he hath once determined to do with vs: if he haue decreed our saluation, he will bring vs to it at the time appointed: if he haue predestinate our death, we should trauell in vaine to the contrary. But the scripture, when it teacheth with how much greater reuerence and rehgiousnes we ought to thinke of so great a mysterie, doth both instruct the godly to farre other sense, and well confute these mens outrage. For it doth not speake of predestination to this end, that we should be encouraged to boldnes, and with vnlawful rashnesse attempt to search the vnattained secrets of God: but rather that being humbled and abased we should learne to tremble at his iudgement, and reuerently to look vp to his mercie. To this mark the faithfull will leuell themselves. As for that filthy groaning of swine, it is well confuted of Paul. They say that they go carelesly forward in vices: because if they be of the number of the elect, their vices shall nothing hinder them, but that they shall at length be brought to life. But Paul telleth that wee be to this ende, that we should leade a holy and faultlesse life. If the marke that election is directed vnto be holinesse of life, it ought more to awake and stirre vs vp cheerefully to practise that holinesse, than to serue for a cloaking of slothfulness. For howe greatly doe these things differ the one from the other? to cease from well doing, because election sufficeth to saluation: and that the appointed end of election is that we should apply our selues to the endeuour of good doings. Away therefore with such sacrileges which do wrongfully misturne the whole order of election. Where they stretch

stretch their blasphemies further, when they say that he which is reprobate of God, shall loose his labour if he go about to make himselfe allowable to him with innocencie and honestie of life: therein they are taken with a most shamelesse lie. For, whence could such endeour come but of election? For whosocuer be of the number of the reprobate, as they are vessels made to dishonour, so they cease not with continual wicked doings to prouoke the wrath of God against themselves, and by euident tokens to confirme the iudgement of God which is already pronounced vpon them; so faire be they from struing with him in vaine.

13 But other do maliciouslie and shamefully slander this doctrine, as though it did ouerthrow all exhortations to godly liuing. For which matter in old time Augustine was burdened with a great malice. Which hee wiped away with his booke of correction and grace written to Valentine, the reading whereof will appeale all godly and tractable men: yet I will touch a fewe things, which (as I trust) shall satisfie them that be honest and not contentious. Wee haue already seene how open and loude a preacher of the free election Paul was: was he therefore colde in admonishing and exhorting? Let these good zealous men compare their earnestnesse with his, and it shall be found in them ise in comparison of his incredible heate. And truely this principle taketh away all doubts, that we are not called to vncleannesse, but that euerie man should possesse his vessell in honor, &c. Againe, that we are the handie worke of God created to good workes, which he hath prepared that we should walke in them. Summarily, they that are euen but meanly exercised in Paul, shall without long declaration easily perceiue how fitly he maketh these things to agree, which they saine to disagree. Christ commandeth that men beleue in him: Yet is his definitiue sentence neither falsie nor contrarie to his commandement, where hee saith: No man can come to me, but he to whom it is giuen of my father. Let preaching therefore haue his course, which may bring men to faith, and with continuall profiting hold them fast in perseuerance. Neither yet let the knowledge of predestination bee hindered, that they which obey may not be proud as of their owne, but may glory in the Lord. Christ not for nothing saith: Who so hath eares of hearing, let him heare. Therefore when we exhort and preach, they that haue eares do willingly obey: but who so lacke eares, in them is fulfilled that which is written, That hearing they heare not. But why (saith Augustine) should some haue, and other some not haue? Who hath known the minde of the Lorde? Must that therefore be denied which is open, because that cannot be comprehended which is hidden? These sayings I haue faithfully reported out of Augustine: but because peraduenture his wordes shall haue more authoritie than mine, go to, let vs bring forth the very wordes that are read in himselfe. If when this is heard, many are turned into dulnes and sluggishnes, and being inclined from labour to lust do go after their desires: ought that therefore to be accepted falsie which is spoken of the foreknowledge of God? If God haue foreknown that they shall be good, shall they not be good, in how great euilnes focuer they now liue? and if he haue foreknown that they will be euill, shall they not be euill in how great goodnesse focuer they be nowe seene? shall therefore those things which are truely spoken of the foreknowledge of God, be for such causes either to be denied or to be left vnspoken of? namely then when if they be not spoken of, men go into errors? The rule (saith he) to keepe truth vnspoken of, is one thing, and the necessitie to speake truth is another. As for the cause of leaving truth vnspoken, it were long to search them out all: of which yet this is one, that they be not made worse which vnderstande it not, while wee meane to make them more learned that vnderstande it, who when we speake any such thing are indeed not made more learned, nor yet are made worse. But when a true thing is in such case, that when we speake it, he is made worse that cannot conceiue it: and when we speake it not, he is made worse that can conceiue it: what thinke we now to be done? Is not the truth rather to be spoken that he may conceiue it, that can conceiue it: than to keepe it vnspoken, that not onely neither of them may conceiue it, but also he that more vnderstandeth may be the worse? whereas if he did heare and conceiue it, by him also many should learne. And we will not say that which, as the Scripture witnesseth, we lawfully might haue spoken. For we feare forsooth least when we speake, he be offended that can not conceiue it: but we feare not least while we hold our peace, he that can conceiue truth be deceiued with fallhoode. Which sentence he at the last shortly knitting vp, more plainly also confirmeth. Wherefore if the Apostles, and they which followed them, the doctors of the Church did both, namely both godlyly preach of the eternall election of God, and hold the faithfull in awe vnder the discipline of godly life: why do these our aduerfaries being confuted with inuincible violence of truth, thinke that they say well in saying that that which is spoken of predestination is not to be preached to the people although it be true? Yea it must in many wise be preached, that he which hath eares to heare may heare. But who hath eares if he hath not receiued them from him that promisseth that he will giue them? Truly let him that receiue it not, refuse it: so that yet he which receiue it, do take and drinke, do drinke and liue. For as godlines is to be preached, that God may be rightly worshipped: so is also predestination, that he which hath eares to heare of the grace of God, may glorie in God and not in himselfe.

Cap. 20.

*Vndiscreete deliuering of the doctrine which con-cerneth predesti-

14 And yet that holy man, as he had a singular desire to edifie, so tempereth the manner of teaching the truth, that offence be wisely auoyded so faine as it lawfully may be. For he sheweth that those things which are truly said, may also be conueniently sayd. If any man do thus preach to the people. If ye beleue not, the cause is for that ye are already predestinate of God to destruction: such a man doth not only cherish slothfulnes, but also maintaine wickednes. If any man also stretch his saying to the time to come, and say that they which heare shall not beleue, because they are reprobate: this shalbe rather a curling than a teaching. Such therefore Augustine not vnworthily biddeth to depart from the Church, as foolish teachers, and vn lucky and ill prophying Prophets. In an other place he truly affirmeth that it is to be holden that a man then profiteth with rebuking, when he hath mercy and helpeth which maketh to profite whom he will, euen without rebuking. But why some thus and some other wise? God forbid that, that we should say that the power of iudging belongeth rather to the clay than to the potter. Againe afterward. When men by rebuking either come or returne into the way of righteousnes, who worketh saluation in their hearts, but he, which when any whosoeuer he be planteth and watereth, giueth the increase, whom when he will saue, no freewill of man resisteth? It is therefore not to be doubted that the wils of men cannot resist the will of God (which both in heauen and earth hath done whatsoeuer he would, and which hath also done those things that are to come) but that he may do what he will, forasmuch as euen of the verie wils of men he doeth what he will. Againe, when he will leade men to him, doeth he binde them with corporall bonds? He inwardly worketh, inwardly holdeth hearts, inwardly moueth hearts, and draweth them with their wiles which he himselfe hath made in them. But, that which he by and by addeth ought in no wise to be omitted: that because we know not who belongeth or not belongeth to the number of the predestinate, we ought so to be affectioned that we would all men to be saued. So shall it come to passe, that whomsoeuer we find, we shall trauell to make him partaker of peace. But our peace shall rest vpon the children of peace. Therefore for our part, we must applie holosome and sharpe rebuking to all men like a medicine, that they perish not, nor destroy other, but it shalbe the worke of God to make it profitable to them whom he hath foreknowen and predestinate.

The xxiiiij. Chapter.

That election is stablished by the calling of God, but that the reprobate doe bring vpon themselves the iust destruction wherunto they are appointed.

BUT, that the matter may more plainly appeare, we must intreate both of the calling of the elect, and of the blinding and hardening of the wicked. Of the first of these I haue already spoken somewhat, when I confuted their error, which thinke that the generalnesse of the promises extendeth egally to all mankind. But this election which otherwise God hath hidden with himselfe he doeth not without chioise at length disclose by his calling, which a man may therefore call the testifying of it. For, whome he hath foreknown, them he hath also foreappointed to be fashioned like the image of his sonne: whom he hath foreappointed, them he hath also called: whom he hath called, them he hath also justified, that in time to come he may glorifie them. When the Lord hath by electing already adopted his into the number of his children: yet we see how they enter not into possession of so great a benefite, but when they be called: on the other side, how being called they do now enjoy a certaine communicating of his election. For which reason Paul calleth the spirit which they receiue, both the spirit of adoption, and the seale, and earnest of the inheritance to come: namely because it doeth with the testimonie thereof stablish & scale to their hearts the assurednes of the adoption to come. For though the preaching of the Gospell spring out of the fountaine of election: yet because it is also common to the reprobate, therefore it could not by it selte be a sure prooffe thereof. But God effectually teacheth his elect, that he may bring them to faith: as we haue before alleadged out of the words of Christ, Who so is of God, he and none other seeth the Father. Againe, I haue shewed thy name to the men whome thou hast giuen me: Whereas he saith in another place, no man can come to me, vnlesse my Father draw him. Which place Augustine wisely weyceth, whose words are these. If (as Truth saith) every one that hath learned, commeth: whofocuer commeth not, certainly neither hath he learned. It doth not therefore follow that he which can come, also commeth, vnlesse he haue both willed and done it. But every one that hath learned of the Father, not only can come, but also commeth, whe now there is present both the profire of comming, and the affection of willing, and the effect of doing. Also in another place more plainly. What is this elie, Every one that hath heard of the father, & hath learned, cometh to me, but there is none that heareth and learneth of the father and commeth not to me? For if euery one which hath heard of the father and learned, commeth: truly euery one that cometh not, hath not heard of the father, nor learned: for if he had heard and learned, he would come. This schoole is farre from the senses of the flesh, in which schoole the father is heard and teacheth, that men may come to the sonne. And a little after. This grace which is secretly giuen to the hearts of men, is receiued of no hard heart: for it is therefore giuen, that the hardness of the heart may first be taken away. When therefore the father is heard within, he taketh away the stonie heart, and giueth a fleshy heart. For so he maketh the children of promise and vessels of mercy, which he hath prepared to glorie. Why therefore doth he not teach all, that they may come to Christ, but because all whom he teacheth, by mercie he teacheth: whom he doth not teach, by iudgement he doth not teach? because he hath mercie vpon whom he will, and hardeneth whom he will. Therefore God assigneth them for children to himselfe, and appointeth himselfe father to them, whom he hath chosen. Now by calling he bringeth them into the houshold, and vnieth himselfe to them, that they may be one together. But, when calling is ioyned to election, in that manner the Scripture sufficiently signifieth that in it nothing is to bee required but the mercie of God. For if wee aske, whome hee calleth and for what reason : hee aunswereth, whome he had elected. But when we come once to election, there the onely mercie of God appeereth on euery side. And here that saying of Paul truly hath place, It is not of him that willet, nor of him that runneth, but of God that hath mercie. Neither yet that same so as they commonly take it, which part it betwene the grace of God, and the willing and running of man. For they expounde it, that the desire and induour of man haue in deede no force of themselves, vnlesse they be prospered by the grace of God : but when they are holpen by his blessing, then they affirme that they haue also their partes in obtaining saluation. Whose cauillation I had rather confute with Augustines wordes than mine owne : If the Apostle meant nothing else but that it is not of him onely that willet or runneth, vnlesse the Lord be there present mercifull: we may contrariwise turne it againt them and say that it is not of onely mercie, vnlesse there be present willing and running. But if this be openly wicked, let vs not doubt that the Apostle giueth all to the mercie of the Lorde, and leauech nothing to our wils or enduours. To this effect speaketh that holy man. And I set not a strawe by that nice suttletie, that they say that Paul would not haue so said vnlesse there had bene some induour and some will in vs. For he did not consider what was in man: but when he saw that some did assigne part of saluation to the endeouour of men, he simply condemned their error in the first part of the sentence, and in the second he challenged the whole summe of saluation of the mercie of God. And what other things doe the Prophets trauell about but continually to preach the free calling of God?

2 Moreouer the very nature also and dispensation of calling doth cleerely shew it, which consisteth not in the onely preaching of the worde, but also in the enlightening of the Spirit. To whome God offereth his worde, is shewed vs in the Prophet : I am found of them that sought me not : I haue openly appeared to them that did not aske for me. To a people which hath not called vpon my name I haue said, Lo I am present. And least the Iewes shoulde thinke that this kindeesse belonged onely to the Gentiles, he doth also put them in remembrance from whence he tooke their father Abraham, when he vouchsafed to ioyne him to himselfe, namely from meere idolatrie, in which he was drowned with all his. When he first thineth with the light of his worde to men not deseruing it, he therein sheweth an example plaine enough of his free goodnesse. Here therefore the vnumerable goodnesse of God sheweth forth it selfe, but not vnto saluation to all : because for the reprobate there abideth a more greuous iudgement, for that they refuse the testimonie of the will of God. And God also, to set forth his glorie, withdraweth from them the effectuall force of his Spirit. Therefore this inward calling is a pledge of saluation, which cannot deceiue vs. For which purpose maketh that saying of Iohn. Thereby wee knowe that we are his children, by the spirit which he hath giuen vs. And least flesh shoulde glorie, that it did at the least answer to him when he called and of his owne will offered himselfe, hee affirmeth that it hath no eares to heare, no eyes to see, but which he hath made : and that hee maketh them, not according to every mans thankfulness, but according to his owne election. Of which thing you haue a notable example in Luke, where both Iewes and Gentiles in common together heard the preaching of Paul and Barnabas. Whereas they were at that time all taught with one selfesame word, it is saide that they beleued which were ordained to euerlasting life. With what face may we denie that the calling is free, in which cuen to the very last part election reignerh alone?

3 But here we must beware of two errors, because many make man a worker together with God, that he by his consent may make the election to be of force : so by their opinion, the will of man is about the counsell of God. As though the Scripture did teach, that it is onely giuen vs that we may beleue, and not rather faith it

selfe. Other some, although they do not so weaken the grace of the holy Ghost: yet being led by Iwo: not what reason, hang election vpon faith as though it were doubtfull, yea and vn intellectuall vntill it be confirmed by faith. It is in deede certaine that it is confirmed, as toward vs: and we haue already shewed that the secret counsell of God beinnew to shine out, which was before hidden: so that by this word you vnderstand nothing else, than that it is approued which was vnknown, and is as it were sealed with a seale. But it is falsely said, that election is then and not till then effectuall, whē we haue embraced the gospell, and that therof it taked liuely strength. We must indeede from thence fetch the certaintie of it: Because if we attempt to reach vnto the eternall ordinance of God, that deepe bottomlesse depth wil swallow vs vp. But when God hath opened it vnto vs, we must climbe vp higher, least the effect should drowne the cause. For what greater absurditie or shamefull vniustice is there, than that when the Scripture teacheth that we are enlightened as God hath chosen vs, our eyes should be so daseled with this light, that they should refuse to looke vpon election? Yet in the meane time I deny not, that to the end we may be certaine of our saluation, we must begin at the word, and that our affiance ought therewith to be contented, that we may call vpon God by the name of Father. For some quite contrary to right order, that they may be certified of the counsell of God (which is nere vnto vs, in our mouth and in our heart) do couet to lie about the cloudes. Therefore that rascallie is to be restrained with sobrietie of faith, that it may suffice vs that God in his outward word is a witnesse of his hidden grace: to that the conduit pipe out of which there floweth water largely for vs to drinke, do not hinder but that the springhead may haue his due honour.

Deut. 30. 14.

4 Therefore as they do wrongfully, which hang the strength of election vpon the faith of the gospell, by which faith we feele that election pertaineth to vs: so we shall keepe the best order, if in seeking the certaintie of our election, we sticke fast in these latter signes, which are sure witnessings of it: Satan doth with no tentation either more greuously, or more dangerously astonish the faithfull, than when disquieting them with doubt: of their election, he doth also moue them with a peruerse desire to seeke it out of the waie. I call it seeking out of the way, when a wretched man enterpriseth to breake into the hidden secrets of the wisdome of God, and to percerce euen to the highest eternity to vnderstand what is detremind of himselfe at the iudgement seate of God. For then he throweth himselfe headlong to be swallowed vp into the depth of the vnumeasurabable deuouring pit: then he wrappeth himself with innumerable sinnes and such as he cannot winde out of: then he ouerwhelmeth himselfe with the bottomlesse depth of blinde darknesse. For so is it rightfull that the foolishnesse of the wit of man be punished with so horrible ruine, when he attempteth of his owne force to rise vp to the height of the wisdome of God. And so much more deadly is this tentation, as there is none to which we are commonly all more bent. For there is most rarely any man to be found, whose mind is not sometime stricken with this thought. Whence hast thou saluation, but of the election of God? And of Election what reuelation hast thou? which thought, if it haue once taken place in any man, either perpetually vexeth the miserable man with terrible torments, or vtterly disinayeth him. Truly I would haue no surer argument than this experience to prooue, how wrongfully such men imagine of predestination. For the minde can be infected with no error more pestilent, than that which plucketh downe, and thrusteth the conscience from her peace and quietnesse toward God. Therefore if we feare shipwracke, we must diligently beware of this rocke, which is neuer stricken vpon without destruction. And though the disputing of predestination be esteemed like a dangerous sea, yet in passing through it there is found a safe and quiet yea & pleasant sayling, vnlesse a man do wilfully couet to be in daunger. For as they doe drowne themselves in the deadly bottomlesse depth, which to be certified of their election

The certaintie of our election to be searched not in the bosome of God but in our selues according to that light which hee hath giuen vs in his word.

doe enquire of the secret Counsell of God without his word: so they which do rightly and orderly search it in such sort as it is contained in the word, receiue thereof a singular fruit of comfort. Let this therefore be our way to search it, that we begin at the calling of God, and end in the same. Howbeit this withstandeth not; but that the Faithfull may thinke that the benefits which they dayly receiue at the hand of GOD, doe descende from that secret adoption: as they say in Esaie, Thou hast done maruels, thy thoughtes are olde, true, and faithfull: forasmuch as by that adoption as by a token, the Lords wil is to cōfirme so much as is lawfull to be knowne of his counsell. But least any man should thinke this a weake testimonie, let vs consider how much both clearenesse and certaintie it bringeth vs. Of which thing Bernarde speaketh fitly. For after that he had spoken of the reprobate, he saith: The purpose of God standeth, the sentence of peace standeth vpon them that feare him, both couering their euils, and rewarding their good things: so as to them after a maruiculous manner not only good things, but also euill doe worke together vnto good. Who shall accuse the elect of God? It sufficeth me to all righteouines, to haue him alone mercifull, to whom alone I haue sinned. All that he hath decreed not to impute to me, is so as if it neuer had beene. And a little after: O place of true rest, & to which not vnworthily I may giue the name of a bed chamber, in which God is seene not as troubled with wrath, not as withholden with care: but his will is proued in him good, and well pleasing, and perfect. This sight doth not make afraide, but calmeth: doth not stirre vp vnquiet curiosities, but appeaseth it: doth not wearie the senses, but quieteth them: Here is quiet truely taken, God being appeased, appeaseth all things: and to behold him quiet, is to be quiet.

§ First, if we seeke a fatherly kindnesse and fauourable minde of God, we must turne our eies to Christ, in whome alone the soule of the father resteth. If we seeke saluation, life, and the immortalitie of the heauenly kingdome, we must then also flee to no other: forasmuch as he alone is both the fountaine of life, and Author of saluation, and heire of the kingdome of Heauen. Now whereto serueth election, but that being adopted of the heauenly Father into the degree of children, we may by his fauour obtaine saluation and immortalitie? Howsoever in seeking thou tosse it and shake it, yet thou shalt find that the vttermost marke of it extendeth no further. Therefore whom God hath taken to his children, it is not said that he hath chosen them in themselues, but in his Christ: because he could not loue them but in him, nor giue them the honor of the inheritance of his kingdome, vnlesse they had first beene made partakers of him. If we be chosen in him, we shall not finde in our selues the certainty of our election: no, nor yet in God the Father, if we imagine him naked without the Sonne. Christ therefore is the mirror, in whom we both must, and without deceite may behold our election. For sith it is he into whose body the Father hath appointed to graffe all them whom from eternitie he hath willed to be his, that he may take for his children so many as he reknowledgeth among his members: we haue a witnes plaine and sure inough, that we are written in the booke of life, if we communicate with Christ. And that sure communion of himselfe he gaue vs, when by the preaching of the Gospell he testified that he was giuen to vs of the Father; that he with all his good things should be ours. We are said to put on him, and to growe together into him, that we may lue: because he liueth. So oft is this doctrine repeated, The Father spared not his onely begotten Sonne, that whosoeuer beleueth in him, may not perish. But he that beleueth in him, is said to haue passed from death into life. In which sense he calleth himselfe the Bread of life, which whose eateth, he shall not die for euer. He (I say) hath beene a witness to vs, that they shall be receiued of the heauenly Father in place of his children, of whom he hath beene receiued by Faith. If we couer any more than to be accepted among the children and heires of God, then we may climbe about Christ. If this be our vttermost marke: how much much be wee mad in seeking without him that which we haue already obtained in him, and which may be founde in him alone? Moreouer sith he is the eternall wise-dome, the vnchangeable trueth, and fast setled counsell of the father: it is not to be feared least that which he declareth to vs in his worde, should varie any thing be it neuer so little from that will of the Father which we seeke: but rather he faithfully openeth it vnto vs, such as it was from the beginning, and euer shall be. The practise of this doctrine ought also to be in vre in prayers. For though the faith of election doth encourage vs to call vpon God: yet when we make our prayers, it were vnorderly done to thrust it into the presence of God, or to couenant with this condition. Lord, if I be elected, heare me: for as much as he willet vs to be content with his promises, and no where else to seeke whether he will be intreatable to vs or no. This wisdom shall deliuer vs from many snares, if we can skill to apply that to a right vse which hath bene rightly written: but let vs not vndiscreetly draw hither and thither that which ought to haue been restrained.

6 There is also for stablishing of our assurance another stay of election, which we haue saide to be ioyned with our calling. For, whom Christ taketh being enlightened with the knowledge of his name into the bosome of his Church, them he is saide to receiue into the faith and protection. And whome soeuer he receiuet, they are saide to be committed to him of the Father, and deliuered to his trust, that they may be kept into eternall life. What meane we? Christ crieth out with a lowd voice, that so many as the Father willet to be saued, he hath deliuered them into his protection. Therefore if we hit to know whether God hath care of our safetie, let vs seeke whether he hath committed vs to Christ, whom he hath made the onely Sauour of al his. Now if we doubt whether we be receiued of Christ into his faith and keeping, he preuenteth our doubting, when he voluntarily offereth himselfe to be our shepheard, and pronounceth that we shall be in the number of his sheepe if we heare his voice. Let vs therefore embrace Christ, being liberally let open for vs, and comming to meet vs, he shall number vs in his flocke, and shall keepe vs inclosed within his folde. But there entreteth into vs a carefulnesse of our state to come. For as Paul teacheth that they are called, which were before chosen: so Christ sheweth that manie are called, but fewe are chosen. Yea and also Paul himselfe in another place disuorteth vs from carefulnesse: Let him that standeth (saith he) looke that he fall not. Againe, Art thou grafted into the people of God? Be not proud, but feare: for God is able to cut thee off againe that he may graffe other. Finally we are sufficiently taught by experience it selfe, that calling and faith are of small value, vnless there be adioyned continuance which happeneth not all men. But Christ hath deliuered vs from this care: for verily these promises haue respect to the time to come. All that my father giueth me shall come to me: and him that shall come to me, I will not cast him out of doores. Againe, this is the will of him that sent mee, the Father, that I looke nothing of all things that he hath giuen me, but may raise them vp againe in the last daie. Againe, My sheepe heare my voice, and they followe mee: I knowe them, and I giue them eternall life, and they shall not perishe for euer, neither shall any man take them out of my hande. The father which gaue them to mee, is greater than all: and no man can take them out of the hand of my father. Nowe when he pronounceth, euery tree which my father hath not planted, shall be plucked vp by the roote: hee significeth on the contrary side, that they can neuer be plucked from saluation, which haue roote in God. Wherewith agreeth that saying of Iohn, If they had bene of vs, they had not at all gone out from vs. Hereupon also commeth that noble glorying of Paul against life and death, present things and things to come: which glorying must needes bee grounded vpon the gifte of continuance. Neither is it any doubt that he directeth this saying to all the faithfull. In another place the same Paul saith, He that hath begun in you a good worke, shall ende it euen vntill the daie of Christ.

Our election being found established in Christ, our harte must needes bee thereby confirmed with steadfast trust and assurance of persisting in the state of grace and of saluation to the end.

Calling generall and speciall.

Matth. 22.

As also David, when his faith fainted, leaned vpon this stay: Thou shalt not forsake the worke of thy hands. And now neither is this doubtfull, that Christ when he prayeth for all the faithfull, asketh the same thing for them which he asketh for Peter, that their faith may neuer faint. Whereby we gather, that they are out of danger of falling away, because the sonne of God, asking stedfast continuance for their godlinesse, suffered no demaill. What would Christ haue vs to learne heereby, but that we shoulde trust that we shall perpetually be safe, because we are once made his?

7 But it daily happeneth, that they which seemed to be Christes, doe againe revolt from him and fall. Yea and in the very same place where he affirmeth that none had perished of them which were giuen him of the Father, yet he excepteth the son of perdition. That is true indeed: but this is also as certain, that such did neuer cleaue to Christ with that affiance of hart with which I say that the assurednes of our electiō is established. They went out frō vs (saith Iohn) but they were not of vs. For if they had bene of vs, they had still tarried with vs. Neither doe I denie that they haue like signes of calling as the elect haue: but I doe not grant that they haue that sure establishment of election which I bid the faithfull to fetch out of the word of the Gospell. Wherefore let not such examples moue vs but that we quietly rest vpon the promise of the Lord, where he pronounceth, that all they are giuen to him of the father, which receiue him with true faith, of whom sith he is their keeper and Pastor, none shall perish. Of Iudas we shall speake heereafter. Paul doth not counsell Christians from assurednes altogether, but from carelesse and loose assurednesse of the flesh, which draweth with it, pride, presumption, and disdain of other, and quencheth humilitie and the reuerence of God, and bringeth forgetfulnesse of grace receiued. For he speaketh to the Gentiles, whom he teacheth, that they ought not proudly and vn- gently to reproch the Iewes for this, that the Iewes being disherited, they were sit in their stead. Feare also he requireth not wherewith they shoulde be daunted and stagger, but with framing vs to the receiuing of the grace of God, shoulde abate nothing of the affiance thereof, as we haue said in another place. Beside that he doth not there speake to euery man particularly: but to the sects themselves generally. For when the Church was diuided into two parts, and enuie bred dissentiō, Paul putteth the Gentiles in minde that their being supplied into the place of the peculiar and holie people ought to be to them a cause of feare and modestie. And among them there were manie puffed vp with glorie, whose vaine boasting it was profitable to beate downe. But we haue in another place shewed, that our hope is extended to the time to come euen beyond death, and that nothing is more contrarie to the nature of it, than to doubt what shall become of vs.

8 That saying of Christ, of many being called but fewe chosen, is verie ill taken after that maner. There shall be nothing doubtfull if wee holde fast that which ought to be cleare by the things aboue spoken, that there are two sorts of calling. For there is an vniuersall calling wherby through the outward preaching of the word, God calleth altogether to him, euen them also to whom he setteth it toorth vnto the sauour of death, and vnto matter of more grieuous condemnation. The other is a speciall calling which for the most part he vouchsafeth to giue onely to the faithfull, when by the inward enlightening of his spirite he maketh that the worde preached is settled in their harts. Yet sometime he maketh them also partakers of it whom hee enlighteneth but for a time, and afterward by the deseruing of their vnthankfulnes forsaketh them, and striketh them with greater blindness. Now when the Lord saw the Gospell to be published farre and wide, and to be despised of many, but to bee had in due price of fewe: he describeth to vs God vnder the person of a king, which preparing a solemne feast sendeth his messengers round about to bid a great multitude to be his guesstes, and yet can get but a fewe, because euerie one alleageth lets for his excuse, so that at length he is compelled vpon their refusal, to call out of the high waies euery one one that he meete. Hitherto euery man seeth that the parable must be vnderstood of the outward calling. He addeth afterward that God doth like a good maker of a feast, which goeth about the tables, to cheere his guesstes. If he finde any not clothed with a wedding garment, he will not suffer him with his vncleannesse to dishonour the solemnitie of the feast. This part of the parable, I graunt, is to be vnderstood of them which enter into the church by the profession of faith, but are not clothed with the sanctification of Christ. Such dishonours and as it were borches of his Church, the Lord will not suffer for euer: but, as their filthinesse deserueth he will cast them out. Therefore few are chosen out of a great number of them that are called, yet not with that calling by which we say that the faithfull ought to iudge their election. For, that generall calling is also common to the wicked: but this speciall calling bringeth with it the spirit of regeneration, which is the earnest and seale of the inheritance to come, wherewith our hearts are sealed vp against the day of the Lord. In a summe sith hypocrites boast of godlinesse as well as the true worshippers of God, Christ pronounceth that at length they shall be cast out of the place which they wrongfully possess: as it is said in the Psalm, Lord, who shall dwell in thy tabernacle? The innocent in hands, and a man of a pure hart. Againe, in another place. This is the generation of them that seeke God, of them that seeke the face of the God of Jacob. And so doth the Spirit exhort the faithfull to sufferance, that they take it not greediously that the Israelites bee mingled with them in the Church: for at length their visor shall be plucked from them and they shall be cast out without shame.

Eph. 1.13.
Psal. 15.1.

Psal. 22.2.

9 The same reason is of the exception euen now alleaged; where Christ saith that none perished but the sonne of perdition. It is in dede an vnproper speech, but yet not darke. For he was not accounted among the sheepe of Christ, for that he was one in dede, but because he kept the place of one. And where in another place the Lord affirmeth that he was chosen with the Apostles, that is spoken onely in respect of the ministerie. Twelue (saith he) haue I chosen, and one of them is a Diuell: that is, he had chosen him to the office of an Apostle. But when he speaketh of choosing to saluation, hee denieth him farre away from the number of the choiſen, saying: I speake not of all: I knowe whom I haue chosen. If a man doe in both places confound the word of Choosing, he shall miserably entangle himselfe: if he make difference, nothing is more plaine. Therefore Gregorie teacheth very ill and pestilently when he saith that we knowe onely our calling, but are vncertaine of our election: wherby he moueth all men to feare and trembling: vsing also this reason, but because we knowe what we be to day, but what we shall be we knowe not. But in that place he sufficiently declareth, how he stumbled at this blocke. For, because hee hangd election vpon the mentes of works, he had matter enough, and more to discourage the mindes of men: but he could not strengthen them, which did not remoue them from themselves to the affiance of the goodnesse of God. Hereof the faithfull haue some taste of that which we haue determined at the beginning that predestination if it be rightly thought vpon, bringeth not a shaking of faith, but rather the best strengthening of it. And yet I denie not, that the holy Ghost framed his talke to the small measure of our sense. As when he saith, In the secret of my people they shall not be, and in the roule of my seruants they shall not be written. As though God did begin to write in the booke of life, them whome he reckoneth in the number of his: whereas yet we know, euen by the witness of Christ, that the names of the children of God are from the beginning written in the booke of life. But in these words is only expressed the casting away of them which seemed the chiefe among the elect: as it is saide in the Psalm. Let them be blotted out of the booke of life, and let them not be written with the righteous.

bute his grace to them. But ere they bee gathered together to that chiefe shepheard, they are scattered abroad and stray in the common desert, and disier nothing from other, sauing that they be defended by the singular mercie of God, from falling into the extreme headlong downe-fall of death. Therefore if you looke vpon themselves, you shall see the offspring of Adam, which saoureth of the common corruption of the whole masse. That they be not carried into extreme and despaired vngodlinesse, this cometh not to passe by any goodnesse naturally planted in them, but because the eie of God watcheth, and his hande is stretched out to their saluation. For they that dreame that from their very nauitie there is planted in their hearts, I wote not what seede of election, by the vertue whereof they are alway inclined to godlinesse and to the feare of God, they both are not holpen to prooue it by the authoritie of Scripture, and alio are confuted by experience it selfe. They doe in deede bring forth a few examples to prooue that the elect euen before their enlightening, were not vtterly strangers from religion: that Paul in his being a Pharisee liued vnreproouable, that Cornelius was by almes and prayers accepted of God: and such other. Of Paul, we graunt to them: of Cornelius, we say that they are deceiued. For it appeereth that hee was then already enlightened and regenerate, so that hee wanted nothing but the cleere reuealing of the Gospell. But what will they wring out by these few examples? that all the elect are alway endued with the spirite of godlinesse? No more than if a man by shewing the vprightnesse of Aristides, Socrates, Zenocrates, Scipio, Curius, Camillus, and other, should thierof gather that all they that are left in blindness of idolatrie, were desirous followers of holines and honestie. Yea and the Scripture in more places than one, openly crieth out against them. For, the state which Paul describeth of the Ephesians before their regeneration, sheweth not one graine of this seede. Yee were (saith he) dead with defaultes and sinnes, in which yee walked according to the time of this worlde, according to the prince of the aire, which now worketh in the obstinate children: among whom we all also were sometime conuerfant in the lustes of our flesh, doing those things that liked our flesh and minde. And wee were by nature the children of wrath, as other also were. Againe, remember that yee were sometime without hope, and lacked God in the worlde. Againe, Yee were sometime darknesse: but now ye are light in the Lorde, walke as the children of light. But peraduenture they will haue these things to be referred to the ignorance of the true God, wherewith they deny not that the elect are holden, before that they be called. Albeit this were a shamelesse cauilling, sith he thereof concludeh, that they ought now no more either to lie or to steale: yet what will they answer to other places? as is that place to the Corinthians, where when he had pronounced that neither whooremongers, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor weaklings, nor buggerers, nor theenes, nor couetous men, shall be heires of the kingdome of God: he by and by addeth that they auere wrapped in the same hainous offences before that they knew Christ: but now that they are both washed by his blood and made free by his spirit. Againe another place to the Romanes. As ye haue given your members bond to vncleannesse, and to iniquitie vnto iniquitie, now yeelde them in bondage to righteousness. For what fruit had you of these things in which ye are now woorthily ashamed, &c.

II What manner of seede of election, I pray you, did then bud in them, which being manifoldly defiled in all their life, as it were with desperate wickednesse, wallowed in the most abhominable and accursed sinne of all? If he would haue spoken after their opinion, he should haue shewed how much they were bond to the bountifullnesse of God, by which they had bene preferred from sliding into so great filthinesse. So Peter also shoulde haue exhorted his to thankfulness for the perpetuall seede of election. But he contrariwise putteth them in minde that the time past sufficed to make an end of the lusts of the Gentiles. What if we come to examples? what bud of righteousness was there in Rahab the harlot, before saith Manasse, when Hierusalem was dipped and in a manner drowned in the blood of the Prophets? in the Theefe, which among his last gaspings began to thinke of repentance? Awake therefore with these arguments, which silly curious men doe rashly deuise to themselves without the Scripture. But let that abide certaine with vs, which the Scripture hath, that all haue straid like lost sleepe, euerie one hath swaued into his own way, that is, perdition. Out of this gulfe of perdition; whom the Lorde hath determined once to plucke forth, them he deferreth till his fit time: onely hee preferueth them, that they fall not vnto vnparadonable blasphemie.

12 As the Lord by the effectualnes of his calling towards the elect maketh perfect the saluation, whereunto he had by eternall counsell appointed them: so he hath his iudgements against the reprobate, whereby hee executeth his counsell of them. Whom therefore he hath created vnto the shame of life, and destruction of death, that they shoulde bee instruments of his wrath, and examples of his seueritie: from them, that they may come to their end, sometime he taketh away the power to heare his word, and sometime by the preaching of it he more blindeth and amaseth them. Of the first manner, whereas there be innumerable examples, let vs choose out one more cleere and notable than all the rest. There passed away about foure thousand yeres afore Christ, in which hee hid from all the Gentiles the light of his health bringing doctrine. If any man answer that he therefore made them not to enioy so great a benefite because he iudged them vnwoorthie, they which come after shal not be prooued any more woorthie. Of which thing, beside the experience, Malachie is a substantiall witnes, which reproouing infidelitie mingled with grosse blasphemies, yet declareth that there shall come a Redeemer. Why therefore is hee rather giuen to these than to those? He shall trouble himselfe in vaine, that shall heere search for a cause higher than the secret and vnsearchable counsell of God. Neither is it to be feared least any scholler of Porphyrie, should freely gnaw at the righteousness of God while we answer nothing in defence of it. For when we say that none perish vnderferuing, and that it is of the free bountifullnes of God that some be deliuered, there is largely enough said for the setting forth of his glorie, so that it needeth not our flustering. The soueraigne iudge therefore maketh a way for his predestination, when who he hath once reiected, them being deprived of the communicating of his light hee leaueth in blindness. Of the other maner there are both daily examples, and also many contained in the scripture. One selfesame preaching is commonly made to a hundred, twentie receiue it with readie obedience of faith: the rest do either set naught by it, or scorne it, or hiss it out, or abhorre it. If any man answer that this diuersitie proceedeth of their malice and puerfinesse, hee shall not yet iustifie vs: because the others wit also shoulde bee possessed with the same malice, vnlesse God did amende it with his goodnesse. Therefore we shall still bee encombred, vnlesse wee call to minde that which Paul saith, Who maketh thee to differ? Whereby he signifieth that some excell other some, not by their own vertue, but by the onely grace of God.

13 Why therefore doth he in granting grace to those passe ouer these? Of those Luke sheweth a cause, Because they are ordered to life. Of these, what shall we thinke, but because they are the vessels of wrath vnto dishonor? Wherefore let it not grieue vs to say with Augustine. God (saith hee) might turne the will of the euill into good, because he is almightie. He might indeed. Why therefore doth he not? because he would not. Why he would not, is in himselfe. For we ought to be no more wise than we ought to be. And that is much better, than to stift with Chrysostome, and say that he draweth him that is willing & reacheth his hand, that the difference may not seeme to stande in the iudgement of God, but in the onelie will of men. True- lie it so standeth not in proper motion of man, that euen the godlie and they that feare God haue neede of a singular instruction of the spirite. Lydia the purple seller feared God, and yet it behooued that her heart should be opened, that she might harken to the doctrine of Paul, and profit in it. This is not spoken of one woman alone, but that we should know that the profiting of euery man in godlinesse is the secret worke of the spirite. This verily cannot be brought in question, that the Lord sendeth his word to many, whose blindness he will haue to be more enforced. For, to what purpose doth he bid so many commandments to be carried to Pharao? Was it because he hoped that with often repeated messages he would be appeased? No, but before he began, he foreknew and foretolde the end. Goe (said he to Moses) and declare to him my will: but I will harden his heart, that he obey not. So when he stirreth vp Ezechiel, he warneth him aforehande that he sendeth him to a rebellious and stubborn people: to the ende that he should not be afraine if he perceiue himselfe to sing to deafe men. So he foretelleth to Jeremie, that his doctrine should become a fire, to destroy and waste the people like stubble. But the prophecy of Esaie yet more enforceeth it. For he is thus sent of the Lord: Goe and say to the children of Israell: With hearing heare ye, and vnderstand not: With seeing see yee, and knowe not. Make obstinate the heart of this people, and make heauie their eares, and ouerplaster their eyes: least peraduenture they may see with their eyes, and heare with their eares, and vnderstand with their heart, that being turned they may be healed. Beholde he directeth his voice to them, but that they waxe more deafe: hee lighteth a light, but that they may be made more blinde: he sheweth forth doctrine, but that they may be made more dull: he layeth to them a remedie, but not that they may be healed. And John alleging this propheticke, affirmeth that the Iewes could not beleue the doctrine of Christ, because this curse of God lay vpon them. Neither can this also be in controuersie, that whom God will not haue to be enlightened, to them he deliuered his doctrine wrapped vp in daike speeches, that they may nothing profite thereby but to be thrust into greater duinesse. Christ also testifieth, that he doth therefore expound onely to the Apostles the parables in which he had spoken to the multitude, because to them it was giuen to know the mysteries of the kingdome of God, but to the common people not so. What meaneth the Lord (wilt thou say) in teaching them, of whom he provideth that he may not be vnderstanded? Consider whence is the fault, and thou wilt cease to aske. For in the worde how great darkens fouer there be, yet there is alway light enough to conuince the confidence of the wicked.

14 Now remaineth for vs to see, why the Lord doeth that which it is plaine that he doth. If it bee an wered that it is so done because men haue so defiered by their vngodlinesse, wickednesse, and vnthankfulnes: the same shall in deed be well and truly saide: But because there appeareth not yet the reason of this durstines, why then some are bowed to obedience, other some continue hardened, in searching it we must needs goe to that which Paul hath noted out of Moses, namely that God hath raised them vp from the beginning, that he might shew his name in the whole earth. Whereas therefore the reprobate do not obey the word of God opened vnto them, that shall be well imputed to the malice and puerfessulle of their heart, so that this be therewithall added, that they are therefore giuen into this puerfessulle, because by the righteous but yet vnfesichable iudgement of GOD they are raised vp to set forth his glory with their damnation. Likewise when it is said of the sons of Hety, that they harken not to holome warnings, because the Lord willed to kill them: it is not denied that the stubbornnesse proceeded of their owne naughtinesse: but it is therewithall touched why they were left in stubbornnesse, when the Lorde might haue softened their heartes, namely because his vnhangeable decree had once appeared them to destruction. To the same purpose serueth that saying of John, When he had done so great signes, no man beleued in him: that the word of Esaie might might be fulfilled, Lord, who hath beleueed our saying? For though he do not excuse the slacknecked from blame, yet he is content with that reason, that the grace of God is vsfauourie to men, till the holy Ghost bring tast. And Christ alleaging the prophetic of Esauie: They shall all be taught of God, tenderth to no other ende but to p'ouoe that the Iewes are reprobate and strangers from the Church, because they are vnapt to learne: and he bringeth no other cause thereof, but for that the promise of God doth not pertaine to them. Which thing this saying of Paul confirmeth, that Christ which to the Jewes is an offence, and to the Gentiles foolishnesse, is to be called the strength and wisdom of God. For when he hath tolde what commonly happeneth so oft as the Gospell is preached, namely that some it maketh more obstinate, and of some it is despised, he saith that it is had in price of them onely which are called. He had in deed a little before named them belectuers, but he meant not to take away the due degree from the grace of God which goeth before Faith, but rather he addeth this second saying by way of Correction, that they which had embraced the Gospell should giue the praise of their Faith to the calling of God: As also a little after he teacheth that they are chosen of God. When the vngodly heare these things, they crye out that God with inordinate power abuseth his poore creatures for a sport to his crueltie. But we which know that all men are so many waies endangered to the iudgement seate of God, that being asked of a thousand things they can not satisfie in one, doe confesse that the reprobate suffer nothing which agreeth not with the most iust iudgement of God. Whereas we doe not clearly attaine the reason thereof, let vs not be discontent to be ignorant of somewhat, where the wisdom of God listeth vs it selfe into so great height.

15 But forasmuch as there are a few places of Scripture wont to be objected, in which God seemeth to denie that it is done by his ordinance that the wicked doe perish, but by this that, he crying out against it, they wilfully bring death vpon themselves: let vs briefly declaring these places, shew that they make nothing against the sentence aboue set. There is brought forth a place of Ezechell, that God will not the death of a sinner, but rather that he may be turned and liue. If they will extend this to all mankind: why doth he not moone many to Repentance, whose mndes are more pliable to obedience, than theirs which at his dayly allurements waxe harder and harder? With the Sodomites (as Christ witnesseth) the preaching of the Gospell and Miracles would haue brought forth more fruite than in Jurie. How cometh it to passe therefore, if God will all to be saued, that he openeth not the gate of Repentance to those miserable men that would haue bene more ready to receive grace? Hereby we see that the place is violently wrested, if the will of GOD, whereof the Prophet maketh mention, be set against his eternall counsell, whereby he hath seuered the elect from the reprobate. Now if we seeke for the true naturall meaning of the Prophet: his purpose is to bring hope of pardon to the penitent. And this is the sum, that it is not to be doubted but that God is ready to forgive so soone as the sinner turneth. Therefore he willetth not his death, in so much as he willetth his repentance. But experience teacheth that he so willetth them to repent whom he generally calleth to him, that yet he toucheth not all their harts. Yet is it therefore to be said that he dealeth deceitfully, because although the outward voice doe but make them vnexcusable which heare and doe not obey it, yet it is truly accounted the testimony of the grace of God, by which testimonie he reconcileth men to himselfe. Therefore let vs hold this for the meaning of the Prophet, that the death of a sinner pleaseth not God: that the godly may haue assurance, that so soone as they shall be touched with Repentance, there is pardon ready for them with GOD and the wicked may feele that their fault is doubled, because they answer not to so great mercifull kindenesse and gentlenesse of God. The mercie of God therefore will alway meete Repentance, but to whom Repentance is giuen, both all the Prophets, and

Apoftles, and Ezechiel himfelfe do plainly teach. Secondly there is alleaged a place of Paul, where he faith that god willeth al men to be faued, which although it haue a diuers meaning from the other, yet in ſome thing they agree together. I auſwer, firſt that by the reſt of the text it is made plaine how he willeth. For Paul coupleth together, that he willeth them to be faued, and to come to the acknowledging of the truth. If they will haue this to be determined, by the eternall counſell of GOD that they receiue the doctrine of ſaluation, what meaneth that ſaying of Mofes, What nation is ſo noble, that God commeth neere to it as hee dooth to thee? Howe came it to paſſe that GOD reſtrained from many peoples the light of the Goſpell, which other enjoyed? Howe came it to paſſe that the pure knowledge of godlineſſe neuer came to ſome, and ſome ſcarcely taſted ſo much as any darke principles of it? Hereof it ſhall now be eaſie to gather, whereto Paul tendeth. He had commaunded Timothee to make ſolemne prayers in the Church for kings and princes. But when it ſeemeth ſomewhat an abſurditie that prayers ſhould be made to God for a kinde of men in a manner deſpaired (becauſe they were not onely ſtrangers from the body of Chriſt, but alſo endeoured with all their forces to oppreſſe his kingdome) hee added, that the ſame is acceptable to God which willeth all men to be ſaued. Whereby verily he ſignifieth nothing elſe but that he hath ſtopped vp the way to ſaluation to no degree of men: but rather that he hath ſo powred out his mercie that he willeth no man to be void of it. The other ſentences do not declare what God hath by his ſecret iudgement determined of all men: but do ſhewe that there is pardon readie for all ſinners which do onely turne themſelues to require it. For if they more ſtiffely ſtand vpon this that it is ſaid that he will haue mercie vpon all, I will on the contrarie ſide aunſwere them with that which is written in another place. That our God is in heauen where he doth whatſoever he will. This worde therefore muſt ſo be expounded that it may agree with the other, I will haue mercie vpon whom I will haue mercie, and I will ſhew mercie to whom I will ſhew mercie. He that chooſeth out them whom he will haue mercie on, doth not giue it to all, But ſith it clearly appeareth that in that place is ſpoken not of all particular men, but of degrees of men, we will make no longer diſputing about it. Howbeit it is alſo to be noted, that Paul doth not affirme what God doth alway and euery where and in all men: but leaueth it to him at his libertie at length to make kings and magiſtrates partakers of the heauenly doctrine, although by reaſon of their blindnes they do now rage againſt it. They ſeeme to preſſe vs more ſtrongly with obiecting the place of Peter, that God willeth none to periſh, but receiue all to repentance. But the vndomg of this knot doth by and by offer it ſelfe in the ſecond word, becauſe the will to receiue cannot be vnderſtanded to be any other than that which is euerie where taught. Truly the turning is in the hand of God: whether he wil turne all or no, let himſelfe be asked, when he promiſeth that he will giue to a certaine fewe men a fleiſhy heart, leauing to otherſome a ſtonie heart. It is true indeed, that vneſſe he were readie to receiue them which call vpon his mercie, this ſaying ſhould be falſe. Turne to me, and I will turne to you. But I ſay that none of all mortall men doth come to God but hee that is preuented of God: And if repentance were in the will of man, Paul would not ſay, If peradenture he giue them repentance. Yea vneſſe the ſame God which with word exhortheth all men to repentance, did with ſecret moouing of his ſpirite bring the choſen to it: Ieremie would not ſay, Turne me, Lord, and I ſhall be turned: for when thou haſt turned me, I haue repented.

16 But (thou wilt ſay) if it be ſo, there ſhall be ſmall truth in the promiſes of the Goſpell, which when they teſtifie of the will of God, affirme that he willeth that which is againſt his inuiolable decre. Not ſo. For howſoever the promiſes of ſaluation be vniuerſall, yet they nothing diſagree with the predeſtination of the reprobate, ſo that we direct our minds to the effect of them. We know that then and not til then the promises are effectually to vs, when we receiue them by Faith, on the other side when Faith is made void, the promise is therewithall abolished. If this be the nature of them, let vs then see whether these things disagree together: that it is saide that God hath from eternitie ordained whom he will embrace with loue, and vpon whom he will exercise wrath: and that hee promiseth saluation to all without difference. Truly I say that they agree very well. For in so promising he meaneth nothing else than that his mercie is set open for all which doe couet and craue it: which thing none doe but they whom he hath enlightened. And them he enlighteneth, whom he hath predestinate to saluation. They (I say) haue the truth of the promises sure and vnshaken, so as it cannot be saide that there is any disagreement betwene the eternall election of God, and the testimonie of his grace which he offereth to the Faithfull. But why nameth he all? verily that the consciences of the godly may the more safely rest, when they vnderstand that there is no difference of sinners, so that Faith be present: and that the wicked may not caull for their excuse, that they want a sanctuarie wherunto they may withdraw themselues from the bondage of sinne, when with their owne vnthankfulness they refuse it being offered them. Therefore when the mercie of God is by the Gospell offered to both sorts, it is Faith, that is to say the enlightning of God, which maketh difference betwene the godly and vngodly, so as the one sort seeth the effectualness of the Gospell, and the other sort obtaine no fruite thereof. The enlightning it selfe also hath the eternall election of God for the rule thereof. The complaint of Christ, which they alleadge, Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how oft haue I willed to gather together thy chickens, but thou wouldest not? maketh nothing for them. I graunt that Christ there speaketh not onely in the person of man, but also reprocheth them that in all ages they haue refused his grace. But we must define that wil of God which is entreated of. For neither is it vnknown, how diligently God endeuored to keepe still that people, and with how great stiffness they euen from the first to the last being giuen to their wandring desires refused to be gathered together: but it followeth not thereof that the countell of God was made void by the malice of men. They answer and say that nothing lesse agreeth with the nature of God than to haue a double will in him. Which I graunt to them, so that they fitly expound it. But why doe they not consider so many testimonies, where God putting vpon him the affections of man descendeth beneath his owne maiestie? He saith that he hath with stretched out armes called the rebellious people, that he hath early and late trauided to bring them backe to him. If they will apply all these things to God, and not consider the figure, there shall arise many superfluous contentions, which this one solution bringeth to agreement, that the propertie of man is figuratiuely applied to God. How be it the solution which we haue brought in an other place largely iustificeth, that although the will of God be, as to our sense manifold: yet he doth not in himselfe diuersly will this & that, but according to this wisdom, which is diuersly manifold (as Paul calleth it) he amareth our senses, till it shall be giuen vs to know that he maruelously willet that which now seemeth to be against his will. They also mocke with caullations, that sith God is the Father of all, it is vprighteous that he should disherite any that hath not before with his owne fault deserued this punishment. As though the liberalitie of God stretcheth not euen to hogges and dogges. But if they speake onely of mankind, let them answer why God bound himselfe to one people, to be the Father thereof: and why also out of the same people he picked a small number as it were a floure. But their owne lust of euill speaking hindereth these railers that they consider not that God so bringeth forth his Sun to shine vpon the good & euill, that the inheritance is laid vp for a few, to who it shall one day be said, come ye blessed of my Father, possess the kingdom, &c. They object also that God hateth none of these things that he hath made. Which although I graunt the, yet this remaineth safe which I teach, that the reprobate are hatefull to God, & that very rightfully, because they being destitute of his Spirit can bring forth nothing but cause of curse. They say further, that there is no difference of the Iewe and the Gentile, and therefore that the grace of God is without difference set before all men: namely if they grant (as Paul determineth) that God calleth as well out of the Iewes as out of the gentiles, according to his good pleasure, so that he is bound to no man. After this maner also is that wiped away which they obiekt in another place, that God hath enclosed all things vnder sin, that he may haue mercie vpon all: namely because he wil that the saluation of all them that are saued be ascribed to his mercie, although this benefit be not common to all. Now when many things are alleaged on both parts, let this be our conclusion, to tremble with Paul at so great depth, and if wanton toongs shall be busie, that we be not ashamed of this his crying out, O man, what art thou that stricest with God? For Augustine truly affirmeth that they do perversly which measure the righteousnes of God by the measure of the righteousnes of man.

Although Christ the sonne of righteousnesse, having overcome death, shining by the Gospell, giueth vs the light of life (as Paul witnesseth) whereby also it is saide that by beleeuing wee haue passed from death into life, being nowe not foreiners & strangers, but citzens with the saints, & of the household of god, which hath made vs to sit with the only begotten son himselfe in heavenly places, that nothing may be wanting to perfect felicitie: yet least it should be grieuous vnto vs to be exercised vnder this hard warfare, as though we had no fruit of the victorie which Christ hath gotten, we must hold fast that which is in another place taught of the nature of hope. For, because we hope for those things which appeare not, and (as it is said in another place) faith is a demonstration of things inuisible: so long as we are enclosed in the prison of the flesh, we are wayfaring from the Lord. For which reason the same Paul saith in another place that we are dead, and that our life is hidden with Christ in God, and that when he which is our life, shall appeare, then shall we also appeare with him in glorie. This therefore is our condition, that with liuing soberly and iustly and godly in this world, we looke for the blessed hope, and the comming of the glorie of the great God, and of our Sauour Iesus Christ. Here we neede a singular patience, that we be not wearied & either turne backe our course or forsake our standing. Therefore whatsoever hath bene hitherto set out concerning our saluation, requireth mindes lifted vp to heauen, that we may loue Christ whom we haue not seene, and beleeuing in him may reioyce with vnspcakable and glorious ioyfulness till we receiue the ende of our faith, as Peter telleth vs. After which manner, Paul saith that the faith and charitie of the godly hath respect to the hope which is laide vp in heauen. When we thus with our eies fastened vpon Christ doe hang of heauen, and nothing withholdeth them in earth from carrying vs to the promised blessednesse: then is that truly fulfilled, Our heart is where our treasure is. Hereupon commeth that faith is so rare in the worlde, because nothing is more hard to our dulnes than through innumerable steppes to climbe vp about them with endeouering forward to the price of our heauenly calling. To the great heap of miseries wherewith wee be almost ouerwhelmed, are added the mockings of vngodlie men, wherewith our simplicitie is rayled at, when voluntarilie forsaking the allurements of present good things, wee seeme to followe the blessednesse hidden from vs, as it were a fleeing shadowe. Finally aboue and beneath vs, before vs and behinde vs, violent tentations beseege vs, to the sustaining of the feare wherof our courages shoulde be farre too weake, vnlesse being vncumbered of earthly earthly things they were fast bound to the heauenly life, which in seeming is far from vs. Wherefore onely he hath soundly profited in the Gospell, which is enured to a continuall meditation of the blessed resurrection.

2 Of the soueraigne end of good things, the Philosophers haue in old time curiously disputed, and also strived among themselues: yet none except Plato acknowledged the soueraigne good of man to be his conioyning with God. But what manner of conioyning that was, he could not perceiue so much as with any small taste, and no maruell, sith hee had neuer learned of the holy bonde thereof. To vs the onelic and perfect felicitie is knowne euen in this earthly waifaring: but, such as daile more and more enkindleth our harts with desire of it, till the full enjoying may fantasie vs. Therefore I saide that none receiue suite of the benefits of Christ, but they that liue vp their mindes to the resurrection. For, Paul setteth vp this marke to the faithfull, towarde which he saith that he endeoureth, and forgetteth all things till he come to it. And so much the more cheerefully ought we to trauaile towarde it, least if this worlde withhold vs, we suffer greuous punishment for our slouthfulness. Wherefore in another place he marketh the faithfull with this marke, that their conuersation is in heauen, from whence also they looke for their Sauiour. And that their courages shoulde not faint in this race, hee ioyneth all creatures companions with them. For, because euerie where are seene deformed ruines, hee saith that all things in heauen and earth do endeouour to the renewing. For sith Adam by his fall dissolued the perfect order of nature to the creatures, their bondage is painefull and greuous, wherunto they are subiect by reason of the sin of man, not for that they are indued with any feeling, but for that they naturally couet the perfect estate frō which they are fallen. Therefore Paul saith that they groane, & are as in paine of childe-bearing, that we to whom are giuen the first fruits of the Spirit, may bee ashamed to pine away in our corruption, & not at the least to follow the dead elements, which beare paine of anothers sin. And the more to pricke vs forward, he calleth the last comming of Christ our redemption. It is true indeede that all the parts of our redemption are already fulfilled: But because Christ hath once bene offered for sinnes, he shall bee seene againe without sin vnto saluation. With what miseries fouer we be pressed, let this redemption susteine vs euen vntill the performance of it.

3 The very weight of the thing it selfe shall whet our endeouour. For neither doth Paul without cause affirme that the holy Gospell is void and decentfull, vnlesse the dead do rise againe: because our state should be more miserable than the state of all men, namely sith welying open to the hatreds and reproches of many, are euerie houre in danger, yea and are as sheepe appointed to the slaughter: and therefore the authoritie thereof should fall away not onely in one part, but also in the whole sum which both our adoption and the effect of our saluation containeth. And so let vs be heedfully bent to the most earnest thing of all, that no continuance of time may make vs wearie. For which purpose I haue deferred to this place that which I had breefie to entreate of it, that the Readers may learne, when they haue receiued Christ the authour of their saluation, to rise vp higher, and may knowe that he is clothed with heauenly immortalitie and glorie, that the whole body may be made like fashioned to the head, as also the holy Ghost oftentimes setteth foorth in his person an example of the resurrection. It is a thing hard to bee beleeued, that bodies when they haue bene consumed with rottenesse, shall at their appointed time rise vp againe. Therefore where many of the Philosophers haue affirmed soules to bee immortall, the resurrection of the flesh hath bene allowed of fewe: wherein although there was no excuse, yet we are thereby put in minde, that it is too harde a thing to drawe mans senses to belecue it. That faith may overcome so great a stop, the scripture ministreth two helps: the one is in the likenesse of Christ, the other is the almightinesse of God. Nowe so oft as the resurrection is thought of, let the image of Christ come into our mindes: which in the nature that he tooke of vs, so ranne out the race of mortall life, that now hauing obtained immortalitie, he is to vs a pledge of the resurrection to come. For in the miseries wherewith we are besieged, we carie about his mortifying in our flesh, that his life may be openlie shewed in vs. And we may not seuer him from vs, neither can we possible, but that he must be torne in sunder. Whereupon commeth that argument of Paul, If the dead do not rise againe, then neither is Christ risen againe, because verilie he taketh that principle for confessed, that Christ was not made subiect to death, nor obtained victorie of death by rising againe, priuatie for himselfe: but, that that was begun in the head which must needs be fulfilled in all the members, according to the degree and order of euerie one. For it were not right that they should in all points be made egall with him. It is said in the Psalme. Thou shalt not suffer thy meeke one to see corruption: although a portion of this trust pertaine to vs according to the measure of gift, yet the full effect hath not appeared but in Christ, which being free from all rotting hath received againe his bodie whole. Now least the fellowshipp of blessed resurrection with Christ should be doubtful to vs, that we may be contented with this pledge, Paul expresse affirmeth that he therefore sitteth in heauen, and shall come at the last day a iudge, that he may make our base and vile bodie like fashioned to the glorious bodie. In another place also he teacheth, that God raised not vp his sonne from death to the intent to shew a token of his power: but to stretch out the same effectuall force of the spirit toward vs which are faithfull: whom he therefore calleth life, while he liueth in vs, because he was giuen to this end that he should make alue that which is mortall in vs. I knit vp in a brieft abridgement those things which might both be more largelic handled, and are worthie to be more gorgeouslic set out: and yet I trust that the godlie readers shall in few words find matter enough which may suffice to edify their faith. Christ therefore is risen againe, that he might haue vs companions of the life to come. He was raised vp of the father, in so much as he was the head of the Church, from which he doth in no wise suffer himselfe to be plucked away. He was raised vp by the power of the Spirite, which is common to vs vnto the office of quickening. Finally he was raised vp, that he should be resurrection and life. But as we haue said that in this mirrour, there is to be seene of vs a luelly image of the resurrection, so let it be to vs a sure substance to stay our mind, so that yet we be not lothfull or wearie of long tarrying: because it is not our part to measure the seasons of times by our will, but patiently to rest, till God at his owne fit time repaire his kingdome. To which purpose seemeth that exhortation of Paul: The first fruites is Christ: and then they that are Christes, euerie one in his order. But that no question should be moued of the resurrection of Christ, vpon which the resurrection of vs all is founded, we see by how manie and how diuerse meanes he hath made it approoued by witness to vs. Fine nosed men will laugh at the historie which the Euangelists rehearse, as at a childish mockery. For of what importance shall the message be which fearefull silly women bring, and afterward the disciples confirme being in a manner astonished? Why did not Christ rather set vp the triumphing ensignes of his victorie in the midst of the temple and the market place? Why came he not forth terrible into the sight of Pilate? Why doth he not also proue himselfe to the priestes, and to whole Ierusalem that he is risen vp alieue againe? As for the witnesses which he chose, prophane men will scarcely grant them to be sufficient. I answer that although in these beginnings the weakenesse thereof was contemptible, yet all this was gouerned by the wonderfull prouidence of God: that partly the loue of Christ and zeale of godlinesse, and partly their owne hardnes of beleefe should carrie them in hast to the sepulchre which had lately been dismaied for feare, that they might not only be seeing witnesses of the thing, but also should heare of the Angels that which they saw with their eyes. How shall we suspeect their credite, who

thought it to be a fable which they had heard of the women, till they were brought to the present sight of the thing it felte? As for all the people and the Ruler himselfe, after that they had bin largely conuinced, it is no maruell if as well the sight of Christ, as other signes, was not graunted them. The sepulchre was sealed vp, the watchmen watched it, the third day the bodie was not found. The souldiers corrupted with mony scattered a rumor that his disciples had stolen him awaie: As though they had had power to gather a band together, or had armour, or were practised men to enterprise any such feat. If the souldiers had not courage enough to driue them away, why did they not pursue them, that with the help of the people they might haue taken some of them? Pilate therefore with his ring truly sealed the resurrection of Christ: and the watchmen which were set at the sepulchre both in their holding their peace and in their lying, were made publishers of the same resurrection. In the meane time the voice of Angels sounded, He is risen, he is not here. The heauenly glistering plainly shewed that they were not men but Angels. Afterward, if there remained any doubting, Christ himselfe tooke it away. The disciples saw him oftner than once, and also felt his feete and his hands, and their hardnes of beleueing not a little profited to the strengthening of our faith. He disputeth among them of the mysteries of the kingdom of God, and at the last in their sights beholding him, he ascended into heauen. And not onely this sight was shewed to the xi. Apostles, but also he was seene at once of more than five hundred brethren. Now when he sent the holy Ghost, he shewed a sure prooffe not onely of life, but also of the soueraigne power: as he had said before, It is profitable for you that I go: otherwise the holy Ghost shall not come. But now Paul was ouerthrown by the way, not by the strength of a dead man, but he felt him whome he persecuted to haue most high power. To Stephen he appeared for another end, namely that with assurednesse of life he might overcome the feare of death. To discredit so many authentike witnesses, is not onely a part of distrustfulnessse, but also of froward and furious stubbornnesse.

4 This which we haue said, that in prouing the resurrection our senses must be directed to the infinite power of God, Paul briefly teacheth, that he may make (saith he) our vile bodie like fashioned to the body of his brightnessse, according to the working of his power, by which he may subdue all things to himselfe. Wherefore nothing is more vnmeet, than here to haue respect what may naturally be done, where an inestimable miracle is set before vs, which with the greatnesse thereof swalloweth vp our senses. Yea, Paul by setting forth an example of nature, reprooueth their dulnes which denie the resurrection. Thou foole (saith he) that which thou sowest is not quickened vnlesse it first dye, &c. He saith that in seed is seene a forme of the resurrection, because out of rottennesse groweth corne. Neither were it so hard a thing to beleue, if we were as heedfull as we ought to be to the miracles which throughout all the coasts of the world do offer themselves to our eyes. But let vs remember that none is truly perswaded of the resurrection to come, but he which being rauished into admiration, giueth to the power of God his glorie. Isay lifted vp with this assurance, crieth out, Thy dead shall liue, my carcase shall rise againe. Awake ye, and praise, ye dwellers of the dust. In depaired case he listeth vp himselfe to God the author of life, in whose hand are the ends of death, as it is said in the Psalme. Iob also being liker to a carrion than to a man, trusting vpon the power of God, sticketh not as though he were whole and sound to lift vp himselfe to that day, saying, I know that my redeemer liueth: and in the last day he shall rise vpon the dust (namely to shew forth his power therein) and I shall againe be compassed with my skinne, and in my flesh I shall see God, I shall see him, and none other. For albeit that some do furtlely wrest these places, as though they ought not to be vnderstand of the resurrection, yet they strengthen that which they couer to ouerthrow: because the holy men in their euils seeke comfort from no where else than from the likeness of the

the resurrection. Which better appeereth by the place of Ezechiel. For when the Iewes beleued not the promise of their returne, and objected that it was no more likely that a way should be made open for them, than that dead men should come out of their graue: there was a vision shewed to the Prophet, a field full of drie bones: those the Lord commaunded to take againe flesh and sinewes. Although vnder that figure he raiseth vp the people to hope of returne: yet the matter of hoping he gathereth of the resurrection: as it is to vs an exemplar of the deliuerances which the faithfull doe feele in this worlde. So Christ when he had taught that the voice of the Gospell giueth life: because the Iewes receiued not this, he by and by saide further: Maruell not at this, because the hower commeth in which all that are in the graues shall heare the voice of the sonne of God, and shall come forth. Therefore after this example of Paul, let vs already cheerefully triumph in the midst of battels, because he which hath promised life to come, is mightie to keepe that which is left with him: and so let vs glorie that a crowne of righteousnesse is laide vp for vs, which the iust iudge shall deliuer vs. So shall it come to passe, that whatsoeuer grieues we suffer, they shall be to vs a shewing of the life to come, because it agreeth with the nature of God to render affliction to the wicked which afflict vs: but to vs which are vniustly afflicted, rest at the appeering of Christ with the Angels of his power, in a flame of fire. But that is to be holden which he addeth by and by afterward, that he shall come that he may be glorified in his Saints, and be made woonderfull in all them that haue beleued, because the Gospell hath bene beleued.

5 But although the mindes of men ought to haue bene continually occupied in this studie: yet as though they would of set purpose destroy all remembrance of the resurrection, they haue called death the vtermost bond of all things and the destruction of man. For verily Salomon speaketh of the common and receiued opinion, when he saith that a liuing dog is better than a dead Lion. And in another place: Who knoweth whether the soule of a man goe vwarde, and the soule of a beast downeward? But in all ages this brutish senselesse error hath bene common in the world, yea and hath broken into the Church it selfe: for the Sadduces haue presumed to professe openly that there is no resurrection, yea and that soules are mortall. But that this grosse ignorance should not helpe to excuse any man, the infidels euen by very instinct of nature haue alway had an image of the resurrection before their eyes. For to what purpose serued that holy and inuolable manner of burying, but to be an earnest of new life? Neither may it be answered that this spring of error: because the religiousnesse of buriall was alway in vre among the holy Fathers, and God willed the same maner to remain among the Gentiles, that an image of the resurrection set before them might awake their drowinesse. But although that ceremonie wanted his vse of profiting, yet it is profitable for vs if we wisely marke the ende of it, because it is no slender confutation of vnbeleefe, that altogether professed that which no man beleued. But Satan hath not onely astonished the senses of men, so that they haue buried with the bodies the remembrance of the resurrection, but also hath practised to corrupt this parte of doctrine with diuers fained inuentions, that at length it might vtterly die. I passe ouer how in Pauls time Satan began to pinch at it: but in a litle after there followed the Millenaries, which limited the raigne of Christ to a thousand yeeres. This error is childish, that it needeth not or is not woorthie of any confutation. Neither doth the Reuelation make on their side, by which it is certaine that they coloured their error: for as much as in the place where he mentioneth the number of a thousand, he entreateth not of the eternall blessednesse of the Church, but onely of the diuers troubles which were to come vpon the Church while it yet trauelled in earth. But the whole Scripture crieth out that there shall be no end of the blessednesse of the elect, nor of the punishment of the reprobate. Now of all things which both are hidden from our sight and doe fare passe the capacite of our minde,

either we must fetch the credite out of the certaine oracles of God, or we must vtterly cast it awaie. They which assigne to the children of God a thousand yeeres to enjoy the inheritance of the life to come, do not marke how great a dishonor they do both to Christ and his kingdome. For if they shall not be clothed with immortallitie: then neither is Christ himselfe, to whose glory they shall be newly fashioned, receiued into the immortall glorie. If their blessednesse shall haue any end: then the kingdome of Christ, vpon the itedfastnes whereof it standeth, endureth but for a time. Finally, either they are most vnskillfull of all matter concerning God, or they go about with crooked malicioufnes to ouerthrow the whole grace of God, and power of Christ, the fulfilling whereof is no otherwise perfect, but when sinne being blot- ted out and death swallowed vp, eternal life is fully restored. But very blind men may see how fondly they plaie the fooles: which feare that they should ascribe to God too great cruelty if the reprobate be condemned to euerlasting paines. The Lord forsooth shall do wrong, if he deny his kingdome to them which haue by their vn- thankefulnesse made themselues vnworthy of it. But (say they) their sinnes endure but for a time. I graunt: but the maiestie, yea and the righteousnes of God which they haue offended by sinning, is eternall. Worthily therefore the remembrance of iniquitie dieth not: But so the paine exceedeth the measure of the fault. This is a blasphemic not to be suffered, when the maiefty of God is so little set by, when the despising thereof is esteemed at no greater value than the destruction of one soule. But let vs leaue these trifles, least contrary to that which we haue before said, we may seeme to iudge their dotages worthy of confutation.

6 Before these, there haue bin two other doting errors brought in by men per- uerfly curious. The one sort thought, as though the whole man died, that the soules shall rise againe with the bodies. The other forasmuch as they graunt that the soules be immortall spirites, saie that they shall be clothed with new bodies: whereby they denie the resurrection of the flesh. Of the first sort, because I haue touched somewhat in speaking of the creation of man, it shall be enough for me to warne the readers a- gaine, how beastly an error it is to make of a spirit fashioned after the image of God, a vanishing blast which doth nothing but quicke the body in this fraile life, and to bring the temple of the holy Ghost to nothing. Finally, to spoile that part of vs where- in diuinenesse chiefly shineth and marks of immortallitie appeare, to spoile it (I say) of this gift: so that the estate of the body should be better and more excellent than the estate of the soule. The scripture teacheth far otherwise, which compareth the bodie to a cotage, out of which it sayeth that we remoue when we die, because it esteemeth vs by that part which maketh vs differing from brute beasts. So Peter being nigh to death, sayth that the time is come, when he must lay away his tent. And Paul speak- ing of the faithfull, after that he hath said: That when our earthly house shall be dis- solved, there is a building for vs in heauen, adioyneth that we are wayfaring from the Lord so long as we abide in the bodie, but do desire the presence of God in the ab- sence of the bodie. If the soules doe not ouerliue the bodies, what is it that hath God present when it is seuered from the body? But the Apostle taketh away all doubting, when he teacheth that wee are ioyned in fellowship to the spirites of the righteous. Hcb. 12. 23.

By which wordes he sheweth, that we are ioyned in fellowship to the holy fathers, which euen being dead do keepe the same godlinesse with vs, so that we cannot be the members of Christ vlesse we growe together with them. Vnlesse also the soules being vnclodded of the bodies, did keepe still their substance and were able to receiue blessed glorie, Christ would not haue saide to the theefe: This day thou shalt be with me in Paradise. Hauing so cleare testimonies, let vs not doubt after the example of Christ when we are dying, to commend our soules to God, or after the example of Stephen to commit them to Christ to keepe, which not vnworthily is called a faithfull shepherd and Bishop of them. To enquire of their meane state, is neither lawfull nor expedient. Many doe much comberthemselues with disputing what place they keepe, and whether they doe now enjoy the heavenly glory or no. But it is folly and rashnes, to search deeeper of vnknown things, than God doth giue vs leaue to know. When the Scripture hath saide that Christ is present with them, and receiue them into Paradise that they may enjoy comfort, on the other side that the soules of the reprobate doe suffer such paines as they haue deserued: it goeth no further. What teacher or Master shall now open to vs that which God hath hidden? Of the place, the question is no lesse sonde and vaine: forasmuch as wee knowe that there is not the same dimension of the Soule which is of the bodie. Whereas the blessed gathering together of holy Spirites is called the bosom of Abraham, it is enough for vs after this waifaring to be receiued of the common father of the Faithfull, that hee may communicate with vs the fruite of his Faith. In the meane time sith the Scripture euery where biddeth vs to hang upon the expectation of Christs comming, and deserreth the crowne of glory till then: let vs be content with these bonds appointed vs of God: namely, that the Soules of the godly hauing ended the labor of their warfare doe goe into a blessed rest, where with happie ioyfulness they looke for the enjoying of the promised glory: & that so all things are holden in suspense till Christ the redeemer appeare. As for the reprobate, it is no doubt that they haue the same estate which Iude assigneth to the diuels, to be holden bound with chaines, till they be drawn to the punishment whereunto they are condemned.

7 No lesse monstrous is their error which imagine that Soules shall not receiue againe the same bodies wherewith they are now clothed, but shall haue newe and other bodies. And the reason of the Manichees was very trifling, that is, that it is not meete that flesh which is vnclane should rise againe. As though there were no vnclannesse of Soules, which yet they debarred not from the hope of euerlasting life. It was therefore all one as if they should say that that which is infected with the filth of sinne cannot be cleansed by God. For I now passe ouer that dotage, that flesh was naturally vnclane, because it was creat of the Diuell: Onely I shew that what/oeuer is now in vs vnworthie of heauen, it hindereth not the resurrection. And first whereas Paul biddeth the Faithfull to cleanse themselues from all defiling of the flesh and of the Spirit, thereupon followeth the iudgement which he in another place pronounceth, that euery man shall receiue by his body either good or euill. Wherwith agreeeth that which he writeth to the Corinthians, That the life of Iesus Christ may be openly shewed in our mortall flesh. For which reason in another place he doth no lesse pray that God preferue the bodies whole vnto the day of Christ, than the Soules and Spirites. And no maruell, because it were a most great absurditie that the bodies which God hath dedicate to be temples to himselfe, should fall away into rottennesse without hope of rising againe. What say we to this, that they are also the members of Christ? that God commandeth all the parts of them to be sanctified to himselfe? that he willeth his name to be praised with tongues, pure hands to be lifted vp to him, sacrifices to be offered? What madnesse is it therefore that that parte to which the heavenly Iudge hath vouchsafed to grant so great honor, should be brought from a mortall man into dust without any hope of restoring? Likewise when Paul exhorteth vs to suffer the Lord as well in body as in Soule, because both belong to God, verily he suffereth not that which he chalengeth to God as holy, to be adiudged to eternall rottennes. Neither is there a plainer determination of the Scripture for any thing, than for the rising againe of this flesh which we beare. This corruptible (saith Paul) must put on vncorruption, and this mortall must put on immortalitye. If God did make new bodies, where is this changing of quality? If it had been said that we must be renewed, the doubtfull speech peradventure mought haue giuen occasion to their caullation. But now when pointing with his finger to the bodies wherewith we are clothed, he promiseth to the vn corruptio, he plainly enough denieth any any new bodies to be made. Yea he coulde not (saith Tertullian) speake more plainly, vnlesse he had holden his owne skin in his hande. And they can by no cauation escape from this, that where in another place he saith that Christ shall be the iudge of the world, he alleageth this testimome of Esaie, I lue (saith the Lord) euery knee shall bow to me: for as much as he plainly pronounceth that they to whom he speaketh shall be subiect to yeeld an account of their life, which could not agree, if new bodies should be brought before the iudgement seat. Now in the words of Daniel there is no doubtfulnesse: And many of them that sleepe in the earth of dust, shall awake, some to eternall life, and some to reproches and to euerlasting contempr: sith he fetcheth not new matter out of the foure elements to make men, but calleth dead men out of their graues. And this very plaine reason teacheth. For if mortalitie which tooke beginning at the fall of man, be accidental: then the repairing which Christ brought, pertaineth to the same bodie which began to be mortal. And truly, whereas the Athenians laughed when Paul affirmed the resurrection, thereupon we may gather what manner of resurrection he preached: and that same laughing not finally aualeth to strengthen our faith. The saying of Christ also is woorthie to be noted. Feare them not which kill the bodie, and cannot kill the soule: but feare him which can throwe both the soule and the body into hell fire. For there is no cause to feare, vnlesse the body which we now beare be subiect to punishment. And no lesse plaine is another saying of the same Christ. The hower commeth, when all they that are in graues, shall heare the voice of the sonne of God, and shall come forth: they that haue done good, into the resurrection of life: but they that haue done euill, into the resurrection of iudgement. Shall we say that soules rest in the graues, that they lying there may heare Christ? and not rather that at his commaundement the bodies shall retorne into the liuelinesse which they had lost? Moreouer if we shall haue new bodies giuen vs, where is the like fashioning of the head and the members? Christ rose againe: was it with forging to himselfe a new body? No, but as he had said before, Destroy this temple, and in three daies I will builde it vp: he tooke againe the same body which hee had before borne mortall. For he had not much profited vs, if a new body being put in place, the olde body had bene destroyed which was offered vp for a sacrifice of satisfactorie cleuning. We must also hold fast that fellowship which the Apostle preacheth. That we rise againe, becauie Christ hath risen againe: for nothing is lesse probable than that our flesh in which we beare about the mortifying of Christ, should be deprived of the resurrection of Christ. Which verily appeared by a notable example, when at the rising againe of Christ many bodies of the Saintes came out of the graues. For it cannot be denied that this was a foreshewing, or rather an earnest of the last resurrection which we hope for: such as was before in Enoch and Elias, whom Tertullian calleth New possessors of the resurrection: becauie they being in bodie and soule deliuered from corruption, were receued into the keeping of God.

8 I am ashamed in so cleere a matter to spend so many wordes: but the readers shall contentedly beare this trouble with me, that no hole may be open for frowarde and bold wits to deceiue the simple. The fleeing spirits with whom I nowe dispute, bring forth a fained inuention of their owne braine that at the resurrection there shall be a creation of new bodies. What reason moueth them to think so, but becauie it seemeth to them incredible, that a carion consumed with so long rottennes should retorne into his auncient state? Therefore onely vnbeliefe is the mother of this opinion. But vs on the other side the Spirit of God ech where in the Scripture exhorteth to hope for the resurrection of the flesh. For this reason baptisime (as Paul witnesseth) is to vs a seale of the resurrection to come: and likewise the holy Supper allureth vs to the trust thereof, when we receiue with our mouth the signes of spirituall grace. And truly the whole exhortation of Paul, that we giue our members to be weapons vnto the obedience of righteousness, should be cold vnlesse that were joyned which he addeth afterward. He that hath raised vp Christ from the dead, shall quicken also your mortall bodies. For, what should it profite to apphe our teete, handes, eyes, and tooings, vnto the seruice of God, vnlesse they were partakers of the fruit & rewarde? Which thing Paul plainly confirmeth with his owne wordes, saying: The body not to fornication, but to the Lord: and the Lord to the body. And he that hath raised vp Christ, shall also raise vs by vp his power. More plaine are those wordes which follow: that our bodies are the temples of the holie Ghost and the members of Christ. In the meane time we see how he ioyneth the resurrection with chastitie and holinesse, as a litle after hee saith that the price of redemption pertainerh also to the bodies. Nowe it were not reasonable that the body of Paul, in which hee hath borne the prints of Christ, & in which he honorable glorified Christ, should loose the rewarde of the crowne. Whereupon also came that glorying. We looke for the redeemer from heauen, which shall make our vile body like fauoured to the bodie of his brightnes. And if this be true, that we must by many afflictions enter into the kingdom of God, no reason suffreth to debarre the bodies from this entrie which God both exerciseth vnder the stander of the crosse, and honoureth with the praise of victorie. Therefore of this matter there arose among the Saints no doubting, but that they hoped to be companions of Christ, which remooueth in o his owne person all the afflictions wherewith we are proued, to teach that they bring life. Yea and vnder the lawe hee exercised the holie fathers in this faith with an outward ceremonie. For to what purpose serued the vsage of burying, as wee haue already shewed, but that they should knowe that there is newe life prepared for the bodies that are laid vp? Hee unto also tended the spices and other signes of immortalitie, wherewith vnder the lawe the darkenesse of faith was holpen euen as it was by the sacrifices. Neither was that manner bredde by superstition, forasmuch as we see that the spirite doth no lesse diligentlie rehearse burials than the chiefe mysteries of faith. And Christ commendeth that worke as a speciall worke, truly for none other reason but because it lieth vp our eyes from beholding of the graue which corrupteth and destroyeth all, to the sight of the reuuing. Moreover the so diligent obseruing of the ceremonie which is praised in the fathers, sufficiently prouoeth that it was to them a rare and precious helpe of faith. For neither would Abraham haue so carefully prouided for the burying place of his wife, vnlesse there had bene set before his eyes a religion and a profite hyer than the world, namely that garnishing the dead body of his wife with the signes of the resurrection he might confirme both his owne faith and the faith of his houlhoide. But a clearer prooffe of this thing appereth in the example of Jacob, which to testifie to his posteritie that the hope of the promised land was not euen by death fallen out of his minde, commanded his bones to be carried thither. I beseech you, if he was to be clothed with a newe body, should he not haue giuen a sonde commandement concerning dust that should be brought to nothing? Wherefore if the authoritie of the Scripture be of any force with vs, there can be required of no doctrine either a moie cleare or more certaine prooffe. For this euen children vnderstand by the words of resurrection, and raising vp againe. For neither can we call it the resurrection of that which is now first created, neither should that saying of Christ stand fast, Whatsoeuer the Father hath giuen me, it shall not perish but I will raise it vp in the last day. To the same purpose serueth the word of Sleeping, which pertaineth onely to the bodies. Whereupon also burying places were called Cameteria, Sleeping places. Nowe it remaineth that I speake somewhat of the manner of the resurrection. I vse this word, because Paul calling it a mysterie, exhorteth vs to sobrietie, and bridleth the libertie to dispute like Philosophers freely and suttly of it. First we must holde, as we haue said, that we shall rise againe in the same flesh which wee beare, as touching the substance, but the qualitie shall be other. As when the same flesh of Christ which had bene offered for sacrifice, was raised vp againe, yet it excelled in other qualities as if it had beene altogether another flesh. Which thing Paul declareth by familiar examples. For as there is all one substance of the flesh of a man, and of a beast, but not all one quality: as all starres haue like matter, but not like brightnesse: so he teacheth that though we shall keepe still the substance of our body, yet there shall be a change, that the state of it may be much more excellent. The booke therefore, that we may be raised vp againe, shall not perish nor vanish away: but putting off corruption, it shall put on vncorruption. But for as much as God hath all the elements ready at his becke, no hardiuesse shall hinder him, but that he may command both the earth & waters & fire, to render that which seemeth to be consumed by them. Which also Esay testifieth though not without a figure, when he saith, Behold, the Lord shall go forth of his place, that he may visit the iniquitie of the earth: and the earth shall discouer her bloud, and shall no more hide her dead. But there is to be noted a difference betweene them that haue beene dead long before, & those whom that day shall finde aliuie. For we shall not all sleepe (as Paul saith) but we shall all be changed: that is to say, it shall not be of necessitie that there be a distance of time betwene death and the beginning of the second life: because in a moment of time, and in the twinkling of an eye the sound of the trumpet shall pearce, to raise vp the dead vncorruptible, and with a sudden change to fashion againe the liuing into the same glorie. So in another place he comforteth the faithfull which must die: because they which shall then remaine aliuie shall not go before the dead, but rather they shall first rise againe which haue slept in Christ. If any object that saying of the Apostle, that it is appointed to all mortall men once to die, it is easie to answer it with saying that when the state of nature is changed, it is a kinde of death, and is fitly so called. And therefore these things agree well together, that all shall be renewed by death when they shall put off their mortall body: and yet that it is not necessarie that there be a seuering of the body and the soule where there shall be a sudden changing.

9 But here ariseth a harder question: by what right the resurrection which is the singular benefite of Christ is common also to the wicked and the accused of God. We know that all were in Adam condemned to the death. Christ came the resurrection and life. Came he to giue life to all mankind vniuersally without choyse? But what is more against reason than that, that they should by their obstinate blindness obtaine that which the godly worshippers of God doe obtaine by onely faith? Yet this remaineth certaine, that there shall be one resurrection of iudgement, & another resurrection of life, and that Christ shall come to seuer the Lambes from the goates. I answer, that this ought not to seeme strange, the likenesse wherof we see in daily experience. We see that in Adam we were depriv'd of the inheritance of the whole world, and that we are by no lesse iust reason, debarred from common food, than from the eating of the tree of life. Whence then commeth it to passe, that God doth not only make his iustice to rise vp on the good and euill, but also as touching the vses of this present life, his mercifull liberalitie continually floweth forth to them with large plentifultie. Hereby veniy we know that those things which properly belong to Christ and his members, doe also ouerflow to the wicked, not that it is their rightfull possession, but that they may be made the more inexcusable. So the wicked doe oftentimes finde God beneficiall, by more than meane prouides, yea such as sometime doe darken all the blessings of the godly, but yet do turne to their greater damnation. If any man object, that the resurrection is not fitly compared to rising and earthly benefite: here also I answer that so soone as they were estranged from God the fountaine of life, they deserued the death of the Diuell, whereby they should be vterly destroyed. Yet by the maruellous counsell of God there was found a meane ste that out of life they might liue in death. No more absurditie ought it to seeme, if the resurrection happen to the wicked, which draweth them against their will to the iudgement seate of Christ, whome now they refuse to heare for their master and teacher. For it were a small paine to be consumed away with death, if they were not to suffer punishment for their obstinacie, brought before the iudge, whose vengeance they haue without end and measure prouoked against themselves. But although we must holde that which we haue saide, and which that notable confession of Paul before Felix containeth, that he looketh for the resurrection of the righteous and wicked: yet the Scripture oftentimes setteth fourth election together with the heavenly glorie to the onely children of God: Because Christ properly came not to the destruction, but to the saluation of the world. Therefore in the Creede there is made mention of the blessed life ouely.

10 But for as much as the prophecie of death swallowed vp by victorie, shall then and not till then be fulfilled: let vs alway haue in minde the eternall felicitie, the end of the resurrection: of the excellencie whereof, if all things were spoken which the tongues of men were able to speake, yet scarcely the smallest parcel thereof should be expressed. For howsoeuer we truly heare that the kingdome of God shall be stuffed full with brightnesse, ioye, felicitie, and glorie: yet those things that are spoken of are most farre removed from our sense, and remaine as it were wrapped in darke speeches, vntill that day come when he himselfe shall giue to vs his glorie to be seene face to face. We knowe (saith John) that we are the children of God, but it hath not yet appeared. But when we shall be like to him, then we shall see him such as he is. Wherefore the Prophets, because they could by no wordes expresse the spirituall blessednesse in it selfe, did in a manner grossely portray it out vnder bodily things. But for as much as the feruentnesse of desire must with some taste of that sweetenesse be kindled in vs, let vs chiefly continue in this thought, that if God do as a certaine fountaine which cannot be drawn dry, containe in him the fulnesse of al good things, nothing is beyond him to be coueted of them that tend toward the soueraigne good and the full perfection of felicitie: as we are taught in many places. Abraham, I am thy reward exceeding great. With which saying accordeth David. The Lorde is my portion, the lot hath vey well fallen to me. Againe in another place, I shall be satisfied with thy countenance. But Peter pronounceth that the faithfull are called to this end, that they may be made partakers of the nature of God. How so; because he shall be glorified in all his saints, and shall be made woonderfull in them that haue beleued. If the Lord will enterparten his glorie, power, and righteousnesse with his elect, yea and will giue himselfe to them to be enjoyed, and (which is better) will after a certaine manner grow into one with them: let vs remember that vnder this benefit is contained all kind of felicitie. And when we haue much profited in this meditation, let vs reknowlege that we yet stay beneath at the bottome of the rootes, if the conceiuing of our minde be compared with the highnesse of this mysterie. Wherefore in this behalfe we must keepe sobrietie, least with how much greater boldnesse we shall flie vp on high being vnmindfull of our owne small measure, so much more the brightnesse of the heavenly glorie ouerwhelme vs. We feele also how the vnmeasurable greedinesse to know more than is lawfull, tickleth vs: from whence both trifling and hurtfull questions doe spring from time to time: trifling I call those of which there can no profite be gathered. But this second kinde is worse, because they which giue themselves to them, doe entangle themselves with pernicious speculations, and therefore I call them hurtfull. That which the Scriptures doe teach, ought to be out of all doubt with vs: namely that as God diuerly distributing his gifts to the Saints in this worlde, doth vnequally enlighten them, so the measure of glorie shall not be equal in heauen where God shall crowne his gifts. For neither doth this belong indifferently to all which Paul saith: Ye are my glory and crown in the day of Christ: nor also that saying of Christ to the Apostles: Yee shall sit iudging the twelue tribes of Israel. But Paul (which knew that as God enricheth the holy ones with spirituall gifts in earth, so hee beautifieth them with glorie in heauen) doubteth not that there is a peculiar crowne laid vp for him according to the rate of his labours. And Christ to set forth to the Apostles the dignitie of the office which they did beare, telleth them that the fruite thereof is laide vp for them in heauen. So Daniel also saith, Dan. 12. 3.

 But the wise shall shine as the brightnes of the firmament, and they which iustifie manie, as Starres to the worlds end and for euer. And if a man heedfully consider the Scriptures, they do not onely promise eternall life to the faithfull, but also speciaall reward to euerie one. Whereupon commeth that saying of Paul, The Lorde render to him in that day. Which the promise of Christ confirmeth, Yee shall receiue a hundred folde in the eternall life. Finallie, as Christ beginneth in this world the glorie of his bodie with manifold diuersitie of gift, and encreaseth it by degrees: so he shall also make it perfect in heauen. 2.Tim. 4. 1. & Math. 19. 29.

11 But as all the godly will receiue this with one consent, because it is sufficiently testified by the word of God. so on the other side leauing crabbed questions, which they shall knowe to bee a hinderance to them, they will not passe their appointed boundes. As for my part, I do not onely priuately forbear superfluous searching of vnpromisable things, but I also thinke that I ought to beware that I doe not with answering nourish the lightnes of other. Men hungrie of vaine knowledge do aske how great shall be the distance betweene the Prophets and the Apostles, and againe betweene the Apostles and the Martyrs: how many degrees Virgins differ from married folkes: Finally, they leaue no corner of heauen vnsearched. Then it commeth to their mindes to enquire to what purpose serueth the repairing of the world, sith the children of God shall neede nothing of all this so great and incomparable plentie: but shall be like to the Angels, whose not eating is a signe of the eternall blessednes. But I answer that in the very sight there shall be so great pleasantues, so great sweetenesse in the onely knowledge without any vse, that this felicitie shall faine passe all the helpes where with we be now holpen. Let vs imagine our selues to bee set in the most wealthie coast of the world, and where wee shall want no pleasure: yet whols there whom his sickenes doe not sometime hinder and not suffer to vse the benefites of God? who is there whose course his owne intemperance doth not oft breake in sunder? Whereupon followeth that a cleare enjoying and pure from all faulte, although there be no vse of corruptible life, is the perfection of felicitie. Some go further and aske whether drosse and other corruptions in metalls, be not faire from refining and are contrarie to it. Which though in some respects I graunt, yet I looke with Paul for the repairing of these faults which tooke their beginning at sinne, toward which repairing they grone and are in trauaile. Yet they proceed further, and aske what better estate is prepared for man, sith the blessing of issue shall then be at an end. This knot is also easie to be loosed. Whereas the Scripture so honorably setteth out that kind of blessing, that is referred to the encreases wherewith God continually draweth forward the order of nature her marke: but in the perfection it is known that there is an other maner. But sith the vnware are easily taken with allurements, & then the maze draweth them in deaplier, & at length when euery mans demises please himselfe there is no end of struiuing: therefore let this be a short way for vs, to be contented with the glasse and darke speech vntill we shall see face to face. For fewe of a great multitude care which way they may go to heauen: but all do before their time couet to know what is done there. All being commonly sluggish and slowe to enter into battailes, do already paint out to themselues imagined triumphs.

12 Now because no description can match the greuousnes of the vengeance of God vpon the reprobate, their torments and paines are figured to vs by bodilie things, namely by darknesse, weeping, gnashing of teeth, vnquencheable fire, and a worme endlesly gnawing the hart. For by such manners of speech it is certaine that the holy Ghost meant to trouble all our senses with horroure: as when it is saide that there is prepared from eternitie a deepe Hell, that the nourishmentes thereof are fire and much woode : that the blaſt of the Lord, as a ſtreame of brimſtone, doth ſet it on fire. As by ſuch things we muſt be holpen after a certaine manner to conceue the miſerable ſtate of the wicked, ſo we ought chiefly to faſten our thought vpon this how wretched a thing it is to be eſtranged from the fellowſhip of God: and not that onely, but alſo to feele the maieſtie of God ſo bent againſt thee, that thou canſt not eſcape but be faſt ſtrained of it. For firſt his diſpleaſure is like a moſt violent fire, with touching whereof all things are deuoured and ſwallowed vp. Then, all creatures ſo ſerue him to execute his iudgement, that they to whom the Lord ſhall ſo ſhew his wrath, ſhall feele the heauen, earth, ſea, and beaſts, as it were with cruell indignation enflamed againſt them and armed to their deſtruction. Wherefore it is no ſmall thing that the Apoſtle pronounceth, when he ſaith that the vnbeleeuing ſhall ſuffer eternall puniſhment by dying from the face of the Lord, and from the glorie of his power. And ſo oft as the Prophets do caſt vs in feare with bodily figures, although they ſpeake nothing exceſſively for our dulnes, yet they adde foreſhewings of the iudgement to come, in the Sunne and the Moone and the whole frame of the world. Wherefore the vnhappy conſciences do finde no reſt, from being vexed and toſſed with a terrible whilwinde, from feeling themſelues to be torne in peeces by God being angerly bent againſt them, from being pearced and launced with deadly ſtings, from trembling at the lightning of God, and being brooded with the weight of his hand: ſo that it is much more eaſe to enter into all bottomleſſe deptes and deuouring pits, than to ſtand one moment in thoſe terrors. What and how great then is this, to be preſſed with euerlaſting and neuer ceaſing ſiege of him? Of which thing the 90. Pſalme containeth a notable ſentence: that although with onely ſight he ſcatter abroad all mortall men and bring them to nought, yet his worſhippers, how much more fearefull they are in the world, ſo much more he enforceth them and pricketh them forward loaden with the croſſe, vntill he be all in all.

Of the true Church with which we ought to keepe vnitie, becauſe it is the mother of all the godly.

*The ſumme of the former booke, and the drift of this

Hat by Faith of the Goſpell Chriſt is become ours, and we be made partakers of the ſaluation brought by him and of eternall bleſſednes, is already declared in the laſt booke. But becauſe our rudenes and ſlothfulnes, yea and vanitie of wit, do neede outward helps whereby Faith in vs may both be engendred, and grow and increaſe in proceeding toward the marke whereunto it tendeth: God hath alſo added them thereby to prouide for our weaknes. And that the Preaching of the Goſpel might flouriſh, he hath left this treaſure with the church. He hath appointed Paſtors and teachers, by whoſe mouth he might teach them that be his: he hath furniſhed them with authority, finally he

he hath left nothing vndone that might auaille to the holy consent of Faith, and right order. First of all he hath ordeined Sacraments, which we feele by experience to be more than profitabie helpes to nourish and confirme Faith. For because being enclosed in the prison of our flesh, we do not yet attaine to the degree of Angels, God applying himselfe to our capacitie according to his wonderfull prouidence, hath appointed a meane whereby we being farre distant from him might come vnto him. Wherefore the order of teaching requireth that now we entreat of the Church, and of the government, orders and power of it, and then of the Sacraments, and lastly of the ciuill order: and therewithall that we call away the godly readers from those corruptions wherewith Satan in the Papacie hath deprauid all things that God hath appointed for our saluation. I will begin at the Church, into whose bosome God will haue his children to be gathered together, not only that they should by her helpe and ministerie be nourished while they are infants and yoong children, but also be ruled by her motherly care till they grow to riper age, and at length come to the marke of Faith. For it is not lawfull that those things be seuered which God hath conioyned, that to whome he is a Father, the Church be also their mother: and that not onely vnder the law, but also since the comming of Christ, as Paul witnesseth, which teacheth that we are the children of the new and heavenly Hierusalem. Mat. 10. 9.
Gal. 8. 26.

2 In the Creede, where we professeth that we beleuee the Church, that is not spoken onely of the visible Church whereof we now intreat, but of all the elect of God, in whose number they are also comprehended that are departed by death. And therefore this word Beleeue is there set, because oftentimes there can no other difference be noted betweene the children of God and the vngodly, between his peculiar flocke and sauage beastes. For whereas many doe interlace this word, In, that is without probable reason. I graunt in deede that it is the more commonly vsed, and also wanteth not the consenting testimony of antiquitie, forasmuch as euen the Nicen Creede, as it is reported in the Ecclesiasticall historie, addeth the preposition, In. But there withall we may marke by the writings of the auncient Fathers, that it was received without countourtie to say, that they beleuee the Church and not in the Church. For Augustine, & that auncient writer whatsoever he was, whose worke remaineth vnder the name of Cyprian concerning the exposition of the Creede, doe not only so speake themselves, but also doe expressly note that it should be an vnproper manner of speaking if the preposition were adioyned, and they confirme their opinion with no trifling reason. For we therefore testifie that we beleuee in God because vpon him as a true speaker our minde reposeth it selfe, and in him our confidence resteth, which could not so conueniently be spoken to say in the Church no more than it could be saide, I beleuee in the forgueneesse of sinnes, or in the resurreccion of the flesh. Therefore although I would not strue about wordes, yet I had rather follow the proprietie of speaking that should be fittest to expresse the matter, than curiously to seeke for formes of speech whereby the matter may without cause be darkened. But the ende is, that we should know that although the diuell attempt all meanes to ouerthrow the grace of Christ, and though the enemies of God be carried with violent rage to the same intent: yet it cannot be extinguished, nor the blood of Christ be made barren, but that it will bring forth some fruite. And so is both the secrete election of God and his inward calling to be considered: because he alone knoweth who be his, and holdeth them inclosed vnder a seale as Paul teareth it: Eph. 1. 13. saying that they beare his tokens whereby they may be seuerally knowne from the reprobate. But because a small and contemptible number lieth hid vnder a huge multitude, and a few graines of wheate are couered with a heape of chaffe, to God onely is to be left the knowledge of his Church, the foundation wherof is his secret election. But it is not sufficient to conceiue in thought and minde the multitude of the elect, vnlesse we thinke vpon such an vnitie of the Church into which we be truly perswaded perswaded that we our selues be ingrafted. For vnlesse we be vnder our head Christ vnited together with all the rest of his members, there abideth for vs no hope of the inheritance to come. It is therefore called Catholike or vniuersall, because we cannot finde two or three Churches but that Christ must be torne insunder, which cannot be done. But all the elect of God are so knit together in Christ, that as they hang vpon one head, so they may grow together as it were into one bodie, cleauing together with such a compacting of ioints as the members of one selfe bodie: being truly made one, which with one hope, Faith, Charitie, with one selfe spirit of God do liue together, being called not onely into one inheritance of eternall life, but also into one partaking of one God and Christ. Wherefore although the sorrowfull desolation that on each side presenteth it selfe in sight, crieth out that there is nothing left of the Church, yet let vs know that Christes death is fruitfull, and that God maruelouslie as it were in secret corners preferueth his Church. As it was saide to Elias, I haue kept to my selfe seuen thousand men that haue not bowed their knee before Baal.

1. Reg. 19. 18.
The article of the Creed touching the Church, concerneth
after a sort the visible Church, whereunto the communion of Saints being added containeth four speciall states of faith.

3 Albeit this article of the Creede doth in some respect belong to the outward Church, that euerie one of vs should hold himselfe in brotherly consent with all the children of God, should yeelde vnto the Church that authoritie which it deserueth, finallye should so behaue himselfe as a Sheepe of the flocke. And therefore is adioyned the communion of Saintes. Which parcell, although commonly the olde writers doe leaue it out, yet is it not to be neglected: because it verie well expresth the qualitie of the Church: as if it had bene saide that the Saints are gathered together into the fellowship of Christ with this condition, that whatsoever benefites God bestoweth vpon them, they should continually communicate them one to another. Whereby yet the diuersitie of graces is not taken away. As we know that the giftes of the holy Ghost are diuersly distributed: neither is the order of ciuill government disturbed, by which it is lawfull for euerie man priuately to enjoy his owne possessions, as it is necessarie, that for preferuation of peace among men, they shoulde haue among themselves peculiar and diuided properties of things. But there is a communitie affirmed such as Luke describeth, that of the multitude of the beleeuers there was one hart & one soule: and Paul, when he exhorteth the Epheſians to be one body, one spirit as they be called in one hope. For it is not possible, if they be truly perswaded that God is the common father, & the common head to them all, but that being conioyned among themselves with brotherly loue, they should continually communicate those things that they haue. Now it much behooueth vs to know what profit thereupon returneth vnto vs. For we beleue the Church to this ende, that we may be certainly perswaded that we are the members or it. For by this meane, our saluation resteth vpon sure founde staies, that it, although the whole frame of the world be shaken, cannot come to ruine and fall downe. First it standeth with Gods election, neither can it varie or faile but together with his eternall Providence. Then, it is after a certaine maner ioyned with the stedfastnes of Christ, which will no more suffer his faithfull to be plucked from him, than his owne members to be rent and torne in peeces. Beside that, we are assured that truth shall alway abide with vs, so long as we are holden in the bosome of the Church. Last of all that we feele that these promises belong to vs, there shall be saluation in Syon, God shall for ever abide in Hierusalem, that it may not at any time be moued. So much can the partaking of the church do, that it holdeth vs in the fellowship of God. Also in the verie word Communion is much comforte: because while it remaineth certaine, that whatsoever the Lorde giueth to his and our members, belongeth to vs, our hope is by all their good things confirm'd. But in such sort to embrace the vnite of the Church, it is not needefull (as we haue already saide) to see the Church it selfe with our eyes, or feele it with our hands: but rather by this that it consisteth in Faith, we are admonished that we ought no lesse to thinke it to be, when it passeth our vnderstanding, than if it openly appeared. Neither is our Faith therefore the worse, because it conceiue it vnknown, forasmuch as we are not herein commanded to discern the reprobate from the elect (which is the office of God onely, and not ours) but to determine assuredly in our minds, that all they that by the mercifull kinde of God the father through the effectuall working of the holy Ghost, are come into the partaking of Christ, are secured into the peculiar right and proper possession of Christ: and that, forasmuch as we be in the number of those, we are partakers of so great a grace.

4 But sith it, is now our purpose to entreat of the visible Church, let vs learne euen by this one title of Mother, how much the knowledge thereof is profitable, yea necessarie for vs: forasmuch as there is no other entrie into life, vnlesse the conceiue vs in hir wombe, vnlesse she bring vs forth, vnlesse she feede vs with hir breastes, finally vnlesse she keepe vs vnder her custodie and gouernance, vntill such time as being vnclodded of mortall flesh we shall be like vnto Angels. For our weakenes suffereth vs not to be dismissed from schoole, till we haue bene schollers throughour the whole course of our life. Beside that out of her boosome there is no forgiveness of sinnes, and no saluation to be hoped for, as witnesseth Esaï and Joel, with whom agreeth Ezechiel when he declareth that they that not be in the number of Gods people whom he putteth away from the heauenly life. As on the contrarie side, they are said to write their names among the Citizens of Hierusalem, that turne themselves to the following of true godlinesse. Aiter which maner it is also said in another Psalm: Remember me, Lord, in the good will of thy people: visite me in thy saluation that I may see the benefites of thy elect, that I may be merry in the mirth of thy people, that I may reioyce with thy inheritance. In which words the fatherly fauour of God, and the peculiar testimonie of the Spirituall life is restrained to his flocke, so that the departing from the Church is alway damnable.

5 But let vs proceede to prosecute that which properly belongeth to this place. Paul writeth that Christ, that he might fulfill all things, gaue some Apostles, some Prophets, some Euangelistes, and some Pastors and Teachers, to the restoring of the holy ones, into the worke of ministerie, vnto the edification of the bodie of Christ, vntill we all come into the vnitie of Faith, and of the acknowledging of the Sonne of God, vnto a perfect man, and to the measure of the full grown age of Christ. We see how God, which was able to make them that be his perfect in a moment, yet will not haue them growe into manly age but by the bringing vp of the Church. We see the meane expressed, for that vnto the Pastors is enioyned the preaching of the heauenly doctrine. We see how all, not one excepted, are brought into on rule, that they should with milde Spirit and willing to learne, yeelde themselves to the teachers appointed for that vse. And by this marke Esaie had long before set out the kingdome of Christ, where he saith: My spirit which is in thee, and the words that I haue put in thy mouth shall neuer depart, neither out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seede and thy childrens children. Whereupon followeth that they are woorthy to perish with famine and pining hunger, whosoever they be that refuse the Spirituall meate of the Soule reached vnto them of God by the hands of the Church. GOD doth breath Faith into vs, but by the instrument of his Gospell, as Paul saith that faith is by hearing. As also with God remaineth his power to saue, but (as the same Paul witnesseth) he vttereth and displayeth the same in the preaching of the Gospell. For this reason in old time he willed that there should be made holy assemblies to the sanctuarie, that doctrine vttered by the mouth of the Priest should nourish the consent of Faith. And to no other end those glorious titles haue respect, where the temple is called the rest of God, and the sanctuarie his house, where he is said to sit betweene the Cherubines, but to bring estimation, loue, reuerence and dignitie to the ministerie of the heauenly doctrine, which otherwise the sight of a mortall and despised desired man would not a little diminish. Therefore that we should know, that out of earthen vessels is brought forth vnto vs inestimable treasure, God himselfe cometh forth, and in as much as he is author of this degree, so he will haue himselfe to be acknowledged present in his institution. Therefore after that he hath forbidden him to giue themselves to iudgement by flying of birdes, to southsayings, magicall artes, necromancie and other superstitions, he immediately addeth that he will giue them that which ought to suffice in steed of all, that is to say, that they shall neuer be destitute of Prophets. But like as he sent not the olde people to Angels, but raised vp teachers out of the earth, which might truly performe the office of Angels: so at this day also his will is to teach vs by men. And as in the olde time he was not content with the onely law, but added Priests for expositors, at whose lippes the people should enquire for the true meaning thereof: so at this day he not onely willet vs to be heedfully bent to reading, but also appointeth masters ouer vs, by whose trauell we may bee holpen: whereof cometh double profit. For on the one part by a very good triall it proueth our obedience, where we heare his ministers speaking euen as it were himselfe. On the other side it also prouideth for our weakenesse, while after the manner of men he had rather speake vnto vs by interpreters to allure vs vnto him, than with thundering driue vs away from him. And truly how expedient this familiar manner of teaching is for vs, all the godly doe feele by the feare where-with the maiestie of God doth woorthily astonish them. But they that thinke that the authoritie of the doctrine is abased by the contempt of the men that are called to teach, do bewray their vnthankfulness, because among so many excellent giftes wherewith God hath garnished mankind: this is a singular prerogative, that he vouchsaureth to consecrate the mouthes and tooons of men to himselfe, that his owne voice should sound in them. Wherefore on our behalies let vs not be grieued obediently to embrace the doctrine of saluation set forth by his commandment and by his owne mouth: because although the power of God is not bound to outward meanes, yet he hath bound vs to the ordinarie manner of teaching: which while phrenlike men refuse to keepe, they wrap themselves in many deadly sinnes. Either pride, or disdainfulness, or enuie moueth many to perswade themselves that they can sufficiently profit by their owne priuate reading and studie, and so to despise publick assemblies, and to account preaching superfluous. But sith they do as much as in them is loofe or breake in sunder the holy bond of vnicie, no man escapeth the due punishment of this diuorce, but he bewitcheth himselfe with pestilent errors and most wicked dotages. Wherefore, that the pure simplicitie of faith may flourish among vs, let vs not be grieued to vse this exercise of godlines, which God by his institution hath shewed to be necessarie for vs and so earnestly commendeth. But there was neuer yet found any euen of the most wanton dogs which would say that we ought to stop our eares against God: But in all ages the Prophets and godly teachers haue had a hard strife against the wicked, whose stubbornesse can neuer come vnder this yoke, to be taught by the mouth of the ministerie of men. Which is as much as to blot out the face of God which shineth vnto vs in doctrine. For in olde time the faithfull were commanded to seeke the face of God in the Sanctuarie, and the same is so oft repeated in the law for no other cause, but for that the doctrine of the law and the exhortations of the Prophets were to them a liuely image of God: as Paul affirmeth that in his preaching shineth the glorie of God in the face of Christ. How much the more detestable are the Apostates, which greedily seeke to diuide Churches, as though they did driue sheep from their folds & cast them into the mouthes of wolues. But we must hold that which he hath alleaged out of Paul, that the Church is no otherwise builded but by outward preaching, and that the holy ones are holden together with no other bonde but when with learning and profiting with one consent they keepe the order appointed by God to the Church. To this ende principally,

Psal. 115. 4.

as I haue saide, the faithfull in olde time vnder the lawe were commanded to resort to the sanctuarie. Because when Moses speaketh of the dwelling place of God, he doth therewithall call it the place of name, where God hath set the memorie of his name. Whereby he plainly reacheth that without the doctrine of godlines there is no vse thereof. And it is not doubtfull but that for the same reason Dauid with great bitterness of Spiritie complaineth that hee is by the tyrannous crueltie of his enemies kept from entering into the Tabernacle. It seemeth commonly to many a childish lamentation, because it should be but a very small losse, and also no great pleasure should be forgone thereby, to want the entrie of the temple, so that there were enough of other delightfull things. But he bewaileth that with this one grieefe, anguish and sorrowe, he is fretted & vexed and in a maner wasted. For nothing is of greater estimation with the faithfull, than this helpe whereby God by degrees lifteth vp his on high. For this is also to be noted, that God in the mirror of his doctrine alway so shewed himselfe to the holie Fathers, that the knowledge was spirituall. Wherefore the temple is called not onely his face, but also (to take away all superstition) his scotestoole. And this is that happie meeting into vnitie of faith, while from the highest euen to the lowest all do aspire to the head. All the temples that euer the Gentiles vpon any other purpose builded to God, were but a meere prophaning of his worship: whereunto though not with like grossenes, yet for what the Iews fell. Whereof Steuen out the mouth of Esay reprocheth them where he saith, that God dwelleth not in temples made with hands, &c. Because onely God doth by his worde sanctifie to himselfe temples to the lawfull vse. And if we rashly attempt anything without his commandement, by and by to an euill beginning do cleaue new deuises by which the euill is spread abroad without measure. Yet Xerxes, when by the counsell of the Magicians he burned vp or plucked downe all the temples of Greece, vndiscreetly saide, that the Gods to whom all things ought to be freely open were enclosed within walles and tiles. As though it were not in the power of God, to the entent he might be neere vs, after a certaine maner to descend vnto vs, and yet neither to change place, nor to fasten vs to earthly meanes: but rather by certaine chariots to carrie vs vp to his Heauenlic glorie, which with the immeasurable greatnesse thereof filleth all things, yea and in heigh surmounteth the heauens.

6 Now forasmuch as at this time there hath bin great strife about the effectualnes of the ministerie, while some excessively amplifie the dignitie thereof: and some other affirme that that which is properly belonging to the holy Ghost is wrongfullie giuen away to mortall man, if we thinke that ministers and teachers do pearce to the mindes and harts, to amend as well the blindnes of the mindes as the hardnesse of harts: it is meete that we giue a right determination of this controuersie. All that they contend on both parts shall easily be accorded by expressly noting the places where God the authour of preaching ioyning his spiritie with it promiseth fruite thereof: or againe, when seuering himselfe from outward helps he challengeth to himselfe alone as well the beginnings of faith as the whole course thereof. It was the office of the second Elias (as Malachie witnesseth) to enlighten the mindes and to turne the harts of Fathers to the children, and vnblessers to the wise dome of the righteous. Christ pronounceth that he sendeth the Apostles, that they shoulde bring fruite of their labour. But what that fruite is Peter shortly defineth, saying that we be regenerate with incorruptible feede. And therefore Paul glorieth that hee by the Gospell begate the Corinthiaas, and that they were the seale of his Apostleship: yea that hee was not a literall Minister: such as did onelic beate the eares with sounde of voyce, but that there was giuen him an effectualnesse of Spiritie, that his doctrine shoulde not bee vnprofitable. In which meaning also in another place hee saith, that his Gospell was not in worde onelic, but in power. Hee affirmeth also that the Galathians by hearing receued the Spirit of faith. Finally in many places he maketh himselfe not onely a worker together with God, but also assigneth himselfe the office of giuing saluation. Truly he neuer brought forth all these things to this intent to giue vnto himselfe any thing were it neuer so little feuerally from God: as in an other place he shortly declarerth, taying, our labour was not vnprofitable in the Lord, according to his power mightly working in me. Againe in an other place, he that was mightie in Peter toward the circumcision, was also mightie in me toward the Gentiles. But how he leaueth nothing feuerally to the ministers, appeareth by other places, as: he that planteth is nothing, and he that watereth is nothing, but God that giueth the encrease. Againe: I haue laboured more than all: not I, but the grace of God that was with me. And truly we must hold fast those sayings, where God ascribing to himselfe the enlightening of the minde, and the renewing of the heart, teacheth that it is a robberie of God if man take vpon himselfe anie part of either of them. In the meane time if any man offer himselfe to the ministers whome God ordeineth, willing to learne, he shall knowe by the fruite, that this maner of teaching not in vaine pleased God, and that this yoke of modestie was not in vaine laid vpon the faithfull.

7 But as for the Church visible and which is within the compasse of our knowledge, what iudgement is meete to be giuen thereof, I thinke it already appeare euidently by that which we haue before said. For we haue said, that the holy Scripture speaketh of the Church after two sorts. Sometime, when it nameth the Church, it meaneth that Church which is indeede before God, into which none are receiued but they that are both by grace of adoption the children of God, and by sanctification of the Spirit the true members of Christ. And then truely it comprehendeth not onlie the holie ones that dwell in earth, but also all the elect that haue bene since the beginning of the world. But oftentimes vnder the name of the Church it signifieth the vniuersall multitude of men scattered abroad in the world, which professe that they worship one God and Christ, by Baptisme enter into his faith, by partaking of the supper testifie their vnitie in true doctrine and charitie, haue an agreement in the word of the Lord, and for the preaching thereof do keepe the ministerie ordained by Christ. In this Church there be mingled many hypocrites which haue nothing of Christ but the name and outward shew: there be manie ambitious, couctous, enuious, euil speakers, some of vncleane life: which be fastned for a time, either because they cannot by lawfull order of iudgement be conuined, or because there is not alway in vre that seueritie of discipline that ought to be. Therefore as we must needes beleue that the Church which is inuisible to vs, is to be seene with the eyes of God onelie: so are we commanded to regard this Church which is called a Church in respect of men, and to keepe the communion of it.

8 Therefore so much as behooued vs to know it, the Lord hath set it out by certaine markes and as it were signes vnto vs. This is indeede the singular prerogatiue of God himselfe, to knowe who be his, as we haue already alleadged out of Paul. And truly that the rashnesse of men should not creepe so faire, it is prouided by the very successe of things daile putting vs in minde, how farre his secret iudgements do surmount our vnderstanding. For euen they that seemed most desperate, and accounted vtterly past hope, are by his goodnesse called backe into the waie: and they that seemed to stand fast in comparison of other, doe oftentimes fall. Therefore according to the secret predestination of God (as Augustine saith) there be manie sheepe without, and many wolues within. For he knoweth them, and hath them marked that knowe neither him nor themselues. But of those that openly beare his badge, his onelie eies do see who be both holy without fawning, and who will continue euen to the end, which is the verie chiefe point of saluation. Yet on the other side, forasmuch as he foresawe it to be some deale expedient, that we should knowe who were to be accounted his children, he hath in this part applied himselfe to our capacitie.

capacitie. And because the certaintie of faith was not necessarie, he hath put in place thereof a certaine iudgement of charitie: whereby wee shoulde acknowledge for members of the Church those that both with confession of faith, and with example of life, and with partaking of sacraments, doe professe the same God and Christ with vs. But as for the knowledge of the bodie thereof, how much more that he knewe it to be necessarie for our saluation, with so much the more certaine markes he hath set it out.

9 Loe hereupon groweth and ariseth vnto vs, a face of the Church visible to our eyes. For wherefoeuer we see the word of God to be purely preached and heard, and the sacraments to be ministred according to the institution of Christ, there it is in no wise to be doubted that there is some Church of God: forasmuch as his promise cannot deceiue. Wherefoeuer two or three are gathered together in my name, there I am in the midst of them. But that we may evidently vnderstand the summe of this matter, we must proceede by these as it were degrees: that is to say, that the vniuersall Church is a multitude gathered together out of all nations whatsoever they be, which being sundered and seuerally scattered by distances of places, yet doth agree in one truth of godly doctrine, and is bound together with the bond of one selfe religion: And that so vnder this are comprehended all particular Churches, which are in all townes and streets according to the order of mens necessitie, so that euery one of them may rightfully haue the name and authoritie of a Church: And that all particular men which by profession of godlines are reckoned among such Churches, although they be in deced strangers fro the Church, yet do after a certaine manner belong vnto it, till by publike iudgement they be banished out of it. Howbeit there is somewhat a diuers manner in iudging of private men and of Churches. For it may fall in experiece, that such men as we shal thinke not to be altogether worthie of the company of the godly, yet we must vse like brethren and account the among the faithfull, for the comon consent of the Church, whereby they are suffered and borne withall in the bodie of Christ. We do not by our testimonie allow such to be members of the Church: but we leaue them the place that they haue among the people of God, till it be by orderly right of lawe taken away from them. But of the very multitude we must otherwise thinke: which if it hath and honoreth the ministerie of the word, and the administration of Sacraments, it deserueth without doubt to be esteemed and iudged a Church: because it is certaine that those things are not without fruit. So we do also preserue to the vniuersall Church her vnicie, which diuclish spirits haue alway trauailed to cut in sunder: neither do we defraude of their authoritie those lawfull assemblies which are disposed according to the fittest of places.

10 We haue set for signes to discern the Church by, the preaching of the word, and the obseruing of the Sacraments. For those can be no where but they must bring forth fruite, and be prospered with the blessing of God. I do not say, that wherefoeuer the word is preached, there by and by springeth vp fruite: but I say that no where it is receiued and hath a stayed seate, but that it bringeth forth the effectualnesse thereof. Where the preaching of the Gospel is reuerently heard, and the Sacraments are not neglected, howfoeuer it be, there for that time appeareth a not deceitfull and not doubtfull face of the Church, whereof no man may vn Timered either despise the authoritie, or refuse the admonitions, or resist the counsels, or mocke at the corrections: much lesse to depart from it, and to breake in sunder the vnicie of it. For the Lord so highly esteemeth the Communion of his Church, that he counteth him for a traiterous runaway and forsaker of Religion, whosoeuer shall stubbornly estrange himselfe from any Christian fellowship, so that it be such a one as hath the true ministerie of the Word and Sacraments. He so commendeth the Churches authoritie, that when it is violate, he iudgeth his owne diminished. Neither is it of small importance, that the Church is called the pillar and strong stay of truth and the house of God. By which wordes Paul signifieth, that to the end the truth of God should not decay in the world, the Church is a faithfull keeper thereof: because Gods will was to haue the preaching of his word kept pure, and to shew himselfe vnto vs a father of householde by her ministerie and labour, while the feedeth vs with spirituall nourishments, and procureth all things that make for our saluation. It is also no slender praise, that it is saide that she is choſen and seuered by Christ to be his spouse, that should be without wrinkle and spot, the body and fulnesse of him. Whereupon followeth, that departing from the Church is a denying of God and of Christ. Therefore so much the more we must beware of so wicked disagreement. For while we goe about, so much as in vs lieth, to procure the ruine of Gods truth, we are woorthie that he should send downe his lightning with the whole violent force of his wrath to destroy vs. Neither can there be imagined any fault more hainous, than with wicked breach of faith to defile the marriage that the onely begotten sonne of God hath vouchsafed to contract with vs.

Ephes. 5. 19.
Ephes. 1. 22.

Satan laboureth either to abolish, or to bring in contempt the marks of the true church, whereupon a double mischiefe groweth, that either the true Church is despised, or the false reuerenced.

II Wherefore let vs diligently keepe these markes imprinted in our mindes, and let vs esteeme them according to the Lordes will. For there is nothing that Satan more endeuoureth than to take away, and abolish the one of these, or both: sometime that when these markes are rased and blotted out, he may take away the true and naturall distinction of the Church: sometime that when they are brought in contempt, he may with open falling away plucke vs from the Church. By his craft it is brought about, that in certaine ages past, the pure preaching of the worde hath vanished away: and now he doth with as great importunacie trauell to ouerthrowe the ministerie, which yet Christ hath so stablished in the Church, that when it is taken away, the edification of the Church perisheth. But now, how dangerous, yea how deadly a tentation it is when it doth but come in our minde to depart from that congregaon wherein are seene the signes and tokens by which the Lord thought his Church sufficiently described? We see how great heede is to be taken on both sides. For, that we should not be deceiued vnder the title of the Church, euery congregation that pretendeth the name of the Church must be examined by that manner of triall, as by a touchstone. If it haue in the word and Sacraments the order appointed by the Lorde, it will not deceiue vs: let vs boldly yeeld vnto it the honour due to Churches. But contrariwise if it boast it selfe without the word and Sacraments, we must no lesse with fearefull conscience beware of such deceits, than on the other side we must flec rashnesse and pride.

*Where the signes of a true Church are, from that societie we may not seuer our selues, and cease to haue communion, though in doctrine and administration of Sacraments there be

12 Whereas we say that the pure ministerie of the worde and the pure vsage in celebrating the Sacraments, is a sufficient pledge and earnest, so that we may safely embrace as the Church any fellowship wherein both these shall be: this extendeth so farre, that it is neuer to be cast off, so long as it shall continue in those, although it swarme full of many other faultes. Yea and there may some faultlesse creepe into it, in the administration either of doctrine, or of the Sacraments, which ought not to estrange vs from the Communion of it. For all the articles of true doctrine be not of one sort. Some be so necessarie to be knowne, that they ought to be certaine and vndoubted to al men, as the proper principles of religion: of which sort are, That there is one God, That Christ is God, and the sonne of God: That our saluation consisteth in the mercie of God: and such like. There be other that being in controuersie betwene Churches, yet doe not breake the vnitic of faith. For those Churches that disagree about this one point, if without lust of contention, without stubbornesse of affirming, the one thinke that soules when they depart from the bodies do flee vp into heauen, and the other Church dare determine nothing of the place, but yet certainly holdeth that they liue to the Lorde: the wordes of the Apostle are: Let all vs that be perfect thinke all one thing: but if yee thinke any thing otherwise, thus the Lorde shall also reueale vnto you. Doth he not sufficiently shewe that diuersitie of opinions about these matters, that be not so necessarie, ought to be no ground of disagreement among Christians? It is in deede a principall point, that we agree in all things. But for as much as there is no man that is not wrapped with some little cloud of ignorance, either we must leaue no Church at all, or we must pardon a being deceiued in such things as may be vnknown without violating the summe of religion, and without lesse of saluation. But I meane not here to defend any errors be they neuer so little, so as I would thinke that they should be cherished with flattering and winking at them: but I say that we ought not rashly for euery light dissension forsake the Church, in which at least that Doctrine is retained safe and vncorrupted, wherein standeth the safetie of godlines, and the vse of Sacraments is kept as it was instituted by the Lord. In the meane time if we endeavour to amend that which displeaseth vs, we do therein according to our duetie. And herunto belongeth that saying of Paul: If any thing better be reuealed to him that sitteth, let the first hold his peace. 1. Cor. 14. 30. Whereby it is euident, that all the members of the Church are cuerie one charged with endeuour to publike edification, according to the measure of his grace, so that it be done comely and according to order: that is, that we neither do forsake the communion of the Church, nor abiding in it, do trouble the peace and well ordered discipline thereof.

13 But in bearing with the imperfection of life, our gentle tenderesse ought to go much further. For herein is a very slipperie easinesse to fall: and herin with no small deuises doth Satan lay way for vs. For there haue been alway some, which filled with false persuasion of perfect holinesse as though they were already made certaine aerie spirits, despised the company of all men, in whom they saw remaining any thing of the nature of man. Such in old time were the Cathary, and they that were as mad as they, the Donatists. Such at this day are some of the Anabaptists, which would seeme to haue profited about the rest. Some there be that offend more by an vndiscreet zeale of righteousnesse, than by that mad pride. For when they see among them to whom the Gospel is preached, the fruite of life not agreeably answering to the doctrine thereof, they by and by iudge that there is no Church. It is indeede a most iust displeasure, and such a one whereunto in this most miserable age of the world, we giue too much occasion. Neither may we excuse our accursed slothfulnesse, which the Lord will not suffer vnpunished: as euen already he beginneth with grieuous scourges to chastise it. Wo therefore to vs, which with so dissolute licentiousnesse of wicked doings, make that weake consciences be wounded by reason of vs. But in this againe they offend whome I haue spoken of, because they cannot measure their being displeased. For where the Lord requireth clemencie, they leauing it, do giue themselues wholly to immeasurable rigorosnesse. For, because they thinke that there is no Church where there is no found purenesse and vprightnesse of life, for hatred of sinnes they depart from the lawfull Church, while they thinke that they swaue from a company of wicked men. They alleage that the Church of Christ is holy. But that they may also vnderstand that it is mingled of good and euill men, let them heare this parable out of the mouth of Christ, wherein it is compared to a net, Matt. 13. 47. in which fishes of all kindes are gathered together: and are not chosen out till they be laide abroade vpon the shoare. Let them heare that it is like vnto a corne field, Matt. 13. 12. which being sown with good graine, is by the enimus fraude scattered with tares, of which it is not cleansed vntill the crop be brought into the barn floor. Finally, let them heare that it is like vnto a floore, wherein the wheat is so gathered together, Matt. 13. 23. that it lieth hidden vnder the chaffe, till being cleansed with fanne and sycue, it be at length laid vp in the grainer. If the Lord pronounce that the Church shall euen to the day of iudgement be troubled with this euill, to be burdened with mingling of euill men: they do in vaine seeke for a Church sprinkled with no spot.

14 For they cry out that it is an intolerable thing, that the pestilence of vices so rangeth

Imperfection in the liues and corruption in the manners of some must not cause vs to leaue the fellowship of the Church.

Cap. I. Of the outward meanes

The state of the Church of Corinth in the Apostles owne times.

rangeth abroad. What if the saying of the Apostle doe heere also answere them? Among the Corinthians not onely a few had gone out of the way, but the infection had in a manner possessed the whole bodie: There was not onely one kinde of sinne, but many: neither were they light offences, but certaine horrible outrageous doings: it was not onely corruption of manners, but also of doctrine. What in this case saith the holy Apostle, that is to say, the instrument of the holy Ghost, by whose testimonie the Church standeth and falleth? Doth he require a diuision from them? Doth he banish them out of the kingdome of Christ? Doth he strike them with the extremest thunderbolt of curse? He not onely doth none of all these things: but he both acknowledgeth and reporteth it a Church of Christ and fellowship of Saints. If there remaine a Church among the Corinthians, where contentions, sectes, and enuious partakings doe broile: where quarrels and brawlings be in vre, with a greedinesse of hauing, where that wicked dooing is openly allowed, which were abhominable among the very Gentiles: where Pauls name is vniustly railed at, whom they ought to haue honoured as their Father: where some scorne at the resurrection of the dead, with ruine whereof the whole Gospell falleth: where the gracious gif of God serue to ambition and not to charity: where many things are vncomely & vnorderly done: and if therefore there still remaine a Church, because the ministry of the word and of the Sacraments is there not refused, who dare take away the name of the Church from them that cannot be charged with the tenth part of these faults? They that with so great precisenes deale so cruelly against the Churches of this present time: what (I pray you) would they haue done to the Galathians, which were almost vtter forsakers of the Gospell, among whom yet the same Apottle found Churches?

Gal. 1.

One thing to shew the priuate com pazy of a wicked man, and another for hatred thereof to forsake the fellowship of the Church.

1. Cor. 5. 2.

15 They object also, how that Paul grieuously rebuketh the Corinthians for suffering in their company a man that was a hainous sinner, and then he setteth a generall sentence wherein he pronounceth, that it is vnlawfull euen to eate breade with a man of reprochfull life. Heere they cry out: If it be not lawfull to eate common bread, how may it be lawfull to eate with them the bread of the Lord? I confesse in deede that it is a great dishonor, if hogges and dogges haue place among the children of God: it is also a much more dishonor if the holy body of Christ be giuen foorth to them. And truly if they be well ordered Churches, they will not suffer wicked men in their bosome, and will not without choise admit both woorthy and vnwoorthy together, to that holy banket. But forasmuch as the Pastors doe not alway so diligently watch, yea and sometime are more tender in bearing with men than they ought to be, or are hindered so that they cannot vse that seueritie that they would: it commeth to passe that euen they that are openly euill, are not alway thrust out of the company of the holy ones. This I graunt to be a fault: neither will I diminish it, sith Paul doth so sharply rebuke it in the Corinthians. But although the Church be slacke in her ducric, it shall not be therefore immediatly in the power of euery priuate man, to take vpon himselfe the iudgement to seuer him. I doe in deed not denie that it is the dooing of a godly man, to withdraw himselfe from all priuate companie of euill men, to entangle himselfe in no willing familiaritie with them. But it is one thing to flee the company of euill men, and another thing for hatred of them to forsake the communion of the Church. But whereas they thinke it sacriledge to be partakers of the Lords bread with them, they are therein much more rigorous than Paul is. For where he exhorteth vs to a holy and pure partaking, he requireth not that one should examine another, or euery man the whole Church, but that they should ech one prouee himselfe. If it were vnlawfull to communicate with an vnwoorthy man, then truly Paul would bid vs to looke circumspectly whether there were any in the multitude, by whose vncleannes we might be defiled. Now when he requirerth onely of euery man the prooffe of themselves, he sheweth that it nothing hurteth vs if any vnwoorthy doe thrust themselves in among vs. And nothing else is meant meant by this which he saith after ward. He that eateth vnwoorthly, eateth and drinketh iudgement to himselfe. He doth not say, to other, but to himselfe. And rightfully.

1. Cor. 11. 18.

For it ought not to stand in the choise of euery particular man, who be to be recei-ued, and who to be reiected. The knowledge hereof belongeth to the whole Church, which knowledge cannot be had without lawfull order, as hereafter shall bee saide more at large. Therefore it should be vnrighteous, that any priuate man should be deciued with the vnwoorthinesse of another, whom he neither can nor ought to keepe backe from comming to it.

1. Cor. 11. 29.

16 But although by this vndiscreete zeale of righteousnesse this tentation doth sometime also enter into good men: yet this we shall find that too much precisenesse groweth rather of pride, disdainfulnesse, and false opinion of holinesse, than of true holinesse and true zeale thereof. Therefore they that are bolder than other, and as it were standard bearers to make any departing from the Church, for the most part doe it vpon no other cause, but in despising of, all men to boast themselues to be better than other. Therefore Augustine saith well and wisely: When godly order and manner of Ecclesiasticall discipline ought principally to haue regarde vnto the vnitie of Spirite in the bond of peace: which the Apostle commaunded to be kept by bearing one with another: and which being not kept, the medicine of reuenge is prouoed to be not onely superfluous, but also pernicious, and therefore now to be no medicine at all: those euill children, which not for hatred of other mens iniquities, but for affection of their owne contentions, doe greedily labour either wholly to draw or at least to diuide the weake common people intangled with the boasting of their name, swelling with pride, mad with stubbornesse, traiterous with slanders, troublesome with seditions, least they should seeme to want the light of truth, doe pretend a shadow of rigorous seueritie: and those things that are in the holy Scriptures commaunded to be done with a gentler kinde of healing, sauing the sinceritie of loue, and keeping the vnitie of peace, to correct the faultes of brethren, they abuse it to sacrilege of schisme, and to occasion of cutting off. But to godly and quiet men hee giueth this counsell, that they mercifully correct that which they can, and that which they cannot, patiently beare, and grieve and mourne with loue, vntill God either amend and correct them, or at the haruest roote vp the tares, and fanne out the chaffe. Let the godly trauaile to fortifie themselues with these armoures, least while they seeme to themselues strong and couragious reuengers of righteousnesse, they depart from the kingdome of heauen, which is the onely kingdome of righteousnesse. For sith it is gods will to haue the communion of his Church to be kept in this outward fellowship: he that for hatred of euill men doth break the token of that fellowship, entrench into a way whereby is a slipperie falling from the communion of Saints. Let them thinke that in a great multitude there be many truly holy and innocent before the eyes of the Lord, whom they see not. Let them thinke that euen of them that be diseased there be many that do not please or flatter themselues in their faultes, but being now and then awaked with earnest feare of God do aspire to a greater vprightnesse. Let them thinke that iudgement ought not to be giuen of a man by one deede: forasmuch as the holiest do sometime fall away with a most grieuous fall. Let them thinke that to gather a Church therewith more weight both in the ministerie of the word and in the partaking of the holy mysteries than that all that force should vanish away by the fault of some wicked men. Last of all let them consider, that in iudging the Church, the iudgement of God is of greater value than the iudgement of man.

ous spouse hauing no spot, or wrinkle, &c. Yet this is also nothing lesse true, that the Lord daily worketh in smoothing her wrinkles and wiping away her spots. Whereupon followeth that her holines is not yet fully finished. Therefore the Church is so holy, that it daily profiteth and is not yet perfect: daily proceedeth, & is not yet come to the mark of holines: as also in another place shal be more largely declared. Whereas therefore the Prophets prophetic that there shall bee a holy Hierusalem, through which straungers shall not passe: & a holy temple whereinto vncleane men shall not enter: let vs not so take it, as if there were no spot in the members of the Church: but for that with their whole endeouour they aspire to holines & sound purenesse, by the goodnes of God cleannes is ascribed to them, which they haue not yet fully obtained. And although oftentimes there be but rare tokens of such sanctification among men: yet we must determine that there hath beene no time since the creation of the world wherein the Lord hath not had his Church, and that there shal also be no time to the very end of the world, wherein he shal not haue it. For albeit immediately from the beginning the whole kinde of men is corrupt and defiled by the sinne of Adam: yet out of this, as it were a polluted masse, God alway sanctifieth some vessels vnto honor, that there should be no age without feeling of his mercy. Which he hath testified by certaine promises, as these: I haue ordained a testament to my elect: I haue sworne to Dauid my seruant, I will for euer continue thy seed: I will build thy seate in generation & generation. Againe, the Lord hath chosen Sion, he hath chosen it for a dwelling to himselfe: This is my rest for euer, &c. Againe, these things saith the Lord which giueth the Sunne for the light of the day, the Moone and stars for the light of the night. If these lawes shall faile before me, then the seed of Israel shall also faile.

18 Hereof Christ himselfe, the Apostles, and in maner all the Prophets haue giuen vs example. Horrible are those descriptions wherein Esay, Hierimie, Ioel, Abacuc, and the other do lament the sickneses of the Church of Hierusalem. In the common people, in the magistrate, in the Priestes all things were so corrupt, that Esay doubteth not to match Hierusalem with Sodom and Gemorrha. Religion was partly despised, partly defiled: in their maners, are commonly reported theftes, extortions, breaches of faith, murders and like mischiefes. Yet therefore the prophets did neither erect to themselues new Churches, nor build vp new altars on which they might haue several sacrifices: but of whatsoeuer maner men they were, yet because they considered, that God had left his word with them, and ordained ceremonies whereby he was there worshipped, in the midst of the assemblie of the wicked they helde vp pure hands vnto him. Truly if they had thought that they did gather any infection thereby, they would rather haue died a hundred times than haue suffered themselues to be drawn thereunto. Therefore nothing withhelde them from departing, but desire to the keeping of vnitie. But if the Prophets thought is against conscience, to estrange themselues from the church for many & great wicked doings, not of one or two men, but in maner of the whole people: then we take too much vpon vs, if wee dare by and by depart from the communion of that Church, where not all mens maners doe satisfie either our iudgement, yea or the Christian profession.

19 Now what manner world was there in the time of Christ and the Apostles? And yet that desperate vngodlines of the Pharisees, and the dissolute licentiousnesse of liuing, which then each where reigned, could not hinder, but that they vsed the same ceremonies with the people, and assembled with the rest into one temple to the publike exercises of religion. Whereof came that, but because they knew that the fellowship of euill men did not defile them, which with a pure conscience did communicate at the same ceremonies? If any man be little moued with the Prophets and Apostles, let him yet obey the authority of Christ. Therefore Cyprian wel saith though there be seene tares or vncleane vessels in the Church, yet there is no cause why we should depart from the Church: we must onely labour that we may be wheate:

we must vse diligence and endeouour as much as we may that we may be a golden or siluer vessell. But to breake the earthen vessells, is the onely worke of the Lorde, to whome also is giuen an iron rod. And let no man challenge to himselfe that which is properly belonging to the Sonne onely, to be able alone to fanne the floore, and cleanse the chaffe, and seuer all the tares by mans iudgement. This is a proude obstinacie, and presumption ful of sacrilege, which a peruerse furor taketh to it selfe, &c. Therefore let both these things remaine certainly fixed. First that he hath no excuse, that of his owne will forsaketh the outward communion of the Church. Where the worde of God is preached and the Sacraments ministred: then that the faultes of a few or of many are no hinderance, but that we may therein rightly professe our faith by the Ceremonies institute by God: because a godly conscience is not hurt by the vnworthinesse of any other either pastor or private man, and the mysteries are to a holy and vpriight man neuertheless pure and holsome because they are altogether handled of vnclane men.

20 Their precisenesse and disdainfulnesse proceedeth yet further: because they acknowledge no Church but such a one as is pure from all spots be they neuer so finall: yea they are angrie with good teachers, for that in exhorting the faithfull to goe forward, they teach them all their life long to grone vnder the burden of vices, and to flee vnto pardon. For they prate that by this meane men be led from perfection. I graunt in deede, that in earnest calling vpon perfection we ought not slowly or coldly to trauel, much lesse to be idle, but to fill our mindes with confidence there-of while we be yet in our course, I say, it is a diuinish inuention. Therefore in the Creede the forgiuenesse of finnes is aptly ioyned next after the Church. For none doe attaine it, but onely they that are citizens and of the household of the Church as it is read in the Prophet. Therefore the building of the heavenly Hierusalem ought to goe before, wherein afterward this mercifulnesse of God may haue place, that whatsoever come vnto it, their iniquitie may be taken away. I say that it ought first to be builded, not for that there can be any Church without the forgiuenesse of finnes, but because the Lorde hath not promised his mercie but in the communion of Saintes. Therefore the first entrie for vs into the Church and kingdome of God, is the forgiuenesse of finnes, without which we haue no couenant or conioyning with God. For thus he saith by the Prophet, In that day will I strike you a couenant with the beast of the field, with the foule of the aire, and with the vermine of the earth. I will breake the sword of warre from out of the earth, and I will make men to sleepe without feare. I will espouse you vnto me for euer. I wil espouse you (I say) in right couines, in iudgement, in mercie, and in compassions. We see how by his mercie the Lorde reconcileth vs to himselfe. And so in another place, when he foresaith that the people shall be gathered together againe, whom he had scattered abroad in his wrath, hee saith, I will cleanse them from all wickednesse wherewith they haue sinned against me. Wherefore by the signe of washing we enter into the fellowship of the Church, whereby we may be taught that there is no entrie open for vs into the household of God, vnlesse our filthinesse be first wiped away with his goodnesse.

21 But by the forgiuenesse of finnes the Lord doth not onely receiue and adopt vs once into the Church, but by the same he also preseruet and maintaineth vs still in it. For to what purpose were it, to haue such a pardon granted vs, as should serue for no vse? But euerie one of the godly is a witnesse to himselfe that the mercie of God should be vaine and mocking, if it should be granted onely but once: because there is none that is not in his owne conscience prouie throughout his whole life of many weaknesses, which neede the mercie of God. And truly not in vaine God promiseth this grace peculiarly to them of his owne household: and not in vaine he commaundeth the same message of reconciliation to be daily offered vnto them. Therefore as throughout all our life wee carrie about vs the remnants of sinne, vnlesse wee be sustained with the continual grace of the Lord in forgiuing our sinnes, we shall scarcely abide one moment in the Church. But the Lord hath called his vnto eternal saluation. Therefore they ought to thinke that there is pardon alwaies readie for their sinns. Wherefore we ought to holde assuredly, that by the liberalitie of God by meane of Christs deseruing through the sanctification of the Spirit. sinnes haue bene and are daily pardoned to vs which be called and grafted into the bodie of the Church.

Iohn. 20. 23.
1. Cor. 5. 20.

A& 20. 20.

22 To deale this benefite vnto vs, the keyes were giuen to the Church. For when Christ gaue the Apostles commandement, and deliuered them power to forgiue sinnes, hee meant not this onely, that they inould loose them from sinnes that were from vngodlinesse conuerted to the faith of Christ: but rather that they should continually execute this office among the faithfull. Which thing Paul teacheth, when he writeth that the embassage of reconciliation was left with the ministers of the Church, whereby they should oftentimes in Christes name exhort the people to reconcile themselues to God. Therefore in the communion of Saints, by the ministry of the Church it selfe, sinns are continually forgiuen vs, when the Priests or Bishops, to whom that office is committed, doe with the promises of the Gospell confirme godly consciences in hope of pardon and forgiuenesse: and that as well publickly as privately, according as necessitie requireth. For there be very many, which for their weaknesse doe neede a singular atonement. And Paul reporteth that not onely in common preaching, but also in houses he had testified the Faith in Christ, and severally admonished euery one of the doctrine of saluation. Therefore we haue here three things to be noted. First that with how great holinesse fouer the children of God doe excell, yet they be alway in this estate, so long as they dwell in a mortall bodie, that without forgiuenesse of sinnes they cannot stand before God. Secondly, that this benefite is so proper to the Church, that we cannot otherwise enjoy it, but if we abide in the Communion thereof. Thirdly, that it is distributed vnto vs by the ministers and Pastors, either by preaching of the Gospell, or by ministring of the Sacraments: and that in this behalfe principally appeereth the power of the keyes, which the Lord hath giuen to the fellowship of the faithfull. Wherefore let euery one of vs thinke this to be his dutie, no where else to seeke forgiuenesse of sinnes, than where the Lord hath set it. Of publike reconciliation which belongeth to discipline we shall speake in place fit for it.

The error of Nouatians & Anabaptists, who, as if baptisme did make men Angels, denie pardon vnto sinners that are baptised.

Mat. 6. 11.

23 But for as much as those phrentike spirites that I haue spoken of, doe go about to plucke away from the Church this onely anchor of saluation, consciences are the more strongly to be confirmed against a so pestilent opinion. The Nouatians in olde time troubled the Church with this doctrine: but not much unlike to the Nouatians our age also hath many of the Anabaptistes which fall to the same dorages. For they faine that the people of God are in Baptisme regenerate into a pure and Angellike life, that is corrupted with no filthinesse of the flesh. But if any man offend after baptisme, they leaue vnto him nothing but the vnappeafable iudgement of God. Briefely they grant no hope of pardon to a sinner fallen after grace receiued: because they acknowledge no other forgiuenesse of sinnes but that whereby we be first regenerate. But although there be no lie more cleerely confuted by the Scriptures: yet because these men finde some whome they may deceiue (as also in olde time Nouatus had many followers) let vs shortly shewe how mad they bee to their owne and others destruction. First, whereas by the commandement of the Lord, the holie ones doe daily repeat this praiser, forgiue vs our detts: truely they doe confesse themselues detters. Neither doe they craue it in vaine because the Lorde hath alway appointed no other thing to be asked, than that which he him selfe would giue. Yea, whereas he hath testified that the whole praiser shall be heard of his father, yet he hath also sealed this absolution with a peculiar promise. What will we more? The Lord requireth of the holy ones al their life long a confession of sinnes, yea & that continual, and

promiseth pardon. What boldnes is it, either to exempt them from sinne, or if they haue stumbled, utterly to exclude them from grace? Nowe whom doth he will vs to forgiue seuentie times seauen times? not to our brethren? To what end did he command it, but that we should follow his clemencie? He forgiueth therefore, not once or twice: but as often as being striken downe wth the acknowledging of sins they sigh vnto him.

24 But (that we may begin in a maner at the verie swadling clouts of the church) the Patriarches were circumcised, being allured into partaking of the couenant, hauing vndoubtedly by their fathers diligence beene taught righteousnes and innocencie, when they conspired to murder their brother: this was a mischeuous acte, to be abhorred euen of the most desperate thecues. At the last being meekned with the monitions of Iudas, they solde him: this was also an intollerable hainoufines. Simeon & Levi, with wicked reuenge, and such as was also condemned by their owne fathers iudgement, vsed crueltye against the Sichemites. Ruben with most vnecleane lust defiled his fathers bed. Iudas when hee woulde giue himselfe to fornication against the lawe of nature, went in to his sonnes wife. And yet so farre are they from being wiped out of the chofen people, that they be rather raised vp to be heads of it. But what did Dauid? when he was a gouernour of iustice, with how great wickednes did hee by shedding of innocent blood open the way to his blinde lust? Hee was already regenerate and among the regenerate garnished with notable praises of the Lord: neuertheless hee committed that haynous offence, which is horrible euen among the Gentiles: and yet hee obtained pardon. And (that wee may not tarrie vpon single examples) howe many promises there are in the lawe and the Prophetes of Gods mercie toward the Israeclites, so oft it is prooued that the Lorde sheweth himselfe appeasable to the offences of his people. For what doth Moses promise to come to passe, when the people being fallen into Apostasie shall returne vnto the Lord? He shall bring thee backe out of captiuitie, and shall haue mercie on thee, and shall gather thee together out of the peoples to whom thou hast bene disperfed. If thou bee scattered euen to the borders of the heauen, I will from thence againe gather thee together.

25 But I will not begin a recitall that should neuer be ended. For the Prophetes are full of such promises, which do yet offer mercy to the people couered with infinite wicked doings. What offence is there more hainous than rebellion? for it is called a diuorce betweene God and the Church. But this is ouercome by the goodnes of God. What man is there (saith he by Ieremie) that if his wife giue sooth her bodie in common to adulterers, can abide to returne into fauor with her? but with thy fornication all the waies are polluted, O Juda, the earth hath bene filled with thy filthie loues. But returne vnto mee, and I will receiue thee. Returne thou, turne away, I will not turne away my face from thee: because I am holy, and am not angry for cuer. And truly he can bee no otherwise minded, which affirmeth that hee willet not the death of a sinner, but rather that he should be couerted & liue. Therefore when Salomon did dedicate the tēple, he appointed it also to this vse, that the praers made for obtaining pardon of finnes should be heard from thence. If (said he) thy sons shall sin (for there is no man that sinneth not) and thou being angry shalt deliuer them to their enemies, & they shall repent in their hart, and being turned shall entreat thee in their captiuitie, saying, we haue sinned, we haue done wickedly, & shall praie toward the land which thou hast giuen to their fathers, and toward this holic temple: thou shalt heare their prayers in heauen, and shalt be made mercifull to thy people that hath sinned against thee, and to all their wickednesses wherewith they haue offended thee. And not vainely the Lord ordained in the law daily sacrifices for sins. For if the Lord had not foreseene that his people should be troubled with continuall diseases of sins, he would neuer haue appointed these remedies for them.

26 Was this benefit taken away from the faithfull, by the coming of Christ, wherein the fulnes of grace was shewed forth, so that they dare not now pray for pardon of sins? that if they offend the Lord they may not obtaine any mercie? What shall this be else, but to say that Christ came to the destruction of them that be his, and not to their saluation, if that mercifulnes of God in pardoning sins which in the olde testament was continually readie for the hoie ones, be now said to bee vterly taken away? But if we beleue the Scriptures which expressly cite out, that in Christ only the grace and kindnes of the Lord fully appeared, that the plentifulnes of mercy was powred out, and that the reconciliation of God and men was fulfilled: let vs not doubt that there floweth vnto vs a more bountifull mercifulnes of the heavenly father, than that it is cut off or shortned. And hercof there want not examples. Peter which had heard that he should be denied before the Angels of God that confessed not the name of Christ before men, denied him thuse in one night, and that not without execration: yet he was not put away from pardon. They that liued inordinately among the Thefflonians are to chastised, that yet they be gently called to repentance. Euen Simon the Magician himselfe is not cast in desperation, but he is rather commanded to hope well, when Peter counsellueth him to flee to prayer.

27 Yea most hainous sinnes haue sometime possessed whole Churches, out of which Paul rather gently vnwrapped them, than pronounced them accursed. The falling away of the Galarthians was no meane offence. The Corinthians were so much lesse excusable than they, as they abounded in mo and those nothing lighter sins: yet neither of them are excluded from the mercie of God. Yea euen they that had sinned about the rest in vncleanness, fornication and vnchastitie, are namely called to repentance. For the covenant of the Lord remaineth and shall remaine for euer inuio- lable, which he solemnly made with Christ the true Salomon and his members, in these words: If his sons shall forsake my law, and shall not walke in my iudgements, if they shall defile my righteousnesse, and not keepe my commandements, I will visite their iniquities with a rod, and their sins with stripes: But my mercie I will not take away from him. Finally by the verie order of the Creede we be taught, that there remaineth in the Church of Christ continuall pardon of sins: For that when the church is as it were stablished, yet forgiveness of sins is adioyned.

Plal. 89. 32.

Sin after baptisme not ouerly through ignorance but willingly committed, yet pardonable.
 Lcu. 4.

28 Some that be somewhat wiser, when they see the doctrine of Nouatus to be confuted with so great plainnes of Scripture, make not euery sin vnardonable, but wilfull transgressing of the law, into which a man willingly & willingly falleth. Now they that say so, do youe hitise to grant pardon to no sin, but where a man hath erred by ignorance. But whereas the Lord in the law commandeth one sort of Sacrifices to be offered for cleansing of the wilfull sins of the faithfull, and other to redeme their ignorances: how great lewdnesse shall it be to graunt no cleansing to wilfull sinne? I say that there is nothing plainer, than that the only sacrifice of Christ aualeth to forgive the wilfull sins of the hoie ones: forasmuch as the Lord hath testified the same by carnal Sacrifices as by signes. Againe who can excuse Dauid by ignorance, whom it is euident to haue bene so well instructed in the law? Did Dauid not know how great was the fault of adultery and manslaughter, which daily punished the same in other? Did brother slaughter seeme to the Patriarke a lawfull thing? Had the Corinthians so ill profited that they thought that wantonnes, vncleannes, whoredome, hatreds, and contentions pleased God? Did Peter being so diligently admonished not know how great a matter it was to forswear his maister? Therefore let vs not with our owne enuoufnes stop vp the way against the mercie of God that gently uttereth it selfe.

In what sense the fathers do sometimes teach that repentance is no more vterable than baptisme.

29 Truly I am not ignorant that the olde writers expounded those sinnes that are daily forgiven to the faithfull, to be the light offences that creepe in by weaknes of the flesh: and that they thought that the solerme repentance which was then required required for hainous misdeedes might no more be iterate than Baptisme. Which saying is not so to be taken, as though they would either throw them downe headlong into desperation that after their first Repentance had fallen againe, or extenuate those other sinnes as though they were small in the sight of God. For they knew that the holy ones doe oftentimes stagger by infidelitie, that luteifluous othes do sometimes fall from them, that they now and then are chased vnto anger, yea that they breake out euen into manifest railings, and beside these be troubled with other euilles which the Lord not slenderly abhorreth: but they so called them, to put a difference betweene them and publike crimes that with great offence came to the knowledge of the Church. But whereas they did so hardly pardon them that had committed any thing worthy of Ecclesiasticall correction, they did not this therefore, because they thought that such should hardly haue pardon with the Lord: but by this seueritie they meant to make other affraide that they should not rashly runne into wicked dooings, by the deserting whereof they might be estranged from the Communion of the Church: howbeit truely the word of the Lord which herein ought to be the onely rule vnto vs, appointeth a greater moderation. For it teacheth that the rigor of discipline is so far to be extended, that he that ought chiefly to be provided for be not swallowed vp with heaunes: as we haue before declared more at large.

The ij. Chapter.

A comparison of the false Church with the true Church.

OF how great value the ministerie of the word and Sacraments ought to be with vs, and how farre the reuerence of it ought to procede, that it be vnto vs a perpetuall token whereby to discern the Church, it hath beene already declared. That is to say, wheresoeuer that ministerie abideth whole and vncorrupted, there the faults or diseases of maners are no impediment but that it may beare the name of a Church. Then, that the very ministerie it selfe is by small errors not so corrupted, but that it may be esteemed lawfull. Moreouer we haue shewed that the errors that ought so to be pardoned are those whereby the principall doctrine of religion is not hurt, whereby those chiefe pointes of religion that ought to be agreeably holden among the Faithfull are not destroyed, and in the Sacrament, those that doe not abolish nor impair the lawfull institution of him that ordained them. But so soone as lying is broken into the chiefe tower of religion, so soone as the summe of necessarie doctrine is peruerred, and the vse of the Sacraments falleth: truly the destruction of the Church followeth: like as a mans life is at an end, when his throat is thrust through or his hart deadly wounded. And this is clearly prooued by the wordes of Paul, when he teacheth that the foundation of the Church is laide vpon the doctrine of the Apostles and Prophetes, Christ himselfe being the head corner stone. If the foundation of the Church be the doctrine of the Prophetes and Apostles, by which the Faithfull are commaunded to repose their saluation in onely Christ: then take away that doctrine, and how shall the building stand any longer? Therefore the Church must needs fall downe where that summe of religion fallerh which is onely able to vphold it. Againe, if the true Church be the pillar and stay of the truth, it is certaine, that there is no Church, where lying and falshood haue vsurped the dominion.

Some faultes doe corrupt and some destroy the Church.

Eph. 2. 20.

1. Tim. 3. 15.

2. Sith it is in such case vnder the Papiestic, we may vnderstand how much of the Church is there remaining. In steede of the ministerie of the word, there reigneth a peruerse gouernment and made of lies mingled together, which partly quencheth and partly choaketh the pure light: Into the place of the Lordes Supper is entered a most filthie sacriledge: the forme of worshipping God is deformed with a

Cap. 2. Of the outward meanes

manifolde and intollerable heape of superstitions: the doctrine, without which Christianitie cannot stand, is altogether buried and driuen out: the publike assemblies are the schooles of idolatrie and vngodlinesse. Therefore there is no perill least in departing from a damnable partaking of so many mischiefes, we be plucked from the Church of Christ. The communion of the Church was not ordained to this ende that it should be a bond whereby we should be intangled with idolatrie, vngodlinesse, ignorance of God, and other kindes of euils: but rather whereby we should be fast holden in the feare of God and obedience of truth. They do indeed gloriously fet out their Church vnto vs, that there should seem to be no other Church in the world: and afterward, as though the victorie were gotten, they decree that all bee Schismatiques that dare withdraw themselues from the obedience of that Church that they point out: and that all be heretikes that dare once mutter against the doctrine thereof. But by what prooues do they confirme that they haue the true Church? They alleage out of the ancient Chronicles, what in olde time was in Italie, in Fraunce, in Spainne. They say that they fetch their beginning from those holy men that with sound doctrine founded and raised vp Churches, and stablished the same doctrine and edifying of the Church with their blood. And in that so the Church hath bene among them to consecrate both with spirituall gifts, and with the blood of Martyrs, and preserved with continual succession of Bishops, that it might not fall away. They rehearse how much Ireneus, Tertullian, Origen, Augustine, and other esteemed this succession. But how wishing these things be, and how they be but verie mockeries, I will make them verie easie to vnderstand that will be content a litle to weigh them with me. Truly I would also exhort themselues earnestly to take heede herunto, if I did trust that I might any thing preuaile with them by teaching. But for as much as they, leauing all regarde of truth, do bende themselues to this onely purpose, by all the waies that they can, to defende their owne cause, I will onely speake a few things whereby good men and those that loue the truth, may winde themselues out of their futile cogitations. First I aske of them, why they do not alleage Aphrike, and Aegypt, and all Asia? Euen because in all those countries this holy succession of Bishops hath ceased, by meane whereof they boast that they haue preserved Churches. They come therefore to this point to say, that they therefore haue a true Church, because since it first began to be, it hath not been destitute of Bishops: for in perpetuall course they haue succeeded one another. But what if I cast Greece in their way? Therefore I aske againe of them, why they say that the Church is lost among the Grecians, among whom that succession of Bishops was neuer interrupted, which in their opinion is the only keeper and preseruer of the Church. They make the Grecians Schismatiques, but by what right? because in departing from the Apostolike see, they haue lost their priuiledge. What? Doe not they much more deserue to loose it that depart from Christ himselfe? It followeth therefore, that the pretence of succession is but vaine, vnlesse the posteritie do keepe fast and abide in the truth of Christ, which they haue receiued of their fathers from hand to hand.

3 Therefore the Romanistes at this day do alleage nothing else but that which it appeareth that the Iewes in old time alledged when they were by the Prophets of the Lord reprobued of blindnesse, vngodlinesse and idolatrie. For they gloriously boasted of the temple, Ceremonies and priesthoods, by which things, by great reason as they thinke they measured the Church. So in steed of the Church, they thew certaine outward visors, that oftentimes are far from the Church, and without which the Church may very well stand. Therefore wee neede to confute them with no other argument, than that wherewith Hieremie fought against the foolish presumptuousnes of the Iewes: that is, that they should not boast in lying words, saying: The temple of the Lorde, the temple of the Lorde, it is the temple of the Lord. For as much as the Lord doeth no where acknowledge any thing for his, but where his word is heard & reuerently obserued. So when the glory of God did sit betwene the Cherubins in the Sanctuarie, and he had promised them that that should be his steadfast seate: yet when the Priests once corrupted the worshipping of him with peruerse superstitions, he remooued else where, and left the place without any holinesse. If the same temple which seemed to be holily appointed to the perpetuall dwelling of God, might be forsaken of God and become vnholly: there is no cause why these men should saie to vs that God is so bound to persons or places, and so fast tied to outward obseruations, that he must needs abide with them that haue onely the title and shewe of the Church. And this is it about which Paul contendeth in the Epistle to the Romanes, from the 9. Chapter to the 12. For this did fore trouble weake consciences, that the Iewes when they seemed to be the people of God, did not onely refuse the doctrine of the Gospell, but also persecuted it. Therefore after that he hath set out the doctrine, he remooueth this doubt, and denieth that those Iewes being enemies of the truth are the Church, howsoever they wanted nothing that otherwise might be required to the outward forme of the Church. And therefore he denieth it, because they embrace not Christ. But somewhat more expressly in the Epistle to the Galatians: wherein comparing Ismael with Isaac, he saith that many hold place in the Church, to whom the inheritance belongeth not, because they are not begotten of the free Mother. From whence also he descendeth to the comparisom of two Hierusalems. Because as the Law was given in the mount Sina, but the Gospell came out of Hierusalem: So many being fruitfully borne and brought vp doe without doubting boast themselues to be the children of God and of the Church, yea they proudly despise the naturall children of God, when themselues be but bastards. On the other side also, when we heare that it was once pronounced from heauen: Cast out the bond woman and her sonne, let vs, standing vpon this inuiolable decree, boldly despise their vsuorie boastings. For if they be proud by reason of outward profession, Ismael was also circumcised: if they contend by antiquitie, he was the first begotten, and yet we see that he is put away. If the cause be demanded, Paul assigneth it, for that none are accounted children, but they that are begotten of the pure lawfull seede of doctrine. According to this reason God denieth that he is bound to wicked Priestes by this that he couenanteth with their Father Leui that he should be his Angell or interpreter: yea, he turneth against themselues their false boasting, wherewith they were wont to rise vp against the Prophets, that the dignitie of Priesthood was to be had in singular estimation. This he willingly admitteth, and with the same condition he debateth with them, because he is ready to keepe his couenant, but when they doe not mutually performe their parte to him, they deserue to be reiected. Loe what succession auaieth, vnlesse therewithall be also ioyned an imitation and euenly continuing course: euen to this effect, that the successors, so soone as they be proued to haue swaued from their originall, be deprived of all honor. Vnlesse perhaps because Caiph succeeded many godly Bishops (yea there was euen from Aaron to him a continuall vnbrookeA course of succession) therefore that same mischieuous assembly was woorthie the name of the Church. But this were not tolerable euen in earthly dominions, that the tyrannie of Caligula, Nero, Helio-gabalus and such other, should be called a true state of Commonweale, for that they succeeded the Brutes, Scipions, and Camilles. But specially in the gouernement of the Church there is nothing more fonde, than leauing the Doctrine to set the succession in the Persons onely. But neither did the holy Doctores whom they falsely thrust in vnto vs, meane anything lesse, than to prooue that precisely as it were by right of inheritance Churches be there where Bishops are successiually placed one after another. But where as it was then out of controuersie, that from the very beginning to that age nothing was changed in Doctrine, they alleged that which might suffice to make an ende of all newe errours, that is, that by those was that doctrine oppugned, which had beene euen from the Apostles constantly and with one agreeing consent retained. There is therefore no cause, why they should any longer goe forward to deceiue by pretending a false colour vnder the name of the church which we do reuerently esteeme as becommeth vs: but when they come to the definition of it, not only water (as the common saying is) cleaueth vnto them, but they sticke fast in their owne myre because they put a stinking harlot in place of the holy spoule of Christ. That this putting in of a changeling should not deceiue vs, beside other admonitions, let vs remember this also of Augustine. For speaking of the Church, hee saith: It is it that is sometime darkned and couered with multitude of offences as with a cloud: sometime in calmnes of time appeareth quiet and free: sometime is hidden and troubled with waues of tribulations and temptations. He bringeth forth examples, that oftentimes the strongest pillers either valiantly suffered banishment for the faith, or were hidden in the whole world.

Luk. 20. 14.

4 In like maner the Romanistes do vexe vs, and make affraide the ignorant with the name of the Church, whereas they be the deadly enemies of Christ. Therefore although they pretend the temple, the priesthood and the other such outward shewes, this vaine glittering wherewith the eyes of the simple be dazeled ought nothing to moue vs to graunt that there is a Church where the Worde of God doth not appeare. For this is the perpetual marke wherewith God hath marked them that be his. He that is of the truth (saith he) heareth my voice. Againe, I am that good shepheard, and I know my sheep, and am knowen of them. My sheep heare my voice, & I know them, and they follow me. And a little before he had said, that the sheepe follow their shepheard, because they knew his voice: but they follow not a stranger, but run away from him because they knew not the voice of strangers. Why are we therefore wilfully mad in iudging the Church, whereas Christ hath marked it with an vndoubtfull signe, which whersoever it is seene cannot deceiue, but that it certainly sheweth the Church to be there: but where it is not, there remaineth nothing that can giue a true signification of the Church. For Paul rehearseth that the church was builded, not vpon the iudgements of men, not vpon priesthoods, but vpon the doctrine of the Apostles and Prophets. But rather Hierusalem is to be feuerally knowen from Babylon, and the Church of Christ from the conspiracie of Satan, by that difference wherewith Christ hath made them different one from the other. He that is of God (saith he) heareth the words of God. Ye therefore heare not, because ye are not of God. In a sum, forasmuch as the Church is the kingdome of Christ, and he reigneth not but by his word, can it be now doubtfull to any man, but that those be the words of lying, by which Christs kingdome is fained to be without his scepter, that is to say without his holy word?

Eph. 2. 20.

John. 8. 47.

Our Churches by Romanists vnb-doubtly cause accus'd of heresie and of Schisme.

5 But now whereas they accuse vs of Schisme and heresie, because we both preach a contrarie doctrine to them, and obey not their lawes, and haue our assemblies to prayers, to baptisme, to the ministracion of the Supper, and other holy doings, feuerally from them: it is indeede a very sore accusation, but such as needeth not a long or laborfome defence. They are called heretiks & schismatiks, which making a diuision, do break in sunder the communion of the Church. And this communion is holden together with true bondes, that is to say, the agreement of true doctrine, and brotherly charity. Wherupon Augustine putteth this difference between heretiks and schismatiks, that heretiks indeede do with falsie doctrine corrupt the purenes of faith, but the schismatiks sometime euen where there is like faith, do breake the bonde of fellowippe. But this is also to be noted, that this conioyning of charitie so hangeth vpon the vnitie of Faith, that faith ought to be the beginning thereof, the ende, and finally the only rule. Let vs therefore remember that so oft as the vnitie of the church is comended vnto vs, this is required, that while our minds agree in christ, our wils also may be ioined together with mutual wel willing in Christ. Therefore Paul when he exhorteth vs to that well willing, taketh for his foundation that there is one God, one Faith, and one Baptisme. Yea wherefoeuer he teacheth vs to be of one minde, and of one will, he by and by addeth in Christ, or according to Christ: meaning that it is a factious companie of the wicked, and not agreement of the faithfull which is without the word of the Lorde.

6 Cyprian also following Paul deriueth the whole fountaine of the agreement of the Church, from the onely Bishopp of Christ. He after ward addeth the Church is but one, which spreadeth abroade more largely into a multitude with encrease of fruitfulness: like as there be many sunne beames, but one light: and many branches of a tree, but one body grounded vpon a fast roote: And when many streames doe flowe from one fountaine, although the number seeme to bee scattered abroad by largenes of ouerflowing plentie, yet the vnitie abideth in the originall. Take away a beame of the sunne from the body, the vnitie can suffer no diuision. Breake a branch from the tree, the broken branch cannot spring. Cut off the stream from the spring head being cut off it drieth vp. So also the Church being ouerspred with the light of the Lord, is extended ouer the whole world: yet there is but one light that is spred euerie where. Nothing could be said more fitly to expresse that vniuersall knitting together, which all the members of Christ haue one with another. We see how he continually calleth vs backe to the verie head. Whereupon he pronounceth that heresies and schismes do arise hereof, that men do not returne to the originall of truth, nor do seeke that head, nor keepe the doctrine of the heavenly master. Now let them go and crye that we be heretikes that haue departed from their church: sith there hath bene no cause of our estranging from them but this one, that they can in no wise abide the pure professing of the truth: but I tell not howe they haue driuen vs out with curfings & cruell execrations. Which very selfe doing doth abundantly enough acquite vs, vnlesse they will also condemne the Apostles for schismaticikes, with whome wee haue al one cause. Christ (I saie) did forefay to his apostles, that the time should come when they should be cast out of the Synagogues for his name sake. And those Synagogues of which he speaketh, were then accounted lawfull Churches. Sith therefore it is euident that we be cast out, and we be ready to shew that the same is done for the names sake of Christ, truly the cause ought first to bee inquired of, before that anie thing be determined vpon vs, either one way or other. Howbeit, if they will, I am content to discharge them of this point. For it is enough for me, that it behooued that we should depart from them, that we might come to Christ.

7 But it shall appeere yet more certainly in what estimation wee ought to haue all the Churches whom the tyrannie of that Romish idol hath possessed, if it be compared with the old church of the Israelites, as it is described in the Prophets. There was then a true Church among the Iewes and Israelites, when they continued in the lawes of the couenant, for they obtained those things by the benefice of God, whereupon the Church consisteth. They had the truth of doctrine in the law: the ministerie thereof was among the Priests and Prophetes: with the signe of circumcision they entred into religion: by other Sacraments they were exercised to the confirmation of Faith. It is no doubt that those titles wherwith the Lord hath honoied his church, fitly pertained to their fellowship. After that, forsaking the law of the Lord they went out of kind to idolatrie and superstition, they partly lost that prerogatiue. For who dare take away the name of the Church from them, with whome God hath left the preaching of his word and obseruation of his mysteries? Againe, who dare call that the Church without any exception, where the worde of the Lord is openly and freely troden vnder foote? where the ministerie thereof, the chiefe sinewe, yea the very soule of the Church is destroyed?

8 What then? will some man say: was there therefore no parcell of a Church remaining among the Iewes after that they fel away to idolatrie? The answer is eache

the deflection of the Church of Israel.*

What was remaining of the church in Iuda and Israel when they were fallen to idolatrie.

First I say that in the very falling away there were certayne degrees. For we will not say that there was all one fall of Juda, and Israel, at such time as they both first swarued from the pure worshipping of God. When Iarobeam first made calves, against the open prohibition of God, and did dedicate an vnlawfull place for worshipping, he did vicerly corrupt religion. The Iewes did first defile themselves with wicked and superstitious maners before that they wrongfully changed the order in the outward forme of religion. For although vnder Rechabeam they had alreadie gotten them many peruerse Ceremonies: yet because there tarried at Hierusalem both the Doctrine of the Law, and the Priesthood, and the ceremonious vsages in such sort as God had ordained them, the godly had there a tolerable state of Church. Among the Israelites vnto the raigne of Ahab, there was no amendment of things, and from thence forth they fell from worse to worse. They that succeeded afterward, to the verie destruction of the kingdome, partly were like vnto him, & partly (whē they minded to be somewhat better than he) they followed the example of Iarobeam: but they all euery one were wicked and idolaters. In Iewry there were now and then diuerse chaunges, while some kings peruerted the worshipping of God with false and forged superstitions, some other restored religion that was decayed: vntill the verie priests themselves defiled the Temple of God with prophane and abhominable vsages.

The Church of Rome more corrupte than the Church of Israel vnder Ieroboam.

9 Now let the Papiſts if they can how much ſoever they extenuate their owne faults, deny that among them the ſtate of religion is as corrupt and deſiled as it was in the kingdome of Iſrael vnder Iarobeam. But they haue a groſſer idolatrie: and in doctrine they are not one drop purer: vnleſſe peradventure euen in it alſo they be more vnpure. God, yea all men that are endued but with a meane iudgement, ſhal be witneſſes with me, and the thing it ſelfe alſo declareth, how herein I tell nothing more than truth. Now when they will drine vs to the communion of the Church, they require two things of vs: firſt, that we ſhould communicate with all their prayers, ſacraments, and Ceremonies: then that whatſoever honor, power and miſdiſtion Chriſt giueth to his Church, we ſhould giue the ſame to their Church. As to the firſt point, I graunt that all the Prophets that were at Hieruſalem, when things were there verie much corrupted, did neither ſeuerally ſacrifice, nor had aſſembles to pray ſeueral from other men. For they had a commaundement of God, whereby they were commaunded to come together into Salomons temple: they knew that the Leuiticall priests, how ſoever they were vnworthy of that honour, yet because they were ordained by the Lord miniſters of the holy ceremonies, and were not as then deſoſed, did yet ſtill rightfully poſſeſſe that place. But (which is the cheefe point of this queſtion) they were compelled to no ſuperſtitious worshipping, yea they tooke in hand to do nothing but that which was ordained by God. But among theſe men, I meane the Papiſts, what like thing is there? For we can ſcarcely haue any meeting together with them, wherein we ſhal not defile our ſelues with open idolatrie. Truly the principall bond of their communion is in the Maſſe, which we abhorre as the greateſt ſacriledge. And whether we do this rightfully or wrongfully, ſhal be ſeene in another place. At this preſent it is enough to ſhew that in this behalfe we are in other caſe than the Prophets were, which although they were preſent at the ceremonies of the wicked, were not compelled to behold or vſe any ceremonies but ſuch as were inſtitute by God. And, if they will needes haue an example altogether like, let vs take it out of the kingdome of Iſrael. After the ordinance of Ieroboam Circumciſion remained, the ſacrifices were offered, the Lawe was accounted holy, the ſame God was called vpon whome they had receiued of their fathers: but for the forged and forbidden formes of worshipping, God diſallowed and condemned all that was there done. Shew me one Prophet, or any one godly man that once worſhipped or ſacrificed in Bethell. For they knew they could not doe it, but that they ſhould defile themſelues with ſome ſacriledge. We haue then thus much, that the communion

Exo. d. 29. 9.

2. King. 12. 31.

of the Church ought not so farre to be of force with the godly, that if it shoulde degenerate to prophane and filthie vsages, they shoulde soorthwith of necessitie follow it.

10 But about the other point we contend yet more earnestly. For if the Church be so considered to be such, whose iudgement we ought to reuerence, whose authoritie to regard, whose monitions to obey, with whose chastisements to be moued, whose communion in all things we ought religiously to obserue: then we cannot graunt them a Church, but that we must of necessitie be bound to subiection and obedience vnto it. Yet we will willingly graunt them that which the Prophets graunted to the Iewes and Israelites of their time: when things were there in as good, yea or in better state. But we see how eachwhere they cry out, that their assemblies are vnholly, to which it is no more lawfull to consent than it is to deny God. And truly if those were Churches, it followeth therefore that in Israel Helias, Micheas and such other: In Iurie, Esay, Jeremy, Osee and other of that sort, whome the Prophets, priests and people of that time hated & detested worse than any vncircumcised men, were strangers from the Church of God. If those were Churches, then the Church was not the pillar of trueth, but the stay of lying: not the tabernacle of the liuing God, but the receptacle of idols. Therefore it was needfull for them to depart from the consent of those assemblies, which was nothing else but a wicked conspiracie against God. In like manner if anie man acknowledge the assemblies at these dayes being defiled with idolatrie, superstition and wicked doctrine, to be such in whose full communion a Christian man ought to continue euen to the consent of doctrine, he shall greatly erre. For if they be Churches, then they haue the power of the keyes. But the keyes are vnseperably knit with the word, which is from thence quite driuen away. Againe, if they be Churches, then the promise of Christ is of force among them, whatsoeuer ye binde, &c. But they contrariwise do banish from their communion all such as do professe themselves not fainedly the seruants of Christ. Therefore either the promise of Christ is vaine, or at least in this respect they are not Churches. Finally in steede of the ministry of the word they haue schooles of vngodliness, and a sinke of all kindes of crours. Therefore either in this respect they are not Churches, or three shall remaine no token whereby the lawfull assemblies of the faithfull may be feuerally known from the meetings of Turkes.

11 But as in the olde time there yet remained among the Iewes certaine peculiar prerogatiues of the Church, so at this day also we take not from the Papists such steps as it pleased the Lord to haue remaining among them after the disputation of the Church. The Lord had once made his couenant with the Iewes. That same rather being vpholden by the stedfastnesse of it selfe did continue with striuing against their vngodlinesse, than was preferred by them. Therefore (such was the assurednesse and constancie of Gods goodnes) there remained the couenant of the Lord, neither could his faithfulness be blotted out by their vnfaithfulness: neither could Circumcision be so prophaned with their vnclane hands, but that it still was the signe and sacrament of that couenant. Whereupon the children that were borne of them, the Lord called his owne, which vnlesse it were by speciall blessing, belonged nothing to him. So when he hath left his couenant in France, Italie, Germanie, Spaine, England: since those prouinces haue bene oppressed with the tyranny of Antichrist, yet that his couenant might remaine inuiolable, first he there preferred Baptisme, the testimonie of his couenant, which being consecrate by his owne mouth retaineth her owne force notwithstanding the vngodlines of man: then, with his prouidence he hath wrought that there should remaine other remnants, least the Church should be vterly destroyed. And as oftentimes buildings are so pulled downe, that the foundations and ruines remaine: so he hath not suffered his Church either to be ouerthrowen by Antichrist from the very foundation, or to be laid euen with the ground

A Church degenerated and made prophane is no such Church as we ought of necessitie to haue communion with and fellowship.

2. The. 2. 4.

12 Whereas therefore we will not simply graunt to the Papiests the title of the Church, we doe not therefore denie that there be Churches among them: but only we contend of the true and lawfull ordering of the Church: which is required in the communion both of the sacraments which are the signes of profession, but also specially of doctrine. Daniel and Paul foretolde that Antichrist shoulde sit in the temple of God. With vs we account the Bishop of Rome the captaine and standarde bearer of that wicked and abhominable kingdome. Whereas his seate is placed in the temple of God, thereby is meant that his kingdome shall be such as cannot abolish the name of Christ nor of his Church. Hereby therefore appeereth, that we doe not denie but that euen vnder his tyrannie remaine churches, but such as he hath prophaned with vngodlinesse full of sacrilege, such as he hath afflicted with outrageous dominion, such as he hath corrupted and in manner killed with euill and damnable doctrines, as with poisoned drinks: such wherein Christ lieth halfe buried, the Gospell ouerwhelmed, godlinesse banished, the worshipping of God in a manner abolished: such finally wherein all things are so troubled, that therein rather appeereth the face of Babylon than of the holy city of God. In a summe, I say that they be Churches, in respect that the Lord there maruellously preserveth the remnants of his people howsoever they were dispersed and scattered abroad, in respect that there remaine some tokens of the Church, especially these tokens, the effectualnesse whereof neither the craft of the diuell, nor the maliciousnesse of man can destroy. But on the other side because these marks are blotted out, which in this discourse we ought principally to haue respect vnto, I say that euery one of their assemblies and the whole bodie wanteth the lawfull forme of a Church.

The iij. Chapter.

Of the teachers and ministers of the Church, and of their election and office.

The reasons why God would haue his Church so be governed by men.

Mat. 26. 11.

NOW it is meete that we speake of the order, by which it was the Lords will to haue this Church governed. For although in his Church he onely must rule and reigne, yea and beare preeminence or excell in it, and this gouernment to be vsed or executed by his onely worde: yet because he dwelleth not among vs in visible presence, so that he can presently with his owne mouth declare his will vnto vs, we haue said that in this he vseth the ministerie of men, and as it were the trauell of deputies, not in transferring his right and honour vnto them, but onely that by their mouth he might doe his owne woike, like as a workman to doe his worke vseth his instrument. I am compelled to repeate againe those things that I haue already declared. He might in deede doe it either by himselfe without any other helpe or instrument, or also by meane of Angels: but there are many causes why he had rather doe it by men. For by this meane first he declareth his good will towarde vs, when he taketh out of men them that shall doe his message in the world, that shall be the interpreters of his secret will, finally that shall represent his owne person. And so by experience he proueth that it is not vaine that commonly hee calleth vs his temples, when out of the mouthes of men, as out of his sanctuarie, hee giueth answers to men. Secondly, this is the best and most profitable exercise to humilitie, when he accustometh vs to obey his worde, howsoever it bee preached by men like vnto vs, yea sometime our inferiours in dignitie. If hee himselfe speake from heauen, it were no maruell if his holy Oracles were without delay reuerently receiued with the eares and mindes of all men. For who would not dreade his power being in presence?

Aug. lib. 1. de doct. Christ.

presence? who would not be thrown downe at the first sight of so great maiestie? who would not be confounded with that infinite brightnesse? But when some sillie man risen out of the dust speaketh in the name of God, here with very good testimonie we declare our godlinesse and reuerent obedience toward God himselfe, if to his minister we yeeld our selues willing to learne, which yet in nothing excellet vs. Therefore for this cause also he hath hidden the treasure of his heavenly wisdom in bricke and earthen vessels, that he might haue the certainer prooffe how much he is esteemed of vs. Moreouer there was nothing fitter for the cherishing of mutuall charitie, than that men should be bound together one to another with this bond; wher one is made a pastor to teach the rest, and they that are commanded to be scholars receive all one doctrine at one mouth. For if euerie man were able enough to serue himselfe, and needeth not the help of another: such is the pride of mans nature, that euerie one would despise other, and should againe be despised of them. Therefore the Lord hath bound his Church with that knot, which he foresaw to be the strongest knot to hold vnitie together, when he hath left with men the doctrine of saluation, and of eternall life, that by their hands he might communicate it to the rest. Hereunto Paul had respect when he wrote to the Ephesians, One body one spirit, as also ye be called in one hope of your calling. One Lord, one faith, one Baptisme: One God, and the father of all, which is aboue all, and by all, and in vs all. But vnto euery one of vs grace is giuen according to the measure of the gift of Christ. Wherefore he saith: When he was gone vp on high, he led captiuitie captiue, he gaue gifts to men. He that went downe is the selfe same he, that went vp, that he might fulfill all things. And the same hath giuen some to be Apostles, and some Prophets, and some Euangelists, and other some Pastors and teachers, vnto the restoring of the holy ones, to the worke of ministration, to the edifying of the body of Christ, vntill we come all into the vnitie of faith, and of the knowledge of the sonne of God, into a perfect man, into the measure of full growne age: that we be no more children that may be carried about with euery winde of doctrine: but following trueth in charitie, let vs in all things growe into him that is the head, euen Christ, in whome the whole bodie conioyned and compacted together by all the ioynt of subministration, according to the working in measure of euerie part, maketh increase of the body, vnto the edifying of it selfe by charitie.

2 By these words he sheweth, that that ministerie of men, which God vseth in governing his Church is the cheefe sinew, whereby the faithfull cleaue together in one body: and also he sheweth that the Church can not otherwise be preserved safe, but if it be vpholden by these staires, in which it pleased the Lord to repose the saluation of it. Christ (saith he) is gone vp on high, that he might fulfill all things. This is the manner of fulfilling, that by his ministers, to whom he hath committed that office, and hath giuen the grace to execute that worke, he disposeth and distributeth his gifts to the Church, yea and after a certaine manner giueth himselfe present, with extending the power of his spirit in this institution, that it should not be vaine or idle. So is the restoring of the holy ones performed: so is the body of Christ edified, so do we by all things growe into him that is the head, and do growe together among our selues: so are we all brought into the vnitie of Christ, if prophetic flourish among vs, if we receiue the Apostles, if we refuse not the doctrine ministred vnto vs. Therefore he goeth about the disipation, or rather the ruine and destruction of the Church, whosoever he be that either endeuoureth to abolish this order of whome we speake, and this kind of government, or minisheth the estimation of it as a thing not so necessary. For neither the light and heate of the sunne, nor meate and drinke are so necessary to nourish and susteine this present life, as the office of the Apostles and pastors is necessary to preserue the Church in earth.

3 Therefore I haue aboue admoynished, that God hath oftentimes with such titles titles as he could, commended the dignitie thereof vnto vs, that we should haue it in most high honor and price, as the most excellent thing of all. He testifieth that he giueth to men a singular benefite, in raising them vp teachers, where he commandeth the Prophet to crie out that faire are the feete, and blessed is the comming of them that bring tidings of peace: and when he callth the Apostles the light of the world, and saue of the earth. Neither could this office be more honourable aduanced, than it was when he said: He that heareth you, heareth me. He that despiseth you, despiseth me. But there is no place more plaine, than in Paul in his second Epistle to the Corinthians, where he as it were of purpose entreateth of this matter. He affirmeth therefore, that there is nothing in the Church more excellent or glorious than the ministerie of the Gospell, forasmuch as it is the administration of the Spirit, and of righteousnesse, and of eternall life. These and like sayings serue to this purpose, that that order of governing and preserving the Church by ministers, which the Lorde hath stablished for euer, should not grow out of estimation among vs, and so at length by very contempt grow out of vse. And how great is the necessitie thereof, he hath declared not onely by words, but also by examples. When his will was to shine more fully to Cornelius with the light of his truth, he sent an Angell from heauen to send Peter vnto him. When his will was to call Paul to the knowledge of himselfe, and to engraft him into the Church, he spake not to him with his owne voice, but sent him to a man, of whom he should receiue both the doctrine of saluation, and the sanctification of baptism. If it be not done without cause, that an Angell which is the interpreter of God, do himselfe abstaine from declaring the will of God, but commandeth that a man be sent for, to declare it: and not without cause that Christ the onely Schoolmaster of the Faithfull committeth Paul to the schooling of a man, yea euen that same Paul whom he had determined to take vp into the third heauen, and to vouchsafe to graunt him miraculous reuelation of things vnspokeable: who is there now that dare despise that ministerie, or passe it ouer as a thing superfluous, the vse wherof it hath pleased God to make approoued by such examples?

4 They that haue rule of the government of the Church according to the institution of Christ, are named of Paul first Apostles, then Prophets, thirdly Euangelists, fourthly Pastors, last of all teachers. Of which, the two last alone haue ordinarie office in the Church: the other three the Lord raised vp at the beginning of his kingdome, and sometime yet also raiseth vp, as the necessitie of times requirerth. What is the Apostles office, appeareth by that Commandement: goe, preach the Gospell to euery creature. There are not certaine boundes appointed vnto them: but the whole world is assigned them, to be brought into the obedience of Christ: that in spreading the Gospell among all nations wheresoeuer they shall be able, they may eche where raise vp his Kingdome. Therefore Paul, when he went about to prooue his Apostleship, rehearseth that he hath gotten to Christ not some one Cite, but hath farre and wide spread abroad the Gospell: and that he hath not laid his hands to another mans foundation, but planted Churches where the name of the Lord had neuer bene heard of. Therefore the Apostles were sent to bring backe the worlde from falling away, vnto true obedience of GOD, and eche where to stablish his kingdome by preaching of the Gospell: or (if you like that better) as the first builders of the Church, to lay the foundations thereof in all the world. Prophets he calleth, not all expositors of Gods will whatsoeuer they be, but those that by singular reuelation excelled, such as at this time either be none, or are lesse notable. By Euangelistes I vnderstand those, which when in dignitie they were lesse than the Apostles, yet in office were next vnto them, yea and occupied their roomes. Such were Luke, Timothie, Titus, and other like: and peradventure also the seuentie Disciples, whom Christ appointed in the second place after the Apostles. According to this exposition (which seemeth to me agreeable both with the words and meaning of Paul) those those three offices were not ordained in the Church to this ende that they should be perpetuall, but onely to serue for that time wherein Churches were to be erected, where were none before, or at least to be remooued from Moses to Christ. Albeit I denie not, but that afterwarde also the Lord hath sometime raised vp Apostles, or at least in their places Euangelists, as it hath beene done in our time. For it was needefull to haue such, to bring backe the Church from the falling away of Antichrist. Yet the office it selfe I doe neuerthelessse call extraordinary, because it hath no place in the Churches alreadie well set in order. Next after these are Pastors and Teachers, whome the Church may neuer lacke: betweene whome I thinke that there is this difference, that the teachers are not appointed to beare rule of discipline, nor for the ministation of Sacraments, nor admonishments or exhortations, but onely to expound the Scripture, that pure and sound doctrine may be kept among the faithfull. But the office of Pastor containeth all these things within it.

5 Now we haue, which were those ministeries in the Church that continued but for a time, and which were those that were ordained to endure perpetually. If wee ioyne the Euangelists with the Apostles, we shall haue remaining two couples after a certaine manner answering the one to the other. For as our teachers are like to the olde Prophets, in such sort are our Pastors like to the Apostles. The office of Prophets was more excellent, by reason of the singular gift that they had of reuelation: but the office of teachers hath in a manner like order, and altogether the same ende. So those twelue whome the Lorde did choose, that they should publish abroad to the world the newe preaching of the Gospell, in degree and dignitie went before the rest. For although by the meaning and propriety of the worde, all the ministers of the Church may be rightly called Apostles, because they are sent of the Lorde, and are his messengers: yet because it was much behoouefull, that there should be a certaine knowledge had of the sending of them that should bring a thing newe and vnhard of, it was necessarie that those twelue (to whose number Paul was afterwarde added) should be garnished with some peculiar title about the rest. Paul himselfe in deed in one place giueth this name to Andronicus and Junias, whom he saith to haue bin notable among the Apostles: but when he meaneth to speake properly hee referreth it to none other but to that principall degree. And this is the common vse of the Scripture. Yet the Pastors (suiuing that each of them doe gouerne severall Churches appointed to them) haue al one charge with the Apostles. Now what maner of thing this is, let vs yet heare it more plainly.

6 The Lord when he sent the Apostles, gaue them commandement (as we saide euen now) to preach the Gospell, and to baptise them that beleue vnto forgienesse of sins. He had before commanded, that they should distribute the holy signes of his bodie and bloud, as he had done. Loe here is a holy, inuiolable and perpetuall lawe laide vpon them that succede in the Apostles place, whereby they receiue commandement to preach the Gospell, and minister the Sacraments. Whereupon we gather, that they which neglect both these things, doe falsely say that they beare the person of the Apostles. But what of the Pastors? Paul speaking not of himselfe onely, but of them all, when he saith: let a man so esteeme vs as the ministers of Christ, and distributors of the mysteries of God. Againe in another place, a Bishop must be a fast holder of that faithfull worde which is according to doctrine: that hee may be able to exhort by sound doctrine, and to conuince the gainers. Out of those and like places, which are ech where to be found, we may gather, that also in the office of the Apostles these be the two principall parts, to preach the Gospell, and to minister the Sacraments. As for the order of teaching, it consisteth not onely in publike sermons, but belongeth also to priuate admonitions. So Paul calleth the Ephesians to witnes that he hath not fled from doing of any of those things that were for their profite, but that hee preached and taught them both openlie and in euery house, testifying both to the Jewes and Grecians, repentance and faith in Christ. Againe a little after: that he hath not ceased with teares to admonish euery one of them. Neither yet belongeth it to my purpose at this present to expresse all the qualities of a good Pastor, but onely to point out what they professeth that call them selues Pastors: that is, that they are so made rulers of the Church, not that they should haue an idle dignitie, but that they should with the doctrine of Christ instruct the people to true godlines, minister the holy mysteries, and preserue and exercise vpright discipline. For whoso euer be set to be watchmen in the Church, the Lord declaereth vnto them, that if any by their negligence perish through ignorance, he will require the blame at their hands. That also pertaineth to them all, which Paul saith of himselfe: woe to me vnto me: I preach the Gospell, forasmuch as the distributing thereof is committed to me. Finally, what the Apostles performed to the whole world, the same ought euery Pastor to performe to his flocke, to which he is appointed.

7 Albeit when we assigne to euery one their seuerall Churches, yet in the meane while we do not denie but that he which is bounde to one Church may helpe other Churches, if any troublesome thing do happen that requireth his presence, or if hee be asked counsell of any darke matter. But forasmuch as for the keeping of the peace of the Church, this policie is necessarie, that there be set forth to euery man what he should do, least all be confusedly disordred, run about without calling, or rashly run altogether into one place, and least such as are more carefull for their owne commoditie than for the edification of the Church, should at their owne will leaue their Churches vacant: this ordering ought commonly to be kept so neere as may bee, that euery man contented with his owne boundes should not breake into another mans charge. And this is no inuention of man, but the ordinance of God himselfe. For wee reade that Paul and Barnabas created Priestes in all the seuerall churches of Lystra, Antioche, Iconium: and Paul himselfe commandeth Titus that hee should appoint Priestes in euerie towne. So in one place hee speaketh of the Bishops of Philippes, and in another place of Archippus Bishop of the Colossians. And there remaineth a notable Sermon of his in Luke, to the Priestes of the Church of Ephesus. Whoso euer therefore shall take vpon him the gouernment and charge of the Church, let him knowe that hee is bounde to this lawe of Gods calling: not that as bounde to the soyle (as the Lawyeres tearme it) that is, made bounde and fastened vnto it, hee may not once moue his foote from thence, if the common profite do so require, so that it be done wel and orderly: but he that is called into one place ought not himselfe to thinke of remoouing, nor seeke to be deliuered as he shall thinke to be good for his commoditie. Then if it be expedient that any be remooued to another place, yet he ought not to attempt it of his owne priuate aduise, but to tary for publike authoritie.

8 But wher eas I haue without difference called them Bishops, and Priestes, and Pastors, and Ministers, that rule Churches: I did that according to the vtage of the Scripture, which indifferently vseth these words. For whoso euer do execute the Ministerie of the word, to them he giueth the title of Bishops. So in Paul, where Titus is commanded to appoint Priestes in euerie towne, it is immediately added. For a Bishop must be vnreproouable, &c. So in another place hee saluteth many Bishops in one Church. And in the Acts it is rehearsed, that hee called together the Priestes of Ephesus, whom he himself in his owne sermon calleth Bishops. Here now it is to be noted, that hitherto we haue recited none but those offices that stand in the Ministerie of the worde: neither doth Paul make mention of any other in that fourth Chapter which we haue alleaged. But in the Epistle to the Romanes, and in the first Epistle to the Corinthians, he reckoneth vp other offices, as powers, the gift of healing, interpretation, gouernement, caring for the poore. Of the which I omitted those that endured but for a time, because it is to no profitable purpose to tary vpon them. But there there are two that doe perpetually abide, that is to say, gouernment and care of the poore. Gouernours I thinke were the Elders chosen out of the people, that shoulde together with the Bishops, haue rule of the iudgement of manners, and the vsing of discipline. For a man cannot otherwise expound that which he saith: let him that ruleth doe it with carefulnesse. Therefore at the beginning euery Church had their Sena-^{re,}g thered of godly, graue and holy men: which had that same iurisdiction in correcting of vices, whereof we shall speake hereafter. And that this was the order of more than one age, experience it selfe declareth. Therefore this office of gouernment is also necessarie for all ages.

Rom. 12. 8.

9 The care of the poore was committed to the Deacons. Howbeit to the Romanes, there are set two kindes. Let him that giueth (saith Paul in that place) doe it in simplicitie: let him that hath mercie, doe it in cheerefulnesse. For as much as it is certaine that he speaketh of the publike offices of the Church, it must needs bee that there were two seuerall degrees. Vnlesse my iudgement deceiue me, in the first point he meaneth Deacons, that distributed the almes: in the other he speaketh of them that had giuen themselves to looking to the poore and sicke: of which sort were the widowes of whom he maketh mention to Timothe. For women could execute no other publike office, but to giue themselves to the seruiue of the poore. If we graunt this, (as we must needs graunt it) then there shall be two sortes of Deacons: of which one sort shall serue in distributing the things of the poore, the other in looking to the poore of the Church themselves. But although the very worde Diaconia, Deaconrie extendeth further: yet the Scripture specially calleth them Deacons, to whom the Church hath giuen the charge to distribute the almes, and to take care of the poore, and hath appointed them as it were stewards of the common treasure of the poore: whose beginning, institution and office, is described of Luke in the Actes. For when a murmuring was raised by the Grecians: for that in the ministerie of the poore their widowes were neglected, the Apostles excusing themselves with saying that they could not serue both offices, both the preaching of the word and the ministering at tables, required of the multitude, that there might be chosen seuen honest men, to whom they might commit that doing. Loe what manner of Deacons the Apostolike Church had, and what Deacons it were meete for vs to haue according to their example.

10 Now whereas in the holy assembly all things are to be done in order and comely, there is nothing wherein that ought to be more diligently obserued, than in stablishing the order of gouernment: because there is no where greater perill if any thing be done vnorderly. Therefore to the ende that vnquiet and troublesome men (which otherwise would happen) should rashly thrust in themselves to teach or to rule, it is expressly prouided, that no man should without calling take vpon him a publike office in the Church. Therefore that a man may be iudged a true minister of the Church, first he must be orderly called, then he must answer his vocation, that is to say, take vpon him and execute the duties enioyned him. This we may ointimes marke in Paul: which when he meaneth to approoue his Apottleship, in a manner alway with his faithfulness in executing his office he alleagueth his calling. If to great a minister of Christ dare not take vpon himselfe the authoritie that he shoulde be heard in the Church, but because he both is appointed thereunto by the commandement of the Lord, and also faithfully performeth that which is committed vnto him: how great shamefulness shall it be, if any man wanting both or either of these, shall challenge such honour to himselfe? But because we haue aboue touched the necessitie of executing the office, now let vs intreate onely of the calling.

11 The discourse therof findeth in fower pointes: that we should know, what manner of ministers, how, and by whome ministers ought to be instituted, and with what vsage or what ceremonie they are to be admitted. I speake of the outward and

and

Cap. 3. Of the outward meanes

and solemne calling, which belongeth to publike order of the Church: as for that secret calling, whereof euery minister is prouide in his owne conscience before God, and hath not the Church witness of it, I omit it. It is a good witness of our hart, that not by any ambition, nor couetousnesse, nor any other greedie desire, but with pure feare of God and zeale to edifie the Church, we receive the office offered vnto vs. That in deede is (as I haue faide) necessarie for euery one of vs, if we will approue our ministerie allowable before God. Neuer thelesse he is rightly called in presence of the Church, that commeth vnto it with an euill conscience, so that his wickednesse be not open. They are wont also to say that euen priuate men are called to the ministerie, whome they see to be meete and able to execute it: because verily learning ioyned with godlinesse and with the other qualities of a good Pastor, is a certaine preparation to the very office. For whome the Lorde hath appointed to so great an office, he first furnisheth them with those armours that are required to fulfill it, that they should not come emptie and vnprepared vnto it. Whereupon Paul also to the Corinthians, when he meant to dispute of the very offices, first rehearsed the giftes which they ought to haue that execute the offices. But because this is the first of those fower points that I haue propounded, let vs now go forward vnto it.

A. 3. 1. 8.

1. Tim. 5. 22.

12 What manner of Bishops it is meete to choose, Paul doth largely declare in two places, but the summe commeth to this effect, that none are to be chosen, but they that are of so sound doctrine, and of holy life, and not notable in any vice, which might both take away credite from them, and procure slander to the ministerie. Of Deacons and Elders there is altogether like consideration. It is alway to be looked vnto, that they be not vnable or vnfit to beare the burden that is laide vpon them, that is to say, that they may be furnished with those powers that are necessarie to the fulfilling of their office. So when Christ was about to send his Apostles, he garnished them with those weapons and instruments which they coule not want. And Paul when he had painted out the image of a good and true Bishop, warneth Timothie, that he would not defile himselfe with choosing any man that differeth from it. I referre this word How, not to the Ceremonie of choosing, but to the reuerent feare that is to be kept in the choosing. Hereupon come the fastings and praers, which Luke reciteth that the faithfull vsed when they made Pricktes. For whereas they vnderstood that they medled with a most earnest matter, they durst attempt nothing, but with great reuerence and carefulnesse. But they chiefly applied themselues to praers, whereby they might craue of God the spirite of counsell and discretion.

God himselfe.*

13 The third thing that we haue set in our diuision was, by whom ministers are to be chosen. Of this thing no certaine rule can be gathered out of the institution of Apostles, which had some difference from the common calling of the rest. For because it was an extraordinarie ministerie, that it might be made discernable by some more notable make, it behooued that they which should execute it, should be called and appointed by the Lords owne mouth. They therefore tooke in hand their doing, being furnished by no mans election, but by the only commandement of God and of Christ. Hereupon commeth that when the Apostles would put another in the place of Judas, they durst not certainly name any one man, but they brought forth two, that the Lord should declare by lot, whether of them he would haue to succede. After this manner also it is meete to take this, that Paul denieth that he was create Apostle of men or by man, but by Christ and God the father. That first point, that is to say of men, he had common with all the godly ministers of the worde. For no man coule rightly take vpon him that execution, but hee that were called of God. But the other point was proper and singular to himselfe. Therefore when he glorieth of this, he doth not onely boast that he hath that which belongeth to a true and lawfull Pastor, but also bringeth forth the signes of his Apostleship. For when there were some among the Galathians, which trauellling to diminish his authoritie, made vs. 1. 13.

Gal. 1. 12.

him

him some meane disciple, put in office vnder them by the principall Apostles: hee, to defend in safetie the dignitie of his preaching, which he knewe to be thot at by those futtle deuises, neede to shew himselfe in all points nothing inferior to the other Apostles. Therefore he affirmeth that he was chosen, not by the iudgement of men, like some common Bishop, but by the mouth and manifest Oracle of the Lorde himselfe.

14 But no man that is sober will denie, that it is according to the order of lawful calling, that Bishops shoulde bee appointed by men: forasmuch as there are so manie testimonies of the Scripture for prooofe therof. Neither doth that saying of Paul make to the contrary, as it is said, that he was not sent of men, nor by men: forasmuch as he speaketh not there of the ordinarie choosing of ministers, but chalengeeth to himselfe that which was speciall to the Apostles. Howbeit God also so appointed Paul by him selfe by singular prerogative, that in the meane time he vsed the discipline of Ecclesiasticall calling. For Luke reporteth it thus, when the Apostles were fasting & praying, the Holy Ghost said: Separate vnto me Paul and Barnabas to the worke to which I haue feuerally chosen them. To what purpose serued that separation and putting on of hands, sith the holy Ghost hath testified his owne election, but that the discipline of the church in appointing ministers by men, might bee preferred? Therefore the Lorde could by no plainer example appooue such order, than hee did when hauing first declared that he had ordeined Paul Apostle for the Gentiles, yet he willeth him to be appointed by the Church. Which thing we may see in the choosing of Matthas, For, because the office of Apostleship was of so great importance, that they durst not by their owne iudgement choose any one man into that degree, they did set two men in the midst, vpon the one of whom the lot should fall: that so both the election might haue an open testimonie from heauen, and yet the policie of the Church should not be passed ouer.

15 Now it is demanded whether the minister ought to be chosen of the whole Church, or onely of the other of the same office, and of the Elders that haue the rule of discipline, or whether he may be made by the authoritie of one man. They that giue this authoritie to one man, alleage that which Paul saith to Titus: Therefore I haue left thee in Creta, that thou shouldest appoint in euery towne Priests. Againe to Timothie: lay not hands quickly vpon any man. But they are deueiled if they thinke, that either Timothie at Ephesus, or Titus in Creta, vsed a kingly power, that either of them shoulde dispose all things at his owne will. For they were about the rest, onely to go before the people with good and holtsome counsels: not that they onelie, excluding all other, should do what they listed. And that I may not seeme to faime anie thing, I will make it plaine by a like example. For Luke rehearseth that Paul and Barnabas appointed Priests in diuers Churches: but he also expresseth the order or manner how, when he saith that it was done by voices ordeining Priests (saith hee) by lifting vp of hands in euery Church. Therefore they two did create them: but the whole multitude, as the Grecians manner was in elections, did by holding vp their hands, declare whom they would haue. Euen in like manner the Romane histories do oftentimes say, that the Consull which kept the assemblies, created new officers, for none other cause but for that he receiued the voices and gouerned the people in the election. Truly it is not likely that Paul graunted more to Timothie & Titus than he tooke to himselfe. But we see that he was wont to create Bishops by voices of the people. Therefore the places aboue are so to be vnderstanded, that they minish nothing of the common right & libertie of the Church. Therefore Cyprian saith wel, when hee affirmeth that it commeth from the authoritie of God, that the Priest shoulde be chosen in presence of the people before the eyes of all men, and shoulde by publike iudgement and testimonie be allowed for woorthie and meete. For wee see that this was by the commandment of the Lorde obserued in the Leviticall

Priests, that before their consecration they should be brought into the sight of the people. And no otherwise is Matthias added to the fellowship of the Apostles: and no otherwise the leauen Deacons were created: but the people seeing and allowing it. These examples (saith Cyprian) do shew, that the ordering of a Priest ought not to be done, but in the knowledge of the people standing by: that the ordering may be iust and lawfull, which hath bene examined by the witness of all. We are therefore come thus far, that this is by the word of God a lawfull calling of a minister, when they that seeme meet are created by the consent and allowance of the people, and that other pastors ought to beare rule of the election, that nothing be done amisse of the multitude, either by lightnes, or by euil affections, or by disorder.

The forme of ordaining ministers in the Church by laying on of hands.

Gen. 48. 14.
Mat. 19. 15.
A^c. 19. 6.

16 Now remaineth the forme of ordering, to which we assigned the last place in the calling. It is euident that the Apostles vsed no other ceremonie when they admitted any man to the ministerie, but the laying on of hands. And I thinke that this vsage came from the maner of the Hebrewes, which did as it were present vnto God by laying on of hands that which they would haue blessed and hallowed. So when Jacob was about to blisse Ephraim and Manasse, he layed his hands vpon their heads. Which thing our Lord followed, when he prayed ouer the infants. In the same meaning (as I thinke) the Iewes by the ordinance of the law, layd hands vpon the Sacrifices. Wherefore the Apostles by laying on of hands did signifie that they offered him to God, whom they admitted into the ministerie. Albeit they vsed it also vpon them, to whom they applied the visible graces of the spirit. Howsoever it be, this was the solemne vsage, so oft as they called any man to the ministerie of the Church. So they consecrated Pastors and teachers, and so also Deacons. But although there be no certaine commandment concerning the laying on of hands, yet because we see that it was continually vsed among the Apostles, their so diligent obseruing of it ought to be to vs in steede of a commandment. And truly it is profitable, that by such a signe, both the dignitie of the ministerie should be commended to the people, and also that he which is ordered should be admonished, that he is not now at his owne libertie, but made bonde to God and the Church. Moreover it shall not be a vaine signe, if it be restored to the naturall beginning of it. For if the Spirit of God, hath ordained nothing in the Church in vaine, we must thinke that this ceremonie, sith it proceeded from him, is not vnprofitable, so that it be not turned into a superstitious abuse. List of all this is to be holden, that not the whole multitude did lay their hands vpon the ministers, but the Pastors only. Howbeit it is vncertaine whether many did alway lay on their hands or no. But it is euident that that was done in the Deacons, in Paul and Barnabas, and a few other. But Paul himselfe in another place reporteth, that he, and not many other, did lay his hands vpon Timothee. I admonish thee (saith he) that thou raise vp the grace which is in thee by laying on of my hands. For, as for that which in the other Epistle is spoken of the laying on of the hands of the degree of Priests, I do not so take it, as though Paul did speake of the company of the Elders, but I vnderstand by that word the verie ordinance it selfe: as if he had said: Make that the Grace, which thou hast receiued by laying on of hands when I did create thee a priest, may not be voided.

The iiij. Chapter.

Of the state of the old Church, and of the maner of governing that was in vse before the Papacie.

The ministers of the ancient Church of Christ Presbiters or Priests or Deacons are of the order of Pastors or Pastors and Teachers.

Hitherto we haue intreated of the order of governing the Church, as it hath been deliuered vs out of the pure worde of God, and of the ministeries, as they were instituted by Christ. Now that all these things may be more cleerely and familiarly opened, and also be better fastened in our mindes: it shall be profitable in these things to consider the forme of the old Church, which shall represent to our eyes a certaine image of Gods institution. For although the Bishops of those times did set fourth many Canons, wherein they seemed to expresse more than was expressed in the holy Scripture: yet they with such heedfulness framed all their order after the onely rule of Gods worde, that a man may easily see that in this behalfe they had in a manner nothing disagreeing from the worde of God. But although there might be somewhat wanting in their ordinances, yet because they with synccere zeale endeouored to preferue Gods institution, and they swarued not much from it, it shall be very profitable here shortly to gather what maner of obseruation they had. As we haue declared that there are three sorts of Ministers commended vnto vs in the Scripture: so all the Ministers that the old Church had, it deuided into three Orders. For out of the order of Elders were partly chosen Pastors and teachers: the rest of them had the rule of the judgment and correction of manners. To the Deacons was committed the care of the poore, and the distributing of the almes. As for the Readers and Acolythes, were not names of certaine offices: but those whom they called Clerkes, they trained from their youth vpward in certaine exercises to serue the Church, that they might the better vnderstand to what purpose they were appointed, and might in time come the better prepared to their office: as I shall by and by shew more at large. Therefore Hierome, when he had appointed five orders of the Church, rekeneth vp Bishops, Priests, Deacons, Beleeuers, and Catechumeni, to the rest of the Cleargie and Monkes he giueth no proper place.

2 Therefore to whome the office of teaching was inioyned, all them they named Priestes. In euery Citie they chose out of their owne number one man, to whom they specially gaue the title of Bishop: that dissensions should not grow of equalitie, as it is wont to come to passe. Yet the Bishop was not so about the rest in honor and dignitie, that he had a dominion ouer his fellowes. But what office the Consull had in the Senate, to propound of matters, to aske opinions, to goe before the other with counselling, monishing, and exhorting, to gouerne the whole action with his authority, and to put in execution that which is decreed by common counsell; the same office had the Bishop in the assembly of the Priestes. And the old writers themselves confesse, that the same was by mens consent brought in for the necessitie of the times. Therefore Hierome vpon the Epistle to Titus saith. The same was a Priest which was a Bishop. And before that by the institution of the Demull, there were dissensions in religion, and it was said among the people, I am of Paul, I am of Cephas: Churches were gouerned by common counsell of Elders. Afterward, that the feedes of dissensions might be plucked vp, all the care was committed to one man. As therefore the Priestes doe know, that by custome of the Church they are subiect to him that is set ouer them: so let the Bishops know, that they are about the Priestes, rather by custome, than by the tith of the Lords disposing, and that they ought to gouerne the Church in common together. But in an other place he teacheth, how auncient an institution it was. For he saith that at Alexandria, from Marke the Euangelist cuen to Heraclas and Dionysius, the Priestes did alwaie choose out one of themselves, and set him in a higher degree, whom they named a Bishop. Therefore euery Citie had a company of Priests which were Pastors, & Teachers. For they all did execute among the people that office of teaching, exhorting and correcting. which Paul appointeth to the Bishops: and that they might leaue seed after them, they trauided in teaching the younger men, that had professed themselves souldiours in the holy warfare. To euery Citie there was appointed a certaine Countrey, that should take their Priestes from thence, and be accounted as it were into the body of that Church. Euery company (as I haue before said) onely for preservation of policie and peace were vnder one Bishop: which was so about the rest in dignitie, that he was subiect to the assemblee of his brethren. If the compasse of ground that was vnder his Bishoprike were so great,

In Esa. cap. 6.

A colledge or company of Priestes in euery Citie, to teach, exhort, and correct the people: out of that companye for auoiding of dissensions one chosen to be a Bishop, the honor and dignitie which a Bishop so chosen had about the rest, the Countrey furnished with priests from the Citie, those Priestes vnder the Bishops authority, the compasse of ground committed to the care of one Bishop, learned his Bishopricke, in the Primitive church. that he could not suffice to serue all the offices of a Bishop in every place of it, in the country it selfe there were in certaine places appointed priests which in finall matters should execute his authoritie. Them they called country bishops, because in the country they represented the Bishop.

The office of Bishops and priests to distribute the word and Sacraments.

Epi. ad Eua.

3 But, so much as belongeth to the office, whereof we now speake, as well the bishops as the priests were bound to apply the distributing of the word and sacraments. For it was ordained onely at Alexandria, (because Arrius had there troubled the Church) that the priest should not preach to the people, as Socrates saith in the 9. book of the Tripartite historie. Which yet Hierome consisteth that he misliketh not. Truly it should be counted monstrous, if any man had giuen out himselfe for a Bishop, that had not also in very deed shewed himselfe a true Bishop. Therefore such was the severity of those times, that all ministers were driuen to the fulfilling of such office, as the Lord requireth of them. Neither do I rehearse the manner of one age alone. For euen in Gregories time, when the Church was now almost decayed (certainely it was much degenerate from the ancient purenes) it had not been tolerable that any bishop should abstaine from preaching. The priest (saith he in one place) dieth if there be no sound heard of him: because he asketh against himselfe the wrath of the secret iudge, if he go without sound of preaching. And in another place: When Paul testified that he is cleane from the blood of all: in this saying we be conuincd, we be bound, we be shewed to be guiltie, which are called priests, which beside the euils that we haue of our owne, adde also the deaths of other: because we kill so many as we being lukewarme and silent do daily see to go to death. He calleth himselfe and other silent, because they were lesse diligent in their worke than they ought to be. When he spareth not them, that did halfe performe their dutie: what thinke you he would haue done, if it a man had altogether sit idle? Therefore this was a great while holden in the church, that the chiefe duty of the Bishop was to feed Gods people with the word, or both publicly and priuately to edifie the Church with sound doctrine.

Epi. 4. Hom. in Eccl. Act. 20. 16.

For preserving of discipline, Archbishops and Patriarches ordained by them who neuer meant to forge another forme of ruling the Church: this word hath appointed in his word

4 But whereas euery prouince had among their Bishops one Archbishop: also where in the Nicens Synod there were ordained Patriarches, which should in degree and dignitie be aboute the Archbishops, that pertained to the preserving of discipline. Howbeit in this discourse, that which was most rarely vsed may not be omitted. For this cause therefore chiefly these degrees were ordained, that if any thing happened in any church, that could not well be ended by a few, might be referred to a prouinciall Synod. If the greatnes or difficultie of the matter required a greater discussing, the Patriarches were also called to it with the Synods, from whom there might be no appeal but to a generall Council. The government so ordered many called a Hierarchy, by a name (as I thinke) vnproper, and truly vnused in the scriptures. For the holy Ghost willed to prouide, that no man should dreame of a principality or dominion when the government of the church is spoken of. But, if leauing the word we looke vpon the thing, we shall finde that the old bishops ment to forge no forme of ruling the church, differing from that which the Lord appointed by his word.

The office of Deacons: the same vnder the Apostles & in the prouinciall Church: the occasion of making Subdeacons and Archdeacons.

5 Neither was the order of the Deacons at that time any other than it was vnder the Apostles. For they received the daily offerings of the Faithfull, and the yerely reuenues of the church, to bestow them vpon true vses, that is to say, to distribute them to feede partly the ministers, and partly the poore: but by the appointment of the bishop, to whom also they yeerly rendered accounts of their distribution. For whereas the Canons do euery where make the Bishop distributor of all the goods of the Church, it is not so to be vnderstanded, as though he did by himselfe discharge that care: but because it was his part to appoint to the Deacon, who should be receiued into the common almes of the Church, and of that which remained, to whom it should be giuen, and how much to euery one: because he had an ouerseeing whether the Deacon did faithfully execute that which belonged to his office. For thus it is reade in the Canons which they ascribe to the Apostles: We commaund that the Bishop haue the goods of the Church in his owne power. For if he be put in trust with the Soules of men, which are more precious, much more it is meete that he haue charge of money: so that by his power all things may be distributed to the poore by the Elders and Deacons: that they may be all ministred with feare and carefulnes. And in the Council of Antioche it is decreede, that the Bishops should be restrained that meddle with the goods of the Church, without the knowledge of the Elders and Deacons. But of that point we neede to make no longer disputation, sith it is euident by many Epistles of Gregorie, that euen at that time, when otherwise the ordinances of the Church were much corrupted, yet this obseruation continued, that the Deacons should vnder the Bishop be the stewards of the poore. As for Subdeacons, it is likely that at the beginning they were ioyned to the Deacons, that they should vse their seruice about the poore: but that difference was by little and little confounded. But Archdeacons began then to be created, when the plentie of the goods, required a newe and more exact manner of disposing them: Albeit Hierome doth say, that it was euen in his age. In their charge was the sum of their reuenues, possessions, and store, and the collection of the dayly offerings. Wherupon Gregory declareth to the Archdeacon of Salon, that he should be holden guiltie if any of the goods of the Church, perished either by his fraude or negligence. But whereas it was giuen to them to read the Gospell to the people, and to exhort them to prayer: & whereas they were admitted to deliuer the Cup in the holy Supper, that was rather done to garnish their office, that they should execute it with the more reuerence, when by such signes they were admonished that it was no prophane Bayliwike that they exercised, but a spirituall function and dedicate to God.

Cap. 35

Epi. ad Nep.
Epi. 10. lib. 1.

6 Hereby also we may iudge what vse there was, and what manner of distribution of the Church goods. Ech where both in the decrees of Synodes, and among the olde writers it is to be found, that whatsoeuer the Church possesseth either in lands or in money, is the patrimony of the poore. Therefore oftentimes there this song is sung to the Bishops and Deacons, that they should remember, that they meddle not with their own goods, but the goods appointed to the necessitie of the poore: which if they vnfaihtfully suppress or wast, they shall be guilty of blood. Whereby they are admonished, with great feare and reuerence, as in the sight of God, without respect of persons, to distribute them to whom they be due. Hereupon also come those graue protestations in Chrysostome, Ambrose, Augustine, and other like Bishops, whereby they affirme their owne vprightnesse to the people. But sith it is equitie, and established by the Lawe of the Lord, that they which employ their seruice to the Church, should be fed with the common charges of the Church, and also many Priestes in that age, consecrating their patrimonies to God, were willingly made poore: the distributing was such, that neither the Ministers wanted sustenance, nor the poore were neglected. But yet in the meane time it was prouided, that the Ministers themselves, which ought to giue example of honest sparing to other, should not haue so much, whereby they might abuse it to riotous excesse or delicioulines, but onely wherewith to susteine their owne neede. For those of the Cleargie (saith Hierome) which are able to lue of the goods of their Parents, if they take that which is the poores, doe commit sacriledge, and by such abuse they eate and drinke to themselves damnation.

The bestowing of Church goods.

7 First the ministracion was free and voluntarie, whereas the Bishops and Deacons were of their owne will Faithfull, and vprightnesse of conscience and innocencie of life were to them in steede of the Lawes. Afterward when euill examples grew of the greedines or peruerse affections of some, to correct those faultes, the Canons were made, which diuided the reuenues of the Church into foure parts: of which they assigned one part to them of the Cleargie, the second to the poore, the third to the maintenance and reparation of Churches, and other holy buildings; the fourth to the poore as well strangers as of their owne countrey. For whereas the other canons, giue this last part to the bishop, that varieth nothing from my abouesaid diuision. For they meane not that that part should be his owne, that either he himselfe alone should deuoure it, or powre it out, vpon whom or what he list, but that it should suffice to maintaine the Hospitalitie which Paul requireth of that order. And so do Gelasius and Gregorie expound it. For Gelasius bringeth no other reason why the Bishop should challenge any thing to himselfe, but that he might giue it prisoners and strangers. And Gregorie speaketh yet more plainly. It is the maner (saith he) of the sea Ap of old tike, to giue commandment to the Bishop when he is ordered, that of all the reuene that ariseth, there be made foure portions: that is to say, the one to the Bishop and his Family for Hospitalitie, and entertainment: the second to the Clergie: the third to the poore: the fourth to the repairing of Churches. Therefore it was lawfull for the Bishop to take nothing to his owne vse, but so much as were enough for moderate and meane foode and cloathing. If any began to exceed either in riotous expense, or in ostentation and pompe, he was by and by repressed by his fellowes, and if he obeyed not, he was put from his dignitie.

Church goods diuided into foure parts: one assigned to the maintenance of the Cleargie, the rest to other uses.

1. Tim. 3. 2.

The treasures and implements of the church made away to helpe the necessities of the poore, which could not otherwise be provided for.
T. par. hist. lib 5. Lib. 11 cap. 16. Ad Nepoc.

8 As for that which they bestowed vpon garnishing of holy things, at the first it was verie little. Afterward when the Church became somewhat richer, yet in that behalfe they still kept a meane. And yet all the money that was bestowed thereupon, remained safe for the poore, if any greater needfullie happened. So when famine possessed the prouince of Hierusalem, and the need could not otherwise be relieved, Cyrillus sold the vessels and garments and spent them vpon sustenance of the poore. Likewise Acatius bishop of Amida, when a great multitude of the Persians, in a maner starued for hunger, called together the Clergie, and when he had made that notable oration, Our God needeth neither dishes nor cuppes, because he neither eateth nor drinketh, he molt the vessels, to make thereof both meat and ransome for men in miserie. Hierom also, when he inuiceth against the too much gorgeousnes of temples, doth with honour make mention of Exuperius Bishop of Tholosa in his time, which carried the Lords bodie in a wicker basket, and his blood in glasse, but suffered no poore man to bee hungrie. That which I euen now saide of Acatius, Ambrose rehearseth of himselfe. For when the Arrians charged him, for that he had broken the holy vessels to ransome prisoners, he vsed this most godly excuse: Hee that sent the Apostles without gold, gathered Churches together without gold. The Church hath gold, not to keepe it, but to bestow it, and to giue reliefe in necessities. What neede is to keepe that which helpeth not? Do we not know, how much gold and siluer the Assyrians tooke out of the temple of the Lord? Doth not the price better to melt them for the sustenance of the poore, if other reliefes do faile, than an enemy a robber of God to beare them away? Will not the Lord say: Why hast thou suffered so many needie to die for hunger? and verily thou hadst gold whereof thou mightest haue ministered them sustenance. Why were so many lead away captiue, and not ransomed? why were so many slaine by the enemy? It had been better that thou shouldst saue the vessels of liuing men, than of mettalles. To these things thou shalt not be able to answer. For what wouldst thou say? I feared least Gods temple should want garnishing. He would answer: Sacraments require not gold: neither do those things please with gold that are not bought with golde. The ransoming of prisoners is a garnishing of Sacraments. In sum, we see that it is most true which the same man saith in another place, that whatsoeuer the Church then possessed was the store of the needie. A game: that a Bishop hath nothing that is not the poores.

T. lib. 5. epist. 31. & 37.

The institution of young Clergie men & clerkes in loyer schollers, to be trained up for the higher seruices of the church

9 These that we haue rehearsed were the ministeries of the old Church. For the other of which the Ecclesiastical wryters make mention, were rather certaine exercises and preparations, than appointed offices. For those holy men, that they might might leaue a store for the church after them, receiued into their charge, gouernance and discipline, yooing men which with the consent and authoritie of their parents, professed themselves souldiers of the spirituall warfare: and they so framed them from their tender age, that they should not come vnskilfull and raw to the executing of their office. But all they that were instructed with such beginnings, were called clerks I would indeed that som other proper name had rather bin giuen them. For this name grewe in error, or of corrupt affection: forasmuch as Peter calleth the whole Church the Cleargie, that is to say, the Lords inheritance. But the institution it selfe was very holie and profitable, that they which would consecrate themselves & their seruice to the Church, should be so brought vp vnder the keeping of the Bishop, that none should minister to the Church, but he that were well informed aforehand, and that had from his very youth both sucked holy doctrine, and by seure discipline put in a certaine continuing qualitie of grauitie and holy life, and were estranged from worldly cares, and were accustomed to spirituall cares and studies. But as yong souldiers are by certaine counterfait skirmishes instructed to learne true and earnest fight, so there were also certaine iudgments, whereby they were exercised while they were Clerkes, before that they were promoted to the verie offices. Therefore first they committed to the Clerkes the charge to open and shutte the Church, and they named them Ostiaui, doorekeepers. Aiterward they called them Acoluthi, followers, which waited vpon the Bishop in his household seruices, and did continuallie accompanie him, first for honours sake, and then that no suspicion shoulde arise of them. Moreover that by little and little they might become knowen to the people, and get to themselves commendation: also that they might learne to abide the sight of all men, and to speake before all men: that being made Priestes, when they came forth to teach, they should not be abashed with shame: therefore place was appointed them to read in the pulpit. After this manner they were promoted by degrees, to shew the proofe of their diligence in all their feuerall exercises, till they were made Subdeacons. This onely is my meaning, that those were rather grosse beginnings, than such offices as were accounted among the true ministers of the Church.

10 Whereas we said that the first and second point in the calling of ministers, are, what manner of men they ought to choose, and how great a religious carefulnes they ought to vse in that matter: therein the old Church hath followed the prescribed order of Paul, and the examples of the Apostles. For they were wont to come together to chose the pastors with most great reuerence and careful calling vpon the name of God. Beside this they had a forme of examination, whereby they tried the life & doctrine of them that were to be chosen by the rule of Paul. Onely they somewhat offended herein with too great seueritie: because they would require more in a Bishop than Paul required, & specially in proelie of time they required vnmarrried life. But in the other points their obseruation was agreeing with Pauls description. But in this which we made the third point, that is to say, who ought to institute ministers, they kept not alway one order. In old time, none was receiued into the company of clerks, without the consent of all the people: insomuch that Cyprian, laboureth earnestlie to excuse that hee appointed one Aurelius to be a Reader without asking aduise of the Church, because that was done beside the custome, though not without reason. For this he saith before: In ordering of Clerkes, deere brethren, we are wont first to aske you aduise, and by common counsell to weigh the manners and detruings of euery one. But because in these lesser exercises, there was not much peril: because they were chosen to a long proofe, & not to a great office, therefore the consent of the people therein ceased to bee asked. Afterwarde in the other degrees also, except the Bishoprick, the people commonlie left the iudgement and chose of them to the Bishop and the Priestes, that they should examine who were meete and woorthie:

sauing peradventure when new priests were appointed for paroches: for then it behooned that the multitude of that place namely should consent. Neither is it any maruell, that the people in this behalfe was little carefull in keeping their owne right:
For no man was made a Subdeacon, that had not shewed a long prooffe of himselfe in his being a Clerke, vnder that severitie of discipline, which then was used. After that he had been tried in that degree, he was made a Deacon. From thence he came to the honor of priesthood if he had behaued himselfe faithfully. So no man was promoted, of whom there had not bene in deede a triall had many yeares before the eyes of the people. And there were many canons to punish their faults: so that the Church could not be troubled with euill priests or Deacons, vnllesse it neglected the remedies. Howbeit in the priests also there was alway required the consent of them of the same cite: which the vntie first canon testifieth in the 67. distinction, which is fathered vpon Anacletus. Finally, all the admissions into orders were therefore done at certaine appointed times of the yeare, that no man should priuily creepe in without the consent of the faithfull, or should with too much easines be promoted without witnesses.

Epi 90. cap. 2.

11 In choosing of Bishops the people had the libertie long preserued, that none should be thrust in that were not accepted of all. This therefore was forbidden in the councill at Antioch, that none should be thrust into them against their will.
Which thing also Leo the first doth diligently confirme. Heereupon came these sayings: Let him be chosen, whome the Cleargy, and the people, or the greater number shall require. Againe: Let him that shall beare rule ouer all be chosen of all. For it must needs be, that he that is made a ruler being vnknown and not examined, is thrust in by violence. Againe, Let him be chosen, that is both chosen by the Clerks, and desired by the people: and let him be consecrate by them of that Prouince, with the iudgement of the Metropolitan. The holy Fathers tooke so great heede that this libertie of the people should by no meane be diminished, that when the generall Synode gathered together at Constantinople did order Nestarius, they would not do it without the allowance of the Cleargy and people, as they testified by their epistle to the Synode of Rome. Therefore when any Bishop did appoint a successor to himselfe, it was not otherwise established vnlesse the whole people did confirme it. Whereof you haue not onely an example, but also the very forme in Augustine in the naming of Eradius. And Theodorite, when he rehearseth that Peter was named by Athanasius to be his successor, by and by addeth, that the order of Priests confirmed it, and the magistrate, and nobilitie, and the people approued it with their allowing shoyte.

Cap. 13.

12 I graunt in deede that this also was by very good reason established in the Councill at Laodicea, that the Election should not be left to multitudes. For it scarcely happeneth at any time, that so many heads should well order anything with one meaning: and commonly this is true, that the vncertaine communitie is diuided into contrarie affections. But for this perill there was used a very good remedie. For first the Clerkes onely did choofe: whom they had chosen they presented to the Magistrate, or to the Senate and cheefe men of the people. They, after consultation had, if they thought the election good, confirmed it: if not, they did choofe another, whom they did rather allow. Then the matter was moued to the multitude, which although they were not bound to those foreiudgements, yet thereby they could the lesse be disordered. Or if they began at the multitude: that was done only to learne whome they did cheefly desire. When the desires of the people were heard, then they of the Cleargy did choofe him. So neither was it lawfull for the Cleargy to appoint whom they listed, neither were they bound to obey the foolish desires of the people.
Leo appointeth this order in another place, when he saith: There are to be looked for, both the desires of the citizens, the peoples testimonies, the iudgement of the honourable, and the election of the clerikes. Againe, Let there be holden the testi-monie of the honourable, the subscription of the clearks, the consent of the order and commonalty. No reason (sayth he) suffreth it to be otherwise done. And nothing else meaneth that decree of the Synode at Laodicia, but that the Cleargy and cheefe of the people, should nor suffer themselves to be carried away by the vndicreete multitude: but rather that with their wisdome and grautie they should repress the peoples foolish affections, if at any time neede should so require.

13 This order of choosng was yet in force in the time of Gregory: and it is likely that it endured long after. There remaine many Epistles of his, that giue euident testimonie of this matter. For so oft as he hath to do with the creating of any new Bishop, he vseth to write to the cleargy, to the order, and to the people, and sometime also to the ruler, according as the government of the city is appointed. But if by reason of the disordered state of the church, he committeth to any Bishop adioyning the charge of ouersieing in the election, yet he alway requireth a solemne decree strengthened with the subscriptions of all. Yea and when there was one Constantius create Byshop at Milaine, and that many of the Milaneis were by reason of the inuasion of the barbarous nations fled to Genua: he thought that the election could not otherwise be lawfull, vnlesse they also were called together and gaue their assent. Yea there are not yet five hundred yeares past, since Pope Nicholas decreed thus of the election of the byshop of Rome: that the cardinal bishops should beginne, then that they should ioyne to them the rest of the cleargy, last of all that the election should be confirmed by the consent of the people. And in the end he reciteth that decree of Leo, which I euen now alledged, and commaundeth it from thence forth to be in force. But if the malice of wicked men shall so preuaile, that the clearks to make a true election be compelled to depart out of the city: yet he commaundeth that some of the people be present with them. As for the Emperours consent, so faire as I can perceiue, was required only in two churches, that is, Rome and Constantinople: because there were the two seates of the Empire. For whereas Ambrose was sent to Milaine with a power from Valentinian to gouerne the election of the new Bishop: that was extraordinarily done, by reason of greuous factions wherewith the citizens then boyled among themselves. But at Rome in old time the Emperours authority was of so great force in creating of the Byshop: that Gregory sayeth, that he was set by his commaundement in the government of the Church: when yet by solemne vsage he was desired by the people. This was the manner, that when the cleargy and the people had appointed any Bishop, the cleargy should forthwith moue it to the Emperour, that he should either by his allowance confirme the election, or by disallowance vndo it. Neither are the decrees that Gratian gathereth together, repugnant to this custome: wherein is nothing else said, but that it is in no wise to be suffered, that taking away the canonically election, a king should appoint a Byshop after his owne lust: and that the Metropolitan should consecrate none that were so promoted by violent powers. For it is one thing to spoile the Church of her right, that all should be transferred to the lust of one man: and another thing to graunt this honour to a king or an Emperour, that by his authoritie he may consume a lawfull election.

14 Now it followeth, that we entreate with what forme the ministers of the Church were admitted into their office after election: this the Latines called Ordination or Consecration: the Greekes haue called it Cheirotonia, lifting vp of hands, and sometime also Cheirothesia, laying on of hands. Howbeit Cheirotonia is properly called that kinde of election, where mens consents are declared by holding vp of their hands. There remaineth a decree of the Nicene councill, that the Metropolitan should meete together with all the Bishops of the prouince to order him which is chosen. But if some of them be hindered either by length of the way, or by sickness, or by any necessitie, that yet three at the least should meete: and that they that are absent should by letters testifie their consent, And this Canon, whic with discontinuance it grew out of vse, was afterward renewed with many Synodes. But all, or at least so many as had no excuse, were therefore commanded to be present, that they might haue the grauer triall of the learning and maners, of him that was to bee ordered: for the matter was not done without triall. And it appeereth by Cyprians wordes, that in the olde time they were wont not to be called after the election, but to be present at the election: and to this end that they should be as it were gouernours, that nothing should be troublesomely done in the multitude. For where he saide, that the people haue power either to choose woorthie Priests, or to refuse vnwoorthie, within a little after he addeth: Wherefore according to the tradition of God and of the Apostles, it is to be diligently kept and holden (which is yet holden with vs also and in a manner throughout all prouinces) that for the right celebration of orderings, all the Bishops adioyning of the same prouince should come together to the people for which a gouernor is ordered, and that the Bishop be chosen in presence of the people. But when they were sometime slowly gathered together, and there was perill least some would abuse that delay to occasion of ambitious sning: it was thought that it should be enough if after the election made, they should meete and after allowance vpon lawfull examination consecrate him.

Lib. 2. Epist. 69. 46.

15 When this was each where done without exception, by little and little a diuers manner grew in vse, that they which were chosen should resort to the Metropolitan citie to fetch their ordering. Which came to passe rather by ambition, and by deprauation of the first institution, than by any good reason. And not long after, when the authoritie of the sea of Rome was now increased, there came in place yet a woorse custome, that the Bishops almost of all Italie should fetch their consecration from thence. Which we may note out of the Epistles of Gregorie. Onely a few cities, which did not so easily giue place, had their ancient right preferred: as there is an example had of Milaine. Peraduenture the onely Metropolitan cities kept their privilege. For all the Bishops of the Prouince were wont to come together to the chiefe citie to consecrate the Archbishop. But the Ceremonie was laying on of hands. For I read of no other ceremonies vsed: sauing that in the solemne assemblie the Bishops had a certaine apparell whereby they might be distinctly knowen from other Priests. They ordered also Priests and Deacons with onely laying on of hands. But every Bishop with the companie of priests ordered his owne Priest. But although they did all the same thing: yet because the Bishop went before, and it was all done as it were by his guiding, therefore the ordering was called his. Whereupon the olde writers haue oft this saying: that a Priest differeth from a Bishop in no other thing, but because he hath not the power of ordering.

The v. Chapter.

That the olde forme of government is vtterly ouerthrowen by the tyrannie of the Papacie.

The corruption of the Church of Rome vs choosing Bishops without regarde of maners, learning, or as much as yeeres of discretion.

NOW it is good to set before mens eies the order of gouerning the Church that the sea of Rome and all the champions thereof doe keepe at this day, and the whole image of that Hierarchie which they continually haue in their mouth, and to compare it with that order of the first and olde Church which we haue described: that by the comparison it may appeere what manner of Church they haue, which vse this onely title to charge or rather to ouerwhelme vs. But it is best to begin at Calling, that we see both who, and what manner of men, and by what order they be called to this ministerie. And then afterwarde we shall consider how faithfully they execute their office. We will giue the first place to Bishops: to whom I would to God this might be an honor, to haue the first place in this discourse. But the matter it selfe doth doth not suffer me, once to touch this thing be it neuer so lightly, without their great shame. And yet I will remember, in what kind of writing I am now occupied: and will not suffer my talke, which ought to be framed onely to simple doctrine, to flowe abroad beyond due bonds. But let some one of them that haue not vterly lost all shame, answer me, what maner of Bishops are at this day commonly chosen. Truly it is now growen too much out of vse, to haue any examination had of their learning: but if there be had any respect of learning, they choose some lawyer that can rather brawle in a court, than preach in a Church. This is certaine, that these hundred yeres there hath scarcely bene euery hundredth man chosen that vnderstood any thing of holy doctrine. I doe not therefore spare the former ages, for that they were much better, but because we haue now onely the present Church in question. If iudgement be had of their manners, we shall finde that there haue bene few or almost none, whom the olde Canons would not haue iudged vvworthie. He that was not a dronkard was a whoremonger: he that was also cleane from this wickednesse, was either a dyer, or a hunter, or dissolute in some part of his life. For there be higher faults, which by the olde Canons doe exclude a man from being a Bishop. But this is a most great absurditie, that verie children scarcely renne yeres old, are by the Popes graunt made Bishops. They are growen to such shamelesnes and senseles dullnesse, that they dreaded not that extreme yea and monstrous wicked doing, which is vterly abhorring from the verie sense of nature. Hereby appeareth how religious their elections were, where the negligence was so carelesse.

2 Now in election, all that right of the people is taken away. Their desirings, their assentings, their subscriptions, and all such things are vanished: the whole power is transferred to the Canons onely. They bestow the Bishopricke vpon whom they will, and afterward bring him forth into the sight of the people, but to be worshipped, not to be examined. But Leo cryeth on the other side, that no reason suffereth it, and he pronounceth that it is a violent imposition. Cyprian, when he testifieth that it proceedeth from the lawe of God that it should not be done but by the consent of the people, sheweth that the contrarie maner is repugnant to the word of God. The decrees of so many Synodes doe most scuerely forbid it to be otherwise done: and if it be done, they command it to be void. If these things be true, there now remaineth in the Papacie no Canonical election, neither by Gods law nor by the Ecclesiasticall law. But although there were no other euill, yet how shall they be able to excuse this that they haue so spoyled the Church of her right? But (say they) the corruption of times so required, that because in appointing of bishops, hatreds and affections more preuailed with the people and the Magistrates, than right and sound iudgement, therefore the rule thereof should be giuen to a few. Admit verily that this were the extreme remedie of a mischiefe in despaired case. But sith the medicine it selfe hath appeared more hurtfull than the very disease, why is not this new euill also remedied? But (say they) it is exactly prescribed to the Canons, what they ought to follow in the election. But do we doubt, but that the people in old time did vnderstand that they were bound to most holie lawes, when they saw that they had a rule set them by the word of God, when they came together to choose a bishop? For that onlie voice of God, whereby he describeth the true image of a bishop, ought worthwhile to be of more value than infinite thousands of Canons. But neuertheless the people, corrupted with a most euill affection, had no regard of the law or of equitie. So at this day though there be verie good lawes written, yet they remaine buried in papers. Yet for the most part it is vsed in mens manners, yea and allowed as though it were done by good reason, that dronkards, whoremongers, dicers, are commonly promoted to this honor: (It is but little that I say) that bishopricks are the rewards of adulteries and bawderies. For when they are giuen but to hunters and falconers, it is to be thought to be gaily wel bestowed. Any way to excuse so hainous indignity,

Both magistrates and people vterly excluded in the Church of Rome from meddling in the election of Bishops: the pretense vnder which they are excluded.

Cap. 5. Of the outward meanes indignitie, it is too much wicked. The people (say I) had in olde time a very good Canone to whom Gods word prescribed, that a Bishop ought to be vnreprovable, a teacher, no fighter, &c. Why therefore is the charge of choosing remoued from the people to these men? Because forsooth the word of God was not heard among the tumults and seditious partakings of the people. And why should it not at this day be remoued againe from these men, which not onely doe breake all lawes, but casting away all shame, doe wantonly, couctously, ambitiously, mingle and confound Gods and mens matters together?

1. Tim. 3. 1.

What occasion the Romane cleargie hath taken to defraude the Church of her right in elections, and paines to get into their own hands that which they sawe so grossely abused.

3 But they lie, when they say, that this was deuised for a remedie. We often read that in olde time Churches were in tumults at the choosing of Bishops: yet neuer any man durst thinke of taking away the authoritie from the people. For they had other waies whereby they might either prevent these faultes, or amend them if they were already committed. But I will tell what it is. When the people began to be negligent in making the elections, and did cast that care vpon the Pricistes as little belonging to them, they abused this occasion to vsurpe a tyranny to themselves, which afterward they stablished by new Canons set foorth. As for their ordering, it is nothing else but a meere mockage. For the shew of examination that they there set out is to vaine and hungrie, that it wanteth euen all colour. Therefore whereas in some places Princes haue by couenant obtained of the Bishops of Rome, that they themselves might name Bishops, therein the Church suffered no new losse: because the election was taken away, onely from the Canons, which had by no right violently taken it, or verily stolen it. Truly this is a most foule example, that out of the Court are sent Bishops to possesse Churches: and it should be the worke of Godly Princes to absteyne from such corruption. For it is a wicked spoyling of the Church, when there is thrust vnto any people a Bishop, whom they haue not desired, or at least with free voice allowed. But that vnorderly manner which hath long agoe beene in the Churches, gaue occasion to Princes to take the presentation of Bishops into their owne hands. For they had rather that it should be their gift, than those mens, to whom it nothing more belonged, and which did no lesse wrongfully abuse it.

Dist. 70. cap. 1.

4 Loe here is a noble calling, by reason whereof the Bishops boast themselves to be the successors of the Apostles. But they say that the authoritie to create Priestes belongeth to them onely. But in this they most lewdly corrupt the old institution: because they doe not by their ordering create Priestes to rule and feede the people, but Sacrificers to Sacrifice. Likewise when they consecrate Deacons, they doe nothing of their true and proper office, but they ordaine them onely to certaine Ceremonies about the chalice and the paten. But in the Synode at Chalcedon, it is contrariwise decreed, that the orderings should not be absolutely giuen, that is to say, but that a place should be therewithall assigned to them that are ordered, where they shal exercise their office. This decree is for two causes very profitable. First, that the Church should not be burdened with superfluous charges, nor that that should be spent vpon idle men which should be giuen to the poore: Secondly, that they which be ordered, should thinke that they be not promoted to an honor, but that there is an office committed vnto the, to the execution whereof they are bound by solemne protestation. But the Romish masters (which thinke that there is nothing in religion to be cared for, but their bellie) first doe expound title to be the reueneue that may suffice to sustaine them, whether it be by their own liuelyhoode or by benefice. Therefore when they order a Deacon or a Priest, without taking care where they ought to minister, they giue them the order, if they be rich enough to finde themselves. But what man can admit this, that the title which the decree of the Councell requireth, should be the yearly reueneue for their sustentance? But now because the later Canons condemned the Bishops with penaltie to finde them whom they had ordered without sufficient title, by this meane to restraine their too much easie admitting: there hath beene beene also a fittletie deuised to mocke out this penaltie. For he that is ordered, naming any title whatsoeuer it be, promiseth that he will be content therewith: by this shift he is driuen from his action for his finding. I passe ouer a thousand fraudes that are herein vsed: that when some doe falsely name vaine titles of benefices, whereupon they cannot make fise shillings by yeere: other some vnder secrete couenant doe borrow benefices, which they promise that they will by and by restore againe, but sometime they restore not at all. And such other mysteries.

5 But although these grosser abuses were taken away, is not this alway an absurditie, to appoint a Priest to whom you assigne no place? Also they order no man but to sacrifice. But the true ordinance of a Priest is, to be called to the gouernment of the Church: and a Deacon to be called to the gathering of the almes: they doe in deede with many pomps shadow their doing, that in the very shew it may haue a reuerence among the simple. But among men that haue their sound wit, what can these disguisings auaille, if there be no found stufte or truth vnderneath them? For they vse ceremonies about it, either fetched out of Iewishnesse, or fained of themselues: which it were better to forbear. But of true examination, (for I nothing passe vpon that shadow which they retaine) of the peoples consent, and of other things necessarie, they make no mention. I call a shadow their foolish gesturings meete to bee laughed at, framed to a fond and colde counterfeiting of antiquitie. The Bishops haue their deputies which before the ordering may enquire of their learning. But what? whether they can reade their masses, whether they can decline a common nowne, that they shall light vpon in reading, coniugate a verbe, or doe knowe the signification of one word, for it is not necessarie that they be cunning enough to construe a verbe. And yet they be not put backe from Priesthood which faile euen in the childish rudiments, so that they bring any mony or commendation of fauour. Of like sort it is, that when they are brought to the altar to be ordered, it is asked thrise in a tooong not vnderstanded, whether they be worthe of that honor. One answereth which neuer saw them: (but because nothing should want of the forme, hee hath parte in the plaie) They are worthe. What may a man blame in these reuerend fathers, but that which mocking in so open sacrileges, they do without shame laugh to scorne both God & men? But because they are in long possession thereof, they thinke that nowe it is lawfull for them. For whosoever dare once open his mouth against these so euident and so hai-nous wicked doings, he is forthwith haled by them to punishment of death, as though it were one that had in old time disclosed abroad the holie mysteries of Ceres. Would they do this if they thought that there were any God?

6 Now how much do they behaue themselues better in bestowing of benefices: which thing was once ioyned with the ordering, but nowe it is altogether separate? There is among them a diuerse maner. For the Bishops onely do not conferre benefices: and in those whereof they are saide to haue the conferring, they haue not the full right, but other haue the presentation, and they retaine onely the title of collation for honors sake. There are also nominations out of schooles, and resignations, either simple, or made for cause of exchange, commendatoric writings, preuentions, and whatsoeuer is of that sort. But they also behaue themselues that none of them can reproch another with any thing. So I affirme, that scarcely euery hundredth benefice is bestowed at this day in the papacie without Simonie, as the old writers defined Simonie, I do not say, that they all buy them with readie monie: but the we me one of either get the fauour of their souldiers or reward their seruices. I omit howe these rewards are bestowed vpon barbers, cookes, moile keepers, & such dreggish men. And now iudiciall courts do ring of no matters more, than about benefices: so that a man may say that they are nothing else but a pray cast afore dogs to hunt after. Is this tolerable cuen to be heard of, that they should be called pastors, which haue broken into the possession of a Church as into a ferme of their enemie? that haue gotten it by brawling in the law? that haue bought it for money? That haue defered it by filthie seruices: which being children yet scantly able to speake, haue received it, as by inheritance from their vncles and kinmen, and some bastards from their fathers?

*Many Churches

7 Would euer the licentiousnes of the people, though they had bin neuer so corrupt and lawlesse, haue gone so farre? But this is also more monstrous, that one man, (I will not say what maner of man, but truly such a one as cannot gouerne himselfe) is set to gouern five or sixe churches. A man may see in these daies in Princes courts, yoong men that haue three Abbacies, two Bishoprikes, one Arclbishoprike. But there be commonly Canons with five, sixe or seuen benefices, whereof they haue no care at all, but in receiuing the reuenues. I will not obiect, that it is ech where cried out against by the word of God, which hath long ago ceased to be of any estimation at all among them. I will not obiect, that there haue bin many most seuerenall ordinances in many Councils made against this wickednes: for those also they holdie despise as oft as they list. But I say that both are monstrous wicked dooings, which are vtterly against God and nature and the gouernment of the Church, that one robber shall oppresse many Churches at once, and that he should be called a Pastor, which cannot be present with his flocke though he would: and yet (such is their shamefulness) they couer such abhominable filthines with the name of the Church to deliuer themselves from all blame. But also (and God will) in these lewdnesses is contained that holy succession, by the merite whereof they boast that it is wrought that the Church may not perish.

8 Now (which is the second marke in iudging a lawfull Pastor) let vs see howe faithfully they exercise their office. Of the Priestes that be there created, some bee Monkes, some be (as they call them) Secular. The first of these two companies was vnknown to the old Church: and it is so against the profession of Monkes, to haue such a place in the Church, that in old time when they were chosen out of Monasteries into the clergie, they ceased to be Monkes. And Gregorie, whose time had much dreags, yet suffred not this confusion to be made. For he willett that they be put out of the clergie that be made Abbots, for that no man can rightly bee together both a Monke and a clearge: sith the one is a hinderance to the other. Nowe if I aske, howe he wel fulfilleth his office, whom the Canons declare to be vnmeet, what I pray you, will they answer? they will forsooth alleage vnto mee those vniuently borne decrees of Innocent and Boniface, whereby Monkes are so receiued into the honour & power of Priesthoode, that they might still abide in their Monasteries. But what reason is this, that euerie vnlearned asse, so soone as he hath once possessed the sea of Rome, may with one worde ouerthrowe all antiquitie? But of this matter we shall speake heereafter. Let this suffice for this time, that in the purer Church it was holden for a great absurditie, if a Monke did execute the office of Priesthood. For Hierome saith that hee doth not execute the office of a Priest, while hee is conuersant among Monkes: and maketh himselfe one of the common people to be ruled by the Priestes. But, although we grant them this, what do they of their dutie? Of the mendicants some doe preach, all the other Monkes either sing or mumble vp masses in their dennes. As though either Christ willed, or the nature of the office iuffereth Priestes to bee made to this purpose. Whereas the Scripture plainely testifieth, that it is the Priestes office to rule his owne Church, is it not a wicked prophanation, to turne another way, yea vterly to change the holy institution of God? For when they are ordered, they are expressly forbidden to doe the things that God commaundeth all priests. For this song is sung to them: let a Monke content with his cloister, not presume to minister the Sacraments, not to execute any thing belonging to publike office. Let them denie, if they can, that it is an open mockerie of God, that any priest should be made to this purpose, to abstaine from his true and naturall office: and that he which hath the name may not haue the thing.

4 I come to the secular priests: which are partly beneficed men, (as they call them) that is to say, haue benefices whereupon to liue: and partly do let out their daily labour to hire, in massing, or singing, and liue as it were of a stipend gathered thereupon. Benefices haue either care of soules, as bishoprikes and cure of paroches: or they be the stipends of deintie men, that get their liuing with singing, as prebends, Canonships, parsonages, and dignities, chaplainships and such other. Howbeit, since things are now turned vpside downe, Abbates and priories are giuen to vey boies, by privilege, that is to say by common and vsuall custome. As concerning the hirelings, that get their liuing from day to day, what should they doe otherwise than they doe? that is in seruile and shamefull manner to giue out themselves for gaine, specially sith there is so great a multitude as now the world swarmeth with. Therefore when they dare not beg openly, or for as much as they thinke they should but little profite that way, they goe about like hungrie dogs, and with their importunacie, as with barking, they enforce out of men against their wils somewhat to thrust into their belly. Here if I would go about to expresse in wordes, how great a dishonour it is to the Church, that the honor and office of priesthood is come to this point. I should haue no end. Therefore it is not meete that the readers should looke for at my hand such a long declaration as may be proportionall to so hainous indignitie. Briefly I say, if it be the office of priesthood, (as the word of God prescribeth, and the ancient canons require) to feede the Church, and to gouerne the spirituall kingdome of Christ: all such sacrificers as haue none other worke or wages, but in making a market of masses, are not onely idle in their office, but also haue no office at all to exercise. For there is no place assigned them to teach: they haue no flocke to gouerne: Finally there is nothing left to them, but the altar, whereupon to sacrifice Christ: which is not to offer to God, but to duels, as we shall see in another place.

10 I doe not here touch the outward faults, but onely the inward euill, which sticketh fast by the roote in their institution. I will adde a saying, which will sounde ill in their eares: but because it is true, I must speake it: that in the same degree are to be accounted Canons, Deanes, Chaplaines, Prouostes, and all they that are fed with idle benefices. For what seruice can they doe to the Church? For they haue put from themselves the preaching of the word, the care of discipline, and ministracion of Sacraments, as too much troublesome burdens. What then haue they remaining, whereby they may boast themselves to be true priestes? Singing for sooth, and a pompe of Ceremonies. But what is that to the purpose? If they alleage custome, if vsage, if prescription of long time: I againe on the other side doe lay vnto them the definition of Christ, whereby he hath expressed vnto vs both true priestes, and what they ought to haue that will be accounted such. But if they cannot beare to haue a lawe, to submit themselves to Christs rule: at the least let them suffer this matter to be determined by the authoritie of the Primitiue Church. But their care shall be neuer the better, if their state be iudged by the olde Canons. They that haue degenerate into Canons, should haue bene priestes, as they were in olde time, that shoulde rule the Church in common with the Bishop, and be as it were his companions in the office of Pastor. Those Chapter dignities as they call them, doe nothing at all belong to the gouerning of the Church: much lesse, chaplainships, and the other dregs of like names. What account then shall we make of them all? Truly both the word of Christ, and the

Act. 20. 23.

The abuses of the Church of Rome in the office of her secular priestes.

1. cor. 4. 21.

Other idle sorts of priestes neither gouerning the Church nor distributing at all the worde or Sacraments.

the vsage of the Church excludeth them from the honor of priesthood. Yet they stiafly hold that they be priests: but we must plucke off their vsour: so shal we finde that their whole profession is most strange and farre remoued from that office of priests, both which the Apostles describe vnto vs, and which was required in the primitive Church. Therefore all such orders, with what titles soeuer they be notified, sith they be new, being verily neither vpholden by the institution of God, nor by the ancient vsage of the Church, ought to haue no place in the description of the spiritual gouernment, which the Church hath receiued consecrate with the Lords owne mouth. Or (if they wil rather haue me to speake more simply and grossely) for as much as Chaplaines, Canons, Deacons, Prouostes, and other idle bellies of the same sort, doe not so much as with their little finger touch any small parcell of that office, which is necessarily required in priests, it is not to be suffered, that in wrongfully taking a false honor vpon themselues, they should breake the holy institution of Christ.

Abuses in the office of Bishops and parsons in parishes belonging to the Church of Rome.

11 There remaine Bishops, and parsons of Paroches: who I would to God they did strue to retaine their office. For we woulde willingly graunt vnto them, that they haue a godlie and excellent office, if they did execute it. But when they will be accounted Pastors, while they forsake the Churches committed to them, and cast the care of them vpon other, they doe as if it were the Pastor's office to doe nothing. If an vsurer that neuer stirred his foote out of the citie, woulde profess himselfe a plowman, or a keeper of a vineyarde: if a souldiour that had beene continually in the battell and in the campe, and had neuer seene iudiciall court or bookes, woulde boast himselfe for a lawyer, who could abide such stinking follies? But these men doe somewhat more absurdly, that will seeme and be called lawfull Pastors of the Church, and yet will not be so. For how many a one is there, that doth so much, as in shewe, exercise the gouernment of his Church? Manie doe all their life long deuoure the reuenues of Churches, to which they neuer come so much as to looke vpon them. Some other doe once by yeere either come themselues, or sende their steward, that nothing should be lost in the letting to farme. When this corruption first crept in, they that would enioy this kinde of vacation, exempted themselues by priuileges: now it is a rare example, to haue one resident in his owne Church. For they esteeme them none otherwise than farmes ouer which they set their vicars as bailifes or farmers. But this very naturall reason reiecteth, that he should be pastor of a flocke, that neuer sawe one sheepe thereof.

Hom. 17. Negligence of Bishops and pastors in the office of preaching the word.

12 It appeereth that euen in the time of Gregoric, there were certaine seedes to this mischiefe, that the rulers of Churches, began to be negligent in teaching: for he doth in one place greuously complaine of it. The world (saith he) is full of priestes, but yet in the harvest there are feldome workmen found: because in deede we take vpon vs the office of priest, but we fulfil not the worke of the office. Againe, because they haue not the bowels of charitie, they will seeme Lords: they acknowledge not themselues to be fathers. They change the place of humilitie into the aduancing of lordlinesse. Againe, but what doe we, O pastours, which receiue the rewarde, and are no workmen? We are fallen to outward businesse, and we take in hand one thing, and performe another. We leaue the ministerie of preaching: and to our punishment, as I see, we are called Bishops, that keepe the name of honour and not of vertue. Sith he vseth so great sharpnesse of words against them, which were but lesse continuing and lesse diligent in their office: What I pray you, would he say, if he sawe of the Bishops almost none, or truly very fewe, and of the rest scarceely euery hundredth man once in all his life to goe vp into a pulpit? For men be come to such madnesse, that it is commonly counted a thing too base for the dignitie of a Bishop, to make a sermon to the people. In the time of Bernard, things were somewhat more decayed: but we see also with how sharpe chidings he inuicteth against the whole order: which yet it is likely to haue bene then much purer than it is now.

13 But if a man do well weigh and examine this outward forme of ecclesiasticall government that is at this day vnder the papacie, he shall finde that there is no theuith corner wherein robbers do more licentiously range without lawe and measure. Truly all things are there so vnlike the institution of Christ, yea so contrarie to it, they are so degenerate from the ancient ordinances and manners of the Church, they are so repugnant to nature and reason, that there can be no greater iniurie done to Christ, than when they pretend his name to the defence of so disordered government. We (say they) are the pillars of the Church, the chiefe Bishops of religion, the vicars of Christ, the heads of the faithfull: because the power of the Apostles is by succession come vnto vs. They are alway bragging of these follies, as though they talked vnto stockes. But so oft as they shall boast of this, I will aske of them againe, what they haue common with the Apostles. For we speake not of any inheritably descending honor that may be giuen to men euen while they lie sleeping: but of the office of preaching, which they so much flee from. Likewise when we affirme that their kingdome is the tyrannie of Antichrist, by and by they answer, that it is that reuerende Hierarchie, so oft praised of notable and holy men. As though the holy fathers, when they commended the Ecclesiasticall Hierarchie or spirituall government, as it was deliuered them from hande to hande from the Apostles, did dreame of this mishapen and wast disordred heape, where the Bishoppes are for the most part either rude asses, which know not the very first & comon principles of faith, or some time children yet newe come from the nurse: and if any bee learmeder (which yet is a rare example) they thinke a Bishoprike to be nothing else but a title of glorioufnesse and magnificence: where the parsons of Churches thinke no more of feeding the flocke, than a shoemaker doth of plowing: where all things are confounded with more than Babylonicall dispersing, that there remaineth no more any one step whole of that ordinance of the fathers.

14 What if we descende to their maners? where shall be that light of the world, which Christ requireth? where is the salt of the earth? where is that holinesse, which may be as a perpetual rule to iudge by? There is no degree of men at this day more ill spoken of for riot, wantonnesse, deintinesse, finally all kind of lustes. There are of no degree men either fitter, or cunninger maisters of al deceit, fraud, treason, & breach of faith: there is no where so great cunning or boldnes to doe hurt. I passe ouer their disdainfulnesse, pride, extortion, crueltie. I passe ouer the dissolute licentiousnesse in all the parts of their life. In suffering wher of the world is so wearied, that it is not to be feared, that I should seeme to enforce any thing too much. This one thing I say, which they themselues shall not be able to denie: that of Bishoppes there is almost none, of the Parsons of paroches not the hundreth man: but if iudgement should be giuen of his maners according to the old Canons, he should be either to be excommunicate: or at least to bee put from his office. I seeme to saie somewhat incredible: so farre is that ancient discipline growen out of vse, that commanded an exacter triall to be had of the maners of the clergie: but the truth is so. Nowe let them go, that fight vnder the standerd and guiding of the sea of Rome, and let them boast among themselues of the order of priesthood. As for the order that they haue, truly it is euident, that it is neither of Christ, nor of his Apostles, nor of the fathers, nor of the old Church.

15 Now let the Deacons come soorth, and the most holy distributing that they haue of the goods of the Church. Howbeit they do not nowe create their Deacons to that purpose, for they enioyne them nothing else but to minister at the altar, to read and sing the Gospell, and do I wote not what trifles. Nothing of the almes, nothing of the care of the poore, nothing of all that function which they in old time executed. I speake of the verie institution. For if we haue respect what they do, indeede it is not to them an office, but onely a steppe toward priesthoode. In one thing, they

Nothing more absurd, grosse, & vnlike to antiquitie, than the government of the church of Rome at this day, in respect of her priests and Bishops.

The maners of Romaine priests: Matth. 5. 14.

If that Deacons do in the church of Rome.

that keepe the Deacons place at the masse, do represent a void image of antiquitie. For they receiue the offerings before the consecration. This was the ancient maner, that before the communion of the Supper, the faithfull did kisse one another, and offer their almes at the altar: so first by a signe, & afterward by very liberalitie they shewed their charitie. The Deacon, that was the poore mans stewarde, receiued that which was giuen, to distribute it. Now of those almes, there commeth no more to the poore, than if they were thrown into the sea. Therefore they mocke the Church with this lying Deaconrie. Truly therein they haue nothing like, neither to the institution of the Apostles, nor to the ancient vsage. But the very distribution of the goods they haue conueyed another way: and haue so framed it, that nothing can be deuised more vnorderly. For as the eues, when they haue cut mens throtes, do diuide the pray among them: so these, after the quenching of the light of Gods wordes, as though the Church were flaine, do thinke that whatsoever was dedicate to holy vses is layd for pray and spoile. Therefore making a diuision, euery one hath snatched to himselfe as much as he could.

The spoile they haue made of Church goods, and the misery they doe thereby to the poore.

16 Here all these old orders, that we haue declared, are not onely troubled, but utterly wiped out and rased. The bishops and priests of ciues, which being made rich by this pray, were turned into Canons, haue made hauike of the christ part among them. But it appeareth that the partition was vnorderly, because to this day they stricke about the bounds. Whatsoeuer it be, by this partition is provided, that not one halpenie of the goods of the Church should come to the poore, who had been the halfe part at least. For the Canons do giue them the fourth part by name: and the other fourth part they do therefore appoint to the Bishops, that they should bestow it vpon hospitalitie, & other duties of Charitie. I speake not what the clerks ought to do with their portion, & to what vse they ought to bestow it. For we haue sufficiently declared, that the rest which is appointed for temples, buildings & other expences, ought to be open for the poore in necessity. I pray you, if they had one shalke of the feare of God in their heart would they abide this burden of conscience, that all that they eate, and wherewith they be clothed, cometh of theft, yea of sacriledge? But sith they are little moued with the iudgement of God, they should at least thinke, that those be men endued with wit and reason, to whom they would perswade, that they haue so goodly and well framed orders in their Church, as they are wont to boast. Let them answer me shortly, whether Deaconrie be a licence to steale and rob. If they denie this, they shall also be compelled to confesse, that they haue no Deaconrie left: for as much as among them all the disposition of the goods of the Church is openly turned into a spoiling full of sacriledge.

The pretence which they haue as of the kingdom of Christ were by these meanes made more glorious. Phil. 2. 10. Esa. 52. 1. & 60. 6.

17 But here they vse a verie faire colour. For they say, that the dignitie of the Church is by that magnificence not vncomlyly vpholden. And they haue of their selfe some so shamelesse, that they dare openly boast, that so onely are fulfilled those prophecies, whereby the old Prophets describe the glorious state of the kingdom of Christ, when that kingly gorgeousnes is seene in the priestly order. Not in vaine (say they) God hath promised these things to his Church Kings shall come, they shall worship in thy sight, they shall bring thee gifts. Arise, arise, clothe thee with thy strength, O Syon: clothe thee with the garments of thy glory, O Hierusalem: All shall come from Saba, bringing gold and incense, and speaking praise to the Lord. All the cawle of Cedar shall be gathered together to thee. If I should try long vpon confusing this lewdnes, I feare least I should seeme fond. Therefore I will not lose wordes in vaine. But I aske: if any few would abuse these testimonies, what solution would they giue? Verily they would reprehend his dulnesse, for that he transferred those things to the flesh and the world, that are spirituallly spoken of the spirituall kingdom of Christ. For we know, that the Prophets, vnder the image of earthly things, did point out vnto vs the heauenly glorie of God, that ought to shine in the Church. For the Church had neuer lesse abundance of these blessings, which their wordes expresse, than in the time of the Apostles: and yet all confesse, that the force of the kingdome of Christ then chiefly florished abroad. What then meane these sayings? Whatsoeuer is any where precious, high, excellent, it ought to be made subiect to the Lord. Whereas it is namely spoken of kings, that they shall submit their scepters to Christ, that they shall throw downe their Crownes before his feete, that they shall dedicate their goods to the Church: when (will they say) was it better and more fully performed, than when Theodosius, casting away his purple robe, leaving the ornaments of the Empire, as some one of the common people: submitted himselfe before God and the Church, to solemne penance? then when he & other like Godly Princes bestowed their endeuors and their cares to preserue pure doctrine in the Church, and to cherish and defend sound teachers? But how Priestes at that time exceeded not in superfluous riches, that only sentence of the Synode at Aquileia, where Ambrose was cheefe, sufficiently declareth: Glorious is pouertie in the Priestes of the Lord. Truly the Bishops had at that time some riches, wherewith they might haue set out the Churches honor, if they had thought those to be the true ornaments of the Church. But when they knew that there was nothing more against the office of Pastors, than to glister and shew themselves proudly with deintinesse of face, with gorgeousnesse of garments, with great traine of seruants, with stately palaces, they followed and kept the humblenes and modestie, yea the very pouertie which Christ holly appointed among his Ministers.

18 But that we may not be too long in this pointe, let vs againe gather into a short summe, how farre that dispensation or dissipation of the goods of the Church, that is now vsed, differeth from the true Deaconrie, which both the worde of God commendeth vnto vs, and the auncient Church obserued. As for that which is bestowed vpon the garnishing of temples, I say it is ill bestowed, if that measure be not vsed, which both the very nature of holy things appointeth, that the Apostles and other holy Fathers haue prescribed both by doctrine and examples. But what like thing is there seene at this day in the Temples? whatsoeuer is framed, I will not say after that auncient sparing, but to any honest meane it is reiected. Nothing at all pleaseth, but that which fauoreth of riot and the corruption of times. In the meane time they are so farre from hauing due care of the luely Temples, that they would rather suffer many thousands of the poore to perish for hunger, than they would breake the least chalice or cruit, to relieue their neede. And that I may not pronounce of my selfe any thing more grieuously against them, this onely I would haue the godly readers to thinke vpon: if it should happen that same Exuperius Bishop of Tholesa, whom we euen now rehearsed, or Asatius, or Ambrose, or any such to be raised from death, what they would say. Truly they would not allow that in so great necessitie of the poore, riches in a manner superfluous should be turned another way. Admit I speake nothing how these vses vpon which they be bestowed, (although there were no poore) are many waies hurtfull, but in no behalfe profitable. But I leaue to speake of men. These goods are dedicate to Christ: therefore they are to be disposed after his will. But they shall in vaine say, that this part is bestowed vpon Christ, which they haue wasted otherwile than he commanded. Howbeit, to confesse the truth, there is not much of the ordinarie reuenue of the Church abated for these expenses. For there are no Bishoprikes so welthy, no Abbacies so fatte, finally neither so many, nor so large benefices that may serue to fill the gluttony of Priestes. But while they seeke to spare themselves, they perswade the people by superstition, to turne that which should be bestowed vpon the poore, to builde Temples, to set vp images, to buy Jewels, to get costly garments. So with this gulfe are the dayly almes consumed.

19 Of the reuenue, that they receiue of their lands and possessions, what else shall I say, but that which I haue already said, & which is before all mens eyes? We see

In whose possession hath bene glorious

How far their bestowing of Church goods differeth from that which either the Apostles or the auncient fathers vsed.

The word of God and the auncient Canons against the pride of the Roman Clergy.

Cap. 6. Of the outward meanes with what faithfulness they which are called bishops and Abbots do dispose the greatest part. What madnes is it, to seeke here for an ecclesiasticall order? Was it meete that they, whose life ought to haue bene a singular example of frugality, modestie, continence, and humilitie, should contend with the royaltie of princes in number of goods, in gorgiounes of houses, in daintines of apparell and fare? And how much was this contrarie to their office, that they, whom the eternall and inuolable commandment of God forbiddeth to be desirous of filthie gaine, and biddeth to be content with simple liuing, should not only lay hands vpon townes and castles, but also violently enter vpon the greatest lordships, finally possesse forceably verie empires? If they despise the word of God: what will they answer to those ancient decrees of the Synodes: whereby it is decreed that the bishop should haue a small lodging not farre from the Church, meane fare and houthold stuffe? what will they say to that praise of the Synode at Aquileia: where poueritie is reported glorious in the Priests of the Lord? For perhaps they will vtterly refuse as too much rigorons, that which Hierom aduiseeth Nepotianus, that poore men and strangers: and among them Christ as a guest, may know his table. But that which he by and by addeth, they will be ashamed to denie that it is the glorie of a Bilhop to provide for the goods of the poore: that it is the shame of all priests to studie for their owne riches. But they cannot receiue this, but they must all condemne themselves of shame. But it is not needfull in this place to speake more hardly against them, sith my meaning was nothing else, but to shew, that among them the lawfull order of deaconrie is long ago taken away: that they may no more glorie of this title to the commendation of their Church: which I thinke I haue already sufficiently shewed.

The vj. Chapter.

Of the Supremacie of the Sea of Rome.

The Supremacie of the sea of Rome neither deriued from Christs institution, nor from the vse of the old Church.

Hitherto we haue rehearsed those orders of the church, which were in the gouernment of the old Church: but afterward corrupted in times, and from thenceforth more and more abused, do now in the Popish Church retaine onely their name, and indeed are nothing else but visours: that by comparison the godly reader might iudge, what maner of Church the Romanistes haue, for whose sake they make vs schismatikes, because we haue departed from it. But as for the head and top of the whole order, that is to say, the supremacie of the sea of Rome, whereby they trauell to prooue that they only haue the catholike Church, we haue not yet touched it: because it took beginning neither from the institution of Christ, nor from the vse of the olde church, as those former parts did: which we haue shewed to haue so proceeded from antiquitie, that by wickednes of times they are vtterly degenerate, and haue put on altogether a new forme. And yet they go about to perswade the world, that this is the chiefe and in a maner onely bonde of the vnitie of the church, if we cleaue to the sea of Rome, and continue in the obedieuce thereof. They rest (I say) principally vpon this stay, when they will take away the Church from vs, and claime it to themselves, for that they keepe the head, vpon which the vnitie of the Church hangeth, and without which the Church must needs fall asunder and be broken in peeces. For thus they thinke that the Church is as it were a maimed and headlesse body, vnlesse it be subiect to the sea of Rome, as to her head. Therefore when they talk of their Hierarchie, they alway take their beginning at this principle: that the bishop of Rome (as the vicar of Christ, which is the head of the Church) is in his steede President of the vniuersall Church: and that otherwise the Church is not well ordered, vnlesse that Sea do hold the Supremacie aboue all other. Therefore this also is to bee examined of what sort it is: that we may omit nothing that pertaineth to a iust gouernment of the Church.

2 Let this therefore be the principall point of the question: Whether it be necessarie for the true forme of Hierarchie (as they call it) or Ecclesiasticall order, that one Sea should be about the rest both in dignitie and in power, that it may be the head of the whole body. But we make the Church subiect to too vniust lawes, if we lay this necessitie vpon it, without the word of God. Therefore if the aduersaries will prooue that which they require, they must first shewe that this disposition was ordeined by Christ. For this purpose they alleadge out of the law the high priesthood, also the high iudgement, which God did institute at Hierusalem. But it is easie to giue a solution, and that many waies, if one way doe not satisfie them. First no reason compelleth to extend that to the whole world, which was profitable in one nation: yea rather, the order of one nation and of the whole world shall be farre different. Because the Iewes were on each side compassed with idolaters: that they should not be diuersly drawne with varietie of religions, God appointed the place of worshipping him in the midst part of the land: there he ordeined ouer them one head Bishop, whome they should haue all regard vnto, that they might be the better kept together in vnitie. Now when religion is spred abroad into the whole world, who doth not see that it is altogether an absurditie, that the gouernement of the East and West be giuen to one man? For it is in effect as much as if a man should affirme that the whole world ought to be gouerned by one Ruler, because one peece of land hath no moe rulers but one. But there is yet another reason, why that ought not to be made an example to be followed. No man is ignorant that the high Bishop was a figure of Christ. Now, since the Priesthood is remooued, that right must also be remooued. But to whom is it remooued? Truly not to the Pope (as he himselfe is so bolde shamelesly to boast) when he draweth this title to himselfe: but to Christ, which as he alone susteineth this office, without any Vicar or Successor, so he resigneth the honor to none other. For the Priesthoode consisteth not in doctrine onely, but in the appeasing of God, which Christ hath fully wrought by his death, and in that intercession which he now vseth with his Father.

Heb. 7. 11.

3 There is therefore no cause why they should binde vs by this example, as by a perpetuall rule, which we haue seene to be enduring but for a time. Out of the new Testament they haue nothing to bring foorth for prooffe of their opinion, but that it was said to one: Thou art Peter, and vpon this stone I will build my Church. Againe, Peter, Louest thou me? Feede my sheepe. But admitting that these be strong proofes, they must first shew, that he which is commaunded to feede the flocke of Christ, hath power committed to him ouer all Churches: and that to binde and to loofe is nothing else but to be ruler of all the world. But as Peter had receiued the Commandement of the Lord, so he exhortheth all other Priestes to feede the Church. Heereby we may gather, that by this saying of Christ, there was either nothing giuen to Peter more than to the rest, or that Peter did egally communicate with other the power that he had receiued. But, that we striue not vainely, we haue in another place a cleare exposition out of the mouth of Christ, what is to binde and loofe: that is to say, to retaine and to forgiue finnes. But the manner of binding and loofing, both the whole Scripture eche where sheweth, and Paul very well declareth, when he saith that the ministers of the Gospell, haue commandement to reconcile men to God, and also haue power to punish them that refuse this benefite.

2. Cor. 5. 18. &
10. 16.

4 How shamefully they wrest those places, that make mention of binding and loofing, I both haue already shortly touched, and a little after I shall haue occasion to declare more at large. Now it is good to see onely, what they gather of that famous answer of Christ to Peter. He promised him the keyes of the kingdome of heauen: he saide that whatsoever he bound in earth, should be bound in heauen. If we agree vpon the word keyes, and the manner of binding, all contention shall by and by cease. For the Pope him selfe will gladly giue ouer the charge inioyned to the

gaue vnto Peter.*

Apostles, which being full of trauell and griefe, should shake from him his pleasures, without gaine. For as much as the heauens are opened vnto vs by the doctrine of the Gospell, it is with a very fit metaphore expressed by the name of keyes. Now men are bound and loosed in no other wise, but when faith reconcileth some to God, and their owne vnbeliefe bindeth other some. If the Pope did take this onely vpon him: I thinke there will be no man that would either enuy it or stricke about it. But because this succession being trauesome and nothing gainefull pleaseth not the Pope, hereupon groweth the beginning of the contention, what Christ promised to Peter. Therefore I gather by the very matter it selfe, that there is nothing meant, but the dignity of the office of an Apostle, which cannot be seuered from the charge. For if that definition which I haue rehearsed, be receiued (which cannot but shamefully be reiecced) here is nothing giuen to Peter, that was not also common to his other fellowes: because other wise there should not onely wrong be done to the persons, but the very maicstie of doctrine should halt. They crye out on the other side: what auaileth it, I pray you, to run vpon this rocke? For they shall not prooue, but as the preaching of one same Gospell was enioined to all the Apostles, so they were also alike furnished with power to binde and loote. Christ (say they) appointed Peter prince of the whole Church, when he promised that he would giue him the keyes. But that which he then promised to one, in another place he gaue it also to all the rest, and deliuered it as it were into their hands. If the same power were granted to all, which was promised to one, wherein shall he be aboue his fellowes? Herein (say they) he excelleth, because he receiued it both in common together with them, and seuerally by himselfe, which was not giuen to the other, but in common. What if I answer with Cyprian and Augustine, that Christ did it not for this purpose, to prefer one man before other, but so to set out the vnitie of the Church. For thus saith Cyprian, that God in the person of one gaue the keyes to all, to signifie the vnitie of all: and that the rest were the same thing that Peter was, endued with like partaking both of honour and power: but that the beginning is taken at vnitie, that the Church of Christ may be shewed to be one. Augustine saith: If there were not in Peter a mysterie of the Church, the Lord would not say to him, I will giue thee the keyes. For if this was said to Peter, the Church hath them not: but if the Church haue them, then Peter, when he receiued the keyes, betokened the whole Church. And in another place. When they were all asked, only Peter answered, thou art Christ: and it is said to him, I will giue thee the keyes, as though he alone had receiued the power of binding and loosing: whereas both he being one said that one for all, and he receiued the other with all, as bearing the person of vnitie. Therefore one for all, because there is vnitie in all.

5 But this, Thou art Peter, and vpon this rocke I will build my Church, is nowhere read spoken to any other. As though Christ spake there any other thing of Peter, than that which Paul and Peter himselfe speake of all Christians. For Paul maketh Christ the chiefe and corner stone, vpon which they are builded together that grow into a holy temple to the Lord. And Peter biddeth vs to be liuely stones which being founded vpon that chosen and pretious stone, do by this ioynt and coupling together with our God, cleaue also together among our selues. He (say they) about the rest: because he hath the name peculiarly. Indeed I do willingly grant this honor to Peter, that in the building of the Church he be placed among the first, or (if they will haue this also) the first of all the faithfull: but I will not suffer them to gather thereupon, that he should haue a Supremacie over the rest. For what manner of gathering is this? He excelleth other in seruenticesse of zeale in learning, and courage: therefore he hath power ouer them. As though we might not with better colour gather, that Andrew is in degree before Peter, because he went before him in time, and brought him to Christ. But I passe ouer this. Let Peter truly haue the first place, yet there is great difference between the honour of degree and power. We see that the Apostles commonly commonly granted this to Peter, that he should speake in assemblies, and after a certaine manner go before them with propounding, exhorting, and admenthing: but of his power we read nothing at all.

6 Howbeit we be not yet come to dispute of that point: only at this present I would prooue, that they do too fondly reason, when by the onely name of Peter they would build an Empire ouer the whole Church. For those old follies wherewith they went about to deceiue at the beginning, are not woorthie to be rehearsed, much lesse to be confuted, that the church was builded vpon Peter, because it was said vpon this rock, &c. But some of the Fathers haue so expounded it. But when the whole Scripture crieth out to the contrarie, to what purposes is their authoritie alleaged against God? Yea, why do we strue about the meaning of these words, as though it were darke or doubtfull, when nothing can be more plainly nor more certainly spoken? Peter had confessed in his owne and his brethrens name that Christ is the sonne of God. Vpon this rocke Christ buildeth his Church: because it is (as Paul saith) the onely foundation, beside which there can be laid none other. Neither do I here therefore refuse the authoritie of the Fathers, because I want their testimonies, if I list to alleage them: but (as I haue said) I will not with contending about so cleere a matter trouble the Readers in vaine, specially sith this point hath bene long ago diligently enough handled and declared by men of our side.

7 And yet in deed no man can better assoyle this question, than the Scripture it selfe, if we compare all the places, where it teacheth, what office and power Peter had among the Apostles, how he behaued himselfe, and howe hee was accepted of them. Runne ouer all that remaineth written, you shall finde nothing else, but that hee was one of the twelue, equall with the rest and their fellow, but not their Lord. He doth in deed propound to the councell, if any thing be to be done, and giueth warning what is meete to be done: but therewithall he heareth other, and doth not onelic graunt them place to speake their minde, but leaue the iudgement to them: when they had determined, he followed and obeyed. When he writeth to the Pastors, he doth not command them by authoritie, as Superiour: but he maketh them his companions, and gently exhorteth them, as equals are wont to do. When he was accused for that he had gone in to the Gentiles, although it were without cause, yet he answered and purged himselfe. When he was commanded by his fellowes, to go with Iohn into Samaria, he refused not. Whereas the Apostles did send him, they did thereby declare that they helde him not for their Superior. Whereas hee obeyed and tooke vpon him the Embassage committed to him, hee did thereby confesse that he had a fellowship with them, and not an authoritie ouer them. If none of these things were, yet the onelic Epistle to the Galathians maie easilie take all doubting from vs: where almost in two Chapters together Paul traueleth to prooue nothing else, but that he himselfe was equall to Peter in honour of Apostleship. Then he rehearseth that he came to Peter, not to profess subiection, but onelic to make their consent of doctrine approoued by testimonie to all men: and that Peter himselfe required no such thing, but gaue him his right hande of fellowship, to worke in common together in the Lordes vineyarde: and that there was no lesse grace giuen to him among the Gentiles, than to Peter among the Iewes: Finally that when Peter dealt not verie faithfully, hee was corrected by him, and obeyed his reproofing. All these things doe make plaine, either that there was an equalitie betweene Paul and Peter, or at least that Peter had no more power ouer the rest, than they had ouer him. And (as I haue already saide) Paul of purpose laboureth about this, that none should preferre before him in the Apostleship either Peter, or Iohn, which were fellowes, not Lords.

8 But, to grant them that which they require concerning Peter, that is, that hee was the Prince of the Apostles, and excelled the rest in dignitie: yet there is no cause cause why they should of a singular example make an vniuersall rule, and drawe to perpetuities that which hath bene once done: sith there is a farre differing reason. One was cheefe among the Apostles: forsooth, because they were few in number. If one were the cheefe of twelue men, shall it therefore follow that one ought to be made ruler of a hundred thousand men? It is no maruell that twelue had one among them that should rule them all. For nature beareth this, and the wit of men requireth this, that in euery assembly, although they be all equall in power, yet there be one as a gouernour, whome the rest may haue regard vnto. There is no court without a Consull: no session of iudges without a Pretor, or Propounder, no companie without a Ruler, no fellowship without a Maister. So should it be no absurditie, if we confessed that the Apostles gaue to Peter such a supremacie. But that which is of force among fewe, is not by and by to be drawn to the whole world, to the ruling whereof no one man is sufficient. But (say they) this hath place no lesse in the whole vniuersalitie of nature, than in all the partes, that there be one soueraigne head of all. And hereof (and God will) they fetch a prooofe from Cranes and Bees, which alway choose to themselues one guide, not many. I allow in deede the examples which they bring fourth: but do Bees resort together out of all the world to choose them one king? euery feuerall king is content with his owne hyue. So among Cranes, euery heard hath their owne king. What else shall they proue hereby, but that euery Church ought to haue their owne feuerall Bishop appointed them? Then they call vs to ciuile examples. They alleage that saying of Homer, It is not good to haue many gouernours: and such things as in like sense are read in prophane writers to the commendation of Monarchie. The answere is easie. For Monarchie is not praised of Vlysses in Homere, or of anie other, in this meaning, as though one ought to be Emperour of the whole world: but they meane to shew that one kingdome cannot hold two kings: and that power (as he calleth it) can abide no companion.

No head of the whole Church but onelie Christ.

Eph. 4. 15.

9 But let it be as they will, that it is good and profitable that the whole world be holden vnder Monarchie, which yet is a very great aburdity: but let it be so: yet I will not therefore graunt that the same should take place in the gouernment of the Church. For the Church hath Christ her only head, vnder whose dominion we all cleaue together, according to that order and that forme of policie which he hath prescribed. Therefore they do a great wrong to Christ, when by that pretence they will haue one man to be ruler of the vniuersall church, because it cannot be without a head. For Christ is the head of whom the whole body coupled and knit together in euery ioynt, wherewith one ministrerth to an other, according to the working of euery member in the measure thereof, maketh increase of the bodie. See you not, how he setteth all men without exception in the body, and leaueth the honor & name of head to Christ alone? See you not how he giueth to euery member a certaine measure, and a determined and limited function: whereby both the perfection of the grace and the soueraigne power of gouernance may remaine with Christ only? Neither am I ignorant what they are wont to cauill, when this is objected against them: they say that Christ is properly called the only head, because he alone raigneth by his own authoritie and in his owne name: but that this nothing withstandeth, but that there may be vnder him another ministeriall head (as they terme it) that may be his vicegerent in earth. But by this cauillation they preuaile nothing, vnlesse they first shew that this ministry was ordained by Christ. For the Apostle teacheth, that the whole ministracion is dispersed through the members, and that the power floweth from the one heavenly head. Or if they will haue it any plainer spoken, sith the Scripture testifieth that Christ is the head, and claimeth that honour to him alone, it ought not to be transferred to any other, but whom Christ himselfe hath made his vicar. But that is not only no where read, but also may be largely confuted by many places.

Eph. 4. 10.

10 Paul sometimes depainteth vnto vs a liuely image of the Church. Of one head head he maketh there no mention. But rather by his description we may gather, that it is disagreeing from the institution of Christ. Christ at his ascending tooke from vs the visible presence of himselfe: yet he went vp to fulfill all things. Now therefore the Church hath him yet present, and alway shall haue. When Paul goeth about to shew the meane wherby he presenteth himselfe, he calleth vs backe to the ministeries which he vseth. The Lord (saith he) is in vs all, according to the measure of grace that he hath giuen to euery member. Therefore he hath appointed some Apostles, some Pastors, some Euangelists, other some Teachers, &c. Why doth he not say, that he hath set one ouer all, to be his vicegerent? For the place required that principally, and it could by no means haue bin omitted, if it had bin true. Christ (saith he) is with vs. How? by the ministry of men, whom he hath appointed to gouerne the Church. Why not rather by the ministeriall head, to whom he hath committed his steede? He nameth vnitie: but in God, and in the faith of Christ. He assigneth to men nothing but common ministerie, and to euery one a particular measure. In that commendation of vnitie, after that he had said that there is one body, one spirit, one hope of calling, one God, one Faith, one Baptisme, why hath he not also immediatly added one chiefe bishop, that may hold the Church together in vnitie? For nothing could haue bene more fitly spoken, if it had bene true. Let that place be diligently weighed. It is no doubt but that he meant there altogether to represent the holie and spirituall government of the Church, which they that came after called Hierarchie. As for Monarchie among ministers, he not only nameth none, but also sheweth that there is none. It is also no doubt but that he meant to expresse the manner of conioyning, wherby the faithfull cleaue together with Christ their head. There he not onely speaketh of no ministerial head, but appointeth to euery of the members a particular working according to the measure of grace distributed to euery one. Neither is there any reason why they should furtly dispute of the comparison of the heavenly and earthly Hierarchie. For it is not safe to know beyond measure of it. And in framing this government we must follow no other figure, than the Lord himselfe hath painted out in his word.

11 Now although I graunt them an other thing, which they shall neuer win by prooffe before sober men, that the supremacie of the Church was so stablished in Peter, that it should alway remaine by perpetuall succession: yet how will they prooue, that his seate was so placed at Rome, that whosoever is Bishop of that Church, should be set ouer the whole world? By what right do they binde this dignitie to the place, which is giuen without mention of place? Peter (say they) liued and died at Rome. What did Christ himselfe? Did not he, while he liued, exercise his Bishopricke, and in dying fulfill the office of Priesthood, at Ierusalem? The Prince of Pastors, the soueraigne Bishop, the head of the Church, could not purchase honor to the place: and could Peter, that was farre inferior to him? Are not these follies more than childish? Christ gaue the honor of supremacie to Peter: Peter sate at Rome, therefore he there placed the sea of supremacie. By this reason the Israelites in old time might haue set the seate of Supremacie in the desert, where Moses the chiefe Teacher and Prince of Prophets executed his ministerie and died.

12 Let vs see how trimly they reason. Peter (say they) had the Supremacy among the Apostles: therefore the church where he sate ought to haue that priuledge. But where sate he first? At Antioch, say they. Therefore the Church of Antioch doth rightly claime to it selfe the supremacie. They confesse that it was in old time the first: but they say, that in remouing thence he removed to Rome the honour that he brought with him. For there is an Epistle vnder the name of Pope Marcellus to the bishoppes of Antioche, where he sayeth thus: Peters seate was at the beginning with you, which afterward by the Lords commaundement was remoued hither. So the Church of Antioche, which was once the chiefe, hath giuen place to the sea of Rome:

Ephes. 4. 7. & 11.

If Peter had a supremacie not onely to be confirmed vnto him but also conueied vnto others, the title of the bishop of Rome is not hereby prooued.

12. quart. l. cap.

Cap. 6. Of the outwarde meanes

But by what Oracle had that good man learned, that the Lord so commaunded? For if this cause be to be determined by the lawe, it is necessarie that that they answer, whether they will haue this priuilege to be personall, or reall, or mixt. For it must be one of these three. If they say that it is personall, then it belongeth nothing to the place. If they say that it is reall, then when it is once giuen to the place, it is not taken away by reason either of the death or departure of the person. It remaineth therefore that they must say it is mixt: but then that place shall be not simply to be considered, vnlesse the person doe also agree. Let them choofe which soeuer they will, I will by and by inferre and easily prouoe, that Rome can by no meane take the supremacie vpon it selfe.

If the first place be granted to the Church of Rome, why the seconde vnto Alexandria before either Antioch, or Ephesus, or Ierusalem.

Gal. 2. 9.

13 But be it, that as (they triflingly say) the supremacie was remooued from Antioch to Rome: yet why did not Antioch keepe the second place? For if Rome haue therefore the first place, because Peter sate there to the end of his life: to whome shall the second place rather be graunted, than where he had his first seate? How came it to passe then, that Alexandria went before Antioch? How agreeth it, that the Church of one discipule should be about the seate of Peter? If honour be due to euerie Church, according to the worthinesse of the founder, what shall we say also of the other Churches? Paul nameth three, that seemed to be pillars, Iames, Peter, and Iohn. If the first place were giuen to the sea of Rome in the honour of Peter: doe not the seas of Ephesus and Hierusalem, where Iohn and Jams sate, deserue the second and third place? But among the Patriarches Hierusalem had the last place: Ephesus could not sit so much as in the vttermost corner. And other Churches were left out both all those that Paul founded, and those that the other Apostles were rulers of. The seate of Marke, which was but one of their discipules, obtained the honour. Therefore they must either confesse that that was a preposterous order, or they must graunt vs that this is not a perpetuall rule, that there be due to euerie Church the same degree of honour which the founder had.

Peters sitting at Rome scarce worthe of credit.

Rom. 15. 25.

Rom. 16. 21.

14 Howbeit, as for that which they report of Peters sitting in the Church of Rome, I see not what credite it ought to haue. Truly that which is in Eusebius, that he ruled there fise and twenty yeeres, is very easily confuted. For it is euident by the first and seconde Chapter to the Galathians, that about twentie yeeres after the death of Christ, he was at Hierusalem, and that then he went Antioch: where how long he was, is vncertaine. Gregorie reckoneth seuen yeeres, and Eusebius twenty and fise. But from the death of Christ, to the ende of Neroes Empire, (in whose time they say that he was slaine) there shall be found but thirtie and seuen yeeres. For the Lord suffered vnder Tiberius, the eighteenth yeere of his Empire. If you rebate twentie yeeres, during the which Paul is witnesse that Peter dwelt at Hierusalem, there will remaine but seauenteene yeeres at the most, which must now be diuided betwene two Bishopricks. If he taried long at Antioch he coule not sit at Rome but a very little while. Which thing wee may yet also more plainly prouoe. Paul wrote to the Romanes, when he was in his journey going to Hierusalem, where he was taken and from thence brought to Rome. It is not likely that this Epistle was written foure yeeres before that he came to Rome. Therein is yet no mention of Peter, which should not haue bene left out, if Peter had ruled that Church. Yea and in the end also, when he rehearseth a great number of the godly, whom he biddeth to be saluted, where verily he gathereth together all those that he knewe, he yet saith vtterly nothing of Peter. Neither is it needefull here to make a long or curious demonstration to men of sound iudgement: for the matter it selfe, and the whole argument of the Epistle crieth out, that he should not haue oucrpassed Peter, if he had bene at Rome.

As Peters governing the Church of Rome is hardly prouoed, 15 Then Paul was brought prisoner to Rome. Luke reporteth that he was received of the brethren, of Peter hee saith nothing. He wrote from thence to many Churches: and in some places also he writeth salutations in the names of certaine:

but he doeth not in one word shew that Peter was there at that time. Who, I pray you shall thinke it likely, that he could haue passed him ouer with silence, if he had beene present? Yea to the Philippians, where he said that he had none that so faithfully looked vnto the worke of the Lord, as Timothie, he complained that they did all seeke their owne. And to the same Timothie he maketh a more grieuous complaint, that none was with him at his first defence, but all forsooke him: where therefore was Peter then? For if they say that he was then at Rome, how great a shame doth Paul charge him with, that he was a forsaker of the Gospell? For he speaketh of the beleeuers: because he addeth, God impute it not vnto them. How long therefore, and in what time did Peter keepe that seate? But it is a constant opinion of writers, that he gouerned that Church euen to his death. But among the writers themselves it is not certaine who was his successor, because some say Linus, and other some say Clement. And they tell many fond fables, of the disputation had betwene him and Simon the Magician. And Augustine sticketh not to confesse, when he treateth of superstitions, that by reason of an opinion rashly conceiued, there was a custome growen in vs at Rome, that they should not fast that day that Peter got the victorie of Simon the Magician. Finally the doings of that time are so entangled with diuersitie of opinions, that we ought not rashly to beleue where we finde anything written. And yet by reason of this consent of writers, I steine not against this, that he died there: but yet that he was Bishop there, and specially a long time, I cannot be persuaded, neither do I much passe vpon that also: for as much as Paul testifieth that Peters Apostleship did peculiarly belong to the Iewes, and his owne to vs. Therefore that that fellowship which they couenanted betwene themselves, may be confirmed with vs, or rather that the ordinance of the holy Ghost may stand in force among vs, we ought to haue respect rather to the Apostleship of Paul and Peter. For the holy Ghost so diuided the prouinces betwene them that he appointed Peter to the Iewes, and Paul to vs. Now therefore let the Romanists go and seeke their supremacy else where than in the word of God, where it is found not to be grounded.

16 Now let vs come to the olde Church, that it may also be made to appeare plainly that our aduersaries doe no lesse causelessly, and falsely boast of the consent thereof, than they doe of the witness of the word of God. When therefore they bragge of that principle of theirs, that the vnitie of the Church cannot otherwise be kept together, but if there be one supreme head in earth, to whome all the members may obey, and that therefore the Lord gaue the supremacy to Peter, and from thence forth to the sea of Rome by right of succession, that the same should remaine in it to the end: they affirme, that this hath beene alway obserued from the beginning. But forasmuch as they wrongfully wrest many testimonies, I will first say this aforehand, that I denie not but that the writers doe each where giue great honor to the church of Rome, and do speake reuerently of it. Which I thinke to be done specially for three causes. For that same opinion, which I wot not how was growen in force, that it was founded and ordered by the ministerie of Peter, much auailed to procure fauour and estimation vnto it. Therefore in the East parts it was for honors sake called the sea Apostolike. Secondly, when the head of the Empire was there, and that therefore it was likely, that in that place were men more excellent both in learning and wisdom, and skill, and experience of many things, than any where els: there was worthily consideration had thereof, that both the honor of the cite, and also the other more excellent gifts of God should not seeme to be despised. There was beside thereof a third thing, that when the Churches of the East, and of Greece, yea and of Affricke, were in tumults among themselves with disagreement of opinions, the church of Rome was quieter and lesse full of troubles than the rest. So came it to passe, that the godly & holie Bishops, being driuen out of their seates, did oftentimes flee thither as into sanctuarie or certaine hauen. For as the Westerne men are of lesse sharpnesse and swiftnes of wit, than the Asians or Africans be, so much are they lesse desirous of alterations. This therefore added much authoritie to the Church of Rome, that in those doubtful times it was not so troubled as the rest, and did hold the doctrine once deliured them, faster than all the rest as we shall by and by better declare. For these three causes (I say) it was had in no small honor, and commended with many notable testimonies of the old writers.

The fathers of the Church confessing the Churches vnite neuer dreamed that the Bishop of Romes supreamacie should bee the bonde to make it one.

17 But when our aduerfaries will thereupon gather that it hath a supreamacie and soueraine power ouer other Churches, they doe too much anisse, as I haue already said. And that the same may the better appeare, I will first briefly shew what the olde Fathers thought of this vnity which they enforce so earnestly. Hierome writing to Ne-potianus, after that he had receiued many examples of vnitie, at the last descended to the Hierarchie of the Church. Each Bishop of euery seuerall Church, each Archpriest, each Archdeacon, and all the Ecclesiasticall order, doe rest vpon their owne rulers. Here a Romaine Priest speaketh, he commendeth vnitie in the Ecclesiasticall order, why doth he not rehearse that all Churches are knit together with one head as with one bond? Nothing could haue more fitly serued the matter that he had in hand: and it cannot be saide that it was for forgetfulness, that he omitted it: for he would haue done nothing more willingly if the matter had suffred him. He saw therefore without doubt, that that is the true reason of vnitie which Cyprian excellently well describeth in these words: The Bishoprike is one, wherof each hath a part wholly: & the Church is one, which is with increase of fruitfulness more largely extended into a multitude. Like as there are many sun-beames and one light: and many branches of a tree, but one body grounded on a fast holding roote: and like as from one fountaine flow many streams, and though the multitude seeme to be diuersly spread abroad with largenes of ouerflowing plentie, yet the vnity is kept whole in the originall: so the Church also being ouerspread with the light of the Lord, extendeth her beames abroad throughout the whole world, yet is it but one that is each where poured forth, and the vnity of the body is not seuered: she spreadeth her branches ouer the whole world, she sendeth out her ouerflowing streams: yet is there but one head & one beginning, &c. Afterward: The spouse of Christ cannot be an adulteresse: she knoweth one only house, she keepeth the holines of one only chamber with chaste shamefastnes. You see how he maketh the vniuersall bishopricke to be Christs onely, which comprehendeth the whole Church vnder him: and saith that all they that execute the office of Bishop vnder this head, haue their parts thereof wholly. Where is the supreamacie of the sea of Rome, if the whole bishopricke remaine with Christ onely, and each bishop hath his part thereof wholly? These things therefore make to this purpose, that the reader may vnderstand by the way, that the old fathers were vtterly ignorant of that principle, which the Romanistes do take for confessed and vndoubted, concerning the vnity of an earthly head in the Hierarchie of the Church.

De sim. pr.

The vij. Chapter.

Of the beginning and encreasing of the Papacie of Rome, vntill it advanced it selfe to this height, whereby both the libertie of the Church hath been oppressed, and all the right government thereof ouerthrowen.

Sundry auncient Councils wherein the Bishop of Rome had not the chiefest place.

AS concerning the auncientnesse of the supreamacie of the sea of Rome, there is nothing had of more antiquitie to stablish it, than the decree of the Nicene Synode, wherein the bishop of Rome both hath the first place among the Patriarches giuen vnto him, and is commanded to looke vnto the Churches adioyning to the citie. When the Council maketh such diuision betweene him and the other Patriarches, that it assigneth to euerie one their bounds: truely, it doth not appoint him the head of all, but maketh him one of the chiefe. There were present Vitus and Vincencius

Vincentius in the name of Iulius, which then gouerned the Church of Rome: to them was giuen the fourth place. I beseech you, if Iulius were acknowledged the head of the Church, should his Legates be thrust into the fourth seate? Shoulde Athanasius be chiefe in the Councell, where principally the image of the Hierarchicall order ought to be seene? In the Synode at Ephesus it appeereth, that Celestinus which was then Bishop of Rome, vsed a crooked futtle meane to prouide for the dignitie of his seate. For when he sent his deputies thither, he committed his steede to Cyrillus of Alexandria, which shoulde notwithstanding otherwise haue bene the chiefe. To what purpose was that same committing, but that his name might by what meane soeuer abide in the first place? For his Legates sate in a lower place, and were asked their opinion among the rest, and subscribed in their order: in the meane time the Patriarch of Alexandria ioyned Celestinus name with his owne. What shall I say of the seconde Councell at Ephesus: where when Leos Legates were present, yet Dioscorus Patriarch of Alexandria sate the chiefe as by his owne right? They will take exception that it was no vpright Councell, by which both the holy man Flavianus was condemned, and Eutyches acquitted, and his vngodlinesse allowed. But when the Synod was gathered, when the Bishops tooke their places in order, verily the Legates of the Bishop of Rome sate there among the rest none otherwise than in a holy and lawfull Councell. Yet they strived not for the first place, but yielded it to another: which they would neuer haue done, if they had thought it to be theirs of right. For the Bishops of Rome were neuer ashamed to enter into the greatest contentions for their honors: and for this onely cause oftentimes to vex and trouble the Church with many and hurtfull strifes. But because Leo saw that it should be a too much vnreasonable request, if hee should seeke to get the chiefe place for his Legates, therefore he sure eased it.

2 Then followed the Councell of Chalcedon, in which by the grant of the Emperour the Legates of the Church of Rome sate in the chiefe place. But Leo himselfe confesseth that this was an extraordinary priuiledge. For when he made petition for it to the Emperour Marcianus, and Pulcheria the Emperesse, hee did not affirme that it was due to him, but onely pretended, that the Easterne Bishops, which sate as chiefe in the councell at Ephesus, troubled all thinges and ill abused their power. Whereas therefore it was needfull to haue a graue gouernour, and it was not likely that they should be meete for it, which had once bin so light and disordered: therefore he praised, that by reason of the default and vnfitnes of other, the office of gouerning might be remooued to him. Truly that which is gotten by singular priuiledge and beside order, is not by common law. Where this onely is pretended, that there needeth some newe gouernour, because the former gouernours had behaued themselves ill, it is euident that it neither was so before, nor ought to continue so for cuer, but is done onely in respect of present danger. The Bishop of Rome therefore had the first place in the Councell at Chalcedon: not because it was due to his sea, but because the Synode was at that time destitute of a graue and fit gouernour, while they that ought to haue bin the chiefe, did through their owne intemperance and corrupt affection, thrust themselves out of place. And this that I say, Leos successour did indeed prouue. For when he sent his Legates to the sit Synode at Constantinople, which was holden long time after, he brauled not for the first seate, but easily suffered Menna the patriarch of Constantinople to sit as chiefe. So in the councell at Carthage, at which Augustine was present, we see that not the legates of the sea of Rome, but Aurelius Archbishop of that place sat as chiefe: when yet the contention was about the authoritie of the Bishop of Rome. Yea there was also a generall councell holden in Italie it selfe, at which the Bishop of Rome was not present. Ambrose was chiefe there, which was in verie great authoritie with the Emperour, there was no mention made of the Bishop of Rome. Therefore at that time it came to passe by the dignitie of Ambrose, that the sea of Milain was more noble than the sea of Rome.

The chiefe place in the Councell of Chalcedon granted by the Emperour at request upon special occasion for that time to the bishop of Rome, which place in Synodes a sternardes held other Bishops had as before.

The title of supremacie not given to the bishop of Rome in the ancient times of the church Lib. 2. epi. 2. and. lib. 4. epi. 6.

3 As concerning the title of supremacie, and other titles of pride, whereupon it now marvellously boasteth it selfe, it is not hard to iudge, when and in what sort they crept in, Cyprian oftentimes maketh mention of Cornelius. Hee setteth him out with no other name, but by the name of brother, or fellow Bishop, or fellow in office. But when hee writeth to Stephen the successor of Cornelius, hee doth not onely make him equal with himselfe & the rest, but also speaketh more hardly to him, charging him sometime with arrogancie, fountime with ignorance. Since Cyprian wee haue with all the church of Africa iudged of that matter. The Councell at Carthage did forbid that any should be called Prince of priestes, or chiefe Bishop, but onely bishop of the chiefe sea. But if a man turne over the ancient monuments, he shall finde that the Bishop of Rome at that time was content with the common name of brother. Certainly so long as the face of the Church continued true & pure, all these names of pride, where with since that time the sea of Rome hath begun to waxe outrageous, were vterly vneheard of: it was not knowen, what was the highest bishop and the onely head of the church in earth. But if the bishop of Rome had bene so bolde to haue taken such a thing vpon him, there were stout and wise men that would haue by and by repressed his folly. Hierome forasmuch as he was a priest at Rome, was not ill willing to set out the dignitie of his owne Church, so much as the matter and state of his time suffred: yet we see how he also bringeth it down into fellowship with the rest. If authoritie (saith he) be sought for, the world is greater than a city. Why dost thou alleage to me the custome of one citie? Why dost thou defende finalnes of number, out of which hath growen pride, against the lawes of the Church? Wherefoeuer there be a bishop, either at Rome, or at Eugubium, or at Constantinople, or at Rhegium, he is of the same merite and of the same Priesthood. The power of riches or basenes of pouertie maketh not a bishop higher or lower.

Cap. 47.

Ep. ad Euag.

4 About the title of vnierfall Bishop the contention first began in the time of Gregorie, which was occasioned by the ambition of Iohn Bishop of Constantinople. For he (which thing neuer any man before had attempted) would haue made himself vnierfall Bishop. In that contention Gregorie doth not alleage that the right is taken away which was due to himself: but stoutly crieth out against it, that it is a prophane name, yea full of sacrilege, yea the forewarner of Antichrist. The whole church (saith he) falleth downe from her state, if he fall which is called vnierfall. In another place: It is very sorrowfull, to suffer patiently, that our brother and fellowe Bishop, despising all other, should onely be named Bishop. But in this his pride what els is betokened but the times of Antichrist neere at hand? because verily he followeth him, that despising the fellowship of Angels, went about to clumbe vp to the top of lingularity. In another place he writeth to Eulolius of Alexandria, and Anastafius of Antioche. None of my predeceffors at any time would vie that prophane worde: for if one bee called vnierfall Patriarch, the name of patriarches is abated fro all the rest. But far may this be from a christian minde, that any should haue a will to take that vpon him, whereby he may in any part, bee it neuer so little, diminish the honour of his brethren. To consent in this wicked worde is nothing else but to leete the faith. It is one thing (saith he) that we owe to the preserving of the vnitie of faith, and another thing that we owe to the keeping downe of pride. But I say it boldly, because whosoeuer calleth himselfe or desireth to be called vnierfall bishop, he doth in his proude aduancing run before Antichrist, because he doth with shewing himselfe proude preferre himselfe about the rest. Againe to Anastafius bishop of Alexandria: I haue saide that he cannot haue peace with vs, vnlesse he amended the aduancing of the superstitious & proude word, which the first apostata hath inuented. And (to speake nothing of the wrong done to your honour) if one be called vnierfall Bishop, the vnierfall Church falleth when that vnierfall one falleth. But whereas he writeth, that this honour was offered to Leo in the Synode at Chalcedon, it hath no colour of truth. For neither is there any such thing read in the actes of that Synode. And Leo himself, which with many Epistles impugneth the decree there made in honour of the sea of Constantinople, without doubt would not haue passed ouer this argument, which had beene most to bee liked of all other, if it had beene true, that hee refused that which was giuen him: and being a man otherwise too much desirous of honour, he would not haue omitted that which made for his praise. Therefore Gregorie was deceiued in this, that he thought that that title was offered to the sea of Rome by the Synode of Chalcedon: to speake nothing, how fond it is, that he both testifieth it to haue proceeded from the holy Synode, and also at the same time called it wicked, prophane, abominable, proude, and full of sacrilege, yea deuised by the duell, and published by the crier of Antichrist. And yet he addeth that his predecessor refused it, least all Priestes should be deprived of their due honor, when any thing were priuately giuen to one. In another place: no man at any time hath willed to be called by that word. No man hath taken to himselfe that presumptuous name: least if he should in the degree of bishoprike take to himselfe a glorie of singularitie, he should seeme to haue denied the same to all his brethren.

Lib. 4. Epist. 79.

Lib. 7. Epist. 79.

5 Now I come to the iurisdiction, which the Bishop of Rome affirmeth that he hath ouer all Churches. I knowe howe great contentions haue beene in olde time about this matter: For there hath beene no time wherein the sea of Rome hath not counted to get an empire ouer other Churches. And in this place it shall not be out of season, to search by what means it grew then by little and little to some power. I doe not yet speake of that infinite empire, which it hath not so long agoe taken by force to it selfe: for we will desire that to a place conuenient. But here it is good to shew briefly, how in olde time and by what means it hath aduanced it selfe, to take to it selfe any power ouer other Churches. When the Churches of the East were diuided and troubled with the factions of the Arrians vnder the Emperours Constantinus and Constantin the sonnes of Constantine the Great, and Athanasius the chiefe defender there of the true faith was driven out of his sea: such calamitie compelled him to come to Rome, that with the authoritie of the sea of Rome, he might both after a sort repress the rage of his enemies, and confirme the godly that were in distresse. He was honourably receiued of Julius then Bishop, and obtained that the Bishops of the West rooke vpon them the defence of his cause. Therefore when the godly stood in great neede of forren aide, and saw that there was very good succour for them in the church of Rome, they willingly gaue vnto it the most authoritie that they could. But all that was nothing else, but that the communion thereof should be highly esteemed and it should be counted a great shame to be excommunicate of it. Afterwarde euill and wicked men also added much vnto it. For to escape lawfull iudgements, they fled to this sanctuary. Therefore if any Priest were condemned by his Bishop, or any Bishop by the Synode of his prouince, they by and by appealed to Rome. And the Bishops of Rome receiued such appellations more greedily than was meete: because it seemed to be a forme of extraordinarie power, so to entermiddle with matters far and wide about them. So when Eutyches was condemned by Vianianus Bishop of Constantinople, he complained to Leo that he had wrong done vnto him. Leo without delay, no lesse vndersecretly than suddenly, tooke in hand the defence of an euill cause, he greuously inuayed against Flavianus, as though he had, without hearing the cause, condemned an innocēt: and by this his ambitious he caused that the vngodlines of Eutyches was for a certaine space of time strengthened. In Affrica it is euident that this oftentimes chanced. For so soone as any lewde men had taken a foyle in ordinarie iudgement, he by and by flew to Rome, and charged his countremen with many slanderous reports: and the sea of Rome was alway ready to entermiddle. Which lewdnesse compelled the Bishops of Affrica to make a lawe, that none vnder paine of excommunication should appeale beyond the sea.

The ground whereupon the sovereignty of the Bishop of Rome did first take roote was his intermeddling in those causes, and his readiness to aide those persons, which being bad were ready any where to seeke maintenance.

Cap. 7. Of the outward meanes

In consecrating of Bishops, the power of the Bishop of Rome no other but the same which in other places others had. Lib. 2. Epist. 68. & 70.

6 But whatsoever it were, let vs see what authoritie or power the sea of Rome then had. Ecclesiasticall power is contained in these fower pointes, ordering of Bishops, summoning of Councils, hearing of appeals or iurisdiction, chastising, admonitions or censures. All the olde Synodes commaund Bishops to be consecrate by their owne Metropolitanas: and they neuer bid the Bishop of Rome to be called vnto it, but in his owne Patriarchie. But by little and little it grew in vse, that all the Bishops of Italie came to Rome to fetch their consecration, except the Metropolitanas, which suffered not themselues to be brought into such bondage: but when any Metropolitan was to be consecrate, the Bishop of Rome sent thither one of his Priestes, which should only be present, but not president. Of which thing there is an example in Gregorie: at the consecration of Constantius Bishop of Milaine after the death of Lawrence. Howbeit I doe not thinke that that was a very ancient institution: but when at the beginning for honor and good wils sake they sent one to another their Legates, to be witnesses of the consecration, and to testifie their communion with them, afterward that which was voluntarie, began to be holden for necessaric. Howsoever it be, it is euident that in olde time the Bishop of Rome had not the power of consecrating, but in the prouince of his owne Patriarchie, that is to say, in the Churches adioyning to the citie, as the canon of the Niceene Synode saith. To the consecration was annexed the sending of a Synodicall Epistle, in which he was nothing about the rest. For the Patriarches were woont immediatly after their consecration, by solemne writing to declare their faith, whereby they professed that they subscribed to the holy and catholike Councils. So rendring an account of their faith, they did approue themselues one to another. If the Bishop of Rome had receiued of other, and not himselve giuen this confession, he had thereby been acknowledged superiour, but when he was no lesse bound to giue it, than to require it of other, and to be subiect to the common law: truly that was a token of fellowship, not of dominion. Of this thing there is an example in Gregories Epistle to Anastastus and to Cyriacus of Constantinople, and in other places to all the Patriarches together.

Lib. 1. Epist. 25.
Lib. 6 Epist 169.
Lib. 1. Epist. 24.

The Bishop of Rome as well censured by others as others by him.

7 Then follow admonitions or censures: which as in olde time the Bishops of Rome vsed toward other, so they did againe suffer them of other. Irenaeus grieuously reprooued Victor, because he vndiscreetly for a thing of no value, troubled the church with a pernicious dissention. Victor obeyed, and spurned not against it. Such a libertie was then in vse among the holy Bishops, that they vsed a brotherly authoritie toward the Bishop of Rome, in admonishing and chastising him if he at any time offended. He againe, when occasion requir'd did admonish other of their dutie: and if there were any fault, rebuked it. For Cyprian, when he exhortheth Stephen to admonish the Bishops of France, fetcheth not his argument from the greater power, but from the common right that Priestes haue among themselues. I beseech you, if Stephen had then bene ruler ouer France, would not Cyprian haue saide: Restraine them, because they bee thine? but he saith far otherwise. This (saith he) the brotherly fellowship, wherewith we be bound one to another requireth that we should admonish one another. And we see also with how great sharpnesse of words he being otherwise a man of a milde nature inueieth against Stephen himselve, when he thinketh him to be too insolent. Therefore in this behalfe also there appeereth not yet, that the Bishop of Rome had any iurisdiction ouer them that were not of his owne prouince.

Epist 13. lib. 3.
Ad pomp.
Contr. Epist.
Stephani.

Generall Councils summoned onely by the Emperour: prouinciall as well by other Bishops in their territories as by the Bishop of Rome.

8 As concerning the calling together of Synodes, this was the office of euerie Metropolitan, at certaine appointed times to assemble a prouinciall Synode. There the Bishop of Rome had no authoritie. But a generall Councille the Emperour onely might summon. For if any of the Bishops had attempted it; not only they that were out of his prouince, would not haue obeyed his calling, but also there would by and by haue risen an vprore. Therefore the Emperour indifferently warned them all to be present. Socrates indeed reporteth, that Iulius did expostulate with the Bishops of the East, because

because they called him not to the Synode of Antioch, whereas it was forbidden by the Canons, that any thing should be decreed without the knowledge of the Bishop of Rome. But who doth not see that this is to be understood of such decrees as bind the whole vniuersall Church? Now it is no matuell, if thus much be granted both to the antiquitie and honor of the ciuite, and to the dignitie of the sea, that there should be no general decree made of religion, in the absence of the bishop of Rome, if hee refuse not to be present. But what is this to the dominion ouer the whole Church? For we deny not, that he was one of the chiefe: but we will not grant, that which the Romanistes now affirme, that he had a dominion ouer all.

9 Now remaineth the fourth kind of power, which standeth in appeales. It is euident that hee hath the chiefe power, to whose iudgement seate appellation is made. Many oftentimes appealed to the Bishop of Rome, and he himselfe also went about to draw the hearing of causes to himselfe: but hee was alway laughed to scorne, when he passed his owne bounds. I will speake nothing of the East and of Grecia: but it is certaine that the Bishops of France stoutly withstoode him, when he seemed to take to himselfe an empire ouer them. In Affrica there was long debate about that matter. For where at the Mileuitane Council, at which Augustine was present, they were excommunicate that appealed beyond the sea, the Bishop of Rome traualled to bring to passe, that that decree might be amended. Hee sent his legates to shewe that that priuilege was giuen to him by the Nicene Council. The Legates brought forth the actes of the Nicene Council, which they had fetched out of the storehouse of their owne Church. The Affricans withstood it, and denied that the bishops of Rome ought to be credited in their owne cause: and said that therefore they would sende to Constantinople, and into other cities of Grecia, where copies were to be had that were lesse suspicious. It was founde, that therein was no such thing written, as the Romanes had pretended. So was that decree confirmed, which tooke the chiefe hearing of causes from the bishop of Rome: In which doing the lewd shamelesnes of the Bishop of Rome himselfe appeared. For when he guilefully did thrust in the Synode at Sardos in steede of the Nicene Synode, he was shamefully taken in a manifest falsehood. But yet greater and more shamelesse was their wickednes, that added a forged Epistle to the Council, wherein I wote not what bishop of Carthage, condemning the arrogancie of Aurelius his predecessor, for that he was so bold to withdraw himselfe from the obedience of the sea Apostolike, and yeelding himselfe and his Church, humbly craueth pardon. These be the goodly monuments of antiquitie, whereupon the maiesty of the sea of Rome is founded, while they so childishly lie, vnder the pretence of antiquitie, that very blinde men may finde it out by groping. Aurelius (saith he) puffed vp with diuelish boldnes and stubbornnes, rebelled against Christ, and saint Peter, and therefore to be condemned with curse. What said Augustine? But what saide so many fathers that were present at the Mileuitane Council? But what neede is it to spende many wordes in confuting that foolish writing, which the Romanistes themselves, if they haue any face left, cannot looke vpon without great shame? So Gratian, I cannot tell whether of malice or of ignorance, where he rehearsed that decree that they should be excommunicate that appeale beyond the sea, addeth an exception: Vnlesse peraduenture they appeale to the sea of Rome. What may a man doe to these beasts, which are so voide of common reason, that they except that onely thing out of the lawe, for whose cause euerie man seeth that the lawe was made? For the council when it condemneth appeales beyonde the sea, forbiddeth onely this, that none should appeale to Rome. Heere the good expositor excepteth Rome out of the common lawe.

10 But (to determine this question at once) one historie shall make plaine what maner of iurisdiction the bishop of Rome had in old time. Donate of the black-houses had accused Cecilian bishop of Carthage. The man accused was condemned, his cause not heard. For when he knew that the bishops had conspired against him, he would not appeare. Then the matter came to the Emperor Constantine. He for as much as he willed to haue the matter ended by ecclesiasticall iudgement, committed the hearing of it to Melchisedech bishop of Rome. To whom he adioined fellow commissioners, many bishops of Italie, France, and Spaine. If that belonged to the ordinarie iurisdiction of the sea of Rome, to heare an appeale in an Ecclesiasticall cause: why doth he suffer other to be ioined with him at the will of the Emperour? Yea why did he himselfe take the iudgement vpon him rather by the Emperours commandement, than by his owne office? But let vs heare what hapned afterward. There Cecilian got the victorie. Donat of the blacke housis was condemned for schlander: he appealed: Constantine committed the iudgement of the appeale to the bishop of Orleance. He sat as iudge, to pronounce what he thought, after the bishop of Rome. If the sea of Rome hath the chiefe power without appellatour: why doth Melchisedech suffer himselfe to receiue so great a shame, that the bishop of Orleance should be preferred aboue him? And what Emperour doth this? euen Constantine of whom they boast that he employed not onely all his endeouour, but in a maner all the riches of the Empire to increase the dignity of their sea. We see therefore now, how far the bishop of Rome was at that time by all meanes from that supreme dominion, which he affirmeth to be giuen vnto him by Christ ouer all the Churches, and which he lyingly saith that he hath in all ages possessed by the consent of the whole world.

Sacrosanct.*

11 I know how many epistles there be, how many writings and decrees, wherein the bishops do giue much, and boldly challenge much vnto it. But this also all men that haue a very little wit and learning do know, that the most part of those are so vnfauorie, that by the first taste of them a man may soone finde out of what shopp they came. For what man offound wit and sober, will think that that goodly interpretation is Anacletus his owne, which is in Gratian reported vnder the name of Anacletus: that is, that Cephas is a head? The Romanistes do at this day abuse for defence of their sea, many such trifles, which Gratian hath patched together without iudgement: and yet still in so, great light they will sell such tomes, wherewith in old time they were wont to mocke out the ignorant in darkensse. But I will not bestow much labour in confuting those things, which do openly confute themselves by reason of their vnfauorie folly. I graunt that there remaine also true epistles of the old Bishops, wherein they set forth the honour of their sea with glorious titles, of which sort are some epistles of Leo. For that man as he was learned and eloquent, so was he also a booke measure desirous of glorie and dominion: but whether the Churches then beleued his testimonie when he so advanced himselfe, that indeede is it that is in controuersie. But it appeareth that many offended with his ambition, did also withstād his grecedie desire. Sometimes he appointed in his steed the bishop of Thessalonica throughout Greece & other countries adioining: sometime he appointed the bishop of Orleance, or some other throughout France. So he appointed Hormisdas bishop of Hispalis to be his vicar in Spaine: but euery where he excepteth, that he giueth out such appointments vpon this condition, that the Metropolitans may haue their ancient priuiledges remaining safe and whole. But Leo himselfe declareth, that this is one of their priuiledges, that if any doubt happen about any matter, the Metropolitan should first be asked his aduise. Therefore those appointments of vicars in his steed were vpon this condition, that neither any bishop should be letted in his ordinarie iurisdiction, nor any Metropolitan in being iudge of Appeales, nor any prouincial Council in ordering of their Churches. What was this else but to abstaine from all iurisdiction: but to intermeddle to the appealing of discordes, onely so far as the Law and nature of the communion of the Church suffereth?

Gregories time*

12 In Gregories time that ancient order was already much chaunged. For when the Empire was shaken, and torne in peeces, when France and Spaine were afflicted with many overthrowes received, Slavonia wasted, Italy vexed, and Affrica in a manner destroyed with continuall calamities, that in so great a shaking of ciuill affaires, at least the integrity of Faith might remaine, or yet not vtterly perish, all the Bishops from each part did the rather ioyne themselves to the Bishop of Rome. Theret y it came to passe, that not onely the dignitie, but also the power of that Sea greatly increas'd. Howbeit I doe not so much passe by what meanes it was brought about. Truly it appeareth that it was then greater than in the ages before. And yet it then greatly differed from being an vnbridled dominion, that one man might beare rule ouer other after his owne will. But the Sea of Rome had this reuerence, that it might with her authoritie subdue and repress the lewde and obstinate that could not by the other Bishops be kept within their ductie. For Gregory doth oftentimes diligently testifie this, that he doth no lesse faithfully preferue to other men their rights, than he requireth his owne of them. Neither doe I (saith he) pricked on by ambition, plucke from any man that which is his right: but I desire in all things to honor my brethren. There is no saying in his writings wherein he doth more proudly boast of the largenes of his Supremacie, than this: I know not what Bishop is not subiect to the Sea Apostolike when he is found in fault. But he by and by adioyneth. Where fault requireth, not all according to the order of humiliatie are equall. He giueth to himselfe power to correct them that haue offended: if all doe their ductie, he maketh himselfe equall with the rest. But he himselfe giueth himselfe this power: and they assented to it that would: and other that liked it not, might freely gaine say it, which it is well knowne that the most part of them did. Beside that he speaketh there of the Primacie of Constantinople: which when he was condemned by the principall Synode, refused the whole iudgement. His fellow Bishops informed the Emperor of this stubbornnes of him. The Emperor willed Gregorie to be Iudge of the caute. We see therefore that he both attempteth nothing, whereby he may breake the ordinarie iurisdiction, and the same thing that he doth for the helping of other, he doth not but by the Commandement of the Emperour.

13 This therefore was then all the power of the Bishop of Rome, to set himselfe against obstinate and vntamed heads, when there needed any extraordinary remedie: and that to helpe and not to hinder other Bishops. Therefore he taketh no more to himselfe ouer all other, than in another place he granteth to all other ouer himselfe, when he confesseth that he is readie to be corrected of all, to be amended of all. So in another place he doth in deede commaund the Bishop of Aquileia to come to Rome, to plead his cause in a controuersie of Faith that was risen betweene him and other: but he doth not commaund him of his owne power, but because the Emperour had so commanded. Neither doth he giue warning that he alone shall be Iudge, but promised that hee will assemble a Synode by whome the whole matter may be iudged. But although there was yet such moderation, that the power of the Sea of Rome had her certaine boundes, which it might not passe, and the Bishop of Rome himselfe was no more about than vnder other: yet it appeareth how much Gregorie mistaked such state. For he now and then complaineth, that vnder color of Bishoprike he was brought backe to the world: and that he was more entangled with earthly cares, than euer he had serued them while he was a lay man: that he was in that honor oppressed with tumult of worldly affaires. In another place: so great burdens (saith he) of busines doe hold me downe, that my minde can nothing at all be raised vp to things aboue. I am shaken with many waues of causes: and after those leasures of rest I am tossed with tempestes of trouble some life, so that I may rightlie say, I am come into the depth of the sea, and the tempest hath drowned me. Herby gather, what he would haue said, if he had happened to be in these times. Although he fulfilled not the office of a Pastor, yet he was doing it. He abstained fro the government of the ciuill Empire, & confessed himselfe to be subiect to the Emperour as other exalted the dignity of the Church of Rome, but without acknowledging the ordinarie iurisdiction which others had.

were. He did not thrust himselfe into the cure of other Churches, but being compelled by necessitie. And yet he thinketh himselfe to be in a maze, because he cannot apply himselfe altogether onely to the office of a Bishop.

The Church of Rome risen by the Empire of Rome.

Dist. 80. c. 6.

Cap. 1.

14 At that time the Bishop of Constantinople strived with the Bishop of Rome for the Supremacie, as it is already said. For after that the seate of the Empire was established at Constantinople, the maiestie of the Empire seemed to require that that Church also should haue the second place of honour after the Church of Rome. And truly at the beginning, nothing more auailed to cause the Supremacie to be giuen to Rome, but because the head of the Empire was there at that time. There is in Gratian a writing vnder the name of Pope Lucinus, where he saith, that cities were no otherwise diuided, where Metropolitanes & Primates ought to sit, than by the reason of the ciuill government that was before. There is also an other vnder the name of Pope Clement, where he saith, the Patriarches were ordained in those cities that had had the chiefe Flamines in them. Which, although it be false, yet is taken out of a truth. For it is certaine, that to the end there should be made as little change as might be, the prouinces were diuided according to the state of things that then were: and that Primates and Metropolitanes were set in those cities that excelled the other in honors and power. Therefore in the Council at Taurinum it was decreed, that those Cities which in the ciuill government were the chiefe cities of euery prouince, should be the chiefe sees of Bishops. And if it happened the honor of the ciuill government to be remooued from one citie to another, that then the right of the Metropolitan citie should therewithall be remooued thither. But Innocentius Bishop of Rome, when he saw the ancient dignitie of his citie to grow in decay, after that the seate of the Empire was remooued to Constantinople, fearing the abacement of his see, made a contrarie law: wherein he denieth it to be necessaric that the Ecclesiasticall mother cities should be changed as the Imperiall mother cities change. But the authoritie of a Synode ought of right to be preferred aboue one mans sentence. Also we ought to suspect Innocentius himselfe in his owne cause. Howsoever it be, yet by his owne prouiso he sheweth, that from the beginning it was so ordered, that the Metropolitan cities should be disposed according to the outward order of the Empire.

The Bishop of Rome stomacking that the Bishop of Constantinople should come so near as to be made by a councell next him in authoritie and honour.

Decret. 22. dist.

15 According to this auncient ordinance, it was decreed in the first councell at Constantinople, that the Bishop of the citie should haue the priuileges of honor next after the Bishop of Rome, because it was a new Rome. But a long time after, when a like decree was made at Chalcedon, Leo stoutly cryed out against it. And he not onely gauch himselfe leaue to esteeme as nothing that which sixe hundred Bishops or moe had decreed: but also bitterly taunted them, for that they tooke from other sees that honour which they were so bolde to gue to the Church of Constantinople. I beseech you, what other thing could mooue a man to trouble the worlde for so small a matter, but meere ambition? He saith that that ought to bee inuolable, which the Nicene Synode hath once decreed. As though forsooth the Christian faith were endangered, if one Church be preferred before another: or as though Patriarchie were there diuided to any other ende, but for policie. But we know that policie receiueth, yearequireth diuers changes, according to the diuersitie of times. Therefore it is sonde that Leo pretendeth, that the honour, which by the authoritie of the Nicene Synode was giuen to the see of Alexandria, ought not to be giuen to the see of Constantinople. For common reason telleth this, that it was such a decreed, as might be taken away according to the respect of times. Yea none of the Bishops of the East withstoode it, whom that thing most of all concerned. Truly Proterius was present, whom they had made Bishoppe of Alexandria in the place of Dioscorus. There were present other Patriarches, whose honor was diminished. It was their part to withstand it, not Leos which remained safe in his owne place. But when all they hold their peace, yea assent vnto it, and onely the Bishop of Rome resisteth:

resisteth: it is easie to iudge, what inuoueth him: that is, he foresaw that which not long after happened, that it would come to passe, that, the glory of old Rome decaying, Constantinople not contented with the second place, would striue with Rome for the supremacie. And yet with his crying out he did not so much preuaile, but that the decree of the Councell was confirmed. Therefore his successors, when they sawe themselves overcome, quietly gaue ouer that stiffenesse: for they suffered that he should be accounted the second Patriarch.

16 But within a little after, John which in Gregories time ruled the Church of Constantinople, brake forth so far that he called himselfe the vniuersall Patriarch. Here Gregorie, leaſt he should in a very good cause faile to defend his owne sea, did constantly set him selfe against him. And truly both the pride and madnesse of John was intollerable, which desired to make the bounds of his Bishopricke equall with the boundes of the Empire. And yet Gregorie doth not claime to himselfe, that which he denieth to another: but abhorreth that name as wicked, and vngodly, and abominable, whoſeuer take it vpon him. Yea and also in one place he is angrie with Eulobius Bishop of Alexandria, which had honored him with such a title. Behold (saith he) in the preface of the Bpistle which he directed to my selfe that haue forbidden it, ye haue cared to imprint the worde of proude calling, in naming me vniuersall Pope, which, I pray that your holinesse will no more doe, because that is withdrawn from you, which is giuen to another more than reason requireth. I count it no honour, wherein I see the honor of my brethren to be diminished. For my honour is the honor of the vniuersall Church, and the sound strength of my brethren. But if your holines call me the vniuersall Pope, it denieth it selfe to be that which it confesseth me to be wholly. Truly Gregorie stodee in a good and honest cause. But John holpen by the fauour of Maurice the Emperour, could neuer be remooued from his purpose. Cyrillus also his succedior neuer suffered himselfe to be intreated in that behalfe.

17 At the last Phocas, which when Maurice was slaine, was set in his place (I wote not for what cause being more friendly to the Romanes, but because hee was there crownd without strife) granted to Boniface the third that which Gregorie neuer required, that Rome should be the head of all Churches. After this manner was the controuersie ended. And yet this benefite of the Emperour, could not so much haue profited the sea of Rome, vnlesse other things also had afterward happened. For Grecia and all Asia were within a little after cut off from the communion of Rome. France so much reuenerced him, that it obeyed no further than it lusted. But it was then first brought into bondage when Pipine vsurped the kingdome. For when Zacharie Bishop of Rome had beene his helper to the breach of his Faith, and to robbrie, that thrusting out the lawfull King, he might violently enter vpon the kingdome as laid open for a pray: he receiued this reward that the sea of Rome should haue iurisdiction ouer the Churches of France: As robbers are wonted in parting to diuide the common spoile: so these good men ordered the matter betweene themselues, that Pipine should haue the earthly and ciuill dominion, spoyling the true king: and Zacharie should be made head of all Bishops and haue the spirituall power: which, when at the beginning it was weake: (as it is wont to be in newe things) was afterward confirmed by the authoritie of Charles, in manner of a like cause. For he was also indebted to the Bishop of Rome, for that by his endeouour he had attained to the honor of the Empire. But although it be credible, that Churches eche where were before that time much deformed, yet it is certaine that the olde forme of the Church was then first vtterly defaced in France and Germanie. There remaine yet in the recordes of the Court of Paris breefe notes of these times, which, where they inreate of the matters of the Church, make mention of the couenant both of Pipine and of Charles with the Bishop of Rome. Thereby we may gather that then was an alteration made of the old state.

The pride of the Bishop of Constantinople seeking to equall his Bishopricke with the boundes of the Empire constantly resisted by Gregorie.

Cap. 7. Of the outward meanes

The state of the Church of Rome in Bernardes time.

18 Since that time, when things did each where daily fall from woofe to worfe, the tyrannie of the sea of Rome, was now and then also stablished and increased, and that partly by the ignorance, and partly by the slothfulness of the bishops. For when one man tooke all things vpon him, and without measure proceeded more and more to aduance himselfe against law and right: the bishops did not with such zeale as they ought, endeuour themselves to restraine his lust, and though they wanted not courage, yet they were destitute of true learning and knowledge: so that they were nothing fit to attempt so great a matter. Therefore we see what and how monstrous an vnholly desiring of all holy things, and a scattering abroad of the whole order of the Church, was in Bernardes time. He complaineth that there resort by heaps to Rome out of all the world, ambitious men, couetous, Simonians, robbers of God, keepers of concubines, committers of incest, and all such monsters, to obtaine or retaine ecclesiasticall honours by the Apostolike authoritie: and that fraude and vndermining, and violence were growen in force. He saith that that maner of iudging which then was vsed, was abhominable, and vnseemely, not onely for the Church, but also for a iudiciall court. He crieth out that the Church is full of ambitious men: and that there is none that more dreadeth to commit mischieuous acts, than robbers do in their caue, when they diuide the spoiles of waifaring men. Few (saith he) do looke vnto the mouth of the Lawgiuer, but vnto his hands. But not without cause. For those hands do all the Popes businesse. What a thing is this, that they are bought of the spoiles of Churches, that say to thee, oh well done, well done! The life of the poore is sowed in the streetes of the rich: siluer glistereth in the mire: men run to it from all places: not the poore, but the stranger taketh it vp, or he peradventure that runneth fastest before. But this maner, or rather this death, came not of thee, I would to God it might ende in thee. Among these things thou a Pastor goest forward compassed with much and precious array. If I durst say it, these are rather the Pastors of diuels, than of sheepe. Forsooth Peter did thus, Paul played thus. Thy court is more accustomed to receiue men good than to make them good. For the ill do not there profit, but the good do decay. Now as for the abuses of appeals that he rehearseth, no godly man can read them without great horror. At the last he thus concludeth of that vnbridled greedinesse of the sea of Rome in the vsurping of iurisdiction: I speake the murmur and common complaint of the Churches. They crie out that they be mangled and dismembred. There are either none or few that do not either bewaile or feare this plague. Askest thou what plague? The Abbots are plucked from the bishops, the bishops from the Archbishops, &c. It is maruellous if this may be excused. In so doing ye prooue that ye haue fulnes of power, but not of righteousnes. Ye do this, because ye can do it: but whether ye also ought to do it, is a question. Ye are set to preferre, not to enuy to euery man his honour and his owne degree. These few things of many I listed to rehearse, partly that the readers may see, how sore the Church was then decayed, and partly that they may know in how great sorrow and mourning this calamitie held all the godly.

Lib. 3.

The vsurped power ecclesiasticall which the Bishop of Rome holdeth and doth exercise at this day.

19 But now, albeit that we graunt to the Bishop of Rome at this day that preeminence and largenes of iurisdiction, which that sea had in the meane times, as in the times of Leo and of Gregorie: what is that to the present state of the Papiacie? I do not yet speake of the earthly dominion, nor of the ciuill power thereof, which we will afterwarde consider in place fit for it: but the verie spirituall government that they boast of, what hath it like to the state of those times? For they define the Pope none otherwise than the Supreme head of the Church in earth, and the vniuersall Bishoppe of the whole world. And the Bishops themselves, when they speake of their owne authoritie, doe with great stoutnesse of countenance, pronounce that to them belongeth the power to commaund, and other are bound to the necessitie to obey, that so all their decrees are to be holden as confirmed with the

diuine voice of Peter, that the prouinciall Synodes are without force, because they want the presence of the Pope: that they may order clerkes of any Church that they will: and may call them to their sea that haue been ordered else where. Innumerable of that sort are in Gratiuns packe, which I do not now rehearse, least I should be too tedious to the Readers. But this is the summe of them, that only the Bishop of Rome hath the supreme hearing and determining of all ecclesiasticall causes, whether it bee in iudging and defining of doctrines, or in making of lawes, or in stablishing of discipline, or in executing of iudgements: It were as long and superfluous to rehearse the priuileges that they take to themselves in reseruations, as they call them. But (which is most intollerable of all other) they leaue no iudgement in earth to restraine and bridle their outrageous iust, if they abuse so immeasurable power. It is lawfull for no man (say they) to reuoke the iudgement of that sea, because of the Supremacie of the Church of Rome. Againe, The iudge shall be iudged neither by the Emperor, nor by kings, nor by all the clergie, nor of the people. That is indeede too imperiously done that one man maketh himselfe iudge of all men, and suffereth himselfe to obey the iudgement of no man. But what if he vse tyrannie ouer the people of God? if he scatter abroad and waste the kingdome of Christ? if he trouble the whole Church? if he turne the office of Pastor into robbrie? Yea though hee be neuer so mischieuous, he saith that he is not bound to yeeld account. For these be the sayings of the Bishops: Gods will was to determine the causes of other men by men, but hee hath without question reserued the bishop of this sea to his owne iudgement. Again, The doings of subiects are iudged of vs but ours of God onely.

20 And that such decrees might haue the more weight, they haue falsly thrust in the names of the old bishops, as though things had bene so ordered from the beginning: whereas it is most certeine, that it is newe and lately forged whatsoeuer the bishop of Rome giueth to himselfe more than wee haue rehearsed to be giuen him by the ancient Councils. Yea, they are come to so great shamelesnesse, that they haue set foorth a writing vnder the name of Anastasius Patriarch of Constantinople, wherein he testifieth that it was decreed by the old rules, that nothing should be done euen in the furthest prouinces, that were not first moued to the sea of Rome. Beside this, that it is certein that it is most vaine, what man shall thinke it likely, that such a commendation of the sea of Rome proceeded from the aduersarie and enuier of honour and dignitie thereof? But verily it behooued that these Antichristes should be carried on to so great madnes and blindnes, that their lewdnes might be plaine for all men to see, at least so many as wil open their eyes. But the decretal epistles heaped together by Gregory the ninth, againe the Clemētines, & Extrauagants of Martine, do yet more openly and with fuller mouth ech where breath foorth their outrageous fiercenes, and as it were the tyrannic of barbarous kings. But these be the oracles, by which the Romanists will haue their papacie to be weyed. Heereupon arose those notable principles, which at this day haue euery where in the papacie the force of oracles: that the Pope cannot erre: that the Pope is aboue the Councils: that the Pope is the vniuersall bishop of all bishops, and the supreme head of the Church in earth: I passe ouer the much absurder follies, which the foolish Canonists babble in their schooles, to which yet the Romish diuines do not onely assent, but do also clap their hands at them, to flatter their idoll.

21 I will not deale with them by extremitie of right. Some other man woulde against this their so great insolencie set the saying of Cyprian, Which hee vse d among the bishops, at whose Council hee sat as chiefe. None of vs calleth himselfe Bishop of Bishops, or with tyrannous feare compelleth his fellow bishops to nec essitie to obey. Hee woulde obiect that, which a little after was decreed at Carthage. That none should be called Prince, Priest, or chiefe Bishop. Hee woulde gather manie testimonies out of Histories, Canons out of Synodes, and many sentences out of the bookes of olde writers, by which the bishop of Rome should be brought downe into the fellowship of the rest. But I passe ouer all these, least I should seeme too precisely to presse them. But let the best patrones of the sea of Rome aunswere me, with what face they dare defend the title of vniuersall Bishop, which they see so oft to be condemned with curse by Gregorie. If Gregories testimonie ought to be of force, they doe thereby declare that Antichrist is there bishop, because they make him vniuersall. The name also of head was no more vsuall. For thus he sayeth in one place: Peter is the chiefe member in the bodie, John, Andrew, and Iames the heads of particular peoples: yet they all are members of the Church vnder one head: yea the holie ones before the lawe, the holie ones vnder the lawe, and the holie ones vnder grace, are set among members, altogether making vp the bodie of the Lord: and no man euer willed to haue himselfe called vniuersall. But whereas the Bishop of Rome taketh vpon himselfe the power of commaunding, that thing finally agreeth with that which Gregorie saith in another place. For whereas Eulolius bishop of Alexandria, had saide that he was commaunded by him, he aunswered in this wise, I pray ye, take away this word of commaunding from my hearing. For I know what I am, and what ye be. In place, ye he to me brethren: in manners ye be to me fathers. Therefore I commaunded not, but I cared to tell you those things that I thought profitable. Whereas he so extendeth his iurisdiction without end, he doeth therein great and hainous wrong, not onely to the other bishops, but also to all particular Churches, which he so reareth and plucketh in peeces, that he may build his seate of their ruines. But whereas he exempreth himselfe from all iudgements, and will so raigne after the manner of tyrants, that he accounteth his owne onely lust for lawe, that verily is so hainous, and so farre from ecclesiasticall order, that it may in no wise be borne: for it vtterly abhorreth not onely from all feeling of godlinesse, but also from all humanitie.

The state of Rome an hundred times more corrupt now than in the dayes of Gregorie or Bernard.

Lib. 1. epi. 5. 7.
& 25. & alibi.

22 But that I be not compelled to goe through and examine all things particularly, I doe againe appeale to them, that will at this day be accompted the best and most faithfull patrones of the sea of Rome, whether they be not ashamed to defend the present state of the Papacie: which it is certaine to be an hundred times more corrupt, than it was in the time of Gregorie and Bernard: which state yet did then so much displease those holie men. Gregorie each where complaineth, that he is too much diuersly drawn away with foraine busines: that he is vnder the colour of bishopricke brought backe to the world: wherein he serueth so many cares of the world as he neuer remembereth that he serued when he was a laie man: that he is pressed downe with tumult of worldly affaires, that his minde is nothing raised vp to things aboue, that he is shaken with many waues of causes, and tossed with tempests of troublesome life: so that he may worthily say, I am come into the depth of the sea. Truly among those earthly busineses, he might yet teach the people with Sermons, privately admonish and correct such as it behooued, order the Church, giue counsell to his fellow bishops and exhort them to their dutie: beside these things there remained some time to write: and yet he lamenteth his calamitie, that he is drowned in the deepest sea. If the government of that time was a sea: what is to be saide of the papacie at this time? For what likensse haue they together? Here be no preachings, no care of discipline, no zeale to the Churches, no spirituall doing, finally nothing but the world. Yet this maze is praised, as though there could nothing be found more orderly and better framed. But what complaints doeth Bernard poure out, what groanes doth he vter, when he looketh vpon the faultes of his age: What then would he do if he beheld this our age of iron, and worse if any be worse than iron? What obstinate wickednesse is this, not onely stiffely to defend as holy and diuine, that which all the holy men haue with one mouth condemned: but also to abuse their testimonie to the defence of the papacie, which it is certaine that they neuer

knew of? Howbeit of Bernard's time I confesse, that then the corruption of all things was so great, that it was not much vnlike our time. But they are without all shame, that fetch any pretence for it, out of that meane age, that is the time of Leo, Gregorie, and such other. For they do like as if one, to stablish the Monarchie of Emperors, would praise the old state of the Empire of Rome: that is, would borrow the praises of libertie, to set forth the honor of tyrannie.

23 Finally, although all these things were graunted them: yet there ariseth of fresh a new strife for them, when we deny that there is a Church at Rome, in which such benefites may be resident: when we deny that there is a bishop, which may beare these priuileges of dignitie. Admit therefore all those things to be true, (which yet we haue already wrung from them) that Peter was by the mouth of Christ appointed head of the vniuersall Church: and that he left the honour that was giuen him in the sea of Rome: that the same was stablished by the authoritie of the auncient Church, and confirmed with long continuance: that the Supreme power hath beene alway by one consent giuen of all men to the bishop of Rome, that he had bene the iudge of all both causes and men, and himselfe subiect to the iudgement of none: let them haue also more, if they will: yet I answere in one word, that none of these things auale, vnlesse there be at Rome a Church and a bishop. This they must needs graunt me, that it cannot be the mother of Churches, which is not it selfe a Church: that he cannot be chiefe of bishops, which is not himselfe a bishop. Will they therefore haue the sea Apostolike at Rome? Then let them shew me a true and lawfull Apostleship. Will they haue the chiefe Bishop? Then let them shew me a Bishop. But what? where will they shew vs any face of a Church? They name one indeede, and haue it oft in their mouth. Truly the Church is knowne by her certaine markes: and bishopricke is a name of office. I speake not here of the people: but of the government it selfe, which ought continually to staine in the Church. Where is the ministerie in their Church, such as Christes institution requireth? Let vs call to remembrance that which hath before bene spoken of the office of Priests and of a bishop. If we shall bring the office of Cardinals to be tried by that rule, we shall confesse that they are nothing lesse than Priests. As for the chiefe bishop himselfe, I would faine know what one thing at all he hath bishoplike. First it is the principall point in the office of a bishop, to teach the people with the word of God: another and the next point to that is, to minister the Sacraments: the third is to admonish and exhort, yea and to correct them that offend, and to hold the people together in holy discipline. What of these things doth he? yea, what doth he faine himselfe to do? Let them tell therefore, by what meane they would haue him to be counted a bishop, that doth not with his little finger, nor not once so much as in outward shew, touch any part of a bishops office.

24 It is not so of a bishop as it is of a king. For a king although he do not execute that which belongeth to a king, doeth neuertheles retaine the honor and title. But in iudging of a bishop respect is had to Christes commandement, which alway ought to be of force in the Church. Therefore let the Romanists loose me this knot. I deny that their high bishop is the chiefe of bishops, forasmuch as he is no bishop. They must needs prooue this last point to be false, if they will haue the victorie in the fist. But how saie they to this, that he not onely hath no property of a bishop, but rather all things contrarie? But here, O God, whereat shall I beginne? at his learning, or at his manners? What shall I saie, or what shall I leaue vntaide? where shall I make an ende? This I saie. that whereas the world is at this day, stuffed with so many peruerse and wicked doctrines, full of so manie kindes of superstitions, blinded with so many errors, drowned in so great idolatrie: there is none of these any whete, that hath not either flowed from thence: or at least beene there confirmed. Neither is there any other cause, why the billiops are carried with so great rage against the doctrine doctrine of the Gospel newly springing vp againe, why they bend all their strengthes to oppresse it, why they kindle vp kings and princes to crueltie, but because they see that their whole kingdome decayeth and falleth downe, so soone as the Gospell of Christ commeth in place. Leo was cruell: Clement was bloudie: Paul is a fierce murtherer. But nature hath not so much moued them to fight against the truth, as for that this was their onely meane to maintaine their power. Therefore sith they cannot be safe, till they haue driuen away Christ, they trauell in this cause, as if they did fight for their religion and countries, and for their owne liues. What then? Shall that be to vs the sea Apostolike, where we see nothing but horrible Apostasie? Shall he be Christs vicar, which by persecuting the Gospell with furious enterprises, doth openly professe himselfe to be Antichrist? Shall hee be Peters successeur, that rangeth with sword and fire, to destroy all that euer Peter hath builded? Shall he be head of the Church that cutting off and dismembing the Church from Christ the onely true head thereof, doth in it selfe plucke and teare it in peeces. Admit verily that in the olde time Rome was the mother of all Churches: yet since it hath begun to be the seate of Antichrist, it hath ceased to be that which it was.

The Pope Antichrist.

25 We seeme to be too much euill speakers and railers, when we call the Bishop of Rome Antichrist. But they that so thinke, doe not vnderstande that they accute Paul of immodestie, after whom we so speake, yea out of whose mouth we so speake. And least any man obiect, that we doe wrongfully wrest against the Bishop of Rome, these wordes of Paul that are spoken to another intent, I will briefly shew, that they cannot be otherwise vnderstanded, but of the Papacie. Paul writeth, that Antichrist shall sit in the temple of God. In another place also the holy Ghost describing his image in the person of Antiochus, sheweth that his kingdome shall consist in hawtnesse of speech, and blasphemings of God. Hereupon we gather, that it is rather a tyrannie ouer soules, than ouer bodies, that is raised vp against the spirituall kingdome of Christ. Then, that it is such, as doth not abolish the name of Christ and the Church: but rather should abuse the pretence of Christ, and lurke vnder the title of the Church, as vnder a disguised visour. But although all the heresies and sectes that haue beene from the beginning, belong to the kingdome of Antichrist: yet whereas Paul prophecieth, that there shall come a departing, by this description he signifieth, that that seate of abomination shall then bee raised vp, when a certaine vniuersall departing shall possess the Church: howsoeuer many members of the Church here and there continue in the true vnitie of faith. But where he addeth, that in his time he began in a mysterie to set vp the worke of iniquitie, which he woulde afterwarde shew openly: thereby we vnderstand, that this calamitie was neither to be brought in by one man, nor to be ended in one man. Now when eas he doth set out Antichrist by this marke, that he should plucke away from God his due honour, to take it to himselfe: this is the chiefe token that we ought to followe in seeking out of Antichrist, specially where such pride proceedeth euen to the publike dilipation of the Church. Sith therefore it is certaine that the Bishop of Rome hath shamelesly conueyed away to himselfe that which was the chiefe proper thing to God alone and Christ, it is not to be doubted but that he is the captaine and standardebearer of the wicked and abominable kingdome.

2. Theſt. 1. 4.
Dan. 7. 25.

Nothing left in the papacy but onely the place where the order of a Church hath been. Euseb. lib. 3. cap. 5.

26 Now let the Romanists go, and obiect antiquitie against vs: As if in so great alteration of all things, the honour of the sea might stand where there is no sea. Eusebius telleth, how God, that there might be place for his vengeance, remoued the Church that was at Hierusalem to Pella. That which we heare to haue beene once done, might be after done. Therefore so to binde the honor of supremacie to a place, that he which is in deede the most hatefull enimie of Christ, the highest aduersarie of the Gospell, the greatest waster and destroyer of the Church, the most cruell slaughterman and butcher of the saints, should neuertheless be accounted the vicar of Christ, Christ, the successor of Peter, the chiefe bishop of the Church, only because he occupieth the sea that was once the chiefest of all: that verely is too much to be scorned and foolish. I speake not, how great difference there is betweene the Popes chauncery, and a wel framed order of the Church. Howbeit this one thing may well take away all doubt of this question. For no man that hath his right wit, will thinke the bishoprike enclosed in lead and bulles: much lesse in that schoole of fraudes and deceites, in which things the Popes spirituall gouernment consisteth. Therefore it was very well said by a certaine man, that that church of Rome which is boasted of, is long ago turned into a court, which only is now scene at Rome. Neither do I here accuse the faults of men: but I shew that the papacie it selfe is directly contrary to the true order of a Church.

27 But if we come to the persons of men, it is well enough knowen what manner of vicars of Christ we shall finde. Iulius forsooth, and Leo, and Clement and Paul, shall be pillars of the christian faith, and the chiefe expositors of religion, which neuer knew any other thing of Christ, than that which he had learned in Lucians schoole. But why do I reckon vp three or foure Popes? as though it were doubtfull, what manner of forme of religion the popes with their whole college of Cardinals haue since long ago professed, and at this day do professe. For first this is the principall article of that secret Diuinitie that raigeth among them, That there is no God: the second, That all things that are written and taught concerning Christ, are lies and deceits: the third, That the doctrine of the life to come, and of the last resurrection are meece fables. They do not all thinke so: and few of them speake so. I graunt. But this hath long ago begun to be the ordinary religion of popes. Whereas this is very well knowen to all that know Rome, yet the Romish Diuines cease not to boast, that by Christs priuilege it is provided, that the Pope can not erre, because it was said to Peter: I haue prayed for thee, that thy faith should not faint. What, I pray you, win they by mocking so shamelesly, but that the whole world may vnderstand, that they are come to that extremity of wickednesse, that they neither feare God, nor stand in awe of men?

Luke. 22. 32.

28 But let vs imagine, that the vngodlines of those popes whome I haue spoken of, is hidden, because they haue neither published it by preaching, nor by writings: but only haue bewraied it at their table, and in their chamber, or at least within walles of houses. But if they will haue this priuilege to be of force, which they pretend, they must needs wipe John the xxii. out of the number of Popes, who openly affirmed that soules are mortall, and that they die together with the bodies vntill the day of resurrection. And that you may perceiue that the whole sea with her principall stayes was then wholly fallen: none of all the Cardinals withstood so great a madnesse, but the schoole of Parise moued the king of Fraunce to compell him to recant it. The king forbad his subiects to communicate with him, vnlesse he did out of hand repent: and the same, as the manner is, he proclaimed by a herald. The Pope compelled by this necessitie, abiured his error. This example maketh that I neede not to dispute any more with my aduersaries about this that they say, that the sea of Rome and the bishops thereof, can not erre in the faith, because it was said to Peter, I haue prayed for thee, that thy faith may not faint. Truly, he fell with so foule a kinde of fall from the right faith, that he is a notable example to them that come after, that they are not all Peters which succede after Peter in the bishopricke. Howbeit this is also of it selfe so childish, that it needeth no answer. For if they will drawe to Peters successors whatsoeuer was spoken to Peter, it shall follow that they are all Satans, forasmuch as the Lord said this also to Peter: Go behind, thou Satan, because thou art an offence to me. For it shall be as easy for vs to turne backe this latter saying against them, as it shall be for them to obiect the other against vs.

thither from whence I made digreſſion. So to binde the place, and Chriſt, and the holy Ghoſt, and the Church together, that whoſoeuer ſit in that place, although he be the Demill, yet he muſt be iudged the Vicar of Chriſt and the head of the Church, becauſe it was once the ſeate of Peter: I ſay this is not onely wicked and ſlaundrous to Chriſt, but alſo too great an abſurdity and againſt common reaſon. It is alreadie long agoe ſince the Biſhops of Rome are eicher without all religion, or the greateſt enemies of Religion. Therefore they are no more made the vicars of Chriſt, by reaſon of the ſeate which they occupie, than an idoll, when it is ſet in the Temple of God, is to be taken for God. Now if their manners be to be iudged vpon, let the Popes themſelues aunſwer for themſelues: what one thing at all there is in them, wherein they may be knowne for Biſhops. Firſt, whereas there is ſuch life at Rome, they not onely wink at it, but alſo as it were with ſecrete countenance allowing it, this is vtterly vnmeet for Biſhops, whoſe duetie is with ſeuertie of diſcipline to reſtraine the licentiousneſſe of the people. But I will not be ſo rigorous againſt them, to charge them with other mens faults. But whereas they themſelues, with their own houſhold, with almoſt the whole Colledge of Cardinals, with the whole flocke of their Cleargie, are ſo giuen foorth to all wickedneſſe, filchineſſe, vnclanneſſe, to all kindes of lewde and miſchieuous dooings, that they reſemble rather monſters than men: therein truly they bewray themſelues to be nothing leſſe than Biſhops. And yet they neede not to feare leaſt I ſhould further diſcloſe their filthineſſe. For both I am verie to haue to doe in ſo ſtinking mire, and I muſt fauour chaſte eares, & I thinke that I haue alreadie enough and more proued that which I went about: that is, that although Rome had in olde time been the head of Churches, yet at this day the is not woorthy to be iudged one of the ſmalleſt toes of the Churches feete.

The riſing of Cardinals.

30 As concerning the Cardinals, (as they call them) I cannot tel how it is come to paſſe, that they be ſo ſodenly riſen vp to ſo great dignitie. This name in Gregories time belonged to Biſhops onely. For ſo oft as he maketh mention of Cardinals, he meaneth it not of them of the Church of Rome, but of any other: ſo that briefly, a Cardinall Prieſt is nothing elſe but a Biſhop. In the writers before that age I finde nor this name at all. But I ſee that they were then leſſe than Biſhops, whom they be now far about. This ſaying of Auguſtine is well known: Although according to the names of honor, which the vic of the Church hath alreadie obtained, Biſhoprike is greater than Prieſthood, yet in many things Auguſtine is leſſe then Hierome. Here indeede he maketh difference betweene a Prieſt of the Church of Rome and other: but he indifferently ſetteth them all behinde the Biſhops. And that was ſo long obſerued, that in the Councell of Carthage, when there were preſent two Legates of the ſea of Rome, the one a Biſhop, the other a Prieſt, the Prieſt was thruſt backe into the laſt place. But not to follow too old examples, there remaineth a Councell holden vnder Gregorie at Rome at which the Prieſtes ſate in the loweſt place, and ſubſcribed ſeuerally by theſelues: as for the Deacons, they had no place at all in ſubſcribing. And truly they had then no office, but to be preſent and vnder the Biſhop at miniſtring of doctrine and of the Sacraments. Now the caſe is ſo changed, that they are become the couſins of Kings and Emperors. And it is no doubt but that they grew vp by little and little together with their head, till they were aduanced to this high top of dignitie. But this alſo I thought good to touch ſhortly by the way that the readers might the better vnderſtand, that the Sea of Rome, ſuch as it is at this day, doth much differ from that ancient one, vnder pretence whereof, it doth now maintaine and defend it ſelfe. But of what ſort ſoeuer they were in olde time, forasmuch as they haue now nothing of the true and lawfull office in the Church, they retaine onely a deceitfull colour & vaine viſour: yea forasmuch as they haue all things vtterly contrary, it was neceſſary that that ſhould happen to them, which Gregorie writeth ſo oft. I ſay it (ſaith he) weeping: I giue warning of it, groning: that ſith the order of Prieſthood is fallen within, it shal also not be able to stand long without. But rather it behooued that this should be fulfilled in them which Malachie saith of such: Ye haue gone back out of the way, & haue made manie to stumble in the law. Therefore ye haue made void the couenant of Leui, saith the Lord. Therefore behold, I haue giuen you out of estimation, and vile to all the people. Now I leaue it to all the godly to thinke of what sort is that supreme height of the Hierarchie of Rome, whereunto the Papistes with abhominable shamelesnesse sticke not to make subiect the very word of God, which ought to haue bene honourable and holy both to heauen and earth, men and Angels.

The viij. Chapter.

Of the power of the Church as touching the articles of faith: and with how vnbridled licentiousnesse it hath in the papacie bene wrested to corrupt all purenesse of doctrine.

NOW followeth the thirde place of the power of the Church, which partly consisteth in all the Bishops, and partly in the Councils, and those either prouinciall or generall. I speake onely of the spirituall power, which is proper to the Church. That consisteth either in doctrine, or in iurisdiction, or in making of Lawes. Doctrine hath two partes, the authoritie to teach articles of Doctrine, and the expounding of them. Before that wee begin to discourse of euery one of these in specialtie, wee will that the godly Readers bee warned, that whatsoeuer is taught concerning the power of the Church, they must remember to apply it to that ende, whereunto (as Paul testifieth) it was giuen: that is, to edification, and not to destruction: which who so lawfully vse, they thinke themselues no more than the ministers of Christ, and therewithall the ministers of the people in Christ. Now of the edifying of the Church, this is the onely way, if the ministers themselues endeuour to preserue to Christ his authoritie, which can not otherwise bee safe vnlesse that bee left vnto him, which he receiued of his Father: that is, that he be the onely schoolemaister of the Church. For it is written, not of any other but of him alone, Heare him. The power of the Church therefore is not to be sparingly set forth, but yet to be enclosed within certaine boundes, that it bee not drawn hiher and thither after the lust of men. Hereunto it shall be much profitable to note, how it is described of the Prophets and Apostles. For if we simplie grant vnto men such power as they list to take vpon them, it is plaine to all men, what a slipperie readines there is to fall into tyrannie, which ought to be fure from the Church of Christ.

2 Therefore heere it must be remembred, that whatsoeuer authoritie or dignity the holy Ghost in the Scripture giueth either to the priestes or to the Prophets, or to the Apostles, or to the successors of the Apostles, all that same is giuen, not properly to the men themselues, but to the ministerie ouer which they are appointed, or (to speake it more plainly in one worde) whereof the ministerie is committed to them. For if we go through them all in order, we shall nor finde that they had any authority to teach or to answer, but in the name and word of the Lord. For when they are called to the office, it is also enioyned them, that they shoulde bring nothing of themselves, but speake out of the mouth of the Lorde. And hee himselfe doth not bring them forth to be heard of the people, before that he haue giuen them instructions what they ought to speake, to the intent that they shoulde speake nothing beside his worde. Moses himselfe, the prince of all the prophets, was to be heard about the rest: but he was first instructed with his commandements, that he might not declare anie thing at all, but from the Lorde. Therefore it is saide, that the people when they embraced his doctrine, belceued in God, and in his seruant Moses. Also that the authoritie of the Priestes should not grow in contempt, it was stablished with most greuous uous penalties. But therewithall the Lord sheweth vpon what condition they were to be heard, when he saith that he hath made his covenant with Leui, that the lawe of truth should be in his mouth. And a litle after he addeth: The lips of the priest shall keep knowledge, & they that require the law at his mouth, because he is the angell of the God of hosts. Therefore if the priest wil be heard, let him shew himselfe the messenger of God: that is, let him faithfully report the commandements that he receiued of his author. And where it is specially entreated of the hearing of them, this is expressly set, That they may answer according to the law of God.

Deut. 17. 10.

The power of prophets consisted in deliuering that which God had giuen them in charge.
Ezc. 3. 17.

3 What manner of power the prophets generally had, is very well described in Ezechiel: Thou son of man (saith the Lord) I haue giuen thee to be a watchman to the house of Israel. Therefore thou shalt heare the word out of my mouth, and thou shalt declare it to them from me. He that is commanded to heare out of the mouth of the Lord, is he not forbidden to inuent any thing of himselfe? But what is to declare from the Lord, but so to speake as he may boldly boast, that it is not his own, but the Lords word that he hath brought? The selfe same thing is in Hieremie, in other wordes. Let the prophet (saith he) with whom is a dreame, tell a dreame: and let him that hath my word speake my word true. Certainly he appointeth a lawe to them all. And that is such, that he permitteeth not any to teach more than he is commanded. And after he calleth it chaffe, all that is not from himselfe onely. Therefore none of the Prophets theselues opened his mouth, but as the Lord told him the words before. Whereupon these sayings are so oft found among them: the word of the Lord, the burden of the Lord, so saith the Lord, the mouth of the Lord hath spoken. And worthily. For Esaie cried out that he had defiled lips. Jeremie confessed that he could not speake, because he was a childe: What could proceede from the defiled mouth of the one, and the foolish mouth of the other, but vnclene and vnwise, if they had spoken their owne speech? But his lips were holy and pure, when they began to be the instruments of the holy Ghost. When the Prophets are bounde with this religion, that they deliuer nothing, but that which they haue receiued, then they bee garnished with notable power and excellent titles. For when the Lord testifieth, that he hath set them ouer nations and kingdomes, to plucke vp and to roote out, to destroy and plucke downe, to bulde and to plant, he by and by adioyneth the cause: because he hath put his words in their mouth.

Matt. 28. 9.

4 Now if you looke to the Apostles: they are indeede commended with manie and notable titles, that they are the light of the worlde, and the salt of the earth, that they are to bee heard in steed of Christ, that whatsoever they binde or loose in earth shall be bound or loosed in heauen. But in their verie name they shewe how much is permitted them in their office: that is, if they be apostles, that they shoulde not prate whatsoever they list: but shoulde faithfully report his commandements from whom they are sent. And the words of christ are plaine enough, in which he hath determined their embassage: when he commanded them to go & teach all nations, all those things that he had commanded. Yea, and he himselfe also receiued this law, and laid it vpon himselfe, that it should be lawfull for no man to refuse it. My doctrine (saith he) is not mine, but his that sent mee, my fathers. Hee that was alway the onely and eternall counsellor of the father, and he that was appointed by the father the Lord & schoolmaster of all men, yet because he executed the ministerie of teaching, prescribed by his owne example to all ministers, what rule they ought to follow in teaching. Therefore the power of the Church is not infinite, but subiect to the word of the Lorde, and as it were enclosed in it.

Ioh 7. 16.

power of the church is not infinite.

The ancient patriarches and fathers taught by Christ.

5 But sith this hath from the beginning been of force in the church, and at this day ought to be in force, that the seruants of God shoulde teach nothing which they haue not learned of him: yet according to the diuersitie of times they haue diuers orders of learning. But that order which is nowe, much differeth from those that were

were before. First if it be true which Christ saith, that none hath seene the Father, but the Sonne, and he to whom it hath pleased the Sonne to shew him, it behooued verily that they should be alway directed by the eternal wisdom of the father, which would come to the knowledge of God. For how should they either haue comprehended in minde, or vttered the mysteries of God, but by his teaching, to whome alone the secrets of the Father are open? Therefore the holy fathers in olde time knewe God no other wise but beholding him in the Sonne as in a glasse. When I say this, I meane that God did neuer by any other meane disclose himselfe to men but by the Sonne, that is, his only wisdom, light and truth. Out of this fountaine did Adam, Noe, Abraham, Isaac, Iacob, and the other draw all the knowledge that they had of heauenly doctrine. Out of the same fountaine haue also all the Prophets themselves drawn all the heauenly Oracles that they vttered. For verily this wisdom hath alway disclosed it selfe by moe waies than one. To the Patriarches he vsed secret reuelations: but therewithall to confirme their mindes, he adioyned such signes, that it could not be doubtfull to them, that it was God that spake. The Patriarches conueyed ouer from hand to hand to posteritie, that which they had receued. For the Lorde left it with them to this intent, that they should so spread it abroad. But the children and childrens children, by God secretly informing them, did knowe that that which they heard was from heauen, and not from the earth.

6 But when it pleased God, to raise a more apparant forme of a Church he willed to haue his worde put in writing and noted, that the priests should fetch from thence what they might deliuer to the people, and that all the doctrine that should be taught should be tried by that rule. Therefore after the publishing of the lawe, when the priestes are commaunded to teach out of the mouth of the Lord, the meaning is, that they should teach nothing strange or differing from that kind of learning, which the Lorde comprehended in the lawe: and to adde and diminish was vnlawfull for them. Then followed the Prophets, by whome in deede the Lord published newe Oracles to be added to the lawe: but yet not so new, but that they came out of the Lawe, and had respect vnto it: For, as touching doctrine, they were onely expositors of the lawe, and added nothing vnto it, but prophecies of things to come. Those excepted, they vttered nothing else but a pure exposition of the law. Because it pleased the Lord that there should be a plainer and larger doctrine, that weake consciences might be the better satisfied: he commaunded that the Prophecies also should be put in writing, and accounted part of his word. And hereunto were added the histories, which are also the works of the Prophets, but made by the ending of the holy ghost. I reckou the Psalmes among the Prophecies, because that which we attribute to the Prophecies is also common to the Psalmes. Therefore that whole body compacted of the lawe, prophecies, psalmes and histories, was the worde of the Lorde to the olde people, by the rule whereof the priestes and teachers euen vnto Christs time were bound to examine their doctrine: neither was it lawfull for them to iuarie eather to the right hand or to the left: because al their office was inclosed within these bounds, that they should answere the people out of the mouth of God. Which is gathered of a notable place of Malachie, where he biddeth them to be mindfull of the lawe, and to giue heede to it, euen to the preaching of the Gospell. For thereby he forbiddeth them all new found doctrines, and graunterh them no leaue to iuarie neuer so little out of the way which Moses had faithfully shewed them. And this is the reason why David so honourably setteth out the excellencie of the lawe, and rehearseth so many praises of it: that is, that the Iewes should couet no forren thing without it, sith within it was all perfection inclosed.

7 In when at last the wisdom of God was openly shewed in the flesh, that same wisdom with full mouth declared vnto vs all that euer can with mans wit be comprehended, or ought to be thought concerning the heauenly Father. Now therefore, since Christ the son of righteousnes hath shined, we haue a perfect brightnesse of the truth of God, such as the cleerenesse is wont to be at mid-day, when the light was before but dim. For verily the Prophet meant not to speake of any meane thing, when he wrote that God in olde time spake diuersly and many waies to the fathers by the Prophets: but that in these last daies he began to speake to vs by his beloued Sonne. For he signifieth, yea he openly declareth, that God will not here after, as he did before, speake sometime by some, and sometime by other, nor will adde Prophecies to Prophecies, or reuelations to reuelations: but that he hath so fulfilled all the partes of teaching in the Sonne, that they must haue this of him for the last and eternall testimony. After which sort all this time of the new Testament wherein Christ hath appeared to vs with the preaching of his Gospell euen to the day of iudgement, is expressed by the last houre, the last times, the last daies: to the end verily that contented with the perfection of the doctrine of Christ, we should learne neither to faine vs any new beside it, or receiue it fained of other. Therefore not without cause the Father hath by singular prerogative ordained the Sonne to be our teacher: commanding him, and not any man, to be heard. He did in deede in few words set out his schoole-mastership vnto vs, when he said, Heare him: but in which there is more weight and force than men commonly thinke. For it is as much in effect, as if leading vs away from all doctrines of men, he should bring vs to him only, and command vs to looke for all the doctrine of saluation at him alone, to hang vpon him alone, to cleaue to him alone, finally (as the very words doe sound) to harken to the voice of him alone. And truly what ought there now to bee either looked for or desired at the hande of man, when the very word of life hath familiarly and openly disclosed himselfe vnto vs? Yea but it is meete that the mouthes of all men be shut, after that he, in whome the heavenly Father willed to haue all the treasures of knowledge and wisdom to bee hidden, hath once spoken, and so spoken as became both the wisdom of God (which is in no part vnperfect) and Messias at whole hand the reuelation of all things is hoped for: that is to say, that he left nothing afterward for other to be spoken.

8 Let this therefore be a stedfast principle: that there is to be had no other word of God, whereunto place should be giuen in the Church, than that which is contained first in the lawe and the prophets, and then in the writings of the Apostles: and that there is no other manner of teaching rightly, but according to the prescription and rule of that worde. Hereupon also we gather, that there was no other thing graunted to the Apostles, but that which the prophets had had in olde time: that is, that they should expounde the olde Scripture, and shew that those things that are therein taught are fulfilled in Christ: and yet that they should not doe the same but of the Lord, that is to say, the spirite of Christ going before them, and after a certaine manner enditing wordes vnto them. For Christ limited their embassage with this condition when he commaunded them to goe and teach, not such things as they themselves had rashly forged, but all those things that he had commaunded them, and nothing could be more plainly spoken, than that which he saith in another place: but be not ye called maisters, for onely one is your maister, Christ. Then, to imprint this more deeply in their minde, he repeateth it twise in the same place. And because their rudenesse was such, that they coule not conceiue those things that they had heard and learned of the mouth of their maister, therefore the spirite of truth is promised them by whome they shoulde be directed to the true vnderstanding of all things. For that same restraining is to be diligently noted, where this office is assigned to the holy Ghost, to put them in minde of all those things that hee before taught them by mouth.

9 Therefore Peter who was very well taught howe much hee might lawfully doe, leauech nothing either to himselfe or other, but to distribute the doctrine deliuered of God. Let him that speaketh (saith he) speake as the wordes of God, that is to say, not doubtingly, as they are wont to tremble whose owne conscience misgiueth them, but with sure confidence, which becommeth the seruant of God furnished with assured instructions. What other thing is this, but to forbid al inuentions of mans minde, from what head soeuer they haue proceeded, that the pure word of God may be heard and learned in the Church of the faithfull? to take away the ordinances or rather the feined deuises of all men, of what degree soeuer they bee, that the decrees of God onely may remaine in force? These bee those spirituall armoures, mightie through God to cast down holds: by which the faithfull seruants of God may throw downe counsels, and all height that aduanceth it selfe against the knowledge of god, and may lead all knowledge captiue to obey Christ. Lo this is the soueraigne power, wherewith it behooueth the Pastors of the Church to be endued, by what name soeuer they be called, that is, that by the worde of God they may with confidence bee bolde to do all things: may compell all the strength, glorie, wisdom and height of the worlde to yeelde and obey to his maiestie: being ypholden by his power, may command all euen from the highest to the lowest: may build vp the house of Christ and pull downe the house of satan: may feed the sheepe & driue away the wolues: may instruct & exhort the willing to learne: may reprove, rebuke and subdue the rebellious & stubborne: may binde, & loose: finally may thunder and lighten, if need be: but all things in the worde of God. Howbeit there is, as I haue saide, this difference betwene the Apostles and their successors, that the Apostles were the certaine & authentike secretaries of the holy Ghost, and therefore their writings are to be esteemed for the oracles of God: but the other haue none other office, but to teach that which is set forth & written in the holy Scriptures. We determine therefore, that this is not now left to faithfull ministers, that they may come any new doctrine, but that they ought simple to cleaue to the doctrine, wherunto the Lord hath made all men without exception subiect. When I say this, my meaning is not onely to shew what is lawfull for all particular men, but also what is lawfull for the whole vniuersall Church. Now as touching all particular men: Paul verily was ordeined by the Lorde Apostle to the Corinthians: but he denieth that he hath dominion ouer their faith. Who now dare take a dominion vpon himselfe, which Paul testified that it belonged not to him? If he had acknowledged himself to haue this liberty of teaching, that whatsoeuer the Pastor teacheth he may therein of right require to be beleued: he would neuer haue taught the Corinthians this discipline, that while two or three prophets speak, the rest should iudge, & if it were reuealed to any that fate, the first should hold his peace. For so he spared none, whose authority he made not subiect to the iudgment of the word of God. But, wil som mā say, of the whole vniuersal church the case is otherwise. I answer that in another place Paul meeteth with this doubt also, where he saith, that faith is by hearing, & hearing by the word of God. Truly, if faith hang of the word of God only, hath respect vnto & resteth vpon it alone, what place is there nowe left to the word of the whole world? For herein no man may doubt that hath wel known what faith is. For Faith ought to be staiede vpon such assurednesse, whereby it may stande inuincible against Satan, and all the engines of the hels, and against the whole worlde. This assurednes we shall no where finde but in the onely worde of God. Againe, it is a generall rule which wee heere ought to haue respect vnto: that God doth therefore take from men the power to set forth a newe doctrine, that hee onely may be our schoolemaster in heauenly learning, as hee onely is true which can neither lie nor deceiue. This rule belongeth no lesse to the whole Church than to euerie one of the faithfull.

10 But if this power of the Church, which we haue spoken of, be compared with that power, wherof the spirituall tyrants, that haue falsly called themselves Bishops and Prelates of Religion, haue in certaine ages past boasted themselves among the people of God, the agreement shall be no better than Christ hath with for the whole bodie of the church to build upon.

Rom. 10.

Their tyrannē who binde the world to beleuee whatsoeuer please shew to teach.

Belial. Yet it is not in this place my purpose to declare in what sort and with how wicked meanes they haue exercised their tyranny: I wil but rehearse the doctrine, which at this day they defend, first with writings, and then with sword and fire. Because they take it for a thing confessed, that a generall Councell is the true image of the Church, when they haue taken this principle, they do without doubt determine, that such councels are immediately governed of the holy Ghost, and that therefore they cannot erre. But whereas they themselves do rule the councels, yea and make them, they do indeed challenge to themselves whatsoever they affirme to be due to the councels. Therefore they wil haue our faith to stand and fall at their wil that whatsoever they shall determine on the one side or the other, may be stablished & certaine to our mindes: so that if they allow any thing we must allow the same without doubting: if they condemne any thing we must also hold it for condemned. In the meane time after their owne lust, and despising the word of God, they come doctrines, to which afterward they require by this rule to haue faith giuen. For they also say that he is no Christian, that doth not certainly consent to all their doctrines as well affirmative as negative: if not with expressed yet with vnexpressed faith: because it is in the power of the Church to make new articles of the Faith.

Promises made to the Church abused to bolster up a most wondrous power in the Church.

II First lets heare by what arguments they prooue that this authoritie is giuen to the Church: and then we shall see how much that maketh for them which they alleage of the Church. The Church (say they) hath notable promises, that it shall neuer be forsaken of Christ her spouse, but that it shall be guided by his spirit into all truth. But of the promises which they are wont to alleage, many are giuen no lesse to euery one of the faithful particularly, than to the whole Church vniuersally. For though the Lord spake to the twelue Apostles, when he said: Behold I am with you euen to the end of the world: Again: I will aske my father, and he shall giue you an other comforter, namely the Spirit of truth: yet he made the promise not only to the whole number of the twelue, but also to euery one of them: yea to the other disciples likewise, either those that he had already receiued, or those that should afterward be added to them. But when they expound such promises full of singular comfort, as though they were giuen to none of the Christians, but to the whole Church together: what do they else, but take away from all Christians that confidence which they all ought to receiue thereby to encourage them? Yet I do not here deny, but that the whole fellowship of the faithfull furnished with manifold diuersitie of gifts, is endued with much larger and more plentifull treasure of the heauenly wisdom, than each one severally: neither is it my meaning, that this is spoken in common to the faithfull, as though they were all alike endued with the spirit of vnderstanding and doctrine: but because it is not to be graunted to the aduersaries of Christ, that they should for the defence of an euill cause wrest the Scripture to a wrong sense. But, omitting this, I simply confesse that which is true, that the Lord is perpetually present with his, and ruleth them with his spirit. And that this spirit is not the spirit of error, ignorance, lying or darkenes: but of sure reuelation, wisdom, truth, and light, of whom they not deceitfully may learne those things that are giuen them, that is to say, what is the hope of their calling, and what be the riches of the glorie of the inheritance of God in the Saints. But whereas the faithfull, euen they that are endued with more excellent giftes about the rest, do in this flesh receiue only the first fruits and a certaine taste of that Spirit: there remaineth nothing better to them than knowing their owne weakenes, to hold themselves carefully within the bounds of the word of God: least, if they wander farre after their owne sense, they by and by flay out of the right way, in so much as they be yet void of that spirit, by whose onely teaching truth is discerned from falshood. For all men do confesse with Paul, that they haue not yet attained to the marke. Therefore they more endeouour to daily profiting, than glorie of perfection.

Phil. 3. 11.

12 But they will take exception, and say that whatsoeuer is particularly attributed to every one of the holy ones, the same doth thoroughly and fully belong to the Church it selfe. Although this hath some seeming of truth, yet I deny it to be true. God doth indeed so distribute to every one of the members the gift of his spirit by measure, that the whole body wanteth nothing necessarie, when the giftes are giuen in common. But the riches of the Church are alway such, that there euer wanteth much of that highest perfection, which our aduersaries doe boast of. Yet the Church is not therefore so left destitute in any behalfe, but that the alway hath so much as is enough. For the Lord knoweth what her necessitie requireth. But, to hold her vnder humilitie and godly modestie, he giueth her no more than he knoweth to be expedient. I know what here also they are wont to obiekt, that is, that the Church is cleansed with the washing of water in the word of life, that it might be without wrinkle and spot, and that therefore in an other place it is called the pillar and stay of truth. But in the first of these two places is rather taught, what Christ dayly worketh in it, than what he hath already done. For if he dayly sanctifieth, purgeth, polisheth, wipeh from spots all them that be his: truely it is certaine that they are yet besprinkled with some spots and wrinkles, and that there wanteth somewhat of their sanctification. But how vaine and fabulous is it, to iudge the Church already in euery part holy and spotles, whereof all the members are spotty and very vnclane? It is true therefore that the Church is sanctified of Christ. But onely the beginning of that sanctifying is here seene: but the end and full accomplishment that be, when Christ the holicit of holy ones shall truely and fully fill it with his holines. It is true also that the spots and wrinkles of it are wiped away: but so that they be dayly in wiping away, vntill Christ with his comming doe vterly take away all that remaineth. For vnlesse we grant this, we must of necessitie affirme with the Pelagians, that the righteousnes of the Faithfull is perfect in this life: and with the Cathari and Donatists we must suffer no infamitie in the Church. The other place, as we haue elsẽ where seene, hath a sense vterlie differing from that which they pretend. For when Paul hath instructed Timothee, and framed him to the true office of a Bishop, he saith that he did it to this purpose, that he should know how he ought to behaue himselfe in the Church. And that hee should with the greater religiousnes & endeuor bend himselfe thereunto, he addeth that the Church is the very pillar and stay of truth. For what elsẽ doe these words meane, but that the truth of God is preserved in the Church, namely by the ministry of preaching? As in another place he teacheth, that Christ gaue Apostles, Pastors, and Teachers, that we should no more be carried about with euery winde of doctrine, or be mocked of men: but that being enlightened with the true knowledge of the Sonne of God, we should altogether meete in vnitie of Faith. Whereas therefore the truth is not extinguished in the world, but remaineth safe, that same commeth to passe because it hath the Church a faithfull keeper of it, by whose helpe and ministerie it is sustained. But if this keeping standeth in the ministry of the Prophets and Apostles, it followeth that it hangeth wholly hereupon, if the word of the Lorde be faithfullie preserved and doe keepe his promise.

13 But that the readers may better vnderstand, vpon what point this question chiefly standeth, I will in few words declare what our aduersaries require, and where in we stand against them. Where they say that the Church can not erre, it tendeth hereunto, and thus they expound it, that forasmuch as it is gouerned by the Spirit of God, it may goe safely without the word: that whither soeuer it goeth, it cannot think nor speake any thing but truth: that therefore if it determine any thing without or beside Gods word, the same is no otherwise to be esteemed than as a certaine oracle of God. If we graunt that first point, that the Church can not erre in things necessarie to saluation, this is our meaning, that this is therefore because forsaking all hir owne wisdom, she suffereth her selfe to be taught of the holy Ghost

The Church not so perfect by veritie of any promise made vnto it but that still it remaineth in this world subiect as to other infirmities so to error.

Eph. 5. 25.
1. Tim. 3. 15.

Eph. 4. 11.

The drift of the Church of Rome in maintaining that the Church cannot erre.

by the worde of God. This therefore is the difference. They set the authoritie of the Church without the worde of God, but we will that it be annexed to the word, and suffer it not to be seuered from it. And what maruel is it, if the spouse and schooler of Christ be subiect to her husband and schoolemaster, that she continually and earnestly hangeth of his mouth? For this is the order of a well gouerned house, that the wife shoulde obey the authoritie of the husbande: and this is the rule of a well ordered schoole, that the teaching of the schoolemaster alone shoulde there be heard. Wherefore let the Church not be wife of her selfe, nor thinke any thing of her selfe: but determine the end of her wisdom where he hath made an end of speaking. After this manner she shall also distrust all the inuentions of her owne reason: but in those things wherein it standeth vpon the word of God, she shall wauer with no distrustfulness or doubting, but shall rest with great assurednes and stedfast constancie. So also trusting vpon the largenesse of those promises that she hath, she shall haue whereupon abundantly to sustaine her faith: that she may nothing doubt that the best guide of the right way, the holy spirit, is alway present with her: but therewithall she shall keepe in memorie what vsē the Lord would haue vs to receiue of his holy spirit. The spirit (saith he) which I will send from my father shall lead you into all truth. But how? because (saith he) he shall put you in mind of all those things that I haue told you. Therefore he giueth warning that there is nothing more to be looked for of his spirit, but that he should enlighten our mindes to perceiue the truth of his doctrine. Therefore Chrysofome saith excellently well. Many (saith he) do boast of the holy spirit: but they which speake their owne do falsly pretende that they haue him. As Christ testified that he spake not of himselfe: because he spake out of the law and the Prophets: so if any thing beside the Gospell be thrust in vnder the title of the spirit, let vs not beleue it, because as Christ is the fulfilling of the law and the Prophets: so is the spirit, of the gospell. These be his words. Now it is easie to gather how wrongfully our aduersaries do, which boast of the holy Ghost to no other end but to set forth vnder his name strange and forraine doctrines from the word of God, whereas hee will with vspeakable knot be conioined with the word of God, and the same doth Christ professe of him when he promiseth him to his Church. So is it truly. What sobrietie the Lord hath once prescribed to his Church, the same he will haue to be perpetually kept. But he hath forbidden her, that she should not adde any thing to his word, nor take any thing from it. This is the inuiolable decree of God and of the holy Ghost, which our aduersaries go about to abrogate, when they saine that the Church is ruled of the spirit without the word.

14 Heere againe they murmure against vs, and say that it behooued that the Church should adde some things to the writings of the Apostles, or that they themselves should afterward with luely voice supply many things which they had not clearly enough taught, namely sith Christ said vnto them. I haue many things to be said to you, which you cannot now beare, and that these be the ordinances, which without the scripture haue becne receiued onely in vsē and maner. But what shamelesnesse is this? I grant the disciples were yet rude, and in a manner vnapt to learne, when the Lorde said this vnto them. But were they then also holden with such dulnes, when they did put their doctrine in writing, that they afterward needed to supply with luely voice that which they had by fault of ignorance omitted in their writings? But if they were already lead by the spirit of truth into all truth when they did set forth their writings: what hindered that they haue not therein contained and left written a perfect knowledge of the doctrine of the Gospell? But go to: let vs grant them that which they require. Only let them point out what be those things that it behooued to be reuealed without writing. If they dare enterprise that, I will assaile them with Augustines words: that is, When the Lord had said nothing of them, which of vs dare say, these they be, or those they be: or if any dare say so, wherby doth he prouoe it? But why doe I strite about a superfluous matter? For a vey child doth know, that in the writings of the Apostles, which these men doe make in a manner lame and but halfe perfect, there is the fruite of that reuelation which the Lorde did then promise them.

15 What? say they, did not Christ put out of cōtrouersie whatsoever the Church teacheth and decreeth, when he commandeth him to be taken for a heathen man and a Publicane that dare say against her? First in that place is no mention made of doctrine, but onely the authoritie of the censures is established for correcting of vices, that they which haue becne admonished or rebuked should not resist his iudgement. But omitting this, it is much maruell, that these losels haue so little shame, that they dare be proud of that place. For what shall they get thereby, but that the consent of the Church is neuer to be despised, which neuer consenteth but vnto the truth of the word of God? The Church is to be heard, say they. Who denieth it? forasmuch as it pronounceth nothing but out of the word of the Lord. If they require any more let them know that these words of Christ doe nothing take their part therein. Neither ought I to be thought too much contentious because I stand so earnestly vpon this point, That it is not lawfull for the Church to make any new doctrine, that is, to teach and deliuer for an Oracle any more than that which the Lord hath reuealed by his word. For men of sound wit doe see how great danger there is, if so great authoritie be once granted to men. They see also how wide a window is opened to the mockings and cautions of the wicked, if we say that that which men haue iudged is to be taken for an Oracle among Christians. Beside that, Christ speaking according to the consideration of his owne time, giueth this name to the Synagoge, that his disciples should studie ward learne to reuerence holy assemblies of the church. So should it come to passe that euery Citie and village should haue equall authoritie in coyning of doctrines.

16 The examples which they vse, doe nothing helpe them. They say that the Baptising of infants, proceeded not so much from the expresse commandement of the Scripture as from the decree of the Church. But it were a very miserable succour, if we were compelled to flee to the bare authoritie of the Church for defence of the Baptising of infants: but it shall in another place sufficiently appeare that it is far otherwise. Likewise whereas they object that that is no where found in the Scripture, which was pronounced in the Nice Synode, that the Sonne is consubstantiall with the Father: therein they doe great wrong to the fathers, as though they had rashly condemned Arius, because he would not sweare to their words, when he professed all that doctrine which is comprehended in the writings of the Prophetes, and Apostles. This word, I grant, is not in the Scripture: but when therein is so oft affirmed, that there is but one God; againe, Christ is so oft called the true and eternal God, one with the Father: what other thing doe the Fathers of the Nice Councill when they declare that he is of one substance, but simply set out the naturall sense of the Scripture? But Theodorite reporteth that Constantine vsed this preface in their assembly, In disputations (saith he) of Diuine matters, there is a prescribed doctrine of the holy Ghost: the Bookes of the Gospels and of the Apostles, with the Oracles of the Prophetes, doe fully shew vs the meaning of God. Therefore laying away discord, let vs take the discussings of questions out of the wordes of the Spirit. There was at that time no man that spake against these holy monitions. No man tooke exception, that the Church might adde somewhat of her owne: that the Spirit reuealed not all things to the Apostles, or at least vttered them not to those that came after: or any such thing. If it be true which our aduersaries would haue: first, Constantine did euill, that tooke from the Church her authoritie: then, whereas none of the Bishops at that time rose vp to defend it, this was not without breach of their Faith? for so they were betrayers of the right of the Church. But sith Theodorite rehearseth that

The ix. Chapter.

Of Councils and of their authoritie.

*A protestation concerning the
Councils.*

NOW, although I graunt them all things concerning the Church: yet they shall thereby not much preuaile for their intent. For whatsoeuer is said of the Church, the same they by and by giue to the Councils, forasmuch as in their opinion those represent the Church. Yea, where they so stiffely contend for the power of the church, they do it of no other purpose, but to giue all that they can get to the Bish.op of Rome and his garde. But ere I beginne to discusse this question, I must needs here make protestation of two things aforchand. First, that where I shall in this point be somewhat rough, it is not because I lesse esteeme the olde Councils than I ought to doe. For I reuerence them from my heart, and wish them to be had in their due honor with all men. But herein is some mean, that is, that there be nothing withdrawn from Christ. Now this is the right of Christ, to be the head in all Councils, and to haue no man fellow with him in this dignity. But I say that then only he is the head, when he governeth the whole assembly with his word and spirit. Secondly, whereas I giue lesse to Councils than the aduersaries require. I doe not for this cause that I am afraid of the Councils, as though they did make for their side, and were against ours. For as we are abundantly furnished with the word of the Lord to the full proofe of our doctrine fully, and to the ouerthrow of the whole Papistrie that we neede not much to desire any other thing beside it: so if the matter require, the olde Councils do for a great part minister vnto vs so much as may suffice for both.

*Christ in the midst of Councils but not except they be gathered in his

Mat. 18. 20.

2 Now let vs speake of the thing it selfe. If it be sought of the Scriptures, what is the authoritic of Councils: there is no plainer promise than in this saying of Christ: Where two or three shall be gathered together in my name, there I am in the midst of them. But that doth no lesse belong to euery particular assembly than to a generall Council. But the doubt of the question standeth not therein. but because there is a condition added, that God will so only be in the midst of the Council, if it be gathered together in his name. Therefore although our aduersaries do a thousand times name Councils of Bishops, they shall little preuaile: neither shall they make vs to beleue that which they affirme, that is, that they be governed of the holy Ghost, vntill they haue prooued that they are gathered together in the name of Christ. For it is as possible that wicked and euill Bishops may conspire against Christ, as good and honest bishops may come together in his name. For a verie cleere proofe hereof are many decrees that haue proceeded from such Councils. But this shal be seen hereafter. Now I do but answer in one word that Christ promiseth nothing, but to them that are gathered together in his name. Let vs therefore define what that is. I deny that they be gathered together in the name of Christ, which casting away the commandement of God, wherein he forbiddeth any thing to be added to his word, or taken from it, do decree euery thing after their owne wil: which being not contented with the Oracles of the Scripture, that is to say the only rule of perfect wisdom, do imagine some new thing of their own head. Surely, sith Christ hath not promised that he will be present at all Councils, but hath adioined a peculiar marke, whereby to make true and lawfull Councils different from other: it is meete that we should not neglect this difference. This is the couenant, which in old time God made with the Leuiticall priests, that they should teach out of his mouth. This he alway required of the prophets: this law also we see to haue bin laid vpō the Apostles. Who so break this couenant, God doth not vouchsafe, to let them haue the honor of priesthood, nor any authority.

authoritie. Let the aduerfaries vndoo me this knot, if they will make my faith bounde to the decrees of men beside the word of God.

3 For whereas they thinke not that truth remaineth in the Church vnlesse it bee among the Pastors: and that the Church it selfe standeth not, vnlesse it appeere in generall Councils: that is farre from hauing bene alway true, if the Prophets haue left vnto vs true testimonies of their owne times. There was in the time of Esaie a Church at Hierusalem, which God had not yet forsaken. But of the Pastors hee saith thus: The watchmen are all blinde, neither know they any thing. They are all dum dogs, neither are they able to bark. They lie along and sleepe, and loue sleeping: and the pastors themselues know nothing, nor do vnderstande: and they doe altogether looke backe vnto their owne waies. After the same maner Osee saith: The watchman of Ephraim with God, the sinare of the fouler, hatred in the house of God. Where ioyning them with God by way of mockage, hee teacheth that their pretence of the priesthoode is vaine. The Church also endured vnto the time of Hieremie. Let vs heare what he saith of the Pastors. From the prophet euen to the priest, euerie one followeth lying. Againe: The prophets do propheticie a lie in my name, when I haue not sent them nor commanded them. And least we shoulde bee too long in reciting his words, let those things be read that he hath written in the whole xxiiij. and xl. Chapters. At that time on the other side Ezechiel did no more gently inuey against the same men. The conspiracie (saith he) of the prophets in the mids of hir as a roaring lion, & that violently taketh his pray. Her priests haue broken my lawe, and haue defiled my holy things, and haue made no difference betweene holy and prophane: and the rest that he adioyneth to the same effect. Like complaints are euery where in the prophets, so that nothing is offer found in them.

4 But perhaps it might be that th it was so among the Iewes: but our age is free from so great an euill. I would to God indeed it were so: but the holy Ghost hath giuen warning that it shall be farre otherwise. The wordes of Peter are plaine. As (saith he) there were in the old people falsie prophets, so shall there also bee among you falsie teachers, slyly bringing in sectes of perdition, see you not howe hee saith, that there is danger to come, not by men of the common people, but by them that shall boast themselues with the title of teachers and pastors? Moreouer howe oft hath it bene forespoken by Christ and his apostles, that there shoulde very great dangers hang ouer the Church by the pastors? Yea, Paul plainly sheweth, that Antichrist shall sit in no other place than in the temple of God. Whereby hee signifieth, that the horrible calamitie of which he there speaketh, shall come from no where else but from them that shall sit in steed of pastors in the church. And in another place he sheweth, that the beginnings of so great a mischiefe are euen already neere at hande. For when he speaketh to the bishop of Ephesus, I know (saith he) that after my departure there shall enter into you rauening wolues not sparing the flocke. And they shall be of your own selues, that shall speake peruerse things, to lead away disciples after them. How much corruption might a long course of yecres bring among pastors, when they coulde so farre go out of kinde in so small a space of time? And, not to fill much paper with rehearsing them by name: we are admonished by the examples in a maner of all ages, that neither the truth is alway nourished in the bosome of the pastors, nor the safetie of the Church doth hang vpon their state. They ought indeed to haue bene the gouernors and keepers of the peace and safetie of the Church, for preferuation whereof, they are ordeined: but it is one thing for a man to performe that which hee ought, and another thing to owe that which he performeth not.

5 Yet let no man take these our wordes in such part, as though I woulde euerie where and rashly without any choise diminish the authoritie of Pastors. I do but onely admonish that euen among pastors themselues there is a choise to be had, that wee shoulde not immediately thinke them to be pastors that are so called. But the Truth may be in the Church although the pastors of the church bee corrupte as in the times of the Prophets they were. Esai. 56. 10.

How farre coun-cels to be recei-

Pope with all his flocke of bishops, vpon none other reason, but because they are called Pastors, shaking away the obedience of the word of God, do tumble and tosse all things after their owne lust: and in the meane time they trauaile to perswade, that they cannot be destitute of the light of truth, that the spirit of God perpetually abideth in them, that the church consisteth in them and dieth with them. As though there be now no iudgements of the Lord, whereby he may punish the world at this day with the same kinde of punishment, wherewith sometime he tooke vengeance of the vnthankfulnes of the old people, that is, to strike the pastors with blindness and amazed dulnesse. Neither do they most foolish men vnderstand, that they sing the same song, which those in old time did sing that warred against the word of God. For the enemies of Hieremie did thus prepare themselues against the trueth: Come, and we will imagine imaginations against Hieremie: forasmuch as the law shall not perish from the priest, nor counsell from the wise man, nor the word from the prophet.

6 Hereby it is easie to answere to that other obiection concerning generall coun-cels. It can not be denied but that the Iewes had a true Church in the time of the prophets. But if there had then bene a generall counsell gathered together of the priests, what maner face of the church had there appeared? We heare what God saith, not to one or two of them but to the whole order: The priests shalbe astonied, and the prophets shalbe made afraide. Againe, the law shal perish from the priest, and counsell from the Elders. Againe, Night shalbe to you in steede of a vision, and darke-nesse in steede of prophecyng: and the sunne shall fall downe vpon the prophets, and be darkened vpon these daies &c. Well: if all such had then bene gathered together in one, what Spirit should haue governed in that assemble? Of that thing we haue a notable example in that counsell which Achab called together. There were present foure hundred prophets. But, because they were come together of no other mind but to flatter the wicked king: therefore Satan was sent of the Lord to be a lying spirit in the mouth of them all. There by all their voices the trueth was condemned. Micha was condemned for an heretike, striken and cast in prison: So was done to Hieremie, so to the other prophets.

7 But let one example suffice for all, which is more notable than the rest. In that counsell which the bishops & Pharisees gathered at Ierusalem against Christ, what can a man say that there wanted, in so much as pertained to the outward thew? For if there had not then bene a Church at Ierusalem, Christ would neuer haue communicate with their sacrifices and other ceremonies. There was made a solemne summoning of them together: the high bishop saue as chiefe: the whole order of priests saue by him: yet Christ was there condemned, and his doctrine driuen away. This doing is a prooffe that the Church was not enclosed in that counsell. But there is no perils that any such thing should happen to vs. Who hath giuen vs assurance thereof? For it is not without fault of sluggishnes, to be too careles in so great a matter. But where the holy Ghost doth with expresse words prophesy by the mouth of Paul, that there shall come a departing (which cannot come but that the pastors must be the first that shall forsake God) why are we herein wilfully blinde to our own destruction? Wherefore it is in no wise to be granted, that the Church consisteth in the company of pastors, for whome the Lord hath nowhere vnder taken that they shall perpetually be good, but he hath pronounced that they shall sometime be euill. But when he warneth vs of the danger, he doth it to this intent to make vs the warer.

8 What then? wilt thou say: Shall the counsels haue no authoritie in determining? Yes forsooth. For neither doe I here argue that all counsels are to be condemned, or all their actes to be repelled, or (as the saying is) to be defaced with one blot. But (thou wilt say to me) thou bringest them all into subiection, that it may be free for euery man to receiue or refuse that which the counsels haue determined.

Not so. But so oft as the decree of any councell is brought forth, I would haue it first to be diligently weighed, at what time it was holden, for what cause it was holden, what manner of men were present: and then the very thing that is intreated of, to be examined by the rule of the scripture: and that in such sort as the determination of the councell may haue his force, and be as a foreiudged sentence, and yet not hinder the aforesaid examination. I would to God all men did keepe that moderation which Augustine prescribeth in the third booke against Maximus. For when he minded briefly to put to silence this heretike contending about the Decrees of councels: Neither (saith he) ought I to object against thee the Synode of Nice, nor thou against me the Synode of Ariminum, as to the entent to conclude one another by foreiudged sentence, neither am I bound by the authoritie of the one, nor thou of the other. By authorities of Scriptures, not such as are proper to either one, but such as are common to both, let there strue matter with matter, cause with cause, reason with reason. So should it come to passe, that councels should haue the maistie that they ought: but in the meane season the Scripture should be alone in the higher place, that there might be nothing that should not be subiect to the rule thereof. So these olde Synodes, as of Nice, of Constantinople, the first of Ephesus, of Chalcedon, and such other, which were holden for confuting of errorrs, we willingly embrace and reuerence as holy, so much as belongeth to the doctrines of faith: for they containe nothing but the pure and naturall exposition of Scripture, which the holy fathers with spirituall wisdom applied to the subduing of the enemies of Religion that then rose vp. In some of the latter councels also, we see to appeare a true zeale of godlinesse, and plaine tokens of wit, learning, and wisdom. But as things are wont commonly to grow to worse, we may see by the latter Councels, how much the Church hath now and then degenerate from the purenesse of that golden age. And I doubt not but that in these corrupter ages also, councels haue had some bishops of the better sort. But in these the time happened which the Senators themselves complained to be not well done in making of ordinances of the senate of Rome. For while the sentences are numbered, not weighed, it is of necessitie that oftentimes the better part is overcome of the greater. Truly they brought forth many wicked sentences. Neither is it here needefull to gather the speciall examples, either because it should be too long, or because other haue done it so diligently, that there cannot much be added.

9 Now, what neede I to rehearse Councels disagreeing with Councels? And it is no cause that any should murmur against me, and say, that of those councels that disagree the one is not lawfull. For, how shall we iudge that? By this, if I be not deceiued, that we shall iudge by the Scriptures, that the decrees thereof are not agreeable with true doctrine. For this is the onely certaine lawe to discern them by. It is now about nine hundred yeares ago, since the Synode of Constantinople gathered together vnder Leo the Emperour, iudged that images set vp in Churches should be overthrowen, and broken in peeces. A little afterward, the councell of Nice, which Jrene the Emperesse assembled in spite of him, decreed that they should be restored. Whether of these two shall we acknowledge for a lawfull Councell? The latter which gaue images a place in Churches, hath prevailed among the people. But Augustine saith that that cannot be done without most present perill of idolatrie. Epiphanius which was before in time, speaketh much more sharply: for he saith that it is wickednesse and abomination to haue images set in a Church of Christians. Would they that so speake, allow that councell, if they were alieue at this day? But if both the historians tell truth, and the very actes be beleued, not onely images themselves, but also the worshipping of them was there receiued. But it is euident that such a decree came from Satan. How say you to this, that in deprauing and tearing the Scripture, they shew that they made a mocking stocke of it? Which thing I haue before sufficiently made open. Howsoever it be, wee shall no otherwise be able to discern be-stantinople and Nice, of Chalcedon and Ephesus,*

twene contrarie and disagreeing Synodes, which were many, vnlesse we trie them all by that ballance of all men and Angels, that is, by the worde of the Lorde. So we imbrace the Synode of Chalcedon, refusing the second Synode of Ephesus, because in this latter one the wickednesse of Eutiches was confirmed, which the other former condemned. This thing holy men haue iudged none otherwise but by the scripture: whome we so followe in iudging; that the worde of God which gaue light to them doth also now giue light to vs. Nowe let the Romanistes goe and boast, as they are wont, that the Holy Ghost is fastened and bound to their councils.

10 Howbeit there is also somewhat which a man may well thinke to be wanting in those ancient and purer councils: either because they that then were at them, being otherwise learned and wise men, wholly bent to the businesse then in hand, did not foresee many other things, or for that many things of lighter importance escaped them being busied with weightier and more earnest matters: or for that simply, as being men they might be deceiued with vnskillfulnesse: or for that they were sometime carried headlong with too much affection. Of this last point (which seemeth the hardest of all) there was a plaine example in the Nicene Synode, the dignitie whereof hath by consent of all men, as it was woorthie, bene received with most high reuerence. For when the principal article of our faith was there in danger, Arrius the enimie was present in readinesse, with whome they must fight hande to hande, and the chiefe importaunce laye in the agreement of them that came prepared to fight against the error of Arrius, this notwithstanding, they carelesse of so great dangers, yea, as it were hauing forgotten grauitie, modestie and all humanitie, leauing the battell that they had in hand, as if they had come thither of purpose to doe Arrius a pleasure, began to wound themselues with inward dissentions, and to turne against themselues the stile that should haue bene bent against Arrius. There were heard foule obiections of crimes, there were scattered books of accusations, & there would haue bene no end made of contentions, vntill they had with mutuall wounds one destroied another, vnlesse the Emperour Constantine had preuented it, which professing that the examining of their life was a matter about his knowledge, and chastised such intemperance rather with praise than with rebuking. How many waies is it credible that the other councils also failed, which followed afterwarde? Neither doth this matter neede long prooffe. For if a man reade ouer the actes of the councils, hee shall note therein many infirmities: though I speake of nothing more greuous.

The Synode of Chalcedon charged with ambition and vnadvised rashnesse: infirmities apparent in holy Synodes least we shoulde see much rest upon men.

11 And Leo Bishop of Rome sticketh not to charge with ambition and vnadvised rashnesse, the Synode of Chalcedon, which yet he confesseth to be sound in doctrines. He doth in deede not denie that it was a lawfull Synode: but he openly affirmeth, that it might erre. Some man peradventure will thinke me sonde, for that I busie myselfe in shewing such errors: for as much as our aduersaries doe confesse, that councils may erre in those things that are not necessarie to saluation. But this labour is not yet superfluous. For although because they are compelled, they doe in deede confesse it in word: yet when they thrust vnto vs the determination of al councils in euery matter whatsoeuer it be, for an Oracle of the holy Ghost, they doe therein require more than they tooke at the beginning. In so doing what doe they affirme, but that councils cannot erre: or if they erre, yet it is not lawfull for vs to see the truth, or not to sooth their errors? And I intend nothing else, but that it may thereby be gathered that the holy Ghost, so gouerned the godly and holy Synodes, that in the meane time he suffered somewhat to happen to them by the nature of men, least wee shoulde too much trust to men. This is a much better sentence, than that of Gregorie Nazianzene that he neuer sawe a good ende of any councill. For he that affirmeth that all without exception ended ill doth not leaue them much authoritie. It is now nothing needfull to make mention severally of prouinciall councils: forasmuch as it is ease to iudge by the generall, how much authoritie they ought to haue to make new articles of faith and to receiue what kinde of doctrine soener it pleaseth them.

12 But our Romanists, when they see that in defence of their cause all help of reason doth faile them, do resort to that extreme and miserable shift: that although the men themselves be blockish in wit and counsell, and most wicked in minde and will, yet the word of God remaineth, which commandeth to obey Rulers. Is it so? what if I deny that they be rulers that are such? For they ought to take vpon themselves no more than Iosua had, which was both a prophet of the Lord, and an excellent pastor. But let vs heare with what words he is set by the Lord into his office. Let not (saith he) the volume of this lawe depart from thy mouth: but thou shalt studie vpon it daies and nights. Thou shalt neither bow to the right hand nor to the left: then shalt thou direct thy way and vnderstand it. They therefore shall be to vs spirituall rulers which shall not bow from the law of the Lord, neither to the one side nor to the other. But if the doctrine of all pastors whatsoever they be, is to be receiued without any doubting, to what purpose was it that we should go oft and so earnestly be admonished not to harken to the speech of false prophets. Heare not (saith he by Hieremie) the words of the prophets that propheticie to you. For they teach you vanitie, and not out of the mouth of the Lord. Againe. Beware you of false prophets, that come vnto you in sheeps clothing, but inwardly are rauening wolues. And Iohn should in vaine exhort vs, that we should prouee the spirits, whether they be of God. From which iudgement the very Angels are not exempted, much lesse Satan with all his lies. What is to be said of this saying: if the blinde leade the blinde, they shal both fall into the ditch? Doth it not sufficiently declare, that it is of great importance what manner of prophets be heard, and that not all are rashly to be heard. Wherefore there is no reason that they should make vs afraid with their titles, thereby to draw vs into partaking of their blindness: forasmuch as we see on the other side, that the Lord had a singular care to fray vs away from suffering our selues to be led with other mens error, vnder what visor of name soener it lurketh. For if the answer of Christ be true, then all blind guides, whether they be called fathers of the Church, or prelates, or bishops, can do nothing but draw their partners into the same headlong downefall. Wherefore let no names of councils, Pastors, bishops (which may as well be falsely pretended as truly vsed,) hinder vs, but that being taught by lessons both of words and examples, we may examine all spirits of all men by the rule of the word of God, that we may prouee whether they be of God or no.

13 Forasmuch as we haue proued that there is not giuen to the church a power to set vp a new doctrine, now let vs speake of the power which they attribute vnto it in expounding of scripture. Truly we do willingly graunt, that if there happen debate about any doctrine, there is no better nor surer remedy than if a Synode of true bishops assemblable together, where the doctrine in controuersie may be discussed. For such a determination, wherunto the pastors of Churches shall agree in common together, calling vpon the spirit of Christ, shall haue much greater force, than if every one severally should conceiue it at home, and so teach it to the people, or if a few priuate men should make it. Againe, when bishops are gathered in one, they doe the more commodiously take aduise in common, what and in what forme they ought to teach, least diuersitie should breede offence. Thirdly Paul prescribeth this order in discerning of doctrines: For whereas he giueth to every severall Church a power to discern, he sheweth what is the order of doing in weightier causes, that is, that the Churches should take vpon them a common triall of the matter together. And so doth the very feeling of godlines instruct vs, that if any man trouble the church with an vnwonted doctrine, and the matter proceede so farre that there be perill of greater dissension, the churches should first meete together, and examine the question propounded: at last, after iust discussing had, bring forth a determination taken out of the Scripture, such as may both take away doubting out of the people, and stop the mouthes of wicked & greedy men, that they may not be so hardie to proceed any further: So when Arrius was risen, the Nice Synode was gathered together, which with the authoritie thereof both did breake the wicked endeouours of the vngodly man, and restored peace to the Churches which he had vexed, and defended the eternall godhead of Christ, against his blasphemous doctrine. When afterwarde Eunomius and Macedonius stirred vp new troubles, their madnesse was resisted with like remedie by the Synode of Constantinople. In the Councell at Ephesus the wickednesse of Nestorius was banished. Finally this hath bene from the beginning the ordinarie meane in the Church to preferre vntie, so oft as Satan began to woike any thing. But let vs remember, that not in all ages or in all places are found Athanases, Basilises, Cyrrilles, and such defenders of true doctrine whom the Lord then raised vp. But let vs thinke what happened at Ephesus in the second Synode, where the heresie of Eutiches preuailed, the man of holy memorie Flavianus was banished with certaine other godly men, and many such mischiefs committed: euen because Dioscorus a seditious man and of a very naughty nature, was there the cheefe, and not the Spirit of the Lord. But there was not the Church. I graunt. For this I determine vnterly that the truth doth not therefore die in the Church, although it be oppressed of one councell: but that the Lord maruellously preseruet it, that it may againe in due time rise vp, and get the ouerhand. But I denie that this is perpetuall, that that is a true and certaine exposition of Scripture which hath bene received by consents of a Councell.

Not every determination of a Councell to be received as a true and sound exposition of the scripture, some councels hauing expressly defined things against Scripture: so far off it is that Councels should haue power to authorise Scripture.

Mat. 26. 26.

1. Tim. 4. 1.

Heb. 13. 4.

14 But the Romanists shoote at an other marke, when they teach that the power to expound the Scripture belongeth to the Councelles, yea and that without appellation from them. For they abuse this colour, to call it an exposition of the Scripture whatsoeuer is decreed in the Councels. Of purgatory, of the intercession of Saintes, of auricular confession, and such other there cannot be found one syllable in the Scriptures. But because all these things haue bene established by the authority of the Church, that is to say (to speake truly) received in opinion and vse, therefore every one of them must be taken for an exposition of Scripture. And not that one-ly: But if a Councell decree any thing, though Scripture cry out against it, yet it shall beare the name of an exposition thereof. Christ commandeth all to drinke of the cup, which he reacheth in the Supper. The councell of Constance forbade that it should not be given to the lay people, but willed that the Priest only should drinke of it. That which so directly fighteth against the institution of Christ, they will haue to be taken for an exposition of it. Paul calleth the forbidding of marriage, the hypocrisie of deuels: And the holy Ghost in another place pronounceth that marriage is in all men holy and honorable. Whereas they haue afterward forbidden Priests to marrie, they require to haue that taken for the true and naturall exposition of the Scripture, when nothing can be imagined more against it. If any dare once open his mouth to the contrary, he shall be judged an heretike: because the determination of the church is without appellation: and to doubt of her exposition, that it is not true, is a hainous offence. Why should I inuey against so great shamelesnesse? For the very shewing of it is an ouercomming of it. As for that which they teach of the power to allow the Scripture, I wittingly passe it ouer. For in such sort to make the Oracles of God subiect to the iudgement of men, that they should therefore be of force because they haue pleased men, is a blasphemie vniworthie to be rehearsed: and I haue before touched the same matter already. Yet I will aske them one thing: If the authoritie of the Scripture be founded vpon the allowance of the Church, what Councels decree will they alleadge of that matter? I thinke they haue none. Why then did Arrius suffer himselfe to be ouercome at Nice with testimonies brought out of the Gospell of Iohn? For after these mens saying, it was free for him to haue refused them, them, for as much as there had no allowance of a general council gone before. They allege the olde roll, which is called the Canon, which they say to haue proceeded from the iudgement of the Church. But I aske them againe, in what council that Canon was set forth. Here they must needs bee dumbe. Howbeit I desire further to know, what manner of Canon they thinke that was. For I see that the same was not very certainly agreed among the old writers. And if that which Hierom saith ought to be of force, the bookes of Machabees, Tobie, Ecclesiasticus and such other shall be thrust among the Apochrypha: which those Canons doe in no wise suffer to be done.

Of the power in making of Lawes: wherein the Pope and his haue vsed a most cruell tyrannie and butcherie vpon soules.

NOW followeth the seconde part, which they will haue to consist in making of Lawes, out of which spring haue flowed innumerable traditions of men, euen so many snares to strangle poore soules. For they haue had no more conscience, than had the Scribes and Pharisees to lay burdens vpon other mens shoulders, which they themselues would not touch with one finger. I haue in another place taught howe cruell a butcherie is that which they command concerning auricular confession. In other lawes there appeereth not so great violence: but those which seeme the most tolerable of all, doe tyrannously oppresse consciences. I leaue vnspoken how they corrupt the worship of God, and doe spoile God himselfe of his right, which is the onely lawmaker. This power is now to bee intreated of, whether the Church may binde consciences with her lawes. In which discourse the order of policie is not touched, but this onely is intended, that God bee rightly worshipped according to the rule which himselfe hath prescribed, and that the spirituall libertie, which hath regarde vnto God, may remaine safe vnto vs. Vse hath made that all those decrees be called traditions of men, whatsoever they be that haue concerning the worshipping of God proceeded from men beside his word. Against these do we strue, not against the holy and profitable ordinances of the Church which make for the preservation either of discipline or honestie or peace. But the ende of our struing is, that the immeasurable and barbarous Empire may be restrained, which they vsurpe vpon soules, that would be counted pastors of the Church, but in very deede are most cruell butchers. For they say that the lawes which they make are spirituall, and pertaining to the soule, and they affirme them to be necessarie to eternall life. But so (as I haue euen now touched) the kingdome of Christ is invaded, so the libertie by him giuen to the consciences of the faithfull is vtterly oppressed & thrown abroad. I speake not now with how great vngodlines they stablish the obseruing of their lawes, while out of it they teach men to seeke both forgiveness of sins, and righteousnes & saluation, while they set in it the whole sum of religion and godlines. This one thing I earnestly hold, that there ought no necessitie to be laide vpon consciences in those things wherein they are made free by Christ, and vnles they be made free, as we haue before taught, they cannot rest with God. They must acknowledge one onely king Christ their deliuerer, and be governed by one law of libertie, euen the holy word of the Gospell, if they will keepe still the grace which they haue once obtained in Christ: they must be holden with no bondage, and bound with no bonds.

2 These Solons doe indeede saie that their constitutions are lawes of libertie, a sweete yoke, a light burden: but who cannot see that they be meere lies? They themselues in deed do feele no heauines of their owne lawes, which casting away the feare of God, doe carelesly and stoutly neglect both their owne and Gods lawes. But they that are touched with any care of their saluation, are faine from thinking them-felues free so long as they be intangled with these snares. We see with how great warines Paul did deale in this behalfe, that he durst not so much as in any one thing laie vpon men any snare at all, and that not without cause. Truly he foresawe with how great a wound consciences should be stricken, if they should be charged with a neces-sitie of those things whereof the Lord had left them libertie. On the other side the constitutions are almost innumerable, which these men haue most greuously stablished with threatening of eternall death, which they most seuerely require as necessary to saluation. And among those there are many most hard to be kept, but all of them (if the whole multitude of them be laid together) are impossible: so great is the heape. How then shall it be possible, that they vpon whom so great a weight of difficulty lieth, should not be vexed in perplexitie with extreme anguish and terror?

Therefore my purpose is heere to impute such constitutions, as tend to this ende, inwardly to bind soules before God, and charge them with a religion, as though they taught them of things necessarie to saluation.

What confi-ence is.

Rom. 13. 1.

3 This question doth therefore incumber the most part of men, because they do not suttly enough put difference betweene the outward court (as they call it) and the court of conscience. Moreover this increaseth the difficultie, that Paul teacheth that the magistrate ought to be obeyed not onely for feare of punishment, but for consciencies sake. Whereupon followeth, that consciences are also bounde with the politike lawes. But if it were so, then all shoulde fall that wee haue spoken in the last Chapter, and intend now to speake concerning the spirituall government. For the loosing of this knot, first it is good to learne what is conscience. The definition is to be gathered of the proper deriuation of the word. For, as when men do with mind & vnder-standing conceiue the knowledge of things, they are thereby said scire, to knowe, whereupon is deriued the name of science knowledge: so when they haue a feeling of Gods iudgement as a witness adioyned with them which doth not suffer them to hide their sins, but that they be brought accused to the iudgement seat of God, that same feeling is called conscience. For it is a certaine meane betwene God and man: because it suffereth not man to suppress that which hee knoweth, but pursueth him so far till it bring him to gulkinesse. This is it that Paul meaneth when he teacheth that conscience doth together witness with men, when their thoughts doe accuse or acquite them in the iudgement of God. A simple knowledge might remaine in man as inclosed. Therefore this feeling which presenteth man to the iudge-ment of God, is as it were a keeper ioyned to man, to marke and watch all his secrettes, that nothing shoulde remaine buried in darkenesse. Whereupon also commeth that olde prouerbe, conscience is a thousand witnesses. For the same reason also Peter hath set the examination of a good conscience, for quietnesse of minde, when we being perswaded of the grace of Christ, do without feare present our selues to God. And the author of the Epistle to the Hebrewes vseth these wordes, to haue no more conscience of sinne, in freed of, to be deliuered or acquitted, that sinne may no more accuse vs.

to binde the conscience.

2. Tim. 1. 5.

A. 3. 24. 16.

4 Therefore as workes haue respect to men, so the conscience is referred to God: so that conscience is nothing else but the inward parentesse of the hart. In which sense Paul writeth that charitie is the fulfilling of the lawe, out of a pure conscience, and faith not fained. Afterward also in the same chapter hee sheweth howe much it differeth from vnderstanding, saying that some had iustered ship wrack from the faith, because they had forsaken good conscience. For in these wordes hee signifi-eth, that it is a liuely affection to worship God, and a sincere desire to lue godlyly & holily. Sometime indeede it is referred also to men, as in Luke, when the same Paul testifieth, that he inducured himselfe that he might walke with a good conscience toward God and men. But this was therefore saide, because the frutes of good conscience doe slowe and come euen to men. But in speaking properly, it hath respect to

to God onely, as I haue already said. Hereupon commeth that a lawe is said to binde conscience, which simply bindeth a man, without regarde of men, or not hauing any consideration of them. As for example. God commaundeth not onely to keepe the mind chaste and pure from all lust, but also forbiddeth all maner of filthines of words & outward wantonnesse whatsoever it be. To the keeping of this law my conscience is subiect, although there liued not one man in the world. So he that behaueth himselfe intemperately, doth not onely sinne in this that he giueth euill example to his brethren, but he hath his conscience bound with guiltinesse before God. In things that are of themselves meane, there is another consideration. For we ought to abstain from them, if they breed any offence: but the conscience stil being free. So Paul speaketh of flesh consecrate to idols. If any (saith he) make doubt, touch it not, for consciences sake. I say for conscience, not thine own, but the others. A faithfull man should sinne, which being first warned should neuertheless eate of such flesh. But howsoever in respect of his brother, it be necessary for him to abstaine, as it is prescribed of God, yet he ceaseth not to keepe still the libertie of conscience. We see how this lawe binding the outward worke, leaueth the conscience vnbound.

1, Cor. 10. 28.

5 Now let vs returne to the lawes of men. If they be made to this end, to charge vs with a religion, as though the obseruing of them were of it selfe necessarie, then we say that that is laide vpon conscience which was not lawfull to be laide vpon it. For our consciences haue not to doe with men, but with God onely: whereunto pertaineth that common difference betweene the earthly court and the court of conscience. When the whole world was wrapped in a most thicke mist of ignorance, yet this small sparkle of light remained, that they acknowledged a mans conscience to be aboue all iudgements of men. Howbeit the same thing that they did with one word confesse, they did afterwarde in deede ouerthrowe: yet it was Gods will that there should then also remaine some testimony of Christian libertie, which might deliuer consciences from the tyrannie of men. But that difficultie is not yet dissolued, which ariseth out of the wordes of Paul. For if we must obey Princes not onely for penalties sake, but also for conscience, it seemeth thereupon to follow that Princes lawes haue also dominion ouer conscience. If this be true, then the same also ought to be saide of the lawes of the Church: I answer that first here we must put a difference betweene the generalltie and specialtie. For though all speciall lawes doe not touch the conscience, yet we are bound by the generall commaundement of God, which commaundeth vnto vs the authoritie of magistrates. And vpon this point standeth the disputation of Paul that magistrates are to be honored because they are ordained of God. In the meane time he teacheth not that those lawes that are prescribed by them, doe belong to the inward government of the soule: whereas he each where extolleth both the worshipping of God and the spirituall rule of liuing righteously, aboue all the ordinances of men whatsoever they be. Another thing also is woorthie to be noted, (which yet hangeth vpon the former) that the lawes of men, whether they be made by the magistrate or by the Church, although they be necessarie to be kept, (I speake of the good and righteous lawes) yet therefore doe not by themselves binde conscience, because the whole necessity of keeping them is referred to the generall ende, but consisteth not in the things commaunded. From this sort doe saue differ both those that prescribe a new forme of the worshipping of God, and those that appoint necessitie in things that be at libertie.

How men for conscience sake are bound to obey the lawes of men.

Rom. 13. 1.

5 But such are those that at this day be called Ecclesiasticall constitutions in the Papacie, which are thrust in, in steede of the true and necessary worshipping of God. And as they be innumerable: so are there infinite bonds to catch and snare soules. But although in the declaration of the law we haue somewhat touched them: yet because this place was fitter to inreate fully of them, I will nowe trauell to gather together the whole summe in the best order that I can. And because we haue already already discoursed so much as seemed to be sufficient, concerning the tyranny which the false Bishops doe take vpon themselves, in libertie to teach whatsoever they list. I will now omit all that part: and I will here carrie onely vpon declaring the power, which they say they haue, to make lawes. Our false Bishops therefore doe burden consciences with new lawes, vnder this pretence, that they are ordained of the Lorde spirituall lawmakers, since the government of the Church is committed vnto them. Therefore they affirme that whatsoever they commaunde and prescribe, ought necessarily to be obserued of the Christian people: and that he that breaketh it, is guiltie of double disobedience, for that he is rebellious both to God and to the Church. Certainly, if they were true Bishops, I would in this behalfe graunt to them some authoritie, not so much as they require, but so much as is requisite to the well ordering of the policie of the Church. Now sith they are nothing lesse than that which they would be accounted, they cannot take any thing to them, be it neuer so little, but that they shall take too much. But because this hath bene elsewhere considered, let vs graunt them at this present, that whatsoever power true Bishops haue, the same rightly belongeth to them also: yet I denie that they be therefore appointed lawmakers ouer the faithfull, that may of themselves prescribe a rule to liue by, or compell to their ordinances the people committed vnto them. When I say this, I meane, that it is not lawfull for them, to deliuer to the Church to bee obserued of necessitie, that which they haue deuised of themselves without the worde of God. For as much as that authoritie both was vnknown to the Apostles, and so oft taken away from the ministers of the Church by the Lords owne mouth: I maruell who haue bene so bolde to take it vpon them, and at this day are so bolde to defend it, beside the example of the Apostles, and against the manifest prohibition of God.

7 As touching that that pertained to the perfect rule of well liuing, the Lorde hath so contained all that in his lawe, that he hath left nothing for men that they might adde to that sum. And this he did first for this purpose, that because the whole vprightnesse of liuing standeth in this point, if all works be governed by his will as by a rule, he should be holden of vs the onely maister and director of life: then, to declare that he requirith of vs nothing more than obedience. For this reason Iames saith: he that iudgeth his brother iudgeth the law: he that iudgeth the law, is not an obseruer of the law, but a iudge. But there is one onely lawmaker, that can both saue and destroy. We heare that God doth claime this one thing as proper to himselfe, to rule vs with the government and lawes of his word. And the same thing was spoken before of Esay, although somewhat more darkly: the Lord is our king, the Lorde is our lawmaker, the Lord is our iudge, he shall saue vs. Truly in both these places is shewed, that he that hath power ouer the soule, hath the iudgement of life & death. Yea Iames pronounceth this plainly: Now, no man can take that vpon him. Therefore God must be acknowledged to be the onely king of soules, to whom alone belongeth the power to saue and destroy, as those words of Esay expresse, and to be the king, and iudge, and lawmaker and Sauour. Therefore Peter, when he admonisheth the Pastors of their dutie, exhorteth them so to feede the flocke, not as vsing a Lordship ouer the Clergie, by which word Clergie he signifieth the inheritance of God, that is to say the faithfull people. That if we rightly weigh, that it is not lawfull, that that should be transferred to man, which God maketh his owne onely: we shall vnderstand that so all the power is cut off whatsoever it be, that they challenge, which aduance themselves to commaund any thing in the Church without the word of God.

8 Now, for as much as the whole cause hangeth thereupon, that if God be the onely lawmaker, it is not lawfull for men to take that honour to themselves: it is meete also therewithall to keepe in minde those two reasons which we haue spoken, why the Lorde claimeth that to himselfe alone. The first is that his will may be to vs a perfect rule of all righteousnesse and holinesse: and that so in the knowing of him may be the perfect knowledge to liue well. The other is, that (when the manner is sought how to worship him rightly and well) he onely may haue authoritie ouer our soules, whom we ought to obey, and vpon whose becke we ought to hang. These two reasons being wel marked, it shal be easie to iudge, what ordinances of men are contrarie to the word of God. Of that sort be all those which are famed to belong to the true worshipping of God, and to the obseruing whereof consciences are bounde, as though they were necessary to be obserued. Let vs therefore remember that all lawes of men ought to be weighed with this balance, if we will haue a sure ty all that may neuer suffer vs to erre. The first of these reasons Paul in the Epistle to the Colossians vseth in contending against the false apostles that attempted to oppresse the churches with new burthens. The second reason he more vseth with the Galathians in the like case. This therefore he traueleth to prooue in the Epistle to the Colossians, that the doctrine concerning the true worshipping of God is not to be sought at mens hands; bicause the Lord hath faithfully and fully instructed vs how he ought to be worshipped. To prooue the same in the first Chapter, he saith that in the Gospel is contened all wisdom, whereby the man of God may be made perfect in Christ. In the beginning of the second chapter he saith, that all the treasures of wisdom and vnderstanding are hidden in Christ. Thereupon he afterward concludeth, let the faithfull beware that they be not by vaine Philosophie led from the flocke of Christ, according to the constitutions of men. But in the end of the Chapter, hee doth yet with greater boldnes condemne all Ethelothreshitas, that is to saye, all famed worshippings, which men deuise to themselves, or receiue of other, and whatsoever precepts they dare of themselves giue concerning the worshipping of God. Wee haue therefore, that all those ordinances are wicked, in obseruing whereof the worshipping of God is famed to be. As for the places in the Galathians wherewith he earnestly affirmeth that consciences, which ought to be ruled of God onely, ought not to be intangled with snares, they are open enough, specially in the first Chapter. Therefore let it be sufficient to haue but noted them.

Col. 1. 8.

9 But because the whole matter shall better bee made open by examples, before that we go any further, it is good also to apply this doctrine to our owne times. We say that the constitutions which they call Ecclesiasticall, wherewith the Pope and his do burden the Church, are pernicious and wicked: our aduersaries defende that they be holy and auailable to saluation. There be two kinds of them: for some concerne Ceremonies and rites, other some pertaine more to discipline. Is there then a iust cause to moue vs to impugn them both? Truly a iuster than we would. First doe not the authors themselves cleerely define, that the very worshipping of God is contened in them? To what purpose do they apply their ceremonies, but that God should be worshipped by them? And that commeth to passe not by the onely error of the ignorant multitude, but by their allowance that haue the place of teaching. I doe not touch the grosse abominations, wherewith they haue gone about to ouerthrowe all godlines. But it should not be imagined among them to be so famous an offence, to haue failed in any of the least pettie traditions, vnlesse they did make the worshipping of God subiect to their famed deuises. What do we thin offend, if at this day we can not beare that which Paul taught to be intollerable, that the lawfull order of the worshipping of God should be reduced to the will of men: specially when they command men to worship according to the elements of the world, which Paul testified to be against Christ? Again, it is not vnknown, with how precise necessity they bind consciences to keepe whatsoever they command. Here when we erre out to the contrarie, we haue all one cause with Paul, which in no wise suffereth faithfull consciences to be brought into bondage of men.

The cause why the Ecclesiasticall constitutions of the Pope as well concerning ceremonies as discipline are impugned.

another abhominable frowardnesse, whereof Christ reproched the Pharisees that the commaundement of God is made void for the traditions of men. I will not vse mine own words in fighting against our lawmakers at these daies. Let the victorie, if they can by any meane purge themselves from this accusation of Christ. But how should they excuse them, when among them it is thought infinitely more hainous, to haue omitted auricular confession when the time of yeere commeth about, than to haue continued a most wicked life a whole yeere together? to haue infected their tooing with a little tasting of flesh on a Friday, than to haue defiled their bodie with whoredome all the daies of the weeke? to haue put their hand to an honest worke vpon a day consecrate to I uo: not what perie Saintes, than to haue continually exercised their members in most wicked offences? for a priest to be coupled with one lawfull mariage, than to be entangled with a thousand adulteries? not to haue performed a vowed pilgrimage, than to breake faith in all promises? not to haue wasted somewhat vpon monstrous and no lesse superfluous and vnprofitable excessive gorgeoussnesse of temples, than to haue failed to helpe the extreme necessities of the poore? to haue passed by an Idole without honour, than to haue despitefully intricated all kindes of men? not to haue mumbled vp at certaine howers a great number of words without vnderstanding, than neuer to haue conceiued a true prayer in their heart? What is to make void the commaundement of God for the traditions of men, if this be not: when commending the keeping of Gods commaundements but coldly and as it were lightly by the way, they do no lesse earnestly and busily exact the obeying of their owne, than if they contained in them the whole pithe of godlines? when reuenging the transgressing of Gods law, with light penalties of satisfactions, they punish the very least offence of one of their owne decrees with no lesse paine than with prisonment, banishment, fire or sword? Being not so sharpe and hard to entreat against the despisers of God, they persecute the despisers of themselves with vnappealeable hatred to the extremitie, and doe so instruct all those, whose simplicitie they hold captiue, that they would with more contented minde see the whole law of God ouerthrowen, that one small tittle (as they call it) in the commaundements of the Church to be broken. First in this point is grieuous offence committed, thit for small matters, and such as (if it should be tried by Gods iudgement) are at libertie, one man despiseth, iudgeth and casteth away another. But now as though that were not euill enough, thoir trifling elements of the worlde (as Paul calleth them in writing to the Galathians) are weighed of more value than the oracles of God. And he that is in a maner acquired in adulterie, is iudged in meate: he that hath leaue to vse a harlot, is forbidden to haue a wife. This profit verily is gotten by that transgressing obedience, which is so much turned from God as it declineth to men.

Col. 2.23.*

II There be also other two not slender fautes, which we disallow in the same ordinances. First, because they prescribe for the most part vnprofitable, and sometime also fond obseruations: then, because godly consciences are oppressed with the infinit multitude of them, and being rouled backe into a certaine lewtilines, they so cleaue to shadowes, that they cannot attaine to Christ. Whereas I cal them fond and vnprofitable, I know that that will not seeme credible to the wisedom of the flesh, which so wel liketh them, that it thinketh the church to be vterly deformed when they be taken away. But this is it, that Paul writeth of, to haue a resemblance of wisedom in counterfeit worshipping, in humility, & in this that they thinke that with their sharpnesse they be able to tame their flesh. This is truly a most wholesome admonition, such as ought neuer to slip away from vs. Mens traditions (saith he) do deceiue vnder the shew of wisedom, whence haue they this colour? because they are famed of men, therefore the wit of man doth therein acknow his owne, and acknowledging it doth more gladly embrace it, than any thing were it neuer so good, that lesse agree with his vanitie. Againē they haue hereby another commendation, because they seeme to be fit introductions to humilitie, for that with their yoke they hold the mindes of men pressed downe to the ground. Last of all, because they seeme to tend to this end to restrain the daintines of the flesh, and to subdue it with rigor of abstinence, therefore they are thought to be wisely deuised. But what saith Paul to these things? doth he not shake off those visors: lest the simple should be deceiued with false pretence? Because he iudged this enough for confutation of them, that he had said that they were the inuentions of men, he passeth ouer all these things without confutation, as though he esteemed them for nothing: Yea, because he knew that all fained worshipings in the Church were condemned, and are so much more suspicious to the faithfull as they more delight the wit of man: because he knew that that fained image of outward humilitie doth so much differ from true humilitie, as it might easilie be discerned: finally because he knew that that childish introduction was no more esteemed than an exercise of the body: therefore he willed that the very same things should be to the faithfull in steed of a confutation of mens traditions, by fauour of which they were commended among the ignorant.

12 So at this day not onely the vnlearned common people, but euery man as he is most puffed vp with worldly wisdomē, so is he most maruellously delighted with beholding of ceremonies. But hypocrites and foolish women thinke that there can be nothing deuised more glorious nor better. But they which do more deeply search, and more truly weigh according to the rule of godlines, of what value so many and such ceremonies are, doe vnderstand first that they are trifles, because they haue no profit: then, that they are deccits, because they doe with vaine pompe beguile the eyes of the beholders. I speake of those Ceremonies, vnder which the Romish masters will that there be great misteries: but we find them by experiance to be nothing else but mery mockeries. And it is no maruell that the Authors of them haue fallen so far as to mocke both themselues and other with trifling follies: because they partly tooke their examplar out of the dotages of the Gentiles, and partly after the manner of Apes did vndirectly counterfaite the old vsages of the Law of Moses, which no more pertained to vs than the sacrifices of beastes and such other things. Truly although there were none other argument, yet no man that hath his sound wit wil look for any goodnes of a heape so ill patched together. And the thing it selfe plainly sheweth that many Ceremonies haue no other vse but to amuse the people rather than to teach them. So in these new found Canons, that doe rather peruert than preserue discipline, the hypocrites repose great importance: but if a mā do better looke into the he shal find that they are nothing else but a shadow with & vanishing shew of discipline.

13 But now (to come to the other point) who doth not see that traditions with heaping one vpon another, are ouergrown into so great a number, that the Christian Church may in no wise beare them. Hereby it is come to passe, that in Ceremonies there appeareth I wot not what Iewishnes, and the other obseruations bring a grieuous butchery to Christian Soules. Augustine complained that in his time, the Commandmentes of God neglected, all things were full of so many presumptions, that he was more grieuously rebuked that in his Ostaues had touched the ground with bare foote, than he that had buried his wit with drunkennes. He complaineth that the Church, which the mercy of God willed to be free, was so burdened, that the state of the Iewes was much more tolerable. If that holy man had happened to liue in our age, with what complaints would he haue bewailed the bondage that now is? For both the number is ten times greater, and euery small tide is a hundred times more rigorously looked vnto, than at that time. So is wont to be done: when these peruerse lawmakers haue gotten the dominion, they make no end of bidding and forbidding, till they come to extreme peccishnes. Which thing Paul hath also very well declared in these words: If ye be dead to the world, why are ye holdē as though ye were liuing with traditions, as eate not, taste not, handle not? For whereas the Greeke word apoteſthai, ſignifieth both to eate and to touch, doubtles in this place it is taken in the first of these two significacions, least there should be a superfluous repetition. Therefore he doth here excellently wel describe the proceedings of the false Apostles. They begin at superstition, so that they do not only forbid to eat, but also euen slenderly to chaw: when they haue obtained this, they then also forbid to taste. When this is also granted them, they reckon it not lawfull so much as to touch with a finger.

Christianitie buried vnder heapes of ceremonies.

14 This tyrannie in the ordinances of men we do at this day woorthily blame, by which it is come to passe that poore consciences are maruellously tormented with innumerable decrees & unmeasurable exacting of keeping of them. Of canons pertaining to discipline we haue spokē in another place. Of the ceremonies what shal I say, by which it is brought about that Christ being halfe buried, we are returned to Iewish figures? Our Lord Christ (saith Augustine) hath bound together the fellowshippe of the newe people, with Sacraments very fewe in number, most excellent in signification, most easie in obseruing. How farre the multitude and diuersitie of vsages wherewith at this day we see the church to be entangled, doth differ from this simplicity, it cannot be sufficiently declared. I know with what crause these some fustle men do excuse this peruerſnesse. They say that among vs there are many as rude as they were in the people of Israell: that such introduction was ordained for their sakes, which although the stronger may well want, yet they ought not to neglect it, for as much as they see it to be profitable for the weakē brethren. I answer, that we are not ignorant, what we owe to the weaknesse of our brethren: but on the other side we take exception and say, that this is not the way whereby the weakē may be prouided for, that they should be ouerwhelmed with great heapes of Ceremonies. The Lord did not in vaine put his difference betweene vs and the olde people, that his wil was to instruct them like children with signes and figures, but vs more simply without such outward furniture. As (saith Paul) a childe is ruled of his schoolemaster, and kept vnder custodie, according to the capacity of his age: to the Iewes are kept vnder the law. But we are like vnto full grown men, which being set at libertie from tutorshippe and government, haue no more neede of childish introductions. Trulye the Lord did foresee what maner of common people there should be in his Church, and how they should be ruled. Yet he did in this manner as we haue said, make difference betweene vs and the Iewes. Therefore it is a foolish way, if we will prouide for the ignorant, in raising vp Iewishnes which is abrogate by Christ: Christ also touched in his owne words this difference of the olde and new people, when he said to the woman of Samaria, that the tyme was come wherein the true worshippers should worship God in Spirit and truth. This verily had alway bene done: but the new worshippers differed from the old in this point, that vnder Moses the Spirituall worshipping of God was shadowed and in a maner entangled with many Ceremonies, which being abolished, he is now more simply worshipped. Therefore they that confounde this difference, do ouerthrow the order institute and established by Christ. Shall there then (wilt thou say) no ceremonies be giuen to the ruder sort to helpe their vnskillfulnes? I say not so: for I verily thinke that this kind of helpe is profitable for them. I do here trauell only that such a meane may be vsed, as may brightly set out Christ and not darken him. Therefore there are giuen vs of God few Ceremonies, and those not laborosome, that they should shew Christ being present. The Iewes had moe giuen them, that they should be images of him being absent. Absent I say he was, not in power, but in maner of signifying. Therefore, that meane may be kept, it is necessarie to keepe that fewnes in number, easines in obseruing, and dignitie in signifying, which also consisteth in clearnes. What need I to say that this hath not bene done?

Gal. 4. 2.

For the thing it selfe is in all mens eies.

15 Heere I omit with how pernicious opinions mens mindes are filled in thinking king that they be sacrifices where with oblation is rightly made to God, where by sins are cleansed, whereby righteoussesse and saluation is obtayned. They will deny that good things are corrupted with such foreine errors: forasmuch as in this behalfe a man may no lesse offend in the very woorkes also commanded of God. But this hath hauntings, that so much honor is giue to woorkes rashly fained by the wil of man, that they are thought to be things deseruing eternall life. For the woorkes commanded of God haue reward therefore, because the lawmaker himselfe in respect of obedience accepteth them. Therefore they receive not their value of their owne woorthines, or of their owne deseruing, but because God so much esteemeth our obedience toward him. I speake here of the perfection of woorkes which is commanded of God, and is not performed of men. For therefore the very woorkes of the law which we doe, haue no thinke but of the free goodnes of God, because in them our obedience is weake and lame. But because we doe not here dispute, of what value woorkes are without Christ, therefore let vs passe ouer that question. I come backe agame to that which properly belongeth to this present argument, that whatsoever commendation woorkes haue in them, they haue it in respect of the obedience, which onely the Lord doth looke vpon, as he testifieth by the Prophet: I gaue not commandement of sacrifices and burnt offerings, but onely that ye should with hearing, heare my voice. But of fained woorkes he speaketh in another place, saying: Ye wey your siluer and not in bread. Againe, they worship me in vaine with the precepts of men. This therefore they can by no waies excuse, that they suffer the silly people to seeke in those outward trifles the righteousnes whereby they may stand against God and vphold themselues before the heauenly iudgement seat. Moreouer, is not this a fault woorthy to be inuened against, that they these fourth ceremonies not vnderstanded as it were a stage play, or a magicall enchantment? For it is certaine that all ceremonies are corrupt and hurtfull, vnlesse men be by them directed to Christ. But the Ceremonies that are vsed vnder the Papacy, are seuered from doctrine, that they may the more hold men in signes without all signification: Finally (such a cunning craftsman is the bellie) it appeareth that many of them haue bene inuened by concetous sacrificing Prieests, to be snares to catch money. But what beginning soeuer they haue, they are all so giuen forth in common for filthie game, that we must needs cut off a great part of them, if we will bring to passe that there be not a prophane market, and full of fauledge vsed in the Church.

16 Although I seeine not to teach a continuall doctrine concerning the ordinances of men, because this speaking is altogether applied to our owne time: yet there is nothing spoken that shall not be profitable for all times. For so oft as this superstition creepeth in, that men will worship God with their owne fained deuises, whatsoever the lawes be that are made to that purpose, they doe by and by degenerate to those grosse abuses. For the Lord threatneth not this curse to one or two ages, but to all ages of the world, that he will strike them with blindnes and amaid dulnes that worship him with the doctrines of men. This blinding continually maketh that they flee from no kinde of absurditie, which despising so many warnings of God, doe wilfully wrap themselues in those deadly snares. But if, setting aside circumstances, you will haue simply shewed what be the mens traditions of all ages, which it is meet to be reiected of the Church, and to be disallowed of all the godly, that same shall be a sure and plaine definition which we haue aboue set: that all lawes without the word of God are made by men to this end, either to prescribe a maner of worshipping God, or to bind consciences with religion, as though they gaue commandement of things necessarie to saluation. If to the one or both of these there be adioyned other faults: as, that with the multiude they darken the brightnes of the Gospel: that they nothing edifie, but be rather vnprofitable and trifling occupations than true exercises of godlines: that they be laide abroad to filthinesse and vnhonest gaine: that they be too

The defense which the Church of Rome maketh for traditions, that a great part of them were deliuered by Christ and his Apostles, that for the rest the Church is authorized to make ordinances, and to inuolue men to obserue them as the Apostles did in some the Gentiles.
Act. 15. 20. & 29.

17 Heare what they answere for themselves, that their traditions are not of themselves, but of God. For, they say that the Church is governed of the holy Ghost, that it cannot erre : and that the authoritie thereof remaineth with them. When this is obtained, it therewithall followeth, that their traditions are the reuelations of the holy Ghost, which cannot be despised but wickedly and with the contempt of God. And that they should not seeme to haue attempted any thing without great authority, they will haue it beleued that a great parte of their obseruations came from the Apostles : and they affirme that by one example is sufficiently declared what the Apostles did in other things, when being assembled in one Councell, they did by the decree of the Councell command the Gentiles to abstaine from things offered to idols, from blood and strangled. We haue alreadye in another place declared, how falsly for boasting of themselves they lyingly vsurpe the title of the Church. So much as concerning this present cause : is plucking away visors, and deceitfull colours, we truly looke vpon that which we ought principally to care for, and which chiefly is for our behoofe, that is, what maner of Church Christ will haue ; that we may fashion and frame our selues to the rule thereof : it shal easily be euident vnto vs, that it is not the church, which passing the bounds of the word of God, doth outrage and runne at riot in making of newe Lawes. For doth nor that lawe which was once prescribed to the Church, remaine eternall ? Wh it I commaunde thee, that thou shalt keepe that thou maiest do it. Thou shalt not adde any thing nor take any thing from it. And in another place : Ad not to the word of the Lord, nor minish any thing : least he peradventure reipouee thee, and thou be found a lyer. Sith they cannot deny that this was spoken to the church, what do they else but report the stubbornnes of that church, which they boist to haue been so bold as after such prohibitions neuertheles to adde and mingle of her owne with the doctrine of God ? But God forbid that we should assent to their lies, whereby they burden the church with so great a slander : but let vs vnderstand, that the name of the Church is falsly pretended, so oft as this lust of mens rashnesse is spoken of, which cannot hold it selfe within the prescribed bounds of God, but that it wildly rangeth and runneth out into her own inuentions ? There is nothing entangled, nothing dark, nothing doubtful in these words, in which the whole Church is forbidden to adde to the word of God, or to take any thing from it, when the worshipping of God, and precepts concerning saluation, are entreated of. But this (say they) was spoken of the law onely, after which followed the prophecies and the whole ministration of the Gospell. I graunt in deede : and I adde also, which are rather fulfillings of the law, than additions or dinunishings. But if the Lord suffred nothing to be added to or taken from the ministerie of Moses, which was (as I may so terme it) darke by reason of many doubtfulle enwrappings, till by his seruants, the Prophets, and at length by his beloued sonne, he ministred a clearer doctrine : why should we not thinke it much more seuerely forbidden vs, that we should adde nothing to the lawe, the Prophetes, the Psalmes, and the Gospell ? The Lord is not gone out of kinde from himselfe, which hath long ago declared, that he is with nothing so highly offended, as when he is worshipped with the inuentions of men. Whereof came those notable sayings in the Prophets, which ought to haue continually founded in our eares : I spake no words to your fathers, in the day that I brought them out of Aegypt, concerning sacrifice and burnt offering. But this worde I commanded them, saying : With hearing heare my voice : And I will be your God, and you shal be my people, and you shall walke in all the way that I shall command you. Againe, I haue with protesting protested vnto your fathers, Heare my voice. And other like sayings : but this is notable about the rest. Will God haue burnt offerings & sacrifices, & not rather that his voice be obeyed ? For obedience is better than sacrifice, sacrifice, & to harken is better than to offer the fat of Rams. For, to resist is as the sin of soothsaying: and not to obey is as the wickednes of idolatrie. Therefore whatsoeuer inuencions of men are in this behalfe defended with the authoritie of the church, forasmuch as the same cannot be excused from the crime of vngodlines, it is easie to prooue that it is falsly imputed to the Church.

18 After this sort we freely inuey against this tyrannie of mens traditions, which is proudly thrust in among vs, vnder the title of the church. For neither do we scorn the Church (as our aduerfaries, to bring vs in hatred, do vniuilly he vpon vs) but wee giue vnto her the praise of obedience, than which the knoweth no greater praise. They rather are very sore wrong doers to the Church, which make her of finate against her Lorde, while they saie that she hath proceeded further then the lawfullie might do by the word of God: though I speake nothing howe it is a notable shamelesnes ioyned with as great malice, continually to criue out of the authoritie of the Church, and in the meane time dissemblingly to hide both what is commaunded by the Lord, and what obedience the owerth to the commandement of the Lorde. But if we haue a minde, as it is meete we should haue, to agree with the Church, this pertaineth rather to the purpose, to haue an eie vnto and remember what is commaunded by the Lord both to vs and the Church, that wee shoulde with one agreement obey him. For there is no doubt but we shall very well agree with the Church, if we do in all things shew our selues obédient to the Lord. But now to father vpon the apostles, the originall of the traditions wherewith the Church hath bene hitherto oppressed, was a point of meere deceite: forasmuch as the doctrine of the apostles trauaileth wholly to this end, that consciences should not be burdened with new obseruations, nor the worshipping of God bee defiled with our inuencions. Moreouer if there be any faithfulness in histories and ancient monuments, the apostles not onelie neuer knewe, but also neuer heard of this that they attribute vnto them. Neither let them prate, that the most part of their decrees were receiued in vse & in mens behauiours, which neuer were put in writing: euen those things forsooth, which, while Christ was yet liuing, they could not vnderstand, after his ascending they learned by the reuelation of the holy Ghost. Of the exposition of that place wee haue else where already seene. So much as is sufficient for this present cause: truly they make themselues worthy to be laughed at, while they saie that those great mysteries, which so long time were vnknown to the apostles, were partly obseruations either Iewish or Gentile (of which all the one sort had bene long before published among the Iewes, and all the other sort among the Gentiles, and partly foolish gesturings and vaine petie ceremonies, which foolish sacrificing priests that can neither skill of swimming nor of letters, vse to do very trimly: yea such as children and fooles do so aptly counterfait that it may seeme that there be no fitter ministers of such holy mysteries. If there were no histories at al: yet men that haue their sound wit might consider by the thing it self, that so great a heape of ceremonies and obseruations did not suddenly burst into the Church, but by litle and litle crept in. For when those holier bill ops, which were next in time to the Apostles, had ordeined some things that belonged to order and discipline, afterward there followed men, some after other, not discrete enough, and too curious and greedy, of which the later that every one was, so he more strived with his predecessors in foolish eniuous counterfaising, not to giue place in inuencing of new things. And because there was perill least their deuises would shortly growe out of vse, by which they coueted to get praise among their posteritie, they were much more rigorous in exact calling vpon the keeping of them. This wrongfull zeale hath bred vs a great part of these ceremonies which they set out vnto vs for Apostolike. And this also the histories do testifie.

19 Least in making a register of them we should be to tedious: we wil be content with one example. In the ministring of the Lordes supper, there was in the Apostles time great simplicity. The next successors, to garnish the dignity of the mystery, added somewhat that was not to be disallowed. But afterward there came those foolish counterfeiters, which with now and then patching of peeces together, haue made vs thus apparel of the priests which we see in the Masse, those ornaments of the altar, those gesturings, and the whole furniture of vnprofitable things. But they object, that this in olde time was the perswasion, that those things which were with one consent done in the vniuersall Church, came from the Apostles them selues, whereof they cite Augustine for witness. But I will bring a solution from no other where than out of the words of Augustine himselfe. Those things (sayeth he) that are kept in the whole world, we may vnderstand to haue bene ordained either of the Apostles them selues, or of the generall Councils, whose authoritie is most healthfull in the Church: as, that the Lords passion, and resurrection, and his ascending into heaven, and the comming of the holie Ghost, are celebrate with yearely solemnitie: and whatsoever like thing be found, that is kept of the whole Church, which way soeuer it be spread abroad. When he reckoneth vp so few examples, who doeth not see that he meant to impute to aouthours worthy of credit and reuerence, the obseruations that then were vsed, euen none but those simple, rare, and sober ones, with which it was profitable that the order of the Church should be kept together? But how farre doth this differ from that which the Romish masters would enforce men to graunt, that there is no petie ceremony among them that ought not to be iudged Apostolike.

holy water.*

20 That I be not too long, I will bring forth only one example. If any man aske them, whence they haue their holy water: they by and by answer, from the Apostles. As though the histories do not attribute this inuention to Iwo: nor what Bishop of Rome, which truly, if he had called the Apostles to counsell, would neuer haue defiled Bipusine with a strange and vnfit signe. Albeit I do not thinke it like to be true, that the beginning of that hallowing is so old as it is there written. For, that which Augustine sayeth, that certaine Churches in his time did shew that solemne following of Christes example in washing of feete, least that vsage should seeme to pertaine to Baptisme, secretly sheweth that there was then no kind of washing that had any likeness with baptisme. Whatsoeuer it be, I will not graunt that this proceeded from an Apostolike spirite, that baptisme, when it is with a daily signe brought into remembrance, should after a certaine maner be repeated. And I passe not vpon this, that the self same Augustine in another place ascribeth other things also to the Apostles. For sith he hath nothing but coniectures, iudgement ought not vpon them to be giuen of so great a matter. Finally, admit that we graunt them also, that those things which he rehearseth came from the time of the Apostles: Yet there is great difference betweene instituting some exercise of godlines, which the faithfull with a free conscience may vse, or if the vse of it shall not be profitable for them, they may forbear it: and making a law that may snare consciences with bondage. But now, from what author soeuer they proceeded, sith we see that they are slidden into so great abuse, nothing withstandeth, but that we may without offence of him abolish them: forasmuch as they were neuer so commended, that they must be perpetually immouable.

Epist. 118. ad

The Church of Rome in her ordinances nothing lesse than a follower of the apostles in theirs.

21 Neither doth it much help them, that to excuse their tyranny they pretend the example of the Apostles. The Apostles (say they) and the elders of the first church, made a decree beside the commandement of Christ, wherein they commanded all the Gentiles to abstaine from things offered to idols, from strangled, and from blood. If that was lawfull for them, why is it not also lawfull for their successors, to follow the same foote as occasion so requireth? I would to God, they did both in all other things and in this thing follow them. For I deny that the Apostles did there institute or decree any new thing, which is easie to be proved by a strong reason. For whereas Peter in that counsell pronounceth, that God is tempted, if a yoke be laid vpon the necks of the disciples: he doth himselfe ouerthrow his owne sentence, if he afterward consent to haue any yoke laid vpon them. But there is a yoke laid, if the Apostles do decree of their owne authoritie that the Gentiles should be forbidden, that they should not touch things offered to idols, bloud, and strangled. In deepe there yet remaineth a doubt, for that they do neuertheless seeme to forbid. But this doubt shall easily be dissolved, if a man do more neerely consider the meaning of the decree it selfe: in the order and effect whereof the chiefe point is, that to the Gentiles their libertie is to be left, and that they ought not to be troubled, nor accombred about the obseruations of the law. Hitherto it very well maketh of our side. But the exception that immediatly followeth, neither is any new lawe made by the Apostles, but the diuine and eternall commandement of God, that charitie ought not to be broken, nor doth diminish one tittle of that libertie: but onely admonisheth the Gentiles, how they should temper themselves to their brethren, that they abuse not their liberty to the offence of them. Let this therefore be the second point, that the Gentiles should vse a harmelesse libertie, and without offence of their brethren. But yet they prescribe some certaine thing: that is, they teach and appoint, so far as was expedient for the time, by what things they might run into the offence of their brethren, that they might beware of those things: but they adde no new thing of their owne to the eternall law of God, which forbiddeth the offending of brethren.

22 Like as if the faithfull Pastors which gouerne the Churches not yet well reformed, should command all their people, that till the weak with whome they liue do grow stronger, they should not openly eate flesh on Friday, or openly labour vpon holy dayes, or any such thing. For although these things setting superstition aside, are by themselves indifferent: yet when there is added offence of brethren, they cannot be done without a fault. But the times are such, that the faithfull cannot shew such a sight to the weak brethren, but that they shall fore wound their consciences. Who, but a caualle, will say that so they make a new lawe, whereas, it is certaine that they do onely prevent offences, which are expressly enough forbidden of the Lord? And no more can it be said of the Apostles, whose purpose was nothing els, but in taking away the matter of offences, to call vpon the law of God concerning the suoiding of offence: as if they had said: It is the Lords commandement that ye offend not a weak brother. Yee can not eate things offered to images, strangled and bloud, but that the weak brethren shall be offended. Therefore we command you in the word of the Lord, that ye eate not with offence. And that the Apostles had respect to the same thing, Paul himselfe is a very good witness, which writeth thus, verily none other wise than according to the meaning of the Councell: Concerning meates that are offered to idols, we know that the idoll is nothing. But some with conscience of the Idoll, do eate it as offered to idols, and their conscience, forasmuch as it is weak, is defiled. See that your libertie be not made an offence to the weak. He that shall haue well weighed these things, shall not afterward be deceived with such a false colour as they make, that pretend the apostles for defence of their tyrannie, as though the apostles had begun with their decree to breake the liberty of the Church. But, that they may not be able to escape, but be driuen euen with their owne confession to allow this solution, let them answer me, by what right they were so bolde to abrogate the same decree. Because there was no more perill of those offences and dissensions: which the Apostles meant to prouide for, and they know that the lawe was to be weighed by the end thereof. Forasmuch as therefore this lawe was made in respect of charitie, there is nothing preferred in it, but so much as pertaineth to charity. When they confesse that the transgressing of this lawe is nothing but a breaking of charitie, do they not therewithall acknowledge, that it is not a forged addition to the law of God, but a naturall and simple appliance to the times and manners wherunto it was directed?

The Apostles in their constitutions about the Gentiles made no new lawe of their owne, but applied to the times a lawe which God had made before.

1. Cor. 8. 1.

Cap. 10. Of the outward meanes

The commandment of God strictly to be observed in things appertaining to his honor and service.

23 But although such lawes be a hundred times vniust & iniurious vnto vs, yet they affirme that they must be heard without exception: for they say that this is not here intended, that we should consent to errors, but onely that being subiects we should beare the hard commandments of our gouernours, which it is not our partes to refuse. But here also the Lord very well resisteth them with the truth of his word, and deliuereth vs out of such bondage into the libertie, which he hath purchased for vs with his holy bloud, the benefite whereof hee hath more than once confirmed with his word. For that is not here only intended (as they maliciously faine) that we should suffer some grieuous oppression in our bodie, but that our consciences being spoiled of their libertie that is of the benefite of the bloud of Christ, should be feruently tormented. Howbeit let vs passe ouer this also, as though it made litle to the matter. But of how great importance doe we thinke it is, that the Lordes kingdome is taken away from him, which he claimeth to himselfe with so great seueritie? But it is taken away so oft as he is worshipped with the lawes of mens inuentions, whereas he will be holden for the onely lawmaker of his owne worship. And least any man should thinke it to be a matter of nothing, let vs heare how much the Lord esteemeth it. Because (saith he) this people hath feared me with the commandment and doctrine of men: behold I will astonish them with a great and woonderous miracle. For wisdom shall perish from the wise men thereof, and vnderstanding shall depart from the elders. In another place, They worship me in vaine, teaching doctrines, the commandments of men. And truly whereas the children of Israel desired themselves with many idolatries, the cause of all that euill is ascribed to this vncleane mixture, that transgressing the commandments of God, they haue forged new worshippings. And therefore the holy history rehearseth that the new strangers that had been transplanted by the king of Babylon to inhabit Samarita, were torne in peeces and consumed of wilde beastes, because they knew not the iudgements or statutes of the God of that land. Although they had nothing offended in the Ceremonies, yet God woulde not haue allowed a vaine pompe: but in the meane time he ceased not to take vengeance of the defiling of his worship, for that men did thrust in deuises strange from his word. Whereupon it is afterward said, that they being made afraid with that punishment, receiued the Ceremonies prescribed in the law: but because they did not yet purely worship the true God, it is twise repeated that they did feare him and did not feare him. Whereupon we gather, that the part of reuerence which is giuen to him, consisteth in this, while in worshipping him we simply follow what he commandeth with mingling none of our inuentions. And therefore the godly kings are oftentimes praised, because they did according to all the commandments, and declined not to the right hand nor to the left. I goe yet further: although in some fained worshipping there doe not openly appeere vngodlinesse, yet it is seuerely condemned of the holy Ghost, so soone as men depart from the commandment of God. The Altar of Achaz, the paterne whereof was brought out of Samarita, might haue seemed to increase the garnishment of the temple, whereas his deuise was to offer Sacrifices thereupon to God onely, which he should doe more honourably than vpon the first and olde Altar: yet we see how the spirit detesteth that boldnesse, for none other cause but for that the inuentions of men in the worshipping of God are vncleane corruptions. And how much more cleerly the will of God is opened vnto vs, so much the lesse excusable is our frowardnesse to attempt any thing. And therefore woorthily with this circumstance the crime of Manasses is enforced, for that he builded a new Altar in Ierusalem, of which God had pronounced, I will there set my name, because the authoritie of God is now as it were of set purpose refused.

The reason why God abhorreth seruices wherewith men deuise to please him.

24 Many doe maruell why God so sharply threateneth that he will doe things to be wondered at to the people of whom he was worshipped with the commandments of men, and pronounceth that he is worshipped in vaine with the precepts of men, men. But if they considered, what it is in the cause of religion, that is to say of heavenly wisdom, to hang vpon the only mouth of God, they would therewithall see, that it is no slender reason why God so abhorreth such puerse seruices, that are done to him according to the lust of mans wit. For although they that obey such lawes for the worshipping of God, haue a certain shew of humilitie in this their obedience, yet they are not humble before God, to whom they prescribe the same lawes which they themselves doe keepe. This is the reason why Paul willeth vs so diligently to beware, that we be not deceived by the traditions of men, and that which he calleth ethelothreshian, that is, Wylworship inuented of men beside the doctrine of God. This is verily true, both our owne wisdom, and all mens wisdom must be foolish vnto vs, that we may suffer him alone to be wise. Which way they keepe not which doe studie with petie obseruations fained by the will of men to commend themselves vnto him, and do thrust vnto him as it were against his will a transgressing obedience toward him, which is in deede giuen to men. As it hath bene done both in many ages heretofore, and in the time within our owne remembrance, and is also at this day done in those places where the authoritie of the creature is more esteemed than of the creator: where religion (if yet the same be worthie to be called religion) is defiled with more and more vsauourie superstitions, than euer was any Paynim wickednes. For what could the wit of men breede but all things carnall and foolish and such as truly resemble their authors?

Col. 2.4.

25 Whereas also the Patrons of superstitions alleadge, that Samuel sacrificed in Ramatha, and although the same was done beside the lawe, yet is pleased God: the solution is easie, that it was not a certaine second altar to set against the one only altar: but because the place was not yet appointed for the arke of the couenant, he appointed the towne where he dwelled for sacrifices, as the most conuenient place. Truly the mind of the holy prophet was not to make any inuouation in holy things, whereas God had so straitly forbidden any thing to be added or minished. As for the example of Menoba, I say that it was an extraordinary and singular case. He being a private man offered sacrifice to God and not without the allowance of God: verily because he enterprised it not of a rash motion of his owne minde, but by a heavenly instinct. But how much the Lord abhorreth those things that men deuise of themselves to worship him withall, another not inferior to Menoba Gedon is a notable example, whose Ephod turned to destruction not only to him and his familie, but to the whole people. Finally, euery new found inuention, where with men couet to worship God, is nothing else but a defiling of true holines.

Samuel and Menoba no examples to iustifie the church of Rome in her boldnes, but rather Gedon to condemne her.

26 Why then (say they) did Christ will that those intollerable burdens should be borne, which the Scribes and Pharisees bound vpon men? But why in another place did the same Christ will that men should beware of the leauen of the Pharisees: calling leauen (as Matthew the Euangelist expoundeth) all their owne doctrine that they mingled with the purenesse of the word of God? What would we haue more plaine, than that we be commaunded to flee and beware of all their doctrine? Whereby it is made most certaine vnto vs, that in the other place also the Lord willed not, that the consciences of his should be vexed with the Pharisees owne traditions. And the verie words, if they be not wrested, found of no such thing. For the Lord purposing there to inueigh sharply against the manners of the Pharisees, did first simply instruct them that heard him, that although they sawe nothing in their life meete for them to follow, yet they should not cease to do those things which they taught in words, while they sat in the chaire of Moses, that is, to declare the lawe. Therefore he meant nothing else but to prouide that the common people should not with the euil examples of the teachers be brought to despise the doctrine. But for as much as many are nothing at all moued with reasons, but alway require authoritie, I will alleage Augustines words, in which the very same thing is spoken. The Lords

The misericordie of Scribes and Pharisees confirmed by Christ but not their presumpcion to burthen men with what they lusted.
Mat. 23. 3.
& 16. 6.

In Ioh. Tract. 46.

sheepefold hath gouernours, some faithfull, and some hirclings. The gouernours that are faithfull, are true Pastors: but heare ye, that the hirclings also are necessarie: for many in the Church following earthly profits, doe preach Christ, and by them the voice of Christ is heard: and the sheepe doe follow, not a hircling, but a Pastor by the meanes of a hircling. Heare yee that hirclings are shewed by the Lord himselfe. The Scribes (saith he) and the Pharisees sit in the chayre of Moses. Doe yee those things that they say, but doe not those things that they doe. What other thing said he, but heare the voice of the Pastor by the hirclings? For in sitting in the chayre they teach the lawe of God: therefore God teacheth by them. But if they will teach their owne, heare it not, doe it not. This saith Augustine.

In forbidding mens consciences so be charged with humane traditions, lawes whereby the Church is set in order are not prohibited.

27 But whereas many vnskilful men, when they heare that consciences are wickedly bounde and God worshipped in vaine with the traditions of men, doe at once blot out also gether all lawes whereby the order of the Church is set in frame: therefore it is convenient also to meete with their error: Verily in this point it is easie to be deceiued, because at the first sight it doth not by and by appeare what difference is betwene the one sort and the other. But I will so plainly in few words set out the whole matter, that the likenesse may deceiue no man. First let vs hold this, that if we see in euery fellowship of men some policie to be necessarie, that may serue to nourish common peace, and to retaine concord: if we see that in the dooing of things there is alway some orderly forme, which is behoouefull for publike honestie and for very humanitie not to be refused: the same ought chiefly to be obserued in Churches, which are both best maintamed by a well framed disposition of all things, and without agreement are no Churches at all. Therefore if we will haue the safetie of the Church well provided for, we must altogether diligently procure that which Paul commandeth, that all things be done comely and according to order. But forasmuch as there is so great diuersitie in the manners of men, so great varietie in mindes, so great disagreement in iudgements and wites: neither is there any policie stedfast enough, vnlesse it be established by certaine lawes, nor any orderly vsage can be obserued without a certaine appointed forme: Therefore we are so far off from condemning the lawes that are profitable to this purpose, that we affirme that when those be taken away, Churches are dissolved from their sinewes, and vtterlie deformed and scattered abroad. For this which Paul requiereth, that all things be done decently and in order, cannot be had, vnlesse the order it selfe and comeliness be established, with obseruations adioyned as with certaine bondes. But this onely thing is alway to be excepted in those obseruations, that they be not either beleued to be necessarie to saluation, and so binde consciences with religion, or be applied to the worshipping of God, and so god himselfe be respected in them.

1. Cor. 14. 4.

The difference betwene wicked obseruations and the lawfull constitutions of the Church.

28 We haue therefore a very good and most faithfull marke, which putteth difference betwene those wicked ordinances, by which we haue said that true religion is darkened & consciences subuerted, and the lawfull obseruations of the Church: if we remember that the lawfull obseruations tend alway to one of these two things or to both together, that in the holy assemblie of the faithfull all things be done comely and with such dignitie as becometh: and that the very common fellowship of men should be kept in order as it were by certaine bondes of humanitie and moderation. For when it is once vnderstoode that the Law is made for publike honesties sake, the superstition is now taken away, into which they fall that measure the worshipping of God by the inuentions of men. Again when it is known that it pertaich to common vse, then that false opinion of bonde and necessitie is ouerthrowen, which did stike a great terror into consciences, when traditions were thought necessarie to saluation. For herein is nothing required but that charitie should with common ductifull dooing be nourished among vs. But it is good yet to define define more plainly, what is comprehended vnder that comelinesse which Paul commendeth, and also what vnder order. The ende of comelinesse is, partly that when such Ceremonies are vsed as may procure a reuerence to holy things, we may by such helpes be stirred vp to godlinesse: partly also that the modestie and grauitie which ought to be seene in all honest doings may therein principally appeere. In order this is the first point, that they which gouerne may knowe the rule and lawe to rule well: and the people which are gouerned may bee accustomed to obeying of God, and to right discipline: Then, that the state of the Church being well framed, peace and quietnesse may be prouided for.

29 Therefore we shall not say that comelinesse is, wherein shall be nothing but vaine delectation: such as we see in that player like apparell, which the Papistes vse in their ceremonies, where appeereth nothing elsie, but an vnprofitable visor of gaynesse, and excessiue without fruit. But we shall account that to be comelinesse which shall so be meete for the reuerence of holy mysteries, that it be a fit exercise to godlinesse, or at the least such as shall serue to conuenient garnishing for the celebrating thereof: and the same not without fruit, but that it may put the faithfull in minde with how great modestie, religiousnesse and reuerence, they ought to handle holy things. Now, that ceremonies may be exercises of godlinesse, it is necessarie that they leade vs the straight way to Christ. Likewise we may not say that order consisteth in those trifling pompes that haue nothing elsie than a vanishing gaynesse: but that it standeth in such an orderly framing as may take away all confusion, barbarousnesse, obstinacie, and all strifes and dissentions. Of the first sort are these examples in Paul: that prophane banquettings shoulde not be mingled with the holic Supper of the Lorde: that women shoulde not come abroade, but couered: and many other which we haue in common vse: as this, that we pray kneeling and bare headed: that we minister the Lordes Sacraments not vncleane, but with some dignitie: that in the burying of the dead we vse some honest shew: and other things that are of the same sorte. Of the other kind are the houres appointed for publike prayers, Sermons, and celebrations of mysteries: at Sermons, quietnes and silence, places appointed, singing together of Hymnes, daies prefixed for celebrating of the Lordes supper, that Paul forbidde that women shoulde teach in the Church, and such like. But specially those things that concerne discipline, as the teaching of the Catechisme, the censures of the Church, excommunication, fastings, and such as may be reckoned in the same number. So al the constitutions of the Church, which we receiue for holy and wholesome, we may referre to two chiefe titles: for some pertaine to rites, and ceremonies, and the other to discipline and peace.

30 But because here is peril, least on the one side the false bishops shoulde thereby catch a pretence to excuse their wicked and tyrannous lawes, and least on the other side there be some men too fearefull, which admonished with the foresaid cuils doe leaue no place to lawes be they neuer so holic: here it is good to protest, that I allow onely those ordinances of men which be both grounded vpon the authoritie of God, and taken out of the Scripture, yea and altogether Gods owne. Let vs take for an example the kneeling which is vsed in time of common prayer. It is demanded, whether it be a tradition of man, which euery man may lawfully refuse or neglect. I say that it is so of men, that it is also of God. It is of God, in respect that it is a part of that comelinesse, the care and keeping wherof is commended vnto vs by the Apostle: it is of men, in respect that it specially betokeneth that which had in generation rather been pointed out, than declared. By this one example we may iudge, what is to be thought of that whole kinde: verily because the Lorde hath in his holy Oracles both faithfully contented and cleerely set forth both the whole summe of true righteousnes, and all the partes of the worshipping of his diuine Maiestie, and whatioeuer was necessarie to saluation: therefore in these things he is onely to be heard as our Schoolemaſter. But becauſe in outward diſcipline & Ceremonies his will was not to preſcribe each thing particularly what we ought to follow (becauſe he foreſawe this to hang vpon the ſtate of times, and did not thinke one forme to bee fit for all ages) herein we muſt flee to thoſe generall rules which he hath giuen, that thereby all thoſe things ſhoulde be tried which the neceſſitie of the Church ſhall require to bee commanded for order and comelines. Finally, Forasmuch as hee hath therefore taught nothing expreſſly, becauſe theſe things both are not neceſſarie to ſaluation, and according to the manners of euery nation and age ought diuerſly to be applied to the edifying of the Church: therefore as the profite of the Church ſhall require, it ſhal be conuenient as well to change and abrogate thoſe that be vſed, as to inſtitute newe. I grant indeed, that we ought not raiſhly, nor oft, nor for light cauſes to run to innouation. But what may hurt or edifie, charitie ſhall beſt iudge: which if we will ſuffer to be the gouernefſe, all ſhall be ſafe.

The obedience required vnto lawfull ordinances of the church.

31 Now it is the dutie of Chriſtian people, to keepe ſuch things as haue bene ordeined according to this rule, with a free conſcience and without any ſuperſtition, but yet with a godly & eaſie readines to obey, not to deſpiſe them, not to paſſe them ouer with careleſſe negligence: ſo farre is it off, that they ought by pride and obſtinacie openly to breake them. What maner of libertie of conſcience (wilt thou ſaie) may there be in ſo great obſeruation and warineſſe? Yea, it ſhall ſtande excellently wel when we ſhal conſider, that they are not ſtedfaſt & perpetual ſtayed lawes, whereunto we be bounde, but outward rudiments for the weakenefſe of men: which although we doe not all neede, yet wee doe all vſe them, becauſe wee are mutuallie one bounde to another, to nourish charitie among vs. This we may reknowledge in the examples aboue rehearſed. What? Doth religion ſtande in a womans veile, that it is not lawfull to goe out of doores with her head vncovered? Is that holie decree of his concerning ſilence, ſuch as cannot be broken without moſt hainous offence? Is there any myſterie in kneeling, or in burying of a dead carcaſe, that may not bee omitted without ſinne? No, For if a woman neede, for the helping of her neighbour, to make ſuch haſte as may not ſuffer her to couer her head, ſhe offendeth not if ſhe runne thither with her head vncovered. And it may ſometime befall that it may be no leſſe conuenient for her to ſpeake, than at another time to holde her peace. And there is no cauſe to the contrarie, but that he which by reaſon of diſeaſe cannot bow his knees may pray ſtanding. Finally, it is better to burie a dead man ſpeedily in time, than when they lacke a winding ſheet, or when there be not men preſent to conuey him, to tarric till he rot vnburied. But neuertheleſſe in theſe things there is ſomewhat which the maner and ordinances of the countrie, and finally very naturall honeſtie, and the rule of modeſtie appointeth to bee done or avoided: wherein if a man ſwarue any thing from them, by vnwarineſſe, or forgetfulnes, there is no crime committed: but if vpon contempt, ſuch ſtubbornes is to be diſallowed. Likewiſe the daies themſelues, which they be, and the houres, and how the places be builded, and what Pſalmes be ſong vpon which day, it maketh no matter. But it is meete that there be both certaine daies, and appointed houres, and a place fit to receiue all, if there be regarde had of the preferuation of peace. For how great an occaſion of brawlings ſhould the confuſion of theſe things be, if it were lawfull for euery man as hee liſt, to change thoſe things that belong to common ſtate: forasmuch as it will neuer come to paſſe that one ſame thing ſhall pleaſe all men, if things be left as it were in the middeſt to the choiſe of euery man? If any man do carpe againſt vs, and will heerein bee more wiſe than he ought, let him ſee himſelfe by what reaſon he can defend his owne preciſeneſſe to the Lord. As for vs, this ſaying of Paul ought to ſatiſſie vs, that wee haue not an vſe to contend, nor the Churches of God.

Cautions touching church ordinances.

32 Moreouer it is with great diligence to bee inducoured, that no error creepe in, that may corrupt or obſcure this pure vſe. Which ſhall be obtained, if all obſeruations, uations, whatsoeuer they shall be, shall haue a shewe of manifest profite, and if very few be receiued: but principally if there be adioyned a faithfull doctrine of the Pastor, that may stop vp the way to peruerse opinions. This knowledge maketh that in all these things euery man may haue his owne libertie preserved, and neuertheless shall willingly charge his owne libertie with a certaine necessitie, so farre as either this comeliness that we haue spoken of, or the order of Charitie shall require. Secondly, that both we our selues should without any superstition be busied in the obseruing of those things, and should not too precisely require them of other, so as wee should thinke the worshipping of God to be the better for the multitude of ceremonies: that one Church should not despise another for the diuersitie of discipline: last of all that setting herein no perpetuall laue to our selues, we should referre the whole vse and end of obseruations to the edification of the Church, that when it requereth we may without any offence suffer not onely somewhat to bee changed, but all the obseruations that were before in vse among vs, to be altered. For this age is a present experience, that certaine rites, which otherwise are not vngodly nor vncomely, may according to the fit occasion of the matter, be conueniently abrogate. For (such hath been the blindness and ignorance of the former times) Churches haue heretofore, with so corrupt opinion and with so stiffe affection, sicked in ceremonies, that they can scarcely be sufficiently purged from monstrous superstitions, but that many ceremonies must be taken away, which in olde time were peraduenture ordained not without cause, and of them selues haue no notable vngodlinesse in them.

The xj. Chapter.

Of the iurisdiction of the Church, and the abuse thereof, such as is seene in the Papacie.

NOW remaineth the third part of the power of the Church, yea and the chiefe part in a well ordered state, which we haue saide to consist in iurisdiction. The whole iurisdiction of the Church pertaineth to the discipline of manners, of which we shall intreate by and by. For as much as no citie or no towne can stand without magistrate and policie: so the Church of God (as I haue already taught, but now I am compelled to repeat it againe) needeth her certaine spiritual policie: but such as it vtterly seuered from the ciuill policie, and doth so nothing hinder or minish it, that it rather doth much helpe and further it. Therefore this power of iurisdiction shall in a summe be nothing else but an order framed for the preservation of spirituall policie. To this ende from the beginning were ordained iudiciall orders in Churches, which might vie examination of manners, correct vices and exercise the office of the keyes. This order Paul speaketh of in the Epistle to the Corinthians, when he nameth gouernments. Againe, to the Romanes, when he saith: let him that ruleth, rule in carefullnesse. For he speaketh not to the magistrates, (for at that time there were no Christian magistrates) but to them that were ioyned with the Pastors for the spirituall gouernment of the Church. Also in the Epistle to Timothee, he maketh two sortes of Elders: some, that labor in the word: other some, that doe not vie the preaching of the word, and yet do rule well. By this latter sort it is no doubt that he meaneth them that were appointed to looke vnto manners, and to the whole vse of the keyes. For this power, of which wee nowe speake, hangeth wholly vpon the keyes which Christ gaue to the Church, in the xvij. Chapter of Matthew: where he commaundeth, that they should be sharply admonished in the name of the whole Church, that haue despised priuate monitions: but if they goe forwarde in their obstinacie, he teacheth that they should be put out of the fellowship of the faithfull. But these monitions and corrections cannot bee without knowledge of the cause: therefore there needeth

*The use of a policie in the church differs from that wh ch is ciuill: the antiquitie of ecclesiasticall iudgements: the difference of auctoritie giuen to the Church in the 18. of Matth. from that which is giuen in the 16. of Matth. and the 21 of *Iohn.

both

both some judgement and order. Wherefore vnlesse we will make voide the promise of the keres, and take vterly away excommunication, solempne monitions, and all such things whatsoever they be: we must needs giue to the Church some iurisdiction. Let the readers marke that that place inreateth not of the generall authoritie of doctrine, as in the xvj. Chapter of Matthew, and the xxj. of John: but that the power of the Synagogue is for the time to come transferred to the flocke of Christ. Vntill that day the Iewes had their order of gouerning, which Christ stablisheth in his Church, and that with great penaltie, so much as concerneth the pure institution of it. For so it behooued, for as much as otherwise the iudgement of an vnnoble and viregarded congregation might be despised of rash and proude men. And that it shoulde not encomber the readers, that Christ doth in the same wordes expresse things somewhat differing one from the other, it shall be profitable to dissolue this doubt. There be therefore two places, that speake of binding and loosing. The one is in the xvj. Chapter of Matthew, where Christ, after that he had promised that he woulde giue to Peter the keyes of the kingdome of heauen, immediately addeth, that whatsoever he shall binde or loose in earth, shall be confirmed in heauen. In which wordes he meaneth none other thing, than he doth by other wordes in John, when sending his disciples to preach, after that he had breathed vpon them he saide: whose finnes yee forgiue, they shall be forgiuen: and whose yee retaine they shall be retained in heauen. I will bring an exposition not fittle, not enforced, not wrested: but naturall, flowing, and offering it selfe. This commandement of forgiuing and retaining finnes, and that promise of binding and loosing made to Peter, ought to be referred to no other thing but to the ministerie of the word: which when the Lord committed to the Apostles, he did therewith also arme them with this office of binding and loosing. For what is the summe of the Gospell, but that we all being bondseruants of sinne and of death, are loosed and made free by the redemption that is in Christ Iesus: and that they which doe not receiue nor acknowledge Christ their deliuerer and redeemer, are damned and adidged to euerlasting bonds? When the Lorde deliuered this message to his Apostles, to be carried into all nations: to approue that it was his owne and proceeding from himselfe, he honored it with this noble testimonie: and that to the singular strengthening both of the Apostles themselues, and of all those to whom it should come. It behooued that the Apostles shoulde haue a stedfast and sound certaintie of their preaching, which they should not onely execute with infinite labours, cares, troubles and dangers, but also at the last seale it with their blood. That they might (I say) knowe the same to be not vaine nor voide, but full of power and force: it behooued that in so great carefulnesse, in so great hardnesse of things, and in so great dangers, they should be perswaded that they did the businesse of God: that when all the world withstood them, and fought against them, they should knowe that God stood on their side: that hauing not Christ the authour of their doctrine present by sight in earth, they should vnderstand him to be in heauen, to confirme the truth of the doctrine which he had deliuered them. It behooued againe that it should also be most certainly prooued by testimonie to the hearers, that that doctrine of the Gospell was not the worde of the Apostles, but of God himselfe: not a voice bred in earth, but come downe from heauen. For these things, the forgiuenesse of finnes, the promise of euerlasting life, the message of saluation, cannot bee in the power of man. Therefore Christ hath testified, that in the preaching of the Gospell there is nothing of the Apostles, but the onely ministerie: that it was hee himselfe that spake and promised all things by their mouthes as by instruments: and therefore that the forgiuenesse of finnes which they preached, was the true promise of God: and the damnation which they pronounced, was the certaine iudgement of God. But this testifying is giuen to all ages, and remaineth in force, to certifie and assure all men, that the worde of the Gospell, by what man soeuer it bee preached, as the verie sentence of God, published at the foueraigne iudgement seate, written in the booke of life, ratified, firme and fixed in heauen. Thus we see that in those places the power of the keys is nothing but the preaching of the Gospell: and that it is not so much a power as a ministerie, if we haue respect to men. For Christ hath not giuen this power properly to men, but to his owne worde, whereof he hath made men ministers.

John. 20. 23.

2 The other place which wee haue saide to be concerning the power of binding and loosing, is in the xvij. chapter of Matthew, where Christ saith: If anie brother heare not the Church, let him bee to thee as a heathen man or a publicane. Verily I say vnto you: whatsoeuer yee binde vpon earth, shall be bound also in heauen: whatsoeuer yee loose shall be loosed. This place is not altogether like the first, but is a little otherwise to be vnderstanded. But I doe not so make them diuerse, that they haue not great affinitie together. This first point is like in both, that either of them is a general sentence: that in both there is alway all one power of binding & loosing, namely by the word of God, all one commandement, all one promise. But herein they differ, that the first place peculiarly belongeth to preaching, which the ministers of the word do execute: this latter place to the discipline of Excommunication, which is committed to the church. The Church bindeth, whom the excommunicateth, not that she throweth him into perpetual ruine and desperation, but because she condemneth his life & maners, & vnles he repent, doth already warne him of his damnation. She looseth whom she receiueh into communion: because she doth make him as it were partaker of the vnitie which she hath in Christ Iesus. Therefore that no man should obstinately despise the iudgement of the church, or little regard that he is condemned by the consenting voyces of the faithfull: the Lord restifieth that such iudgement of the faithfull is nothing else but a publishing of his owne sentence: and that whatsoeuer they do in earth is confirmed in heauen. For they haue the word of God, whereby they may condemne the pennerse: they haue the worde, whereby they may receiue the repentant into grace. And they can not erre, nor dissent from the iudgement of God: because they iudge not but after the law of God, which is not an vncertaine or earthly opinion, but the holy will of God, and a heauenly oracle. Out of these two places, which I thinke I haue both briefly familiarlie and truly expounded, those serious men without difference as they be caried with their own giddines, go about to establish somtime confession, somtime excommunication, somtime iurisdiction, somtime the power to make lawes, somtime pardons. But the first place they alleage to establish the supremacy of the Sea of Rome: they can so well skill to fit their keys to all lockes and doores, that a man may say they haue practised finities craft all their life.

3 For whereas many thinke that those things endured but for a time, when the Magistrates were yet strangers from the profession of our religion: they are deceiued in this, that they consider not, how great difference and what manner of vnlike-ness there is of the Ecclesiasticall and ciuill power. For the Church hath not the power of the sword to punish or restraints, no empire to command, no prison, no other paines which the magistrate is wont to lay vpon men. Againe, it tendeth not to this end, that he that hath sinned should be punished against his will, but should with willing chastisement profite his repentance. Therefore there is a farre diuerse order: because neither doth the Church take to it selfe any thing which properly belongeth to the Magistrate, nor the magistrate can execute that which the Church doth. This shall be made plainer by an example. Is any man drunke? In a well ordered citty prison shall be his punishment. Hath he committed fornication? He shall haue like, or rather greater punishment. So shall both the lawes, and the magistrate, and outward iudgement be satisfied: But it may be that he shall giue no signification of repentance, but rather murmure and grudge against it. Shall the Church in this case do nothing?

The power of binding & loosing by discipline committed to the church.
Matt. 18. 17.

The difference betwene ecclesiasticall iudgement and ciuill, and how necessarie as well for the one as the other to continue.

But such cannot be receiued to the Supper, without doing wrong both to Christ and his holy institution. And reason requireth this, that he which offendeth the church with an euill example, should with solemne declaration of repentance take away the offence which he hath raised. The reason which they bring that are of contrarie opinion, is too colde: Christ say they committed these doings to the Church, when there was no magistrate to execute them. But it happeneth often times that the magistrate is more negligent, yea sometime peraduenture that himselfe is to be chastised, which happened to the Emperour Theodosius. There may beside this as much be faide of the minister of the word. Now therefore after their sentence, let Pastors cease to blame manifest wicked doings, let them cease to chide, to reprove, to rebuke, for there bee Christian magistrates, which ought to correct these things with the law and with the sword. But as the magistrate ought by punishing, and by restraining with force, to purge the Church of offences: so likewise the minister of the word for his part ought to helpe the magistrate that there may not so many offend. So ought their workings to be conioyned that the one may be a helpe, not a hinderance to the other.

Ecclesiastical institutiones not abolished by civil.

4. And truly if a man more neerely wey the words of Christ, he shall easily perceiue that in these places, is described a stayed state, and a perpetuall order of the Church, not such as endureth but for a time. For it is not meeke that we should accuse them to the Magistrate, that will not obey our monitions: which yet should be necessarie if the magistrate succeeded into the office of the Church. What is this promise? Shall we say that it is a promise of one or a few yeeres? Verily verily I say vnto you, whatsoeuer ye binde on earth. Moreover Christ did heere institute no new thing, but followed the custome alway obserued in the ancient Church of his owne nation: whereby he signified that the Church cannot want the spirituall iurisdiction, which had bin from the beginning. And this hath bin confirmed by the consent of all times. For when Emperors and magistrats began to professe Christ, the spirituall iurisdiction was not by and by abolished: but only so ordered, that it should diminish nothing of the ciuill iurisdiction, or be confounded with it. And rightfully. For the magistrate, if he be godly, will not exempt himself from the common subiection of the children of God, whereof it is not the last part to submit himselfe to the church, judging by the word of God: so far it is off, that he ought to take away that order of iudgment. For what is more honorable (saith Ambrose) for the Emperour, than to be called the son of the church? For a good Emperour is within the church, not about the church. Therefore they, which to honor the magistrate do spoile the church of his power, do not only with false exposition corrupt the sentence of Christ, but also do not slenderly condemne to many holy bishops which haue bin from the time of the Apostles, that they haue by false pretence vsurped the honor and office of the magistrate.

*Epi. 32. ad

*Spirituall power seuered from the power of the

5. But on the other side it is good to see thus, what was in olde time the true vse of the iurisdiction of the Church, and how great abute is crept in, that we may know what is to be abrogate, and what is to be restored of antiquitie, if we will ouerthrow the kingdome of Antichrist, and set vp the true kingdome of Christ againe. First this is the marke to be shot at, that offences be prevented, and if any offence be risen vp, that it may be abolished. In the vse two things are to be considered: first, that this spirituall power be altogether seuered from the power of the sword: then, that it be not executed by the will of one man, but by a lawfull assembly. Both these things were obserued in the purer Church. For the holy bishops did not exercise their power with fines, or imprisonments, or other ciuill punishments: but they vsed the only word of the Lord, as they ought to do. For the fiercest reuenge, and as it were the vtermost thunderbolt of the Church is excommunication, which is not vsed but in necessitie. But this requireth neither force nor strong hande, but is content with the power of the word of God. Finally, the iurisdiction of the old Church was nothing else else but a declaration in practise (as I may so call it) of that which Paul teacheth concerning the spirituall power of Pastors. There is (saith he) power giuen to vs, 2. Cor. 10. 4 whereby we may throw downe strong holdes, whereby we may make low all height that lifteth vp it selfe against the knowledge of God, whereby we may subdue all thought, and may leade it captiue into the obedience of Christ, and we haue in readines a reuenge against all disobedience. As this is done by the preaching of the doctrine of Christ: so, least the doctrine should be scorned, according to that which is taught ought they to be iudged which professe themselves of the household of faith. But that cannot be done, vnlesse there be ioyned with the ministerie a power to call them that are to be priuately admonished, or to be more sharply corrected, and also a power to exclude them from the communion of the Supper, which cannot be receiued without prophaning of so great a mystery. Therefore when in another place he saith, that it belongeth not to vs to iudge strangers, he maketh the children subiect to the censures of the Church, which may chaunce their faultes, and he secretly signifieth that there were then iudiciall orders in force from which none of the faithfull was free.

6 But such authoritie (as we haue declared) was not in the power of one man, to doe eury thing according to his owne will: but in the power of the assembly of the Elders, which was the same thing in the Church that a Senate is in a Citie. Cyprian, when he maketh mention by whom it was exercised in his time, vseth to ioyn the whole Cleargie with the Bishop. But in another place also he sheweth, that the very Cleargie so governed, that in the meane time the people was not excluded from the hearing of matters. For thus he writeth: Since the beginning of my Bishopricke I haue determined to do nothing without the counsell of the Cleargie and consent of the people. But this was the common & vsuall manner, that the iurisdiction of the church should be exercised by a Senate of Elders: of whom (as I haue said) there were two sortes: For some were ordained to teaching, & other some were only Iudges of manners. By little and little this institution grew out of kinde from the first beginning of it: so that euen in the time of Ambrose onely Clarke were Iudges in Ecclesiasticall iudgements. Which thing he himselfe complaineth of in these words: The old Synagoge (saith he) and since that time the Church hath had Elders, without whose counsell nothing was done. Which by what negligence it is growne out of vse, I know not, vnles peraduenture by the slouthfulnes or rather the pride of the teachers, while they alone would be thought to be somewhat. We see how much the holy man is displeas'd, that any thing of the better state is decayed, when notwithstanding they had yet continuing an order that was at the least tolerable. What then would he doe if he saw these deformed ruines that shew almost no signe of the old building? What bewailing would he vse? First, against lawe and right, the Bishop hath claimed to himselfe alone, that which was giuen to the whole Church. For it is like as if the Confull, driuing out the Senate, should take the Empire vpon himselfe alone. But as he is about the rest in honour, so in the whole assembly is more authoritie than in one man. Therefore it was too wicked a deede, that one man, remoouing the common power to himselfe, hath both opened an entrie to tyrannous lust, and hath taken from the Church that which belongeth vnto her, and hath suppressed and put away the assembly ordained by the Spirit of Christ.

7 But (as of one euill alway groweth another) Bishops disdainig it as a thing vnwoorthy of their care, haue committed it ouer to other. Hereupon are created Officials to serue that roome: I doe not yet speake what kinde of men they be, but onely this I say, that they nothing differ from prophane Iudges. And yet they still call it a spirituall iurisdiction, where men contend about nothing but earthly matters. Although there were no more euill, with what face dare they call a brawling Court the iudgement of the Church? But there are monitions, there is excommunication. So verily they mocke with God. Doth a poore man owe a litle money? he is cited: if hee appeare, he is condemned. When he is condemned, if he do not satisfie it, he is monished: after the second monition they proceede one stepp toward excommunication: if he appeare not, he is monished to come and yeelde himselfe to judgement: if he then make delay, he is monished, and by and by excommunicate. I beseech you, what is there any thing like either to the institution of Christ, or to the ancient manner, or to an Ecclesiasticall order? But there is also correction of vices. But how? verily they not onely suffer but with secret allowance do after a certaine manner cherish and confirme adulteries, wantonnesse, drunkennesse and such kind of mischeuous doings: and that not only in the common people, but also in the cleargie themselves. Of many they call a few before them, either that they shoulde not seeme slouthfull in winking at them, or that they may milke out some money. I speake not of the pillages, robberies, briberies, and sacriledges that are gathered thereby, I speake not what manner of men are for the most part chosen to this office. This is enough and too much, that when the Romanists doe boast that their iurisdiction is spirituall, it is easie to shewe that there is nothing more contrarie to the order institute of Christ, and that it hath no more likenes to the ancient custome than darkness hath to light.

Cap. II. Of the outward meanes

*Spiritual power abused, civil vsurped
by the Pope.*

8 Although we have not spoken all things that might be alleaged for this purpose, and those things that we haue spoken of are knitte vp in fewe words: yet I trust that we haue sough it out, that there is nowe no more cause why any man shoulde doubt, that the spirituall power whereof the Pope with all his kingdome proudly glorieth, is wicked against God, & an vnjust tyranny ouer his people. Vnder the name of spirituall power I comprehend both boldnesse in framing new doctrines, wherewith they haue turned away the silly people from the natural purenesse of the word of God, and the wicked traditions wherewith they haue inared them, and also the faile ecclesiasticall iurisdiction which they execute by Suffrages and Officiales. For if we graunt vnto Christ a kingdome among vs, it is not possible but that all this kinde of dominion must immediately be ouerthrowen and fall downe. As for the power of the sworde which they also giue to themselves, because it is not exercited vpon consciences, it pertaineth not to our present purpose to entere of it. In which behalfe yet it is also to note, that they be alway like themselves, verily nothing lesse than that which they would be taken for, that is to say, Pastors of the Church. Neither doe I blame the peculiar faults of men, but the common wickednes of the whole order, yea the very pestilence of the order: for as much as it is thought that the same should be mained, vnles it be gloriously set forth with wealth and proud titles. If we require the authoritie of Christ concerning this matter, it is no doubt but that his minde was to debar the ministers of his word from ciuill dominion and earthly government, when he said. The kings of the Gentiles beare rule ouer them: but you shall not so. For he signifyeth not onely that the office of Pastor is distinct from the office of a Prince, but that they be things so scuered, that they cannot meete together in one man. For whereas Moses did beare both the offices together: First that was done by a rare miracle: againe, it was but for a time till things were better set in order. But when a certaine forme was once prescribed of God, the ciuill government was left vnto him, and he was commanded to resigne the priesthood to his brother. And worthily. For it is aboue nature, that one man should suffice to beare both burdens. And this hath in all ages been diligently obserued in the Church. And there was neuer any of the Bishops, so long as the true forme of the church endured, that once thought of vsurping the power of the sworde: so that this was a common prouerbe in the time of Ambrose, that Emperors rather coueted the priesthood, than priests the empire. For this which he afferward saith, was emprinted in the minds of all men, that palaces pertained to the Emperour, and Churches to the Priest.

9 But since that a way hath been deuised, whereby Bishops might hold the title honor and riches of their office without burden or care: least they should be left altogether idle, the power of the sword was giuen them, or rather they did by vniuersal take it vpon themselves. By what colour will they defend this shamelesnesse? Was this the duty of Bishops to wrap themselves with iudicial hearing of causes, with the gouernements of Cities and Prouinces, and through large circuits to meddle in busineses so vnpertaining to them: which haue so much worke and busineses in their owne office, that if they were wholly and continually occupied in it, and were withdrawn with no callings away from it, yet they were scarcely able to satisfie it? But such is their wantwardnesse they sticke not to boast, that by this meane the Church coth flourish according to her worthines, and that they themselves in the meane time are not too much drawn away from the duties of their vocation. As touching the first point: if this be a comely ornament of the holy office, that they be aduanced to such height, that the highest Monarches may stand in feare of them: then they haue cause to quarrell with Christ, which hath in such sort grievously pinched their honor. For, at least in their opinion what could haue been spoken more dishonorably than those words: The Kings of the Gentiles and Princes beare rule ouer them, but you shall not so? And yet he laid no harder Law vpon his seruants than he first laid and received vpon himselfe. Who (saith he) hath made me a Iudge or diuider among you? We see that he plainly putteth away from himselfe the office of iudging, which hee would not doe if it were a thing agreeing with his office: will not the seruants suffer themselves to be brought into that order, whereunto the Lord hath yielded himselfe subiect? As for the other point, I would to God they could so prooue it in experience as it is easie to speake it. But forasmuch as the Apostles thought it not good, to leaue the word of God and minister at tables: thereby, because they will not be taught, they are conuicted, that it is not all one mans worke to be both a good Bishop and a good Prince. For if they (which according to the largenes of the giftes wherewith they were endued, were able to satisfie no and greater cares than any men that haue been borne since them) haue yet confessed that they cannot at once apply the ministerie both of the word and of tables, but that they should faint vnder the burden: how could these that be men of no valor in comparison of the Apostles a hundred fold excell the industrie of the Apostles? Truly, to attempt it was a point of most shamelesse and too presumptuous boldnes: yet we see that it hath bene attempted: but with what successe, it is euident. For it could not otherwise come to passe, but that forsaking their owne office they should remooue into other mens charge.

10 And it is no doubt but that of small beginning they haue by little and little growen to so great encreases. For it was not possible that they should at the first step clumbe vp so high. But sometime with subtiltie and crooked craftie meanes they priuily aduanced themselves, so as no man could foresee that it would come to passe till it was done: sometime when occasion serued they did by terror and threatnings wring from Princes some augmentation of their power: sometime when they sawe Princes not hard laced to giue, they abused their fond and vnadvised gentleness. In olde time if any controuersie happened, the godly, to escape the necessitie of going to law, committed the arbitrement to the Bishop, because they doubted not his vprightnesse. With such arbitrements the olde Bishops were oftentimes encombred, which in deede greatly displeas'd them (as Augustine in one place testifieth) but least the parties should runne to contentious lawing, they did though against their willes take that encumbrance vpon them. These men haue of voluntarie arbitrements, which were altogether differing from the noise of iudiciall courtes, made an ordinarie iurisdiction. In a little while after when cities & countreies were troubled with diuerse hard distresses, they resorted to the protection of Bishops, to be safeguarded by their faithfull succour: the Bishops by maueilous suttlety, of protectors made themselves felues Lords. Yea, and it cannot be denied that they haue gotten the possession of a great part by violent seditious partakings. As for the Princes, that willingly gaue iurisdiction to bishops, they were by diuers affections moued thereunto. But admitting that their gentlenes had some shew of godlines: yet with this their wrongfull liberalitie they did not verie well prouide for the profit of the Church, whole ancient and true discipline they haue so corrupted, yea (to say truth) haue viterly abolished. But those bishops that haue abused such goodnes of princes to their owne commo-ditie, haue by shewing of this one example enough and too much testified that they are not bishops. For if they had had any sparkle of an Apostolike spirit, they would without doubt haue answered out of the mouth of Paul: the weapons of our warfare are not carnall, but spirituall. But they being rauished with blind greedines, haue destroyed both them selues, their successors, and the Church.

11 At length the bishop of Rome not contented with meane Lordships, first laide hand vpon kingdoms, and after ward vpon the verie Empire. And that he may with some colour whatsoeuer it be retain the possession gotten by meere robbetrie, he sometime boasteth that he hath it by the law of God, he sometime pretendeth the gift of Constantine, sometime some other title. First I answer with Bernard: Admit that he do by any other reason whatsoeuer, claime this vnto him, yet he hath it not by apostolike right. For Peter could not giue that which he had not: but he gaue to his successors that which he had, the care of Churches. But when the Lord and master saith, that he is not appointed iudge betweene two, a seruant and schooller ought not to thinke scorne if he be not iudge of all men. But Bernard speaketh of ciuill iudgements. For he addeth: Therefore your power is in crimes, not in possessions: because for those & not for these ye haue received the keyes of the kingdome of heauen. For which seemeth to thee the greater dignitie to forgiue sinnes, or to diuide landes? There is no comparison. These base and earthly things haue Kings and Princes of the earth their iudges. Why do ye invade the bounds of other? &c. Again, Thou art made a superior: (he speaketh to Pope Eugenius) but wherunto? Not to beare Lordship, I think. Therefore how much soeuer we thinke of our selues, let vs remember that there is a ministry laid vpon vs, not a lordship giuen vs. Learne that thou hast need of a weed-hooke not of a scepter, that thou maist do the work of a Prophet. Again, it is plaine: lordship is forbidden to the Apostles. Go thou therefore, & presume to vsurpe to thy self either being a Lord, an Apostleship: or being an Apostle, a Lordship. And by & by after: the forme of an Apostleship is this, Lordship is forbidden them, ministry is bidden them. Whereas these things are so spoken of a man, that it is euident to all men that the very truth speaketh them, yea whereas the very thing it selfe is manifest without all words: yet the Bishop of Rome was not ashamed in the Council at Orleance to decree that the supreme power of both the swords belong to him by the lawe of God.

12 As for the gift of Constantine, they that be but meanely practised in the histories of those times need not to be taught how much this is not onely fabulous, but also to be laughed at. But to passe our histories, Gregory himselfe is both a sufficient and most full witness hereof. For so oft as he speaketh of the Emperour, he calleth him most noble Lord, & himselfe his vnworthie seruant. Again, in another place: But let not our Lord by the earthly power be the sooner angry with the priests: but with excellent consideration, for his sake whose seruants they be, let him so rule ouer them, that he also giue them due reuerence. We see how in common subiection hee would be accounted as one of the people. For hee there pleadeth not any other raius cause, but his owne. In another place, I trust in the almightie God, that he will giue a long life to our godly Lords, and will dispose vs vnder your hand according to his merite. Neither haue I therefore alleaged these things, for that it is my purpose througely to discuss the question concerning the gifte of Constantine: but onely that that the Readers should see by the way how childishly the Romanistes doe lie, when they go about to challenge an earthly Empire to their bishop. And so much the more foule is the shamelesnes of Augustine Steuchus, which in such a dispareed caute hath bin so bold to sell his trauel and to oing to the bishop of Rome. Valla (as it was not heard for a man learned and of a sharpe wit) had strongly confuted that fable. And yet (as a man litle exercised in ecclesiasticall matters) hee had not saide all that might haue made for that purpose. Steuchus buist in, and scattered stinking trifles to oppresse the cleere light. And truly he doth no lesse coldly handle the cause of his master, than if some merrie conceited fellow faining himselfe to do the same, woulde indeede take Vallas part. But verily it is a worthie cause, for which the Pope shoulde hire such patrons for money: and no lesse worthy are those hired losels to be deceiued of their hope of gaine, as it happened to Eugenius.

13 But if any man require to knowe the time, since this fained Empire began to rise vp, there are not yet passed five hundred yeeres, since the bishops yet remained in subiection of the Princes, neither was the Pope created without authoritie of the Emperour. The Emperour Henry the fourth of that name, a light and rash man, and of no forecast, of great boldnes and dissolute life, gaue first occasion to Gregory the seventh to alter this order. For when he had in his court the bishopricke of all Germany partly to be sold, and partly laid open for spoile: Hildebrand, which had receiued displeasure at his hand, caught hold of a goodly colour to reuenge himselfe. But becaute hee seemed to pursue an honest and a godly cause, hee was furthered with the fauour of many. And Henry was otherwise, by reason of his insolent maner of gouerning, hated of the most part of princes. At the length Hildebrand, which called himselfe Gregorie the seventh, as he was a filthy and naughty man, bewraied the malice of his heart: which was the cause that he was forsaken of many that had conspired with him. But he thus much preuised, that his successours might freely without punishment not onely shake off the yoke, but also bring Emperours in subiection to them. He creunto was added that from thence forth there were many Emperours liker to Henry than to Iulius Cesar: whom it was no hard thing to subdue, while they sat at home carelesse of all things and slothfull, when they had most need with vertue and lawfull meanes to repress the greedinesse of the bishops. Thus we see with what colour that same godly gift of Constantine is shadowed, whereby the Pope faineth that the Empire of the West was deliuered vnto him.

14 In the meane time the Popes ceased not, sometime with fraud, sometime with treason, and sometime with force to inuade other mens dominions: and the very citie it selfe, which before was free, within a hundred and thirtie yeeres, or there about they brought into their subiection, till they grew to the same power which they haue at this day: and for the obtaining or encreasing whereof, they haue so troubled Christendome by the space of two hundred yeeres, (for they began before that they tooke to them the dominion of the citie) that they haue almost destroyed it. In the old time whē vnder Gregorie the keepers of the goods of the church, did take possession of the lands which they reckoned to belong to the Church, & after the maner of the leasing to the vse of the Prince did set titles vpon them for token of claime, Gregorie assembling a councell of bishops, inueying fore against that prophane manner, asked whether they did not iudge that Clarke accused which did of his own will by writing of any title attempt to enter vpon any possession. They all pronounced, accused. If to claime a peece of grounde by writing of a title be in a Clarke an offence worthe of accusing: when whole two hundred yeeres together Popes do practise nothing elsē but battels, shedding of blood, destructions of armies, sackings of som cities, rācing of other, ouerthrowes of nations, wastings of kingdoms, onely that they might catch holde of other mens possessions: what cursings can be enough to punish such examples? Truly it is very plaine that they seeke nothing lesse than the glorie of Christ. For if they of their owne will do wholly resigne all the secular power that they haue, therein is no danger to the glory of God, no danger to sound doctrine, no danger to the safetie of the Church: but they are caried blind and headlong with only greedinesse of dominion: because they thinke nothing safe, vnlesse they may beare rule with rigorouesnesse (as the Prophet saith) and with power.

The Romish
Clergie exempting themselves from the power of the iudges contrarie to the ancient custome of the Church.

15 To iurisdiction is annexed immunitie, which the Romish Clergie tooke to themselves. For they thinke it against their dignitie, if they answer in personall causes before a temporall iudge: and therein they thinke both the libertie and dignitie of the Church to consist, if they be exempt from common iudgement and lawes. But the old bishops, which otherwise were most rigorous in detending the right of the Church, iudged themselves and their order to be nothing hurt, if they were subiect to them. And the godlie Emperours, without gaine-saying of any man, did alway call Clarkes to their iudgement seates so oft as neede required. For thus saith Constantine in his Epistle to the Nicomediens: If any of the bishops shall vndercreetly disorder himselfe, his boldnes shall be restrained by the execution of the minister of God, that is by my execution. And Valentinian saith: Good bishops do not speake against the power of the Emperour, but do sincerely both keepe the commandements of God the great king, and also obey our lawes. At that time all men were perswaded of this without controuersie. But Ecclesiasticall causes were referred to the iudgement of the Bishop. As if any Clerke had offended nothing against the lawes, but only was accused by the Canons: he was not cited to the common iudgement seate, but in that cause had the bishop for his iudge. Likewise if there were a question of Faith in controuersie, or such a matter as properly pertained to the Church, the iudgement thereof was furnished to the Church. So is that to be vnderstanded, which Ambrose writeth to Valentinian: Your father of honourable memorie, not only answered in word, but also decreed by lawes, that in a cause of Faith he ought to be iudge that is neither vsit in office nor vnlike in right. Againe: If we haue regard to the Scriptures or olde examples, who is there that can denie that in a cause of Faith, in a cause (I say) of Faith, bishops are wont to iudge of Christian Emperours, and not Emperours or bishops? Againe: I would haue come, O Emperour, to your consistorie, if either the bishops or the people would haue suffered me to go: saying, that the cause of Faith ought to be debated in the Church before the people. He affirmeth verily that a spirituall cause, that is to say the cause of religion, ought not to be drawn into the temporall court where prophane causes are pleaded. Worthily do all men praise his constancie in this behalfe. And yet in a good cause he proceedeth but thus farre, that if it come to violence and strong hand, he saith that he will giue place. Willingly (saith he) I will not forsake the place committed vnto me: but when I am enforced, I know not how to resist: for our armour are prayers and teares. Let vs note the singular modestie and wisdom of the holy man, ioyned with stoutnesse of courage and boldnesse. Iuliana the Emperours mother, because she could not drayue him to the Arrians side, practised to driue him from the government of the Church. And so should it haue come to passe, if he had come when he was called to the palace to pleade his cause. Therefore he denieth the Emperour to be a competent iudge of so great a controuersie. Which manner of doing both the necessitie of that time, and the continuall nature of the matter required. For he iudged that he ought rather to die, than that such an example should by his consent be giuen to posteritie: and yet if violence be offered, he thinketh not of resistance. For he denieth it to be bishoplike, to defend the faith and right of the Church with armes. But in other causes he sheweth himselfe ready to do whatsoeuer the Emperour shall commaund him. If he demand tribute, (saith he) we denie it: nor the lands of the Church do pay tribute. If he aske lands, he hath power to giue them, none of vs resisteth. After the same manner also speaketh Gregorie. I am not ignorant (saith he) of the mind of our most noble soueraigne Lord,

Lord, that he vseth not to intermeddle in causes pertaining to Priests, least he should in any thing be burdened with our sinnes. He doth not generally exclude the Emperour from iudging of Priests: but he saith that there be certaine causes, which he ought to leaue to the iudgement of the Church.

16 And by this verry exception the holy men sought nothing else, but that Princes lesse zealous of religion should not with tyrannous violence and wilfulnesse interrupt the Church in doing her office. For neither did they disallow, if Princes sometime did vseth their authoritie in Ecclesiasticall matters, so that it were done to preserue the order of the Church, nor to trouble it, to stablish discipline, nor to dissolue it. For sith the Church hath not the power of compelling, nor ought to require it (I speake of ciuil constraining:) it is the office of godly Kings and Princes to maintaine religion with lawes, proclamations, and iudiciall proceedings. After this manner, when the Emperour Maurice had commaunded certain bishops that they should receiue their fellow bishops that were their neighbours and driuen out by the barbarous nations: Gregorie confirmeth that commaundement, and exhorteth them to obey it. And when he himselfe is admonished by the same Emperour to come to attonement with Iohn the Bishop of Constantinople, he doth in deede iender a reason why he ought not to be blamed: yet he doth not boast of immunitie from the secular court, but rather promisceth that he will be obedient, so farr as his conscience will giue him leaue: and therewithall he saith this, that Maurice did as became a godly Prince, when he gaue such commaundements to the Priests.

The immunitie of Romish clergie men from secular courts in the time of Gregorie was stood vpon.

The xij. Chapter.

Of the discipline of the Church, whereof the chiefe vse is in the censures and excommunication.

THe discipline of the Church, the entreating whereof we haue deferred vnto this place, is briefly to be declared, that we may at length passe ouer to the rest. But that same for the most part hangeth vpon the power of the keyes and spirituall iurisdiction. That this may be the more easily vnderstood, let vs diuide the Church into two principall degrees, that is to say the Cleargy, and the people. Clarke I call by the viuall name those that execute publike ministerie in the Church. First we will speake of common discipline, to which all ought to be subiect: then we will come to the Cleargy, which beside that common discipline, haue a severall discipline by themselves. But because many for haue of discipline do abhorre the very name thereof let them heare this: If no fellowship, yea no house though it haue but a small houthold, can be kept in right state without discipline, the same is much more necessary in the Church, whose state ought to be most orderly of all. Therefore as the doctrine of Christ which bringeth saluation is the soule of the Church, so discipline is in reede of sinnes therein: whereby it is brought to passe, that the members of the bodie hang together euery one in his fit place. Wherefore whosouer do either desire to haue discipline taken away, or hinder the restoring thereof, whether they do it of set purpose or by vnadvisednes, verily they seeke the extreme dissolution of the Church. For what shall betide, if what is lustfull be lawfull to euery man? But so would it be, if there were not with the preaching of doctrine adioyned private admonishments, corrections, and such other helps which susteine doctrine and stiffer it not to be idle: discipline therefore is as it were a bridle wherewith they may be holden backe and tamed which coltishly resist against Christ: or as a were a priedge, wherewith they that are not willing enough may be stired vp: and sometimes, as a fatherly rod, wherewith they which haue more grieuouly fallen may be chastised mercifully and according to the mildnesse of the spirit of Christ. Sith therfore we do now see at hand certaine beginnings of a horrible wastnes in the Church, because there is no care nor order to keepe the people in awe, very necessitie crieth out that there is neede of remedie. But this is the onely remedie, which both Christ hath commaunded, and hath alway been vsed among the godlie.

The necessity of discipline in the Church.

Cap. 12. Of the outward meanes

The vse of admonition towards them that be offenders.

2 The first foundation of discipline is, that priuate monitions shoulde haue place: that is to say, that if any man of his owne accorde doe not his dutie, if he behaue himselfe licentiously, or liue not honestly, or haue committed any thing worthy of blame, hee shoulde suffer himselfe to bee admonished: and that euery man shoulde studie to admonish his brother when occasion shall require. But specially let the Pastors and Priestes be watchfull to doe this, whose office is not onely to preach to the people, but in euery house to admonish and exhort if at any time they doe not sufficiently preuaile by generall doctrine: as Paul teacheth, when he rehearseth that he taught priuately and in houses, and protesteth that he is cleane from the blood of all men, because he hath not ceased with teares day and night to admonish euery one. For doctrine doth then obtaine force and authoritie, when the minister not onely doth declare to all together what their dutie is to Christ, but also hath power and order to require the keeping thereof of them whom he marketh to be either not obedient to doctrine, or slothfull. If any man doe either stubbornly refuse, or in going forward in his faults, do despise such admonishments: when he hath been the second time admonished with witnesses called to it, Christ commandeth them to be called to the iudgement of the Church, which is the assemblie of Elders: and that there they shoulde bee more greuously admonished as it were by publike authoritie, that if he reuerence the Church he may submit himselfe and obey. But if he be not hereby subdued, but doe continue in his wickednesse, then he commandeth him, as a despiser of the Church, to be put away from the fellowship of the faithfull.

Act. 20. 20, & 26.

Mat. 18. 15, & 17.

The difference of dealing in faults secretly and in faults openly committed.

2. Tim. 5. 22.*

3 But because he speaketh here onely of secret faults, we must make this diuision: that some sinnes be priuate, and some publike or openly manifest. Of the first sort Christ saith to euery priuate man, Reprooue him betwene thee and him alone. Of manifest sinnes Paul saith to Timothee. Reprooue him before all men, that the rest may haue feare. For Christ had said before, If thy brother haue offended against thee. Which words (against thee) vnlesse thou wilt be contentious, thou canst not otherwise vnderstand than vnder thine owne secret knowledge, so that there bee no moe priuie to it. But the same thing which the Apostle teacheth Timothee concerning the rebuking of them openly that sinne openly, he himselfe followed in Peter. For when Peter sinned euen to publike offence, he did not admonish him apart by himselfe, but brought him forth into the sight of the Church. Therefore this shall be the right order of doing, if in secret faults we goe forward according to those degrees that Christ hath set: but in manifest faultes, wee immediately proceede to the Churches solempne rebuking, if the offence be publike.

Gal. 2. 14.

Not one and the same proceeding against meanes & heinous offenders.
1. Cor. 5. 4.

4 Let this also be another distinction: that of sinnes some be defaultes, other some be wicked doings, or hainous offences. To the correcting of this latter sort, not onely admonishment or rebuking is to be vsed, but also a seuerer remedie: as Paul sheweth which not onely chastised with words the Corinthian that had committed incest, but also punished him with excommunication, so soone as he was certified of his wicked deede. Now therefore we begin better to see how the spiritual iurisdiction of the Church: which punisheth sinnes according to the word of the Lord, is the best maintenance of health, and foundation of order, and bond of vnitie. Therefore when the Church doth banish out of her companie manifest adulterers, whoremongers, theeues, robbers, seditious persons, periured men, false witnesses, and such other, againe, obstinate men, which being orderly admonished euen of small faults do scorne God and his iudgement, she taketh nothing vpon her selfe without reason, but executeth the iurisdiction giuen her of the Lorde. Moreouer, that none shoulde despise such iudgement of the Church, or lightly regarde that he is condemned by the consenting

consenting voices of the faithfull: the Lord hath testified, that the same is nothing else but a pronouncing of his owne sentence, and that whatsoever they do in earth is confirmed in heauen. For they haue the word of the Lord, whereby they may condemne the froward: they haue the word, whereby they may receiue the repentant into fauour, They I say that trust that without this bond of discipline Churches may long stand, are deceived in opinion: vntlesse perhaps we may want that help which the Lord foresaw that it should be necessarie for vs. And truly how great is the necessity thereof, shall be better perceiued by the manifold vse of it.

Mat. 16. 16.
and 18. 18.
Iohn. 20. 23.

5 There be three ends which the Church hath respect vnto in such corrections and ex-communication. The first is, that they should not, to the dishonour of God, be named among Christians, that leade a filthie and sinfull life, as though his holy Church were a conspiracie of naughty and wicked men. For sith the Church is the body of Christ, it cannot be defiled with such filthie and rotten members, but that some shame must come to the head. Therefore that there should not be any such thing in the Church, whereby his holy name may be spotted with any reproch, they are to be driuen out of her household, by whose dishonestie any slander might rebound to the name of Christians. And herein also is consideration to be had of the Supper of the Lord, that it be not profaned with giuing it to all without choice. For it is most true, that he to whome the distribution of it is committed, if he willingly and willingly admit an vnworthy man whom he might lawfully put backe, is as guilty of Sacrilege, as if he did giue abroade the Lords body to dogs. Wherefore Chrysolome grieuously inuengeh against the priests, which while they feare the power of great men, dare debarre no man. The blood (saith he) shalbe required at your hands. If ye feare man, he shall laugh you to scorne: but if ye feare God, ye shalbe reuerenced also among men. Let vs not feare maces, nor purple, nor crownes: we haue here a greater power. I verily will rather deliuer mine owne bodie to death, and suffer my blood to be shed, than I will be in ide partaker of this defiling. Therefore least this most holy mystrie be spotted with slunder, in the distributing thereof choice is greatly requisite: which yet cannot be had but by the iurisdiction of the church. The second end is, least (as it is wont to come to passe) with the continuall company of the euill, the good should be corrupted. For (such is our readie inclination to go out of the way) there is nothing easier than for vs to be led by cull examples from the right course of life. This vse the Apostle touched, when he commanded the Corinthians to put the incestuous man out of their companie. A little leauen (saith he) corrupteth the whole lump of dow. And he foresaw herein so great danger, that he forbad him euen from all fellowship. If any brother (saith he) among you be named either a whoremonger, or a couetous man, or a worshipper of Idols, or a drunkard, or an euill speaker, with such a one I graunt you not leaue so much as to eate. The third end is, that they themselves confounded with shame may begin to repent of their filthiacke. So it is profitable for them also to haue their owne wickednesse chastised, that with feeling of the rod they may be awaked, which otherwise by tender bearing with them would haue become more obstinate. The same thing doth the Apostle meane when he saith thus: If any do not obey our doctrine, make him, and keepe no company with him, that he may be ashamed. A gaine in another place, when he writeth that he hath deliuered the Corinthian to Satan, that his spirit might be saued in the day of the Lord: that is (as I expound it) that he went into a damnation for a time, that he might be saued for euer. But he therefore saith that he deliuereth him to Satan, because the diuell is out of the Church as Christ is in the Church. For whereas some do referre it to a certaine vexing of the flesh, I thinke that to be verie vncertaine.

6 When these ends be set forth, now it remaineth to seee how the Church executeth this part of discipline which consisteth in iurisdiction. First let vs keepe the diuision about set, that of sinnes some be publike, and other some be priuate or more secrete. Publike are those that have not onely one or two witnesses, but are committed openly and with the offence of the whole Church. Secrete I call those, not which are altogether hidden from men, as are the sinnes of hypocrites, for those come not into the iudgement of the Church, but those of the meane kinde which are not without witnesses, and yet are not publike. The first kind requireth not those degrees which Christ recheareth: but when any such thing appeareth, the Church ought to doe her due tie in calling the sinner and correcting him according to the proportion of the offence. In the second kind according to the rule of Christ, they come not to the Church till there be also obstinacie added. When it is once come to knowledge, then is that other diuision to be noted betweene wicked dooings and defaults. For in lighter sins there is not to be vsed so great severity, but chastisement of wordes sufficeth, and the same gentle and fatherly, which may not harden nor contound the sinner, but bring him home to himselfe, that he may more reioyce than be loy that he was corrected. But it is meete that hainous offences be chastised with sharper remedie. For it is not enough, if he that by dooing a wicked deede of euill example hath greuously offended the Church, should be chastised onely with words, but he ought for a time to bee deprived of the communion of the supper, till hee haue giuen assurance of his repentance. For against the Corinthians Paul vseth not onely rebuking of words, but driueth him out of the church, and blameth the Corinthians that it had so long borne him. The old and better Church kept this order, when rightfull gouernment flourished. For if any man had done any wicked deede whereupon was growen offence, first he was commanded to abstaine from partaking of the holy supper, then both to humble himselfe before God, and to testifie his repentance before the church. There were also certain solemne vsages, which were enioyned to them that had fallen, to be tokens of their repentance. When they had to done, that the Church was satisfied, then by laying on of handes he was receiued into fauour. Which receiuing is oftentimes called of Cyprian peace, who also briefly describeth this vsage. They doe penance (saith he) in a certaine full time: then they come to confession, and by the laying on of hands of the Bishop and the Clergie they receiue power to come to the communion. Howbeit the Bishop and his Clergie had so the ruling of reconciliation, that they did therewithall require the consent of the people: as he sheweth in another place.

7 From this discipline there was no man exempted, that euen the Princes together with the common people did submit themselves to beare it. And rightfully, sith it was euident that it was the discipline of Christ, to whom it is meete that all scepters and Crownes of Kings be submitted. So when Theodosius was deprived of power to come to the communion because of the slaughter committed at Thessalonica, he threw downe all the royall ornament wherewith he was clothed: he openly in the Church bewailed his sinne, which had crept vpon him by fraude of other men: he craued pardon with groning and teares. For great Kings ought not to thinke this to be any dishonor to them, if they humbly throw downe their selues before Christ the King of Kings, neither ought it to displease them that they be iudged by the Church. For sith in their court they heare nothing else but meere flatteries, it is more then necessarie for them to be rebuked of the Lord by the mouth of the priests. But rather they ought to wish, that the Priests should not spare the, that the Lord may spare them. In this place I omit to speake by whom this iurisdiction is to be exercised, because it is spoken of in another place. This onely I adde that that is the lawfull manner of proceeding in excommunicating a man which Paul sheweth: if the Elders doe it not onely by themselves, but with the Church knowing and allowing it: that is, in such sort that the multitude of the people may not gouerne the dooing, but may marke it as a witness & a keeper that nothing should be done of a few by willfull affection. But the whole maner of doing, beside the calling vpon the name of God,

ought to haue such grauitie, as may resemble the presence of Christ, that it may be vndoubted that he there sitteth for ruler of his owne iudgement.

8 But this ought not to be passed ouer, that such seueritie becometh the church as is ioyned with the spirit of mildenes. For wee must alway diligently beware (as Paul teacheth) that he which is punished be not swallowed vp of sorrow: for so should of a remedy be made a destruction. But out of the end may better be gathered a rule of moderation. For whereas this is required in excommunication that the sinner should be brought to repentance, and euil examples taken away, least either the name of Christ should be euill spoken of, or other men be prouoked to follow them: if we shall haue an eie to these things, we shall be able easilie to iudge howe farre seueritie ought to proceed, and where it ought to end. Therefore when the sinner giueth a testimonie of his repentance, and doth by his testimonie, as much as in him lieth, blot out the offence: he is not to be enforced any further: but if he be enforced, rigorouenes doth then exceed measure. In which behalfe the immeasurable seueritie of the old fathers cannot be excused, which both disagreed from the prescribed order of the Lord, & also was manuellously dangerous. For when they charged a sinner with solemne penance, & deprivation from the holy communion somtime for seuen yeeres, somtime foure yeeres, somtime three yeeres, somtime for their whole life: what other thing could follow therof but either great hypocrisie or most great desperation? Likewise whereas no man that had fallen the second time was admitted to seconde penance, but was cast out of the Church euen to the ende of his life: that was neither profitable nor agreeing to reason. Therefore whoso euer shall weigh the matter with founde iudgement, shall heerein perceiue want of their discretion. Howbeit I doe here rather disallow the publike maner, than accuse all them that vied it, whereas it is certaine that many of them misliked it: but they did therefore suffer it, because they could not amend it. Truly, Cyprian declared, Low much beside his owne will he was so rigorous. Our patience (saith he) and clemencie and gentlenes is readie to them that come. I with all to returne into the Church: I with all our fellow soldians to be enclosed within the tents of Christ and in the houses of God the father. I forgie al things, I dissemble many things, for zeale and desire to gather brotherhoode together, I examine not with full iudgement those things that are committed against God, in pardoning defaults more than I ought, I am my selfe almost in default, I doe with a readie and full loue embrace them that returne with repentance, confessing their sins with humble and plaine satisfaction. Chrysostome is somewhat harder, and yet he saith thus: If God be so kinde, why will his priest seeme so rigorous? Moreouer we knowe what gentlenes Augustine vied toward the Donatistes, in so much that hee stuck not to receive into bishoprike those that had returned from schisme, euen immediately after their repentance. But because a contrarie order had growen in force, they were compelled to leaue their owne iudgement to follow it.

9 But as this mildenes is required in the whole body of the church, that it should punish them that are fallen, mercifully & not to the extremitie of rigour, but rather according to the precept of Paul, should confirme charitie towards them: so euerie priuate man for himselfe ought to temper himselfe to this mercifulnes & gentlenesse. Therefore it is not our part to wipe out of the number of the cleet such as are draven out of the Church, or to despair of them as though they were alreadie lost. We may indeed iudge them strangers from the Church, & therefore strangers from Christ: but that is onely during the time that they abide in diuorce. But if then also they shewe a greater resemblance of stubbornnes than of gentlenes, yet let vs commit them to the iudgement of the Lorde, hoping better of them in time to come than we see in time present, and let vs not therefore cease to pray to God for them, and (to comprehend all in one word) let vs not condemne to death the person it selfe, which is in the hand and iudgement of God alone, but let vs rather weigh by the lawe of the Lorde of

Let vs not take to our selues more libertie in iudging, vnlesse we wil binde the power of God within bounds, & appoint a law to his mercie, at whose pleasure when he thinketh it good, very euill men are turned into very good, strangers are graffed and foreins are chosen into the Church. And this the Lorde doth, thereby to mocke out the opinion of men, and rebate their rashnes: which if it be not restrained, presumeth to take to it selfe power of iudging more than it ought.

The difference betweene excommunicating and accursing.
Matt. 18. 18.

10 For whereas Christ promiseth that that shall be bound in heauen, which they that be his shall bind in earth, he limiteth the power of binding, to the Censure of the church: by which they that are excommunicate, are not throwen into euerlasting ruine and damnation: but hearing their liues and maners to be condemned, they are also certified of their owne euerlasting condemnation, vnlesse they repent. For excommunication heerein differeth from accursing, that accursing taking away all pardon doth condemne a man and adudge him to eternall destruction: excommunication rather reuengeth and punisheth maners. And though the same do also punish the man, yet it doth so punish him, that in forewarning him of his damnation to come, it doth call him backe to saluation. If that be obtained, reconciliation and restoring to the communion is readie. But accursing is either very seldome or neuer in vse. Therefore, although ecclesiasticall discipline, permitteth not to liue familiarly, or to haue friendly conuersation with them that be excommunicate: yet we ought to endeuour by such meanes as we may, that returning to amendment, they may returne to the fellowship and vnitie of the church: as the Apostle also teacheth. Do not (saith he) think them as enemies, but correct them as brethren. Vnles this gentlenes be kept as well priuately as in common, there is danger least from discipline wee fourthwith fall to butcherie.

Mat. 13. 29.

11 This also is principally required to the moderation of discipline, which Augustine entreateth of in disputing against the Donatistes: that nei her priuate men, if they see faultes not diligently enough corrected by the Councell of elders, shoulde therefore by and by depart from the Church: nor the pastors themselues, if they cannot according to their harts desire purge all things that neede amendment, shoulde therefore throwe away the ministerie, or with vnwoonted rigorosities trouble the whole Church. For it is most true which he writeth: that hee is free and discharged from curse, whoeoeuer hee be that either by rebubing amendeth what hee can: or what he cannot amende, excludeth, sauing the bond of peace: or what he cannot exclude, sauing the bond of peace, he doth disallow with equiety, & bear with stedfastnes. He rendreth a reason thereof in another place. because all godly order & maner of ecclesiasticall discipline ought alway to haue respect vnto the vnitie of the spirite in the bond of peace: which the apostle comandeth to be kept by our bearing one with another, & when it is not kept, the medicine of punishment beginneth to be not onely superfluous, but also hurtfull, and therefore ceaseth to be a medicine. He that (saith he) doth diligently thinke vpon these things doth neither in preserving of vnitie neglect the severitie of discipline, nor doth with immeasurablenes of correction breake the bond of fellowship. He granteth in decde that not onely the pastors ought to trauaile to this point, that there may remaine no fault in the Church, but also that euery man ought to his power to endeuor therunto: & he plainly declareth that he which neglecteth to monish, rebuke, & correct the euil, although he do not fauor them, nor sin with them, yet is guilty before the Lord. But if he be in such degree, that hee may also sever them from the partaking of Sacraments, and doth it not, nowe he sinneth not by an others euill, but by his owne. Onely hee willet it to bee done, with vsing of discretion, which the Lorde also requireth, least while the tares be in rooting out, the corne be hurt. Hereupon he gathereth out of Cyprian, Let a man therefore mercifully correct correct what hee can : and what hee cannot, let him patiently suffer, and with loue grone and lament it.

12 This he saith because of the precipitencie of the Donatistes, who when they sawe faultes in the Churches which the Bishops did in deede rebuke with words, but not punish with excommunication, (because they thought that they could this way nothing preuaile) did sharply inuey against the Bishops as betrayers of discipline, and did with an vngodly schisme diuide themselues from the flock of Christ. As the Anabaptists do at this day, which when they acknowledge no congregation to be of christ, vnkisse it doe in euery point thine with Angeli'ke perfection, doe vnder pretence of their zeale ouerthrowe all edification. Such (saith Augu'stine) not for hatred of other mens wickednesse, but for desire to maintaine their owne contentions, doe couer either wholly to drawe away, or at least to diuide the weake people snared with the boasting of their name: they swelling with pride, mad with stubbornesse, traiterous with flauanders, trouble some with seditions, least it should openly appeere that they want the light of truth, doe pretende a shadowe of rigorous seueritie: and those things which in Scripture are commaunded to be done with moderate healing for correcting of the faultes of brethren, preseruing the sinceritie of leue, and keeping the vnitie of peace, they abuse to sacrifice of schisme and occasion of cutting off. So doth Satan transforme himselfe into an Angell of light, when by occasion as it were of iust seueritie he perswadeth vnmmerciful crueltie, coueting nothing else but to corrupt and breake the bond of peace and vnitie: which bond remaining fast among Christians, all his forces are made weake to hurt, his traps of treasons are broken, and his counsells of ouerthrowing doe vanish away.

13 This one thing he chiefly commendeth, that if the infection of sinne haue entered into the whole multitude, then the seuerie mercie of iudly discipline is necessarie. For (saith he) the deuises of separation are vaine, and hurtfull and full of sacrilege, because they are vngodly and proud, and doe more trouble the weak good ones, than they amend the stout unwill ones. And that which hee there teacheth other, hee himselfe also faithfully followed. For writing to Aurelius Bishop of Carthage, he complaineth that drunkennesse which is so sore condemned in scriptures, doth range unpunished in Affrica: and he aduiseeth him, that assembling a Councell of Bishops he should provide remedie for it. He addeth by and by after, These things (as I think) are taken away not roughly, not hardly, not after an imperious manner, but more by teaching than by commaunding, more by admonishing than by threatening. For so must we deale with a multitude of sinners, but seueritie is to be exercised vpon the finnes of few. Yet he doth not meane that Bishops should therefore winke or hold their peace at publike faultes, because they cannot seuerely punish them: as he himselfe afterward expoundeth it. But he willet that the measure of correction be so tempered, that so farre as may be, it may rather bring health than destruction to the bodie. And therefore at length he concludeth thus: Wherefore both this commaundement of the Apostle is in no wise to be neglected, to seuer the eul, when it may be done without perill of breaking of peace: and this is also to be kept, that bearing one with another, we should endeavour to preferue vnitie of the Spirit, in the bond of peace.

14 The part that remaineth of discipline, which properly is not contained in the power of keies, standeth in this, that according to the necessitie of times the pastors should exhort the people either to fasting, or to comon supplications, or to other exercises of humilitie, repentance, and faith, of which things there is neither tunc, nor measure, nor forme prescribed by the word of God, but is left in the iudgement of the Church. The obseruing of this part also, as it is profitable, so hath alway been vied of the olde Church enen from the very Apostles. Howbeit the Apostles themselues were not the first authors of them, but they tooke example out of the lawe & the Prophets. For we see that there so oft as any weightie busines happend, the people were called called together, common praies enioyned, and fasting commanded. Therefore the Apostles followed that which both was not new to the people of God, and they foresaw that it should be profitable. Likewise is to be thought of other exercises, wherewith the people may either be stirred vp to their dutie, or be kept in awe and obedience. There are examples each where in holy histories, which we neede not to gather together. In summe this is to be holden, that so oft as there happeneth any controuersie of religion, which must be determined either by a Synode or by ecclesiasticall iudgement, so oft as they be about choosing of a minister, finally, so oft as any hard matter or of great importance is in doing: againe, when there appeere tokens of the wrath of God, as pestilence, and warre, and famine: this is a holy ordinance and profitable for all ages, that the Pastors should exhort the people to common fasting, and to extraordinarie praier. If any man doe not allow the testimonies which may be alleaged out of the olde Testament, as though they were not meete for the Christian Church, it is certaine that the Apostles also did the same. Howbeit of praies I think there will scarcely any be found that wil moue any question. Therefore let vs say somewhat of fasting: because many when they vnderstand not what profit it hath, do iudge it not so necessitie: some also doe vtterly refuse it as superfluous: and when the vse of it is not well knowen, it is easie to slide into superstition.

of fasting.*

15 Holy and true fasting hath three ends. For we vse it, either to make leane and subdue the flesh, that it should not waxe wanton, or that we may be better disposed to praies and holy meditations, or that it should be a testimonie of our humbling before God, when we be willing to confesse our guiltinesse before him. The first ende hath not so often place in common fasting, because all men haue not like estate of bodie, nor like health: therefore it rather agreeth with priuate fasting. The second ende is common to both, for as well the whole Church as euery one of the faithful hath need of such preparation to praier. The third also is likewise common. For it shall sometime befall that God shall strike some nation with warre, or pestilence, or with some calamitie. In such a common scourge the whole people must accuse themselves, and openly confesse their owne guiltinesse. But if the hand of the Lord doe strike any priuate man, he ought to doe the same, either alone, or with his owne familie. That standeth chiefly in the affection of the minde. But when the minde is affected as it ought to be, it is scarcely possible, but that it will breake out into outward testifying: and then chiefly if it turne to common edifying, that altogether in openly confessing their sinne should yeeld praise of righteousnesse to God, and euery one mutually exhort other with their example.

*Fasting ioyned with praier by the Antiochians, Anna, Nehemias,
Paul.
A. Q. 14 3.

16 Wherefore fasting, as it is a signe of humbling, hath more often vse publickly, than among priuate men, howsoeuer it be common, as is already saide. Therefore as touching the discipline wherof we now inreate: so oft as we must make supplication to God for any great matter, it were expedient to commaunde fasting together with praier. So when the Antiochians laide handes vpon Paul and Barnabas, that they might the better commend to God their ministerie which was of so great importance, they ioyned fasting with praier: So both they afterward, when they made ministers ouer churches, were wont to pray with fasting. In this kinde of fasting they had regarde to none other thing, but that they might be made fresher and more vncombered to pray. Verily this we finde by experience, that when the belly is full, the mind is not so lifted vp to God, that it can both with hartie and feruent affection be carried to praier, and continue in it. So is that to bee vnderstoode which Luke rehearseth of Anna, that shee serued the Lorde in fastings and prayers. For hee doth not set the worshipping of God in fasting: but signifieth that the holy woman did after that manner exercise her selfe to continuance of praier. Such was the fasting of Nehemias when hee did with earnestly bent zeale pray to God for the deliuerance of his people. For this cause Paul saith that the faithfull doe well, if they abstaine for a time from their wedding bed, that they may the more freely apply praier & fasting. Where ioyning fasting to prayer in steede of a helpe, he putteth vs in minde that it is of no value but so farre as it is referred to this end. Againe, when in the same place hee giueth a rule to married folkes, that they shoulde mutually render good will one to another, it is plaine that hee doth not speake of daily praiers, but of such prayers as require a more earnest intentiuenes.

17 Againe, if either pestilence, or famine, or warre begin to range abroad, or if any calamitie otherwise seeme to hang ouer any countrey and people: then also it is the dutie of pastors to exhort the Church to fasting, that they may humbly beseech the Lord to turne away his wrath. For he giueth warning that he is prepared and in a maner armed to reuenge, when he maketh any danger to appeere. Therefore as accused men in time past with long hanging beard, with vncobed haire, with black array, were wont humbly to abate themselues, to procure the mercy of the iudge: so when we are accused before the iudgement seate of God, it behooueth both for his glorie, and for common edification, and also is profitable and healthfull for vs, that wee shoulde in pitious arraie craue to escape his seueritie. And that this was vsed among the people of Israel, it is easie to gather by the wordes of Iael. For when hee commandeth a trumpet to be sounded, the congregation to be gathered together, fasting to be appointed, & the rest that follow: he speaketh of things receiued in common custome. He had a litle before said, that examination is appointed of the wicked deeds of the people, and had declared that the day of iudgement was now at hande: and had summoned them being accused to pleade their cause: then hee crieth out that they shoulde haste to sacke-cloth and ashes, to weeping and fasting: that is, that they shoulde also without outward testifyinges throwe themselues downe before the Lorde. Sacke-cloth and ashes peraduenture did more agree with those times: but there is no doubt that the calling together, and weeping, and fasting and such like do likewise pertaine also to our age, so oft as the state of our things doth so require. For sith it is a holy exercise, both to humble men, & to confesse humilitie, why should we lesse vse it than the olde people did in like necessitie? We reade that not only the people of Israel, which were informed and instructed by the worde of God, but also the Nininites which had no doctrine, but the preaching of Jonas, fasted in token of sorrow. What cause is there therefore why we shoulde not doe the same? But it is an outward ceremonie, which was with the rest ended in Christ. Yea rather euen at this day it is, as it alway hath been, a very good helpe to the faithfull, and a profitable admonition, to stirre vp themselues, that they shoulde not with too great carelesnes and sluggishnes more and more prouoke God when they are chastised with his scourges. Therefore Christ when he excuseth his apostles for that they fast not, doth not say that fasting is abrogate: but he appointeth it to times of calamitie, and ioyneeth it with mourning. The time shal come (saith he) when the bridegroome shal be taken away from them.

18 But that there shoulde be no errour in the name, let vs define what fasting is. For we do not heere vnderstand by it onely abstinence and sparing in meat & drink, but a certaine other thing. The life of the godlie ought in deed to be tempered with honest sparing & sobriety, that so neer as is possible it may in the whole course thereof beare a certaine resemblance of fasting. But beside this there is another fasting for a time, when we withdraw any thing of our wonted diet, either for one day or for a certaine time, and do charge our selues with a straiter and seuerer abstinence in diet than ordinarie. This consisteth in three things, in time, in qualitie of meates, and in smalnes of quantitie. I meane by time, that we shoulde vse those doings fasting, for which fasting is ordeined. As for example, if a man fast for common prayer: that he come emptie vnto it. Qualitie standeth in this, that all dainties should be absent, and being content with common & baser meates, we should not stir vp appetite with delicates.

19 But we must alway principally beware, that no superstition creepe vpon vs, as it hath heretofore happened to the great hurt of the church. For it were much better that there were no vic at all of fasting than that it should be diligently kept, and in the meane time be corrupted with false and hurtfull opinions, wherunto the world sometime falleth, vnlesse the Pastors do with great faithfulness and wisdom preuent it. The first point therefore is, that they should alway enforce that which Ioel teacheth, that they should cut their hearts & not their garments. that is, that they should admonish the people, that God doth not greatly esteeme fasting of it selfe, vnlesse there be inward affection of the heart, a true misliking of sinne and of himselfe, true humbling, & true sorrow through the fear of God: yea that fasting is profitable for no other cause, but for that it is ioyned to these as an inferior help. For God abhorreth nothing more than when men in setting signes and an outward shew in steed of innocencie of heart, do labour with false colour to deceiue themselves. Therefore Esay most sharply inueryeth against this hypocrisie, that the Iewes thought they had pleased God, when they had onely fasted, howsoeuer they did nourish vngodlines and vncleane thoughts in their heart. Is it (saith he) such a fasting which the Lord requircth? and so forth as followeth. Therefore the hypocriticall fasting is not onely an vnprofitable and superfluous wearying, but also a great abomination. An other euill neere vnto this is chiefly to be taken heed of, that it be not taken for a meritorious worke, or a forme of worshipping God. For sith it is a thing of it selfe indifferent, and hath no value but by reason of those ends which it ought to haue respect vnto, it is a most hurtfull superstition, to confound it with the workes commanded of God and necessarie of themselves without other respect. Such was in old time the dotage of the Manichees: whom when Augustine consulted, he doth plainly enough teach, that fasting is to be iudged by no other ends than those which I haue spoken of, and is no otherwise allowed of God, vnlesse it be referred to the same. The third error is indeed not so vngodly, yet it is perillous: to require the keeping of it more precisely and rigorously as it were one of the chiefe duties, and so to aduance it with immeasurable praises, that men should thinke they haue done some excellent thing when they haue fasted. In which behalf I dare not altogether excuse the old fathers, but that they haue sowed some seeds of superstition, and giuen occasion to the tyrannie which hath risen since. There are found in deed sometimes in them found and wise sentences, of fasting, but afterward we new and then meete with immeasurable praises of fasting which aduance it among the chiefe vertues.

20 And at that time the superstitious obseruing of Lent was each where growen in vfe: because both the common people thought that they therein did some notable seruice to God, and the Pastors did commend it for a holy following of Christ: whereas it is plaine, that Christ did not fast to prescribe an example to other, but that in so beginning the preaching of the Gospell, he might in very deed prouue that it was not a doctrine of men, but descended from heauen. And it is marvellous, that so grosse an error, which is confuted with so many and so euident reasons, could creepe into men of so sharpe iudgement. For Christ did not fast out (which he must needs haue done if he would haue set forth a law of yeerely fasting) but only once when he prepared himselfe to the publishing of the Gospell. And he fasted not after the manner of men, as it was meete, that he should haue done if he would haue prouoked men to follow him, but rather he sheweth an example, whereby he may rather draw men to vnto him than stirre them vp to follow him. Finally there is none other cause of the fasting, than of that which Moses fasted when he receiued the lawe at the hand of the Lorde. For sith that miracle was shewed in Moses to stablish the authority of the Lawe, it ought not to haue bene omitted in Christ, least the Gospell should

should seeme to giue place to the law. But since that time it neuer came in any mans minde vnder colour of following of Moses to require such a forme of fasting in the people of Israel. Neither did any of the holy Prophetes and Fathers follow it, when yet they had minde and zeale enough to godly exercites. For, that which is said of 1. King. 19. 6. Helias, that he passed fortie daies without meate and drinke, tended to no other end but that the people should know that he was stirred vp to be a restorer of the law from which almost all Israel had departed. Therefore it was a meere wrongfull zeale and full of superstition, that they did set forth fasting with the title and colour of following of Christ. Howbeit in the manner of fasting there was then great diuersitie, as Cassiodorus rehearseth out of Socrates in the ninth booke of his historie. For the Romanes (saith he) had but three weekes, but in these three there was a continuall fasting, except on the Sunday, and Saturday. The Slaucians and Grecians had six weekes: other had seuen: but their fasting was by diuided times. And they disagreed no lesse in difference of meates. Some did eate nothing but bread and water: some added herbes: some did not forbear fish and fowles: some had no difference in meates. Of this diuersitie Augustine also maketh mention in the latter Epistle to Iunianie.

21 Then followed worse times, and to the preposterous zeale of the people was added both ignorance and rudenesse of the Bishops, and a lust to beare rule, and a tyrannous rigor. There were made wicked lawes, which straine consciences with pernitious bondes. The eating of flesh was forbidden, as though it defiled a man. There were added opinions full of sacriledge one vpon another, till they came to the botome of all errors. And that no peruersenesse should be omitted, they began with a most fond pretence of abstinence to mocke with God. For in the most exquisite daintines of fare is sought the praise of fasting: no delicates do then suffice, there is neuer greater plentie, or diuersitie or sweetenes of meates. In such and so gorgious preparation they think that they serue God rightly. I speake not how they neuer more fowly glut themselues, than when they would be counted most holy men. Briefely, they count it the greatest worshipping of God to abstaine from flesh, and (these excepted) to stay full of all kinde of deinties. On the other side they thinke this the extremest vngodlines, and such as scarcely may be recompensed with death, if a man tast neuer so litle a peece of bacon or vsauorie flesh with browne bread. Hierome telleth, that euen in his time were some that with such follies did mocke with God: which because they would not eate oyle, caused most deintie meates from euery place to be brought them: yea to oppress nature by violence, they abstained from drinking of water, but caused sweete and costly suppings to be made for them, which they did not drinke out of a cup, but out of a shell. Which fault was then in a few, at this day it is a common fault among all rich men that they fast to no other end but that they may banquet more sumptuously and deintily. But I will not wast many wordes in a matter not doubtfull. Onely this I say, that both in fasting and in all other partes of discipline, the Papists do haue nothing right, nothing pure, nothing well framed and orderly, whereby they may haue any occasion to be proud, as though there were any thing remaining among them woorthie of praise.

22 There followeth another part of discipline, which peculiarly belongeth to the Cleargie. That is contained in the Canons which the olde Bishops haue made ouer themselues and their order. As these be: that no Cleaue should giue himselfe to hunting, to dicing, nor to banquetting: that none should occupie vlturie, or merchandise: that none should be present at wanton dauncings: and such other ordinances. There were also added penalties whereby the authoritie of the Canons was established, that none should breake them vnpunished. For this end to euery Bishop was committed the gouernement of his own Cleargie, that they should rule their clearkes according to the canons, and hold them in their ductie. For this end were ordered yearly ouerseeings and Synodes, that if any were neglygent in his duty, he should be admonished : if any had offended, he should be punished according to the measure of his offence. The bishops also themselves had yeerely their promiscall Synodes, and in the olde time yeerely two Synodes, by which they were iudged if they had done any thing beside their duty. For if any Bishop were too hard or violent against his cleargie, they might appeale to those Synodes, although there were but one that complained. The feuerest punishment was that he which had offended should be remooued from his office, and for a time be dequied of the communion. And because that same was a continuall order, they neuer vsed to dismisse any Synod, but that they appointed a place and time for the next Synode. For, to gather a generall Councell, pertained to the Emperour only, as al the olde summonings of Councils do testifie. So long as this feueritie flourished, the clerkes did require in word no more of the people, than themselves did performe in example and deed. Yea they were much more rigorons to the vselues than to the people. And verily so it is meete, that the people should be ruled with a gentler and looser discipline, as I may so terme it: but the clerks should vse sharper iudgements among themselves, and should lesse beare with themselves, than with other men. How all this is growen out of vse, it is no need to rehearse, when at this day nothing can bee imagined more vnbridled and dissolute than the cleargie, and they are broken forth to so great licentiousnes, that the whole world crieth out of it. That all antiquitie should not seeme to be vterly buried among them, I graunt indeed that they do with certaine shadowes deuenne the eyes of the simple; but those are such as come no nerer to the ancient manners, than the counterfeiting of an ape approacheth to that which men do by reason and aduise. There is a notable place in Xenophon, where he teacheth how fowly the Persians had swarued from the ordinances of their Elders, and were fallen from the rigorous kinde of life, to softnes and daintines, that yet they couered this shame, saying that they diligently kept the ancient vsages. For when in the time of Cyrus sobrietie and temperance so far flourished that men needed not to weepe, yea and it was accounted a shame: with posteritie this continued a religious obseruation, that no man should draw snout out of his nostrils, but it was lawfull to sucke it vp, and feede within even till they were rotten the stinking humours which they had gathered by gluttonous eating. So by the old order it is vnlawfull to bring winepots to the boorde: but to swill in wine that they need to be carried away drunken is tolerable. It was ordained to eate but once in a day: this these good successors haue not abrogate, but they gaue leaue to continue their surfettings from mid day to midnight. The custome was that men should make an end of their daies journey fasting. But it was at libertie and vsedly the custome, for auoiding of wearines, to shorten their iourney to two houres. Whensoever the Papistes shall pretend their bastard rules, to shew themselves to be like to the holy fathers: this example shall sufficiently reprooue their fond counterfeiting, that no painter can more liuely expresse it.

23 In one thing they bee too rigorons and vntreatable, that they giue not leaue to Priestes to marrie. But how great libertie there is among them to vse whoredome vnpunished, is not needfull to be spoken: and bearing them bolde vpon their stinking vnmarrried life, they haue hardened themselves to all wicked doings: But this forbidding doch plainly shew, how pestilent all their traditions are, for as much as it hath not onely spoiled the Church of good and fit Pastors, but also hath brought in a horrible sincke of mischiefes, and thrown many soules into the gulfe of desperation. Truly whereas marriage hath bene forbidden to Priestes, that same hath bene done by wicked tyrannie, not onely against the word of God, but also against all equitie. First to forbid that which the Lord had left at libertie, was by no meanes lawfull for men. Againe, that God hath explicity provided by his worde that this libertie should not be broken, is so euident that it needeth no long demonstration. I speake not how Paul in many places willet a Bishoppe to be the husband husband of one wife. But what could be more vehemently spoken, than where hee pronounceth by the holy Ghost, that there shall be in the last times wicked men that shall forbid marriage: and he calleth them not onely deceiuers, but Diuels? This therefore is a Prophecie, this is a holy Oracle of the holy Ghost, wherewith he willed to arme the Church aforesaid against dangers, that the forbidding of marriage is the doctrine of diuels. But they thinke that they haue gayly escaped when they wrest this sentence to Montanus, the Tatians, Encratites, and other olde heretikes. They onely (say they) condemned marriage: but we doe not condemne it, but debarre the Cleargie from it, for whom we thinke it not to be conuenient. As though albeit this prophecie was first fulfilled in those aforesaid men, it might not also be applied to these: or as though this childish fond fittletie were wooth the hearing, that they say that they forbid it not, because they forbid it not to all. For it is all one as if a tyrant would affirme that it is not an vniust law, with vniustice wherof one part alone of the Citie is oppressed.

24 They obiekt, that the Priest doth by some marke differ from the people. As though the Lord did not also foresee this, with what ornaments Priestes ought to excell. So they accuse the Apostle of troubling the order and confounding the comelineffe of the Church, which when he portrayed out the absolut forme of a good Bishop durst set marriage among the other gifstes which he required in him. I know how they expound this, namely that none is to be chosen that hath had a second wife. And I graunt that this is not a new exposition: but that it is a false exposition, appeareth by the text it selfe, because he by and by after setteth out of what qualities the wiuers of Bishops and Deacons ought to be. Paul reckeneth marriage among the virtues of a bishop, these men teach that it is an intollerable fault in the order of the Cleargie. And, on Gods name, not contented with this generall dispraise they call it in their Canons vnclanneffe and defiling of the flesh. Let euery man thinke with himselfe out of what workeshop these things be come: Christ vouchsaueth so to honor marriage that he willeth it to be an image of his holy conioyning with the church. What could be spoken more honorably to set out the dignitie of Marriage? With what face therefore shall that be called vnclane or defiled wherein shineth a likenes of the spirituall grace of Christ?

25 But now when their forbidding so evidently fighteth with the word of God, yet they finde in the Scriptures wherewith to defend it. The Leuiticall Priestes were bound to lie a sunder from their wiuers, so oft as it came to their turnes to minister, that they might handle the holie things pure and vndefiled. Therefore it were very vncomely, that our holy things, first they be both much more noble and daly, should be handled of married men. As though there were all one person of the minister of the Gospell, as was of the Leuiticall Priesthood. For they, as figures, represented Christ, which being the mediator of God & men should with most absolute purenes reconcile the Father vnto vs. But when sinners could not in euery behalfe expresse the figure of his holinesse, yet that they might with certaine grosse draughts yeeld a shadowe of him, they were commanded to purifie themselues beyonde the manner of men, when they came to the Sanctuarie: namely because they then properly figured Christ, for that as pacifiers to reconcile the people to God they appeared at the tabernacle the image of the heauenly iudgement seate. Forasmuch as the Pastors of the Church doe not beare this person at this day, therefore they are vainely compared with them. Wherefore the Apostle doth without exception boldly pronounce, that marriage is honorable among all men, but that for whoremongers, and adulterers abiderh the iudgement of God. And the Apostles themselues did with their own example approue that marriage is not vnmeetee for the holinesse of any office be it neuer so excellent. For Paul witnesseth that they did not onely keepe wiuers, but also carried them about with them.

26 Again it was a marvellous shamelesnesse that they darst set out this comelines of chastitie for a necessarie thing, to the great reproch of the old Church: which when it abounded with singular learning of God, yet excelled more in holines. For if they passe not vpon the Apostles, (as they are wont sometime stoutly to despise them) what I beseech you will they do to all the old fathers, whom it is certaine to haue not onely suffered but also allowed marriage in the order of Bishops? They forsooth did nourish a filthy prophaning of holy things, for as much as so the mysteries of the Lord were not rightly reuerenced among them. It was moued indeed in the Nycene Synode to haue vnmarried life commanded: as there alway want not some superstitious men, which do euer inuent some new thing, to bring themselves in admiration. But what was decreed? The sentence of Paphnutius was assented to, which pronounced that a mans lying with his owne wife is chastitie. Therefore marriage remained holy among them: neither did it turne them to any shame nor was thought to spot the ministerie.

How single life grew to be so much advanced in the cleargie.

27 Then followed times, in which too superstitious obseruation of single life grew in force. Hereupon came those often and vnmeasurable advanced praises of virginitee, so that scarcely any other vertue was thought among the people to be compared with it. And although marriage was not condemned for vnclane, yet the dignitie thereof was so diminished, and the holines of it obscured, that he seemed not to aspire with a courage strong enough to perfection, that did not refrain himselfe from it. Hereupon came those canons whereby it was first forbidden that they which were come to the degree of Priesthood should not contract marriage: then, that none should be taken into that order but vnmarried men, or such as did forsake marriage together with their wiuces. These things, because they seemed to procure reuerence to Priesthood, were (I graunt) euen from antiquite received with great well liking. But if the aduerfaries object antiquite against me, first I answer that this libertie remained both vnder the Apostles and in certaine ages after them, that bishops might be married: that the Apostles themselves, and other Pastors of great authoritie which succeeded in their places, vsed the same without sticking at it. The example of that ancient Church ought woorthily to be of greater weight with vs, than that we should thinke that to be either vnlawfull or vncomelie for vs which was then with praise receiued and vsed. Secondly I say that that age which for immeasurable affectiō to virginitee began to be partiall against marriage, did not so laye vpon Priests the law of vnmarried life, as though it were a thing necessarie of it selfe, but because they preferred vnmarried men aboue the married. Finally I answer that they did not so require it that they did with force and necessitie constrain them to continence which were not fit to keepe it. For when they punished whoredoms with most seuerer lawes, of them that contracted marriage they decreed no more but that they should giue ouer the execution of their office.

Two Items to the Church of Rome concerning the single life which they require in the order of priests.

28 Therefore whensoever the defenders of this new tyrannie shall seeke the pretence of antiquite to defende their vnmarried life: so oft we shall answer them with requiring them, that they restore the old chastnesse in their Priests: that they remoue adulterers and whoremongers: that they suffer not those in whom they suffer not honest and chaste vse of marriage bed, to run vnpunished into all kind of lust: that they call againe the discontinued discipline, whereby all wantonnesse may be restrained: that they deliuer the Church from this so wicked silitnesse, wherewith it hath bene long deformed. When they haue granted this, then they must againe bee put in minde that they boast not that thing for necessarie, which being of it selfe at libertie hangeth vpon the profit of the Church. Yet I say not this for that I thinke that in any condition place is to be giuen to those canons which lay the bond of vnmarried life vpon the order of Priests: but that the wiser sort may vnderstand with what face our enemies doe slander holy marriage in Priests by objecting the name of antiquite.

quitie As touching the fathers, whose writings remaine, euen they when they speake of their owne iudgement, except Hierome, did not with so great spitefulness deface the honestie of marriage. We shall be content with one commendation of Chrysofome: because he, sith he was a principall esteemer of virginitic, cannot be thought to haue beene more lauish than odier in commendation of marriage. Thus he saith. The first degree of chasticie is pure virginitic: the second is faithfull marriage. Therefore the second kind of virginitic is the chaste loue of matrimonie.

Hier. de iuuent. crucis.

The xiiij. Chapter.

Of vowes, by rash promising whereof, each man hath miserably entangled himselfe.

IT is verily a thing to be lamented, that the Church, for whom libertie was purchased with the inestimable price of the blood of Christ, hath beene so oppressed with cruell tyrannie, and almost ouerwhelmed with a huge heape of traditions: but in the meane time euery mans priuate madnesse sheweth, that not without most iust cause there hath beene so much permitted of God to Satan and his ministers. For they thought it not enough, neglecting the commandement of Christ, to beare any burdens whatsoeuer were laide vpon them by false teachers, vnlesse they did also each man procure to himselfe severall burdens of his owne, and so with digging pits for themselves should drowne themselves deeper. This was done while they strued in deuising of vowes, by which there might be added to the common bondes a greater & straighter binding. Sith therefore we haue taught, that by their boldnes which haue borne rule vnder the title of Pastors in the Church, the worshipping of God hath bin corrupted, when they snared silly consciences with their vniust lawes: here it shall not bee out of season to adioine another euill which is neere vnto it, that it may appeere that the world according to the perversenes of his own disposition, hath alway, with such stops as it could, put away the helpes whereby it should haue bene brought to God. Nowe, that it may the better appeere that verie grieuous hurt hath bene brought in by vowes, let the readers keepe in minde the principles aboue set. For first we haue taught, that whatsoeuer may be required to the framing of life godlyly and holly, is comprehended in the law. Againe, we haue taught that the Lorde, that he might thereby the better call vs away from deuising of newe works, hath enclosed the whole praise of righteousnes in the simple obedience of his will. If these thinges be true, it is easie to iudge that all fauned worshippings, which wee inuent to our selues to deserue the fauour of God, are not acceptable to him howe much soeuer they please vs. And truely the Lorde himselfe in many places doth not onclie openlie refuse them, but also grieuously abhorre them. Hereupon ariseth a doubt of those vowes which are made beside the expresse worde of God, what account is to bee made of them, whether they may rightly be vowed of Christian men, and howe farre they binde them. For the same which among men is called a promise, in respect of God is called a vowe. But to men we promise those things either which we thinke will be pleasant vnto them, or which we owe of dutie. Therefore there ought to bee a much greater heedefull obseruation in vowes which are directed to God himselfe, with whom wee ought to deale more earnestly. In this point superstition hath in al ages maruellously ranged, so that men without iudgment, without choise, did by and by vowe vnto God whatsoeuer came in their minde, or into their mouth. Hereupon came those follies, yea monstrous absurdities of vowes among the heathen, wherewith they did too insolently mocke with their Gods. And I woulde to God that Christians also had not followed this their boldnes. It ought not indeede to haue beene so: but wee see that in certaine ages past nothing hath beene more vsuall than this wickednesse, that the people ech where despising the lawe of

The hurt that hath come to the church by vowes.

God did wholly burne with mad greedinesse to vow whatfoeuer had pleased them in their dreame. I will not hatefully enforce, nor particularly reheartie how haينously and how many waies herein men haue offended: But I thought good to say this by the way, that it may the better appeare that we do not moue question of a needelesse matter, when we intreate of vowes.

The first thing to be respected in vowes, is the person of God to whom they are made.
Colof. 2. 23.

Rom. 14. 23.

2 Now if we will not erre in iudging which vowes be lawfull, and which be wrongfull, it behooueth to weigh three things: that is to say, who it is to whom the vow is made: who we be that make the vow: last of all, with what mind we vow. The first point hath respect to this, that we should thinke that we haue to do with God, whom our obedience so much deliteth, that he pronounceth all wilworships to be accursed, how gay and glorious soeuer they be in the eyes of men. If all voluntarie worships, which we our selues deuise without commandement, be abhominable to God, it followeth that no worship can be acceptable to him but that which is allowed by his word. Therefore let vs not take so great libertie to our selues that we dare vow to God that which hath no testimonie how it is esteemed of him. For whereas that which Paul teacheth, that it is sinne whatsoeuer is done without Faith, extendeth to all doings, then verily it chiefly hath place, when thou directest thy thought the straight waie to God. But if we fall and erre euen in the smallest things, (as Paul there disputeth of the difference of meates) where certaintie of faith shineth not before vs: how much more modestie is to be vsed, when we attempt a thing of greatest weight? For nothing ought to be more earnest vnto vs than the duties of religion. Let this therefore be the first consideration in vowes, that we neuer come to the vowing of any thing, but that conscience haue first certainly determined that it attempteth nothing rashly. But it shall then be free from daunger of rashnesse, when it shall haue God going before it, and as it were enforming it by his word what is good or vnprofitable to be done.

The second thing to be regarded in the making of a vow, is the measure of their strength that make it.

Concil. Arausi. cap. 12.

Rom. 12. 3.
1. Cor. 12. 11.

Act. 23. 12.

Iud. 11. 30.

3 In the other thing which we haue said to be here to be considered, this is contained, that we measure our owne strengthes, that we haue an eye to our vocation, that we neglect not the benefite of libertie which God hath giuen vs. For he that voweth that which either is not in his power, or disagreeeth with his vocation, is rash: and he that despiseth the bountifullnes of God, whereby he is appointed Lord of all things, is vnthankfull. When I say thus, I doe not meane that any thing is so set in our owne hand, that standing vpon confidence of our own strength we may promise the same to God. For it was most truly decreede in the Councell at Arausum, that nothing is rightly vowed to God but that which we haue receiued of his hand, forasmuch as all things that are offered him are his meere gifts. But sith some things are by Gods goodnes giuen vs, and other some things by his equitie denied vs: let euery man (as Paul commaundeth) haue respect to the measure of grace giuen vnto him. Therefore I do here meane nothing else, but that vowes must be tempered to that measure which the Lord prescribeth there in his giuing: least if thou attempt further than he permitteth, thou throw thy selfe downe headlong with taking too much vpon thee. As for example. When those murderers, of whome mention is made in Luke, vowed that they would taste of no meate till Paul were slaine: although the deuise had not bene wicked, yet the rashnesse it selfe was not to be suffered, that they made the life and death of a man subiect to their power. So Jeshu suffered punishment for his follye, when with headlong heate he conceiued an vnaduised vow. In which kinde vnmarried life hath the cheefe place of mad boldnesse. For sacrificing Priestes, Monkes, and Nunnes, forgetting their owne weakenesse, thinke themselues able to keepe vnmarried life. But by what Oracle are they taught that they shall haue chastitie throughout all their life, to the verie ende whereof they vowe it? They heare the word of God concerning the vniuersall state of men, It is not good for man to be alone. They vnderstand, and would to God that they did not feele, that sinne remaining in vs is not without most sharp prickes. With what confidence dare they shake off that generall calling for all their life long: whereas the gift of continencie is oftener graunted for a certaine time as opportunitic requireth? In such stubbornesse let them not looke for God to be their helper: but let them rather remember that which is saide. Thou shalt not tempt the Lorde thy God. And this is to tempt God, to endeavour against the nature put in vs by him, and to despise his present giftes as though they nothing belonged vnto vs. Which they not onely doe: but also marriage it selfe, which God thought it not against his maiestie to institute, which he hath pronounced honourable in all men, which Christ our Lorde hath sanctified with his presence, which he vouchsafed to honour with his first miracle, they dare call defiling, onely to aduance with maruellous commendations a certain vnmarried life of what sort fouer it be. As though they themselues did not shew a cleare example in their life, that vnmarried state is one thing, and virginitie another: which their life yet they most shamelesly call Angellike, doing herein verily too great iniurie to the Angels of God, to whome they compare whoremongers, adulterers, and somewhat else much worse and filthier. And truly here neede no arguments when they are openly confuted by the thing it selfe. For we plainly see, with how horrible paines the Lord doeth commonly take vengeance of such arrogancie, and contempt of his giftes by too much trust in themselues. I spare for shame to speake of the more secret faults, of which euen this that is already perceiued is too much. It is out of controuersie that we ought to vowe nothing, that may hinder vs from seruing of our vocation. As if a householder should vowe, that he will leaue his wife and his children and take other charges in hand; or if he that is fit to beare office, when he is chosen do vowe that he will be a priuare man. But what is meant by this, that our libertie should not be despised, hath some difficultie if it be not declared. Therefore thus in few words I expound it. Sith God hath made vs Lords of all things, and hath so made them subiect vnto vs that we should vse them all for our commoditie: there is no cause why we should hope that it shalbe an acceptable woik to God if we yeeld our selues into bondage to the outward things which ought to be a help vnto vs. I say this for this purpose, because many do hereby seeke praise of humilitie, if they snare themselues with many obseruations, from which God not without cause willed vs to be free and discharged. Therefore if we will escape this danger, let vs alway remember that we ought not to depart from that order which the Lorde hath ordained in the Christian Church.

4 Now I come to that which I did set in the third place: that it is much material with what minde thou makest a vowe, if thou wilt haue it allowed of God. For sith the Lord regardeth the heart, not the outward shew, it commeth to passe that the selfe same thing, by changing the purpose of the mind, doth sometime please him and is acceptable vnto him, and sometime highly displeaseth him. If thou so vowe the abstaining from wine, as though there were any holinesse in it, thou art superstitious: if thou haue respect to any other end which is not euill, no man can disallow it. But in my iudgement there be foure ends, to which our voves shall be rightly directed: of which for teachings sake I referre two to the time past, and the other two to the time to come. To the time past belong those voves, whereby we do either testifie our thankfulnessse to God for benefites received: or to craue the turning away of his wrath, we our selues doe punish our selues for the offences that we haue committed. Let vs call the first sort, if you will, the exercises of thankesgiuing, the other of repentance. Of the first kinde we haue an example in the rites which Jacob vowed, if the Lord did bring him home safe out of banishment into his countrey. Againe in the old Sacrifices of the peace offerings, which godlie kings and captaines, when they tooke in hand righteous warre, did vowe that they would pay if they had obtained

Heb. 13. 4.
Ioh. 2. 23.

The third thing to be respected in a vowe is the mind of the vower, which in voves that haue relation to the time past hath two ends to be directed by.

obtained the victorie, or at least when they were oppressed with any great distresse, if the Lord had deliuered them. So are all those places in the Psalmes to be vnderstood which speake of vowes. Such vowes may at this day also be in vse among vs, so oft as the Lorde hath deliuered vs either out of any calamitie, or from a hard sicknesse, or from any other danger. For it is then not against the dutie of a godly man, to consecrate to God his vowed oblation, as a solemne token of his reknowledging, least he should seeme vnthankfull toward his goodnesse. Of what sort the seconde kinde is, it shall suffice to shewe with one onely familiar example. If any by the vice of gluttonie be fallen into any offence, nothing withstandeth but that to chastise his intemperance he may for a time forsake all daintie meats, and may doe the same with a vowe adioyned, that he may binde himselfe with the straiter bonde. Yet I doe not so make a perpetuall lawe to them that haue likewise offended: but I shewe what is lawfull for them to doe, which shall thinke such a vow profitable for themselves. I doe therefore so make such a vow lawfull, that in the meane time I leaue it at libertie.

Two other ends of vowes which haue relation to the time to come.

5 The vowes that are applied to the time to come, partly (as we haue already said) do tend to this end that we may be made the warer: and partly that as it were by certaine spurres we may be pricked forward to our dutie. Some man seeth himselfe to be so inclined to some certaine vice, that in a thing which otherwise is not euill he cannot temper himselfe from falling forthwith into an euill: he shal doe nothing inconueniently if he do for a time by vow cut off from himselfe the vse of that thing. As if a man knowe that this or that apparell of body is perillous vnto him, and yet enticed with desire he earnestly couerit, what can he doe better, than if in putting a bridle vpon himselfe, that is in charging himselfe with necessitie of abstaining from it, he deliuer himselfe from all doubting? Likewise if a man be forgetfull or slowe to necessarie duties of godlinesse, why may hee not by taking a vow vpon him both awake his memorie and shake off his slothfulnessse? In both I graunt that there is a forme of childish schooling: but euen in this that they are helpes of weaknesse, they are not without profite vsed of the rawe and vnperfect. Therefore wee shall say that those vowes are lawfull which haue respect to one of these ends, specially in outward things, if they both be vpholden with the allowance of God, and doe agree with our vocation, and be measured by the power of grace giuen vs of God.

How to iudge of vowes as well those which generally all men or particularly some doe make vnto God.

6 Now also it is not hard to gather what is generally to be thought of all vowes. There is one common vow of all the faithfull, which being made in baptisme wee doe confirme and as it were stablish by Catechisme and recciuing of the Supper. For the Sacraments are as charters, by which the Lord deliuereth to vs his mercie and thereby euerlasting life, and we againe on our behalves doe promise him obedience. But this is the forme or verily the summe of the vow, that forsaking Satan wee yeelde our selues into seruice to God, to obey his holy commandements, and not to followe the peruerse desires of our flesh. It ought not to be doubted but that this vow, sith it hath testimonie of the Scripture, yea and is required of all the children of God, is both holy and profitable to saluation. And it maketh not to the contrarie, that no man in this life performeth the perfect obedience of the lawe which God requireth of vs. For sith this forme of couenanting is comprised within the covenant of grace, vnder which is contained both forgivenessse of finnes and the Spirit of sanctification: the promise which we there make is ioyned both with beseeching of pardon and with crauing of helpe. In iudging of particular vowes, it is necessarie to keepe in minde the three former rules, whereby we may safely weigh of what for euerie vow is. Neither yet thinke that I so commend the very same vowes which I asseme to be holy, that I would haue them to be daily. For though I dare teach no certaine rule of the number or time: yet if any man obey my counsell, he shall take vpon him none but sober and for a time. For if thou oftentimes breake forth into making of manie vowes, all religiouſnes will with verie continuance growe out of eſtimation with thee, and thou ſhalt come to a bending readineſſe to fall into ſuperſtition. If thou bind thy ſelfe with a perpetuall vow, either for great paine and rediſtinction thou ſhalt vndo it, or being wearied with long continuance thou ſhalt at one time or other be bold to breake it.

7 Now alſo it is plaine with how great ſuperſtition in this behalfe the world hath in certaine ages paſt bin poſſeſſed. One man vowed that he would abſtaine from wine: as though abſtaining from wine were of it ſelfe a worſhip acceptable to God. An other bound himſelfe to ſiſting, an other to abſtaining from fleſh for certaine daies, in which he had with vaine opinion ſained to be a ſingular holines about the reſt. And ſome things alſo were vowed much more childiſh, although not of children. For this was holden for a great wiſedome, to take vpon them vowed pilgrimages to holier places, and ſometime either to go all their iourney on foote, or with their body halfe naked, that by their wearines the more merite might be gotten. Theſe and ſuch other, with incredible zeale whereof the world hath a while ſwelled, if they be examined by thoſe iules, which we haue aboue ſet, ſhall be found not only vaine and trifling, but full of manifeſt vngodlines. For how ſouer the fleſh iudge, God abhorreth nothing more than ſained worſhippings. There are beſide this thoſe pernitiouſ and damned opinions, that hypocrits when they haue ſuch trifles thinke that they haue gotten no ſmall rightcouſnes: they repute the ſum of godhnelſe in outward obſeruatiſons, they deſpiſe all other that are leſſe carefull of ſuch things.

8 To reckon vp all the particular formes, is nothing to purpoſe. But forasmuch as the monkish vowes are had in greater reuerence, becauſe they ſeeme allowed by the common iudgement of the Church: of thoſe it is good to ſpeake briefly. Firſt leaſt any ſhould by preſcription of long time defend monkerie, ſuch as it is at this day, it is to be noted that in old time there was in monaſteries a far other order of liuing. Such as were diſpoſed to exerciſe themſelues to greateſt ſticitie and patience, went thither. For what maner of diſcipline they ſay that the Lacedemonians had vnder the lawes of Lycorgus, ſuch was at that time among the monks, yea and much more rigorous. They ſlept vpon the ground: their drinke was water: their meate was bread, herbs, and rootes: their chiefe dainties were in oyle and eiches. They abſtained from all delicate diet and trimming of body. Theſe things might ſeeme aboue truth, if they were not written by witneſſes that ſaw & proued them, as Gregorie Nazianzene, Basil, and Chryſoſtome. But with ſuch introductions they prepared theſelues to great offices. For, that the colleges of monks were then as it were the ſeed-plotts of the order of miniſters of the Church, both theſe whome we haue now named are a prooffe plaine enough (for they were all brought vp in monaſteries and from thence called to the office of biſhops) and alſo many other ſingular and excellent men in their time. And Auguſtine ſheweth that it was alſo vſed in his time, that monaſteries yielded clerkes to the Church. For he ſpeaketh thus to the monkes of the Iſle of Caprea: But you brethren we exhort in the Lord, that ye keepe your purpoſe & continue to the end: and if at any time our mother the Church ſhall require your trauale, do ye neither with greedy pride take it vpon you, nor with flattering ſoftiſhnes reſuſe it: but with a meeke heart obey to God. Neither prefer ye your owne quiet leaſure about the neceſſities of the church: to whom if no good men would haue miniſtered in her trauale, you ſhould not haue found how you ſhould haue bene borne. He ſpeaketh there of the miniſterie, by which the ſinfull are ſpirituallie borne againe. Alſo to Aurelius. There is both occaſion of falling giuen to themſelues, and moſt haynous wrong done to the order of the Clergy, if forſakers of monaſteries be choſen to the ſoldiership of the Clergy: when euen of thoſe that remaine in the monaſterie, we vſe to take into the Clergy none but the moſt approoued and beſt. Vnleſſe perhaps as the comon people ſay, he is an euill piper but a good ſidler: ſo it ſhal alſo be intestingly faide of vs, he is an euill Monke, but a good Clerke. It is too much to be lamented, if we lift vp Monkes into such a ruinous pride, and thinke Clearkes woorthy of so great reproch, wheras sometime euen a good monke maketh not a good clerke, if he haue sufficient continence and yet want necessary learning. By these places it appeareth, that godly men were wont with the discipline of Monks to prepare themselves to the government of the Church, that they might the fitter and better instructed take so great an office vpon them. Not that they all attained to this ende, or yet tended toward it, when for the most part they were vnlearned men: but such were chosen out as were meete for it.

The oracrs and exercises of auncient Monkes.

De mor. Ecclesi. cathol. cap. 31.

9 But chiefly in two places he painteth out vnto vs the forme of the old monastic. In the booke of the manners of the Catholike Church, where he setteth the holinesse of that profession against the sclaunders of the Manichees: and in another booke which he entituled of the worke of Monkes, where he inueyeth against certaine degendred Monkes, which began to corrupt that order. I will here so gather a summe of those things which he saith, that so neere as I may I will vse his owne words. Describing (saith he) the intiments of this world, gathered into one most chaste and holy life, they spend their time together, liuing in praiers, readings, and disputations, not swelling with pride, not troublesome with stubbornesse, not wanne with enuiousnesse. None possesieth any thing of his owne, none is burdenous to any man. They get by working with their hands those things wherewith both their body may be fed, and their minde may not be hindered from God. Their worke they deliuer to them whom they call Deanes. Those Deanes disposing all things with great carefulnes make account thereof to one whom they call Father. These Fathers not onely most holy in manners, but also most excellent in godlie doctrine, high in all things, doe with no pride prouide for them whom they call children, with great authoritie of them in commanding, and great willingnes of the other in obeying: They come together at the very last time of the day, euery one from his dwelling, while they be yet fasting, to heare that Father, and there meete together to euery one of these fathers at the least three thousand men, (he speaketh chiefly of Egypt, and of the East) then they refresh their body, so much as sufficeth for life and healthfulnesse, euery man restraining his desire, not to take largely euen of those things that they haue present very spare and vile. So they doe not onely abstaine from flesh and wine, so much that they may be able to tame their lustes, but from such things which doe so much more greedily prouoke appetite of the belly and throte, how much they seeeme to other, to be as it were cleaner, by colour wherof the filthy desire of exquisite meates, which is not in flesh, is wont to be fondly and fowly defended. Whatsoever remaineth about necessary foode (as there remaineth oftentimes much of the workes of their handes and pinching of their fare) is with greater care distributed to the poore, than it was gotten by them that distribute it. For they doe in no wise trauaile that they may haue abundance of these things, but they by all meanes endeour that that which they haue abounding may not remaine with them. Afterward when he hath rehearsed the hardnes, wherof he himselfe had seene examples both at Millaine and else where: among these things (saith he) no man is enforced to harde things which he cannot beare: no man is charged with that which he refuseth: neither is he therefore condemned of the rest, because he confesseth himselfe to want strength in following of them: for they remember how much charitie is commended: they remember that all things are cleane to the cleane. Therefore all their diligence watcheth, not to the refusing of kindes of meate as vnckleane, but to tame lust, and to retain the loue of brethren. They remember, meate for the belly, and the bellie for meates, &c. Yet many frong doe abstaine for the weakes sake. Many of them haue no neede to doe thus: but because it pleaseth them to sustaine themselves with baser diet and nothing sumptuous. Therefore they themselves, which being in health doe forbear, if consideration of their health compell, when they are sick doe take without any feare. Many drinke no wine, and yet they thinke not themselves defiled with it: for they most gently cause it to be giuen to the fainter, and to them that cannot gett the health of their bodie without it: and some which foolishly refuse it, they doe brotherly admonish that they be not with vaine superstition sooner made weaker than holier. So they diligently exercise godlinesse: but they know that the exercising of the body pertaineth but to a short time. Charity is chieftly kept: to charitie the diet, to charitie the speech, to charitie the apparell, to charitie the countenance is fitted. They meete and conspire into one charitie. To offend it is accounted as heinous as to offend God. If any resist charitie, he is cast out and shunned. If any offend charitie, he is not suffered to abide one day. For as much as in these wordes, as in a painted table, that holy man seemeth to haue set out what manner of life monkerie was in olde time, although they were somewhat long, yet I was content to interlace them here: because I saw that I should haue been somewhat longer if I had gathered the same things out of diuers, how much soeuer I studied for briefenesse.

10 But my purpose here is not to go through this whole matter, but onely by the way to point out, not onely what manner of monkes the olde Church had, but what manner of thing the profession of monkes was at that time: so as the sounde witted readers may iudge by the comparison, what face they haue which alleage antiquitie to maintaine the present monkerie. Augustine when he depainteth vnto vs a holy and true monkerie, woulde haue to be absent all rigorous exacting of those things which by the word of the Lorde are left vs at libertie. But there is nothing that is at this day more seuerely required. For they count it a mischief that can neuer be purged, if any doe neuer so little swaue from the prescribed rule in colour or fashion of garment, in kinde of meat, or in other trifling and cold ceremonies. Augustine stoutly maintaineth, that it is not lawfull for monkes to lue idle vpon other mens. He denieth that there was euer in his time any such example of a well ordered monasterie. Our men set the chiefe part of their holines in idleness. For if you take idleness from them, where shall be that contemplatiue life whereby they boast that they excell all other men, and approach neere vnto Angels? Finally Augustine requireth such a monkerie, as should be nothing but an exercise & help to the duties of godlines which are commended to all christians. What when he maketh charity the chief, yea & almost only rule thereof, do we thinke that he praiseth a conspiring, whereby a fewe men being bound together, are seuered from the whole body of the church? But rather he willerth them with their examples to giue light to other to keepe the vnitie of the Church. In both these points there is so much difference of the monkerie at this present, that a man can scarcely finde any thing more vnlike, I wil not say contrarie. For our monkes not contented with that godlines, to the studie of which alone Christ commandeth them that are his continually to apply, do imagine I wot not what new godlines, by meditation whereof they may be perfecter than other.

18 If they denie this, I would know of them why they vouchsafe to giue to their order alone the title of perfection, & take away the same from all the callings of god. Neither am I ignorant of that sophisticall solution, that it is not therefore so called because it doth containe perfection in it, but because it is the best of al other to attaine perfection. When they are disposed to boast themselves before the people, when to snare vaskilfull and vnware yoong men, when to maintaine their priuileges, when to aduance their owne dignitie to the reproch of other, then they boast that they are in the state of perfection. When they are so nigh diuened that they cannot defende this vaine arrogancie, then they flee to this starting hole, that they haue not yet attained perfection, but that they are in the same state wherein they aspire vnto it about other. In the meane time that admiration among the people remaineth, as though the onely monkish life were angelike, perfect, and clenfed from all fault. By this pretence they make most gainfull markets, but that same moderation lieth buried in a few books. Who doth notice that this is an intollerable mockerie? But let vs for reason with them, as though they gaue no more to their profession than to call it a state of attaining perfection. Verily in giuing it this name, they do as by a special mark make it differing from other kinds of life. And who can abide this name, that so great honor should be giuen away to an ordinance that is no where by any one syllable allowed: and that by the same all other callings of God, which are by his owne holie mouth not onely commanded, but also commended with notable titles of praise, are by the same accounted vnwoorthie? And how great wrong (I beseech you) is done to God, when I wot not what new found thing is preferred about all the kinde of life ordained by himselfe, and praised by his owne testimonie?

12 But go to, let them say that it is a slander which I haue before said, that they are not contented with the rule prescribed of God. Yet though I hold my peace, they themselves do more than enough accuse themselves. For they openly teach, that they take vpon them more burden than Christ laid vpon his: because forsooth they promise to keepe the counsels of the Gospell concerning louing their enemies, not coueeting of reuenge, nor swearing, &c. To which things Christians are not generally bound. Herein what antiquitie will they shew forth against vs? This neuer came in any of the old fathers mindes. They all crie out with one voice that there was no one little worde at all vttered of Christ, which ought not necessarily to be obeyed. And without any doubting they do euewhere teach, that these very same things by name were commandements, which these good expositors triflingly say, that Christ did but counsell. But forasmuch as we haue before taught that this is a most pestilent error, let it suffice here to haue briefly noted that the monkerie which is at this daie, is grounded vpon the same opinion, which all the godly ought worthily to abhorre: which is, that there should be imagined some perfecter rule of life, than this common rule which is giuen of God to the whole church. Whatsoever is builded vpon this foundation, cannot be but abhominable.

Matt. 19. 21.

13 But they bring another prooffe of their perfection, which they thinke to be most strong for them. For the Lord said to the young man that asked him of the perfection of righteousness, if thou wilt be perfect, sell all that thou hast and giue it to the poore. Whether they do so or no, I doe not yet dispute: but grant them that for this present. Therefore they boast that they be made perfect by forsaking all theirs. If the sum of perfection stande in this, what meaneth Paul when he teacheth, that he which hath distributed all his goods to the poore, vnlesse he haue charitie, is nothing? What maner of perfection is this, which if charitie bee absent, is brought with man to nothing? Here they must needs answer, that this is the chiefest in deed, but not the onely worke of perfection. But here also Paul crieth against them, which sticke not to make charitie the bond of perfection, without any such forsaking. If it bee certaine that betwene the master and the disciple is no disagreement, and the one of them cleerly denieth the perfection of man to consist in this that he should forsake all his goods, and againe affirmeth, that perfection is without it: we must see how that saying of Christ is to be taken, if thou wilt be perfect, sell all that thou hast. Nowe, it shall be no darke sense, if we weigh (which we ought alway to make in all the preachings of Christ) to whom these wordes be directed. A young man asketh, by what works he shall enter into euerlasting life. Christ, because hee was asked of workes, sendeth him to the lawe, and rightly: for it is the way of eternal life, if it be considered in it selfe, and is no otherwise vnable to bring saluation vnto vs but by our owne pinesse. By this answer Christ declareth, that he taught no other rule to frame life by, than the same that had in olde time bene taught in the lawe of the Lorde. So did he both giue witness to the lawe of God, that it was the doctrine of perfect righteousness: and therewithall did meeete with slanders, that he should not seeme by a newe rule of life to stirre the people to forsaking of the law. The young man being in deede not of an euill minde, but swelling with vaine confidence, answered that he had from his childhood kept all the commandments of the lawe. It is most certaine that he was an infinite space distant from that to which he boasteth that he had attained. And if his boasting had bene true, he had wanted nothing to the highest perfection. For we haue before shewed, that the law containeth in it selfe perfect righteousness: and the same appeereth hereby that the keeping of it is called the way of eternall saluation. That he might be taught to knowe how little he had profited in that righteousness, which he had too boldly answered that he had fulfilled, it was profitable to shake out a familiar fault of his. When he aboundeth in riches, he had his hart fastened vpon them. Therefore because he felt not this secret wound, Christ leuied him. Go (saith he) sell all that thou hast. If he had bene so good a keeper of the lawe as he thought he was, he woulde not haue gone away sorrowfull when he hearde this worde. For who so loueth God with all his hart, whatsoeuer disagreeeth with the loue of him, he nor onely taketh it for dung, but abhorreth as bringing destruction. Therefore whereas Christ commaundeth the couetous rich man to leaue all that he hath, it is all one, as if he should commaund the ambitious man to forsake all honours, the voluptuous man all delires, and the vchaste man all the instruments of lust. So consciences that are touched with no feeling of generall admonition, must bee called backe to the particular feeling of their owne euill. Therefore they doe in vaine draw this speciall case to generall exposition, as though Christ did set the perfection of a man in forsaking of goodes, whereas he meant nothing else by this saying, than to driue the young man that stood too much in his owne conceite, to feele his owne sore, that he might vnderstand that he was yet a great way distant from perfect obedience of the lawe, which otherwise he did falsely take vpon him. I graunt that this place hath bene euill vnderstanded of some of the fathers, and that thereupon grew this coueting of wilfull pouertie, whereby they onely were thought to bee blessed, which forsaking all earthly things, did dedicate themselves naked to Christ. But I trust that all the good and not contentious men will be satisfied with this my exposition, so that they shall no more doubt of the meaning of Christ.

14 Howbeit the fathers thought nothing lesse, than to establish such perfection, as hath since been framed by the couiled sophisters, therby to raise vp a double Christianitie. For that doctrine full of sacrilege was not yet borne, which compareth the profession of monkerie to baputine, yea and openly affirmeth, that it is a forme of second baputine. Who can doubt that the fathers with all their hart abhorred this blasphemie? Now as touching that last thing, which Augustine saith to haue been among the old monks, that is, that they aplyed themselves wholly to Charitie: what neede I to thew in words that it is most far from this new profession? The thing it selfe speaketh, that al they that go into Monasteries, depart from the Church. For why? Do not they seuer themselves from the lawfull fellowship of the faithful in taking to themselves a peculiar ministerie and priuate ministracion of Sacraments? What is it to dissolve the communion of the Church, if this be not it? And (that I may follow the comparison which I began to make, and may once conclude it) what haue they in this behalfe like to the old monks? They although they dwelt severally from other men, yet had not a seuerall Church: they did partake of the sacraments together with other: they appeared at solemne assemblies: there they were a part of the people. These men in erecting to themselves a priuate altar, what haue they else done but broken the bond of vnitie? For they haue both excommunicate themselves from the whole body of the Church, and haue despised the ordinarie ministracion, whereby the Lorde willed to haue peace and charitie kept among his. Therefore how many ministeries there be at this day, may that there be so many assemblies of schismatics, which troubling the order of the Church, are cut off from the lawfull fellowship of the faithful.

Cap. 13. Of the outward meanes

And that this departing should not be secrete, they haue giuen to themselves diuers names of sectes. Neither were they ashamed to boast of that, which Paul doth so detest that he cannot sufficiently amplifie the hainousnesse of it. Vnlesse perhaps we thinke that Christ was diuided of the Corinthians, when one gloried of one teacher, and another of another: and that now it is done without any iniurie to Christ, that in steed of Christians we heare some called Benedictines, some Franciscanes, some Dominicanes: and that they are so called, that they themselves when they couet to be seuerally known from the common sort of Christians, doe with great pride take these titles to them for the profession of their religion.

A greater difference in the manners of these new and thoe ancient monkes.

15 These differences which I haue hitherto rehearsed betweene the old monkes and the monkes of our age, are not differences in maners, but in the profession it selfe. Therefore let the readers remember that I haue rather spoken, of monkerie than of monkes, and haue touched those faults, not which sticke in the life of a few of them, but which cannot be seuered from their very order of liuing it selfe. But what difference is in their maners, what neede I particularly to declare? This is certaine, that there is no degree of men more defiled with all filchinesse of vices: no where more are factions, hatreds, affections of parties, ambitions hotter than among them. In deede in a few monasteries they lue chastly, if it be to be called chastitie where iust is so farre kept downe that it be not openly euill spoken of: yet a man shall scarcely finde euery tenth monasterie which is not rather a stews than a holy house of chastitie. But what honest sparing is in their diet? Swine be none otherwise fattened in sties. But least they should complaine that I handle them too vngently, I go no further. Howbeit in those few things which I haue touched, whosoever knoweth the thing it selfe will confesse that there is nothing spoken acuserlike. Augustine, when according to his testimonie monkes excelled in so great chastitie, yet complaineth that there were many vagabonds, which with euill crafts and deceits wiped simple men from their mony, which with carying about the reliques of martyrs did vse filthy marchandizings, yea and in sleepe of the reliques of martyrs did shew forth the bones of any other dead men, and which with many such wicked doings slandered the order. As he reporteth that he saw no better men than them which haue profited in monasteries, so he lamenteth that he hath seene no woorse men than those that disprofited in monasteries. What would he say if at this day he sawe all monasteries to swell, and in a manner to burst with so many and so dispaired vices? I speake nothing but that which is wel known to all men. Yet doth not this dispraise pertaine to all without any exception at all. For as there was neuer rule and discipline of liuing so holly established in monasteries, but that there remained some drones much vnlke the rest: so I doe not so that monkes are at this day so run out of kinde from that holy antiquitie, but that they haue yet some good men in their flocke. But they lie hidden a few and scattered in that huge multitude of naughtie & wicked men: and they are not only despised, but also lewdly railed at, and sometime cruelly handled of other, which (as the Milesiens prouerbe is) thinke that there ought to be no place for any honest man among them.

Somewhat amisse euen in the very profession of monkerie which was of olde.

16 By this comparison of the olde and present monkerie, I trust I haue brought to passe that which I purposed, that it may appeere that our cowlled men do falsly pretend the example of the first Church for defence of their profession: for as much as they no lesse differ from them than apes from men. In the mean time I stick not to declare, that euen in that olde forme which Augustine commendeth, there is somewhat which little pleaseth me. I grant that they were not superstitious in exacting the outward exercises of rougher discipline, but I say that there wanted not too much affectation and wrongful zeale. It was a goodly thing, forsaking their goods, to be without all earthly carefullnesse. but God more esteemeth care to rule a household godly, when a holy householder being loose and free from all couetousnesse, ambition, and other desires of the flesh, trauelleth to this purpose to serue God in a certaine vocation. It is a godly thing to play the Philosopher in wildernesse farre from the companie of men: but it agreeth not with Christian gentlenes as it were for hatred of mankind to flie into desert and solitarines, and therewithall to forsake those duties which the Lord hath chiefly commanded. Although we grant that there was no other euill in that profession, yet this verily was no small euill, that it brought an vnprofitable and perillous example into the Church.

17 Now therefore let vs see what manner of vowes they be, wherewith monks at this day are professed into this goodly order. First, because their minde is to institute a new & fained worshipping to deserue Gods fauour: I concluded by the things afore spoken that whatsoeuer they vowe is abhominable before God. Secondlie without any regard of Gods calling, without any his allowance, they inuent for them such a kinde of liuing as pleaseth themselves. I saie that it is a rash, and therefore an vnlawfull enterprise: because their conscience hath nothing wherupon it may vpholde it selfe before God, and whatsoeuer is not of faith, is sinne. Moreouer when they binde themselves to manie peruerse and wicked worshippings, which the monkerie at this day containeth in it, I affirme that they bee not consecrate to God, but to the diuell. For why was it lawfull for the Prophet to say, that the Israe- lites offered their children to diuels and not to God: onely for this that they had corrupted the true worshipping of God with prophane Ceremonies: and shall it not be lawfull for vs to saie the same of monks, which with their cowle do put vpon themselves a snare of a thousand wicked superstitions? Now what sorts of vowes are there? They promise to God perpetuall virginitie, as though they had bargained with God before, that he shoulde deliuer them from need of marriage. There is no cause why they shoulde alleage, that they doe not make this vowe but trusting vpon the grace of God. For sith he pronounceth that he giueth it not to all men, it is not in vs to conceiue a confidence of a speciall gift. Let them that haue it, vse it. If at any time they feele themselves to be troubled of their flesh, let them flee to this helpe by whose onely power they may resist. If they preuaile not, let them not despise the remedie that is offered them. For they by the certaine worde of God are called to marriage, to whom power of continence is denied. Continence I call, not whereby the bodie is onely kept cleane from whoredome, but whereby the minde keepeth chastitie vndefiled. For Paul commandeth not onely cutward wantonnesse, but also the burning of the minde, to be auoided. This (say they) hath from furthest time of memorie been obserued, that they which would dedicate themselves wholly to the Lord, should bind themselves to the vowe of continence. I grant indeed that this maner hath also been of ancient time receiued: but I doe not grant that that age was so free from all fault, that whatsoeuer was then don must be taken for a rule. And by little & little this vnappre- hensible seuerity crept in, that after a vowe made there was no roome for repentance. Which is euidnt by Cyprian. If virgins haue of faith dedicated themselves to God, let them continue shamefastly, and chastly without any faiming. So being strong and stedfast, let them look for the reward of virginitie. But if they wil not or cannot continue, it is better that they should marrie than with their delights fall into the fire. What reproches would they now spare to teare him withall, that would with such equite temper the vow of continence? Therefore they are departed farre from that ancient maner, which will not onely admit no moderation or pardon if any be found vnable to performe his vow: but they do without all shame pronounce that he sinneth more greuously if he remedie the intemperance of the flesh with taking a wife, than if he defile both his body and soule with whoredome.

18 But they still enforce the matter, and go about to shew that such a vowe was vsed in the Apostles time: because Paul saith that the widowes which hauing beene once receiued into the publike ministerie did marrie, denied their first faith. But I doe not denie to them, that the widowes, which bound themselves and their

seruices to the Church, did therewithall take vpon them the bond of continuall vnmarried life: not because they reposed any religion therein, as it afterward began to be vsed: but because they could not beare that office but being at their owne libertie and loofe from yoke of marriage. But if, when they had once giuen their faith, they looked backe to newe marriages, what was this else but to shake off the calling of God? Therefore it is no maruell that with such desires he saith that they waxe wanton against Christ. Afterward to amplifie the matter he saith, that they do so not performe that which they haue promised to the Church, that they do also breake and make voide their first Faith giuen in Baptisme: in which this is comprehended, that euery man should answer his calling. Vnlesse perhaps you had rather vnderstand it thus, that hauing as it were lost all shame, they did from thence forth cast away all care of honestie, did giue forth themselues to all wantonnesse and vnchastitie, and did in licentious and dissolute life resemble nothing lesse than Christian women: which sense I like verie well. Therefore we answer, that those widowes which were then receiued to publicke ministerie, did lay vpon themselues a bond to continue vnmarried: if they afterward married, we easily perceiue that that happened to them which Paul speaketh of, that casting away shame they became more wanton than befemed Christian women. That to they not onely sinned, in breaking their faith giuen to the Church, but swared from the common law of godly women. But first I denie that they did professe vnmarried life for any other reason, but because marriage agreed not with that ministerie which they tooke in hand: and I denie that they did bind themselues at all to single life, but so far as the necessitie of their vocation did beare. Againe I do not graunt that they were so bound, but that it was then also better for them to marrie, than either to be troubled with the prickings of the flesh, or to fall into any vncleannes. Thirdly I say that that age is appointed of Paul, which is commonly out of danger: specially sith he commaundeth them onely to be chosen, which contented with one marriage haue already shewed a token of their continencie. And we do for no other reason disallow the vow of vnmarried life, but because it is wrongfully taken for a seruice of God, and it is rashly vowed of them to whom power of continencie is not giuen.

Saint Pauls words concerning widowes wrestled vnto the maner-vnace of Nunnes

19 But how was it lawfull to drawe this place of Paul to Nunnes? For there were created deaconisses, not to delight God with singing and with mumbling not vnderstanded, and liue the rest of their time idle: but that they should execute publicke ministracion toward the poore, that they should with all study, earnestnes and diligence, endeavour themselues with the duties of charitie. They did not vow vnmarried life, to yeeld thereby any worship to God because they abstained from marriage: but onely because they were thereby the more vncombred to execute their office. Finally they did not vow it, either in the beginning of their youth, or yet in the midst of their flowing age, that they might afterward learne too late by experience into how great a headlong downfall they had thrown themselues: but when they seemed to haue passed all danger, then they vowed a no lesse safe than holy vow. But (not to enforce their first two points) I say it was not lawfull to haue women receiued to vow continencie before the age of threescore yeres: forasmuch as the Apostle admitteth onely women of sixtie yeres old, and commaundeth the yonger to marrie and bring forth children. Therefore, neither that release made of twelue yeres, and then twentie, and afterward of thirtie yeres can be any way excused: and much lesse is it tolerable, that sillie maides, before that they can by age know themselues, or haue any experience of themselues, are not onely trained by fraude, but constrained by force and threatnings to put on those cursed snares. I will not tarie vpon confuting the other two vowes. Onely this I saye: besides this that they bee intangled with not a fewe superstitions, (as the matter is nowe daies) they seeme to be made to this purpose, that they which vowe them should mocke both God and men. But least we should seeme too maliciously to shake vp every small parcell, we will be content with that generall confutation which is aboue set.

20 What manner of vowes be lawfull and acceptable to God, I thinke is sufficiently declared. Yet bicause sometime vnskillfull and fearefull consciences, euen when they mislike or disallow any vow, doe neuertheless doubt of the binding, and are greenously tormented, when they both dread to breake their Faith giuen to God, and on the other side they feare least they should more sinne in keeping it: here they are to be succoured, that they may winde themselues out of this distresse. But, to take away all doubt at once: I say that all vowes being not lawfull, nor rightly made, as they are nothing woorth before God, so ought to be void to vs. For if in contractes of men those promises onely doe bind, in which he with whom we contract, would haue vs bound: it is an absurditie, that we should be driuen to the keeping of those things which God doth not require of vs: specially sith our workes are no otherwise right, but when they please God, and when consciences haue this testimony that they please him. For this remaineth certaine, whatsoeuer is not of Faith, is sinne. Whereby Paul meaneth, that the worke which is taken in hand with doubting, is therefore faultie, because Faith is the roote of all good workes, by which we are assured that they be acceptable to God. Therefore if it be lawfull for a Christian man to goe about nothing without this assurednes: if by fault of ignorance they haue taken any thing in hand, why should they not afterward giue it ouer when they be deliuered from errors? Sith vowes vnadvisedly made are such, they doe not onely nothing binde, but are necessarily to be vndone. Yea, what if they are not onely nothing esteemed, but also are abhominable in the sight of God, as is aboue shewed? It is needles to discourse any longer of a matter not needefull. This one argument seemeth to me to be enough to pacifie godly consciences & deliuer them from all doubt: that whatsoeuer works do not flow out of the pure fountaine & be not directed to the lawfull end, are refused of God: & so refused that he no les forbiddeth vs to go forward in the, than to begin the. For hereupon followeth, that those vowes which proceed of error and superstition, are both of no value before God, and to be forsaken of vs.

21 Moreover he that shall know this solution, shall haue wherewith he may defend against the slanders of the wicked, them that depart from Monkerie to some honest kinde of life. They are grieuously accused of breach of Faith and periuiric, because they haue broken (as it is commonly thought) the intoluble bonde wherewith they were bound to God and to the Church. But I say that there was no bond where God doth abrogate that which man confirmeth. Moreover, admitting that they were bound, when they were holden intangled with not knowing of God, and with error: now since they are lightened with the knowledge of the truth, I say that they are therewith all free by the grace of Christ. For if the crosse of Christ haue to great effectualnesse, that it looseth vs from the curse of the law of God, wherewith we were holden bound, how much more shall it deliuer vs from foreine bonds, which are nothing but the snaring nets of Satan? To whomsoeuer therefore Christ shined with the light of his Gospell, it is no doubt that he looseth them from all snares which they had put vpon themselues by superstition. Howbeit they want not yet another defence, if they were not fit to liue vnmarried. For if an impossible vow be a iure destruction of the Soule, whom the Lord would haue saued and not destroyed: it followeth that we ought not to continue therein. But how impossible is the vow of continence to them that are not indued with a singular gift, we haue already taught, and experience speaketh it though I hold my peace. For neither is it vnknown with how great filthinesse almost all monasteries doe swarme. And if any of them seeme honest, and more shamefast than the rest, yet they are not therefore chaste because they suppress and keepe in the fault of vnchastitie. So verily God doth with horrible examples take vengeance on the boldnes of men, which forgetting their own weakntesse, do against nature couet that which is denied them, and despising the remedies which the Lord had giuen them at hand, do trust that they can with stubbornnes and obstinacie ouercome the disease of incontinence. For what else shall wee call it but stubbornnes, when one being warned that he needeth maiage, & that the same is giuen him of the Lord for a remedie, doth not only despise it, but also bindeth himselfe with an oath to the despising of it?

The xiiij. Chapter.

Of Sacraments.

a Sacrament.*

Beside the preaching of the Gospell, an other helpe of like sort is in the Sacraments: of which to haue some certaine doctrine taught, is much behoouefull for vs, whereby we may learne both to what end they were ordained, and what is now the vse of them. First it is meet to consider what is a Sacrament. It seemeth to me that this shall be a plaine and proper definition, if we say that it is an outward signe, where-with the Lord sealeth to our consciences the promises of his good will toward vs, to sustaine the weaknes of our faith: and we againe on our behalves do testifie our godlines toward him as well before him & the Angels as before men. We may also with more briefenes define it otherwise: as to call it a testimonie of Gods fauour toward vs confirmed by an outward signe, with a mutuall testifying of our godlines toward him. Whether soeuer you choose of these definitions, it differeth nothing in sense from that definition of Augustine, which teacheth that a Sacrament is a visible signe of a holy thing, or a visible forme of inuisible grace: but it doth better and more certainly expresse the thing it selfe. For whereas in that briefnes there is some darknes, wherein many of the vnskilfuller sort are deceued: I thought good in moe wordes to giue a fuller sentence, that there should remaine no doubt.

The ancient vse of the word Sacrament.

Eph. 1.9. & 3.2.

Col. 1.26.

1. Tim. 3.16.

Epi. 5. ad Marcell.

2 For what reason the old writers vsed this worde in that sense, it is not hard to see. For so oft as the old translator would render in Latine this Greeke worde Mysterion mysterie, specially when diuine matters were intreated of, he translated it Sacrament. So to the Ephesians, that he might make known vnto vs the Sacrament of his will. Againe, if yet yee haue heard the distribution of the grace of God, which is giuen to me in you, because according to reuelation the Sacrament was made known to me. To the Colossians, The Mysterie which hath been hidden from ages and generations, but now is manifested to his Saintes, to whom the Lord woulde make known the riches of this Sacrament, &c. Againe, to Timothie, A great Sacrament of godlines: God is openly shewed in the flesh. He would not say a secret, least he should seeme to say somewhat vnder the greatnes of the things. Therefore he hath put Sacrament in steed of Secret, but of a holy thing. In that signification it is sometime found among the ecclesiasticall writers. And it is well enough known, that those which in Latine are called Sacramentes, in Greeke are Mysteries: which expressing of one thing in two seuerall words enderth all the contention. And hereby it came to passe that it was drawn to those signes which had a reuerend representation of high and spirituall things. Which Augustine also noteth in one place. It were long (saith he) to discourse of the diuersitie of signes, which when they pertaine to diuine things, are called Sacraments.

Sacraments ordained of God as seales of his promises, not that they but we stand in need of confirmation by such meanes.

3 Now of this definition which we haue set, we vnderstand that a Sacrament is neuer without a promise going before it, but rather is adioyned as a certaine addition hanging to it, to this end that it should confirme and seale the promise it selfe, and make it more approued vnto vs, yea after a certaine maner ratified. Which mean the Lord foreseeeth to be needfull first for our ignorance and dulnesse, and then for our weakenes: and yet (to speake properly) not so much to confirme his holy word, as to stablish vs in the Faith thereof. For the truth of God is by it selfe found and certaine enough, and cannot from any other where receiue better confirmation than from it selfe: But our Faith, as it is small and weake, vnlesse it be stayed on euery side, and be by all meanes vpholden, is by and by shaken, wauereth, staggerech, yea, and fainteth. And herein verily the mercifull Lord according to his great tender landnesse rempcreth himselfe to our capacite: that, whereas we be naturall men, which alway creeping vpon the ground, and sticking fast in the flesh, doe not thinke nor so much as conceiue any spirituall thing, he vouchsauneth euen by these earthly elements to guide vs vnto himselfe, and in the flesh it selfe to set foorth a mirror of spirituall good things. For if we were vnbodily (as Chrysostome saith) he would haue giuen vs the very same things naked and vnbodily. Now because we haue Soules put within bodies, he giueth spirituall things vnder visible things. Not because there are such giftes planted in the natures of the things which are set foorth to vs in the Sacraments: but because they were signed by God to this signification.

Hom. 60. ad popul.

4 And this is it which they commonly say, that a Sacrament consisteth of the word and the outward signe. For we must vnderstand the word to be, not that which being whispered without meaning and Faith, with onely noise as it were with a magickall enchantment hath power to consecrate the element: but which being preached maketh vs to vnderstand what the visible signe meaneth. Therefore that which was visually done vnder the tyranny of the Pope, was not without a great profaning of the mysteries. For they thought it ynough, if the Priest, while the people stood amazedly gazing at it without vnderstanding, did mumble vp the forme of consecration. Yea, they of set purpose prouided this, that no whit of doctrine should thereof come to the people: for they spake all things in Latine before vnlearned men. Afterward superstition brake out so farre, that they beleued that the consecration was not formally made, vnlesse it were with a hoarse whispering sound which fewe might heare. But Augustine teacheth farre otherwise of the Sacramentall worde. Let the word (saith hee) be added to the element, and there shall be made a Sacrament. For whence cometh this so great strength to the water, to touch the bodie and wash the soule, but by the worde making it? not because it is spoken, but because it is beleued. For in the verie word it selfe the sounde which passeth is one thing, and the power which abideth is another. This is the word of Faith which wee preach, saith the Apostle, Whereupon in the Actes of the Apostles it is saide, by faith cleansing their hearts. And Peter in the Apostle saith, So baptisme also sauech vs: not the putting away of the filthines of the flesh, but the examination of a good conscience. This is the word of faith which we preach: by which without doubt, that it may be able to cleanse, Baptisme is also hallowed. You see how it requireth preaching, wherupon faith may grow. And we neede not to trauell much in prooffe hereof, forasmuch as it is cleare what Christ did, what he commanded vs to do, what the Apostles followed, what the purer Church obserued. Yea euen from the beginning of the world it is knowen, that so oft as God offered any signe to the holy fathers, there was added an vnseparable knot of doctrine, without which our senses should be made amazed with bare beholding. Therefore when we heare mention made of the Sacramentall word, let vs vnderstand the promise, which being with a loude voice preached of the minister, may lead the people thither as it were by the hand, whither the signe tendeth and directeth vs.

With the Sacraments the word of promise to be toynded, not as they toyne it in the Church of Rome, but as Christ did & taught his disciples after him to do.

5 Neither are some to be heard which trauell to fight against this, with a double horned argument rather futtle than sound. Either (say they) we knowe, or we know not, that the word of God which goeth before the sacrament, is the true will of God. If know it, than we learne no new thing of the sacrament which followeth after. If we know it not, then neither will the sacrament teach it: whose whole force standeth in the worde. Whereunto let this briefly be for an answer: that the seales which are hanged at patents and other publike instruments, taken by themselves are nothing, for as much as they should be hanged in vaine if the parchment had nothing written in it: yet they do not therefore not confirme and seale that which is written, when they be added to writings. Neither can they say that this similitude is lately fained by vs, which Paul himselfe vsed, calling circumcision a seale, where he purposely trauelleth to prooue, that circumcision was not righteousnes to Abraham, but a sealing of that covenant, by faith whereof he had already beene iustified before. And what, I beseech you is there that may much offend any man, if we teach that the promise is sealed with Sacraments, when of the promises themselves it is euident that one is confirmed with another? For as euery one is manifeste, so is it more fit to vphold faith. But the Sacraments do both bring most cleare promises, and haue this peculiar more than the word, that they liuely represent them to vs as it were painted out in a table. Neither ought that distinction any thing to moue vs, which is wont to be objected, betwene Sacraments and Seales of patents: that whereas both consist of carnall elements of this world, those cannot suffice or be meete to seale the promises of God, which are spirituall and euerlasting, as these are wont to be hanged to, for sealing of the grants of Princes concerning fading and fraile things. For a faithfull man, when the sacraments are present before his eyes, sticketh not in that fleshly sight, but by those degrees of proportion, which I haue spoken of, he riseth vp with godly consideration to the high mysteries which lie hidden in the Sacraments.

seales, pictures,
pillars, glasses.

In Ioh. hom 89.
Faith.

6 And sith the Lord calleth his promises, covenants: and his Sacraments, seales of covenants: a similitude may well be brought from the covenants of men. What can a sow killed worke, if wordes were not vsed, yea vnlesse they went before: For sowes are many times killed without any more inward or higher mysterie. What can the giuing of a mans right hand do, sith oftentimes hands are matched with enmitie? But when words haue gone before, by such signes the lawes of leagues are stablished, although they were first conceiued, made, and decreed in words. Therefore Sacraments are exercises which make the credit of the word of God certainer vnto vs: and because we are carnal, they are deliuered vnder carnal things, that so they should instruct vs according to the capacity of our dulnes, and guide vs by the hand as school-masters guide children. For this reason Augustine calleth a Sacrament, a visible word: because it representeth the promises of God as it were painted in a table, and setteth them before our sight cunningly expressed and as in an image. Other similitudes also may be brought, whereby Sacraments may be more plainly set out, as if we call them pillars of our Faith. For as a building standeth and resteth vpon the foundation: yet by setting vnder of pillars, it is more surely stablished: so, Faith resteth vpon the word of God, as vpon a foundation: but when Sacraments are added, it stayeth yet more soundly vpon them as vpon pillars. Or if we call them looking glasses, in which we may behold the riches of the grace of God, which he giueth vs. For (as we haue alreadie said) he doth in them manifestly shew himselfe to vs, so much as is giuen to our dulnes to know, and doth more expressly refuse his good will and loue toward vs than by his word.

*Sacraments
though ministered to the wicked, restimonies neuer-theless of the good will of God, and essentially to augment faith.*

7 Neither do they reason fitly enough to the purpose, when they labour to proue hereby that they are not testimonies of the grace of God, because they are also giuen to the wicked, which yet do thereby feele God nothing more fauourable to them, but rather procure to themselves more grievous damnation. For by the same argument neither should the Gospell, which is heard and despised of many, be the testimony of the grace of God: nor yet Christ himselfe, which was scene and knowne of manie, of whom verie fewe received him. The like we may also see in patents. For a great parte of the multitude laugheth at and scorneth that authentike seale, howsoeuer they know that it proceeded from the Prince to seale his will withall: some regarde it not, as a thing not pertaining to them: some also abhorre it: so that considering considering this so egall relation of both, that same similitude which I haue aboue vsed, ought more and more to be liked. Therefore it is certaine that the Lorde doth offer vnto vs mercie & a pledge of his grace both in his holy worde & in the Sacramentes: but the same is not receiued but of them which receiue the worde and Sacramentes with true faith. Like as Christ is offered of the father vnto saluation, to all, yet hee is not acknowledged and receiued of all. Augustine in one place minding to declare the same, saide that the effectualnesse of the worde is showed forth in the Sacrament: not because it is spoken, but because it is beleeued. Therefore Paul, when he speakech to the faithfull, to entreatch of Sacraments that he includeth the communion of Christ in them, as when hee saith: all yee that are baptized, haue put on Christ. Againe, we are all one body and one spirite, which are baptized in Christ. But when he speaketh of the wrongfull vse of the sacraments, hee giueth no more to it than to colde and void figures. Whereby he signifieth, that howeouer the wicked and hypocrites with their puerisenesse do either oppress or daiken or hinder the effect of the grace of God in the Sacraments, yet that withstandeth not but that where and so oft as it pleaseth God, both they may bring a true testimonie of the communicating of Christ, and the Spirit of God himselfe may deliuer and performe that which they promise. We determine therefore that sacraments are truly called testimonies of the grace of God, and as it were certaine seales of the good will which hee beareth toward vs: which by sealing it vnto vs, doe by this meane sustaine, nourish, confirme, and encrease our faith. As for the reasons which some are wont to obiect against this sentence, they are too trifling and weak. They say that if our Faith be good, it cannot bee made better: for they say that it is no faith, but which without shakings, steadfastly, and without withdrawing, resteth vpon the mercie of God. It had bin better for such to pray with the Apostles that the Lorde would encrease their faith, than carelessly to pretende such a perfection of faith, which neuer any of the sons of men hath obtained, nor any shall obtaine in this life. Let them answer, what manner of faith they thinke that he had which saide: I beleue Lorde, helpe my vnbeleuings. For euen that faith, howeouer it was but a begun faith, was a good faith, and might be made better when vnbeleuings were taken away. But they are confuted by no certainer argument than by their owne conscience. For if they confesse themselues sinners, (which whether they will or no they cannot denie) they must needs impute the same to the imperfection of their faith.

8 But (say they) Philip answered the Eunuch, that he might be baptized, if he beleued with all his hart. What place heere hath the confirmation of Baptisme, where faith filleth the whole hart? Againe, I aske them whether they do not feele a good part of their hart void of faith: whether they do not daily acknowledge newe encreases. The heathen man gloried that he waxed old with learning. Therefore we Christians be thrife miserable, if we waxe olde with profiting nothing, whose faith ought to goe forward by all degrees of ages, till it grow into a perfect man. Therefore in this place to beleue with all the hart, is not perfectly to beleue Christ, but only from the hart and with a syncre minde to embrace him: not to bee full with him, but with feruent affection to hunger, and thirst, and sigh toward him. This is the manner of the Scripture, to saie that that is done with the whole hart, which it meaneth to be done syncrely and hartly. Of this sort are these sayings: I haue in all my hart sought thee: I will confesse to thee in all my hart, and such other. As on the other side, where he rebuketh guilefull and deceitfull men, hee vseth to reproch them with hart and hart. Then they say further, that if faith be encreased by Sacraments, the holie Ghost is giuen in vaine, whose strength and woike it is to begin, maintaine, and make perfect faith. To whom indeede I graunt, that faith is the proper and whole worke of the holie Ghost, by whom being enlightened we knowe God and the treasure of his goodnesse, and without whose light our minde is so blinde, that it can see nothing, so senselesse, that it can smell nothing of spirituall things. But for one benefit of God which they set forth, we consider three. For first the Lord teacheth and instructeth vs with his word: then he strengtheneth vs with Sacraments: last of all he shineth into our mindes with the light of his holie spirit, and openeth an entry for the word and sacraments into our hearts, which otherwise should but strike our eares, and be present before our eies, and nothing moue the inward parts.

are said to con-firme faith.*

9 Wherefore as touching the confirmation and increase of faith, I would haue the reader warned (which I thinke I haue already in plaine words expressed) that I do so asseigne that ministerie to the sacraments, not as though I thought that there is perpetually in them I wote not what secret force, by which they may of themselues be able to further or confirme faith: but because they are ordaind of the Lord to this end, that they should serue to the stablishing and encreasing of faith. But then onely they do truely performe their office, when that inward schoolemaster the spirit is come to them, with whose onely power both the hearts are peared, and affections are moued, and the entrie is set open for the sacraments into our soules. If he be absent, Sacraments can do no more to our minds, than if either the brightnesse of the sunne should shine vpon blind eyes, or a voyce sound to deafe eares. Therefore I so make diuision betwene the spirit and sacraments, that the power of working remaine with the spirit, and to the sacraments be left onely the ministracion, yea and the same voyde and trifling without the working of the spirit: but of much effectualnesse, when he inwardly worketh and putteth forth his force. Now it is plaine in what sort according to this sentence, a godly minde is confirmed in the faith by sacraments: that is to say, euen as the eyes see by the brightnesse of the Sunne, and the eares heare by the sound of a voyce: of which neither the eyes should anie whit perceiue any light, vnlesse they had a sight in themselues that might naturallie be enlightened, and the eares should in vaine be knocked at with anie crying what-fouer it were, vnlesse they were naturally made and fit to heare. But if it be true, which ought at once to be determined among vs, that what the sight worketh in our eies to seeing of the light, what the hearing worketh in our eares to the perceiuing of a voyce, the same is the worke of the holy Ghost in our hearts, both to the conceiuing, and sustaining, and cherishing and stablishing of faith: then both these things do likewise follow: that the sacraments doe nothing at all profite without the power of the holy Ghost: and that nothing withstandeth but that in hearts already taught of that schoolemaster, they may make faith both stronger and more encreased. Onely this difference there is, that the power of hearing and seeing is naturally set in our eares and eies: but Christ beside the measure of nature doth by speciall grace worke the same in our mindes.

10 Whereby those obiections also, which comber some men, are dissolved: That if we ascribe to creatures either the increase or confirmation of faith, there is wrong done to the Spirit of God, whom we ought to acknowledge the onely author thereof. For neither do we in the meane time take from him either the praise of confirming or increasing it: but rather we asseigne, that euen this that he encreaseth and confirmeth faith, is nothing else but with his inward enlightening to prepare our mindes to receiue that confirming which is set forth by the sacraments. But if it be yet too darkely spoken, it shall be made very cleare by a similitude which I will bring. If thou purposie with words to perswade a man to do any thing, thou wilt search out all the reasons, whereby he may be drawn to thy opinion, and may be in a manner subdued to obey thy counsell. But thou hast hitherto nothing preuailed, vnlesse he likewise haue a piercing and sharpe iudgement, whereby he may weigh what pith is in thy reasons, vnlesse also he haue a tractable wit and readie to harken to teaching: finally vnlesse he haue conceiued such an opinion of thy faithfulness and wisdom, as may be to him like a certaine foreiudgement to cause him to subscribe.

For both there are manie stubborne heads, which a man can neuer bowe with any reasons: and also where credite is suspected, where authoritie is despised, little good is done euen with the willing to learne. On the other side let all those things be present, they will truly bring to passe that the hearer, to whom thou giuest counsell, will obey the selfe same counsels which otherwise he would haue laughed to scorne. The same worke also the spirite worketh in vs. For least the word should beate our eares in vaine, least the Sacraments should strike our eies in vaine, he sheweth vs that it is God which speaketh therein, he softenech the stubbornnes of our heart, and frameth it to the obedience which is due to the word of the Lord. Finally he conueieth those outward words and sacraments from the eares into the soule. Therefore both the word and the Sacraments do confirme our faith, when they set before our eies the good will of the heavenly father toward vs, by knowledge of whom both the whole stedfastnes of our faith standeth fast, and the strength of it encreaseth: the spirit confirmeth it, when in engrauing the same confirmation in our minds he maketh it effectuall. In the meane time the father of lights can not be forbidden, but as he enlighteneth the bodily eies with the beames of the sunne, so he may enlighten our minds with sacraments, as with a brightnesse set meane betweene.

11 Which proprietie the Lord taught that there was in his outward word, when in the parable he calleth it feede. For as feede, if it fall vpon a desert and vtiled peece of ground, will do nothing but die: but if it be throwen vpon arable land well manured and tilled, it will bring forth her fruit with very good encrease: so the word of God, if it light vpon a stiffe necke, it will grow barren as that which is sown vpon sand: but if it light vpon a soule manured with the hand of the heavenly spirit, it will be most fruitfull. But if there be like reason of feede and of the word: as we say that out of feede come both springeth and encreaseth, and groweth vp to ripentisse: why may we not say that faith taketh out of the word of God both beginning, encrease, and perfection? Paul verie well expresth both these things in sundry places. For when he goeth about to put the Corinthians in remembrance how effectually God vs'd his trauaile, he glorieth that he hath the ministerie of the Spirite, as though the power of the holic Ghost were with an vnseparable knot ioyned with his preaching, to enlighten and thoroughly moue the minde. But in another place when he munieth to admonish them, of what force the word of God is of it selfe being preached by man, he compareth the ministers them selues to husbandmen, which when they haue bestowed their labour and trauaile in tilling the earth haue no more to do. But what should tilling, and sowing, and watering profit vnlesse that which is sown should receiue helpe by heavenly benefite? Therefore he concludeth, that both he that planteth and he that watereth are nothing: but that all things are to be ascribed to God, which alone giueth the encrease. Therefore the Apostles do in their preaching vtter the power of the spirit, so far as God vsieth the instruments ordeined by himselfe to the setting forth of his spirituall grace. Yet we must keepe still that distinction, that we remember, what man is able to do by himselfe, and what is proper to God.

12 Sacraments are so confirmations of our faith, that many times when the Lord meaneth to take away the confidence of the very things that are by him promised in the Sacraments, he taketh away the sacraments themselues. When he spoyleth and thrusteth away Adam from the gift of immortalitie, he saith: Let him not eate of the fruite of life, lest he liue for euer. What saith he? Could that fruite restore to Adam his vncorruption, from which he was now fallen? No. But this is all one as if he had saide: Least he should enioy a vaine confidence if he keepe still the signe of my promise, let that be shaken away from him which might bring him some hope of immortalitie. After this manner when the Apostle exhorteth the Ephesians to remember that they were forein gifts of the testaments, strangers from the fellowship

As by the sacraments, so also by the word, faith sown encreaseth & brought to ripenes through the forcible operation of the spirite.

Cap. 14. Of the outward meanes

of Israel, without God, without Christ, he saith, that they were not partakers of Circumcision. Whereby he doth (by figure of transnomination) signifie that they were excluded from the promise it selfe, which had not receiued the signe of the promise. To their other obiection, that the glory of God is conueyed to creatures, to whom so much power is ascribed, & that thereby it is so far diminiued, we haue in readines to answer that we set no power in creatures. Onely thus we say, that God vseth meanes and instruments, which he himselfe seeth to be expedient: that all things may serue his glory, forasmuch as he is Lord and Iudge of all. Therefore as by bread and other nourishments he feedeth our bodie: as by the Sunne he enlightneth the world: as by fire he warmeth: yet neither Bread, nor the Sunne, nor Fire, are any thing but so farre as by those instrumentes he doth distribute his blessinges vnto vs: so spiritually he nourisheth Faith by the Sacramentes, whose onely office is to set his promises before our eyes to be looked vpon, yea to be pledges vnto vs of them. And as it is our ductie to fasten none of our affiance in other creatures, which by the liberalitie and bountifullnesse of God are ordained to our vses, and by the ministerie whereof he giueth vs his giftes, nor to haue them in admiration, and praise them as causes of our good: so neither ought our confidence to sticke fast in the Sacraments, nor the glory of God to be remooued vnto them: but leauing all things, both our faith and confession ought to rise vp to him the Author both of the Sacraments and of all things.

The word Sacrament translated from militarie vnto Christian profession: the power which Sacraments haue in augmenting Faith not therby disprooued.

13 Whereas some bring an argument out of the very name of a Sacrament, it is nothing strong. A Sacrament (say they) where as it hath among allowed Authors many significations, yet it hath but one which agreeth with the signes: that is, whereby it signifieth that solemne oath which the souldier maketh to his Captaine when he entrencheth into profession of a souldier. For as by that oath of warfare new souldiers doe binde their Faith to the Captaine, and professe to be his souldiers: so by our signes we professe Christ our Captaine, and doe testifie that we serue vnder his banner. They adde similitudes to make therby the matter more plaine. As a gowne made the Romanes seuerally knowne from the Greekes which did weare clokes: as the very degrees of men at Rome were discerned by their severall signes: the degree of Senators from the degree of Knights, by purple coate and picked shooes: againe a Knight from a Commoner, by a ring: so we beare our signes that may make vs seuerally knowne from prophane men. But by the things aboue said it is euident enough that the old writers, which gaue to the signes the name of Sacraments, had no regard how this word was vsed among Latine writers, but for their owne purpose faired this new signification, whereby they signified onely holy signes. But if we will search the matter more deeply, it may seeme that they haue with the same relation applied this word to such a signification, wherewith they haue remooued the name of Faith to that sense wherein it is now vsed. For whereas Faith is a truth in performing promites: yet they haue called Faith an assurednes, or sure persuasion which is had of the truth it selfe. Likewise whereas a Sacrament is the Souldiers part whereby he voweth himselfe to his Captaine: they haue made it the Captaines part, whereby he receiveth souldiers into roomes of seruice. For by the Sacrament the Lord doth promise that he will be our God, and that we shall be his people. But we passe over such subtleties: for asmuch as I thinke I haue prooued with argumentes plaine enough, that they had respect to nothing else but to signifie that these are signes of holy and spirituall things. We receiue in deede the similitudes which they bring of outward tokens: but we allow not that that which is the last point in the Sacraments, is by them set for the chiefe, yea and onely thing. But this is the first point, that they should serue our faith before God: the later point that they should testifie our confession before men. According to this later consideration those similitudes haue place. But in the meane time let that first point remaine: because otherwile (as we haue already prooued the mysteries should be but colde, vnlesse they were helps to our faith, and additions to doctrine ordered to the same vse and end.

14 Againe we must be warned, that as these men do weaken the force, and vtterly ouerthrow the vse of sacraments: so on the contrarie side there be some, which saie to sacraments I wot not what secret vertues, which are no where read to be put in them by God. By which error the simple and vnskillfull are dangerously deceiued, while they are both taught to seeke the gifts of God where they cannot be found, and are by little and little drawn away from God, to embrace mere vanitie in steede of his veritie. For the Sophistical schooles haue taught with great consent, that the Sacraments of the new lawe, that is to say those which are now in vse in the Christian Church, do iustifie and giue grace, so that we do not lay a stop of deadly sinne. It cannot be expressed how pernicious and pestilent this opinion is, and so much the more, because in many ages heretofore, to the great losse of the Church, it hath preuailed in a great part of the world. Truly it is vtterly diuelish. For when it promiseth righteousnes without faith, it driueth soules headlong into destruction: then because it fetcheth the cause of righteousnes from the sacraments, it bindeth the miserable mindes of men aleadie of their owne accord to much bending to the earth, with this superstition that they rather rest in the sight of a bodily thing than of God himselfe. Which two things I would to God we had not so proued in experience, so little neede they any long prooue. But what is a sacrament taken without faith, but the most certaine destruction of the Church? For whereas nothing is to be looked for thereof without the promise, and the promise doeth no lesse threaten wrath to the vnfaithfull, than it offereth grace to the faithfull: he is deceiued that thinketh that there is any more giuen to him by the sacraments, than that which being offered by the word of God, he receiueth by faith. Whereupon another thing also is gathered, that the assurance of saluation hangeth not vpon the partaking of the sacrament, as though Iustification consisted therein: which we know to be reposed in Christ only, and to be communicated vnto vs no lesse by the preaching of the Gospel, than by the sealing of the sacrament: and that without that it cannot wholly stand. So true is that which Augustine also writeth, that inuisible sanctification may be without a visible signe, and againe that a visible signe may be without true sanctification. For (as he also writeth in another place) men do put on Christ sometime vntil the receiuing of a sacrament, sometime euē vntil the sanctificatiō of life. And that first point may be cōmon both to good and to euil: but this other is proper to the good & godly.

15 Hereupon cometh that distinction if it be well vnderstanded, which the same Augustine hath often noted, betweene a sacrament, and the thing of the sacrament. For it not only signifieth, that the figure and trueth are there contained, but that they do not so hang together, but that they may be seuered: and that euen in the verie conioyning the thing must alway be discerned from the signe, that we giue not to the one that which belongeth to the other. He speaketh of the separation, when he writeth that the sacraments do worke in the only elect that which they figure. Againe, when he writeth thus of the Iewes: When the sacraments were common to all, the grace was not common, which is the power of the sacraments. So now also the washing of regeneration is common to all: but the grace it selfe, whereby the members of Christ are regenerate with their head, is not common to all. Againe, in another place of the Supper of the Lord, We also at this day receiue visible meate. But the sacrament is one thing, and the power of the sacrament another thing. What is this, that many receiue of the altar and dy, and in receiuing do dye? For the Lords meate is poyson to Iudas: not because he receiued an euill thing, but because he being euill receiued a good thing euillie. A little after: The sacrament of this thing, that is of the vnitie of the bodie and blood of Christ, is somewhere prepared on the Lordes table dayly, somewhere by certaine distances of dayes: and thereof is receiued vnto life to some, & vnto destruction to some. But the thing it selfe wherof it is a sacrament, is receiued vnto life to al men, but vnto destruction to no man, who-foeuer is partaker of it. And a little before he had said, He shall not die which eateth: but he which pertaineth to the power of the sacrament, not to the visible sacrament: which eateth within, not without: which eateth with heart, not he which presseth with tooth. Thus you heare euery where, that a sacrament is so seuered from his owne truth by the vnworthines of the receiuer; that there remaineth nothing but a vaine and vnprofitable figure. But that thou maist haue not a signe voide of truth, but the thing with the signe, thou must conceiue by faith the word which is there enclosed. So how much thou shalt by the sacraments profite in communicating of Christ, so much profit shalt thou take of them.

Christ the substance of all sacraments & the onely cause of righteousness: the sacraments effectually meanes to nourish the knowledge of Christ, though the wicked lacking faith be not nourished by them.
Lib. 4. sentent. dist. 1.

16 If this be somewhat darke because of the shortnes, I will set it out in more words. I say that Christ is the matter, or (if thou wilt) the substance of al sacraments: for as much as in him they haue all their perfectnesse, and do promise nothing without him. So much lesse tolerable is the error of Peter Lombard, which doth expressly make them causes of righteousness and saluation, wherof they be parts. Therefore bidding all causes farewell which mans wit doth fame to it selfe, we ought to stay in this one cause. Therefore how much we be by their ministerie holpen to the nourishing, confirming, & encreasing of the true knowledge of Christ in vs, and to the possessing of him more fully, and to the enjoying of his richesse, so much effectualnesse they haue with vs. But that is done when we doe with true faith receiue that which is there offered. Do the wicked then (wilt thou say) bring to passe by their vnthankfulness, that the ordinances of God be voide and turne to nothing? I answer that that which I haue saide, is not so to be taken, as though the force and truth of the sacrament did hang vpon the state or will of him that receiue it. For that which God hath ordained remaineth it selfe and keepeth ful his nature, howfoeuer men do vary. But sith it is one thing to offer, an other to receiue: nothing withstandeth but that the signe hallowed by the word of God may be indeed that which it is called, and keepe his owne force: and yet that there come thereby no profite to an euill doer and wicked man. But Augustine doth in few words well affoile this question. If (saith he) thou receiuest carnally, it ceaseth not to be spirituall: but it is not to thee. But as Augustine hath in the afore said places shewed that a sacrament is a thing nothing worth, if it be seuered from the truth therof: so in another place he giueth warning that euen in the verie conioyning needeth a distinction, lest we sticke too much in the outward signe. As (saith he) to follow the letter, and to take the signes in steede of the things, is a pointe of seruile weakenesse: so to expounde the signes vnprofitable is a point of euill wandring error. He nameth two faults which are here to be auoided: The one when we so take the signes as though they were giuen in vaine, and when with abacing or diminishing their secret significations by our enuiousnesse, we bring to passe that they bring vs no profit at all. The other, when in not raising our minds beyond the visible signe, we giue away to the Sacrament the praise of all those good things which are not giuen vs but of Christ onely, and that by the holy Ghost, which maketh vs partakers of Christ himselfe: and in deede by the helpe of the outward signes: which if they allure vs to Christ, when they be writted an other way, the whole profit of them is vnworthily ouerthrowen.

Hom. in Ioh. 26.
Lib. 3. de doct. Christ. cap. 9.

Christ set forth as by the word so by the sacraments, neither available without faith, to whom they are available in them they werke not by

17 Wherefore let this remaine certaine, that there is no other office of the sacraments than of the word of God: which is to offer and set forth Christ vnto vs, and in him the treasures of heavenly grace: but they auaille or profit nothing, but being receiued by faith: euen as wine, or oyle, or any other liquor, though you poure it on largely, yet it will run beside and perish, vnlesse the vessels mouth be open to receiue it, and the vessel though it be wet round about on the outside, shall neuertheless remaine empty and voide within. Beside this we must beware, lest those things which which haue been written, by the olde writers somewhat too gloriously to amplify the dignitie of sacraments, which leade vs away into an error neere to this: namely that we should thinke that there is some secret power knit and fastened to the sacraments, that they may of themselves giue vs the graces of the holy Ghost, like as wine is giuen in a cup: whereas onely this office is appointed to them by God, to testify and stablish to vs the good will of God towards vs, and doe profite no further vnlesse the holy Ghost ioyne himselfe to them, which may open our mindes and hartes, and make vs partakers of this testimonie, wherein alio doe cleerely appeere diuers and feueral graces of God. For the sacraments, as we haue aboue touched, are that thing to vs of God, which to men are messengers of ioyfull things, or earnestes in stablishing of bargaines: which doe not of themselves giue any grace, but doe tell and shew vs, and (as they be earnestes and tokens,) doe ratifie vnto vs those things that are giuen vs by the liberalitie of God. The holy Ghost (whom the sacraments doe not in common without difference bring to all men, but whome the Lord peculiarly giueth to them that be his) is he that bringeth the graces of God with him, which giueth to the sacraments place in vs, which maketh them to bring forth fruite. But although we doe not denie that God himselfe with the most present power of his Spirit is present with his owne institution, least the ministation which he hath ordained of the sacraments should be fruitlesse and vaine: yet we affirme that the inward grace of the Spirit, as it is seuered from the outward ministerie, so ought to be feuerally weighed and considered. God therefore truly performeth in deede whatsoever he promiseth and figurth in signes: neither doe the signes want their effect, that the author of them may be proued true and faithfull. The question here is onely whether God worketh by his owne and by inward power (as they call it) or do resigne his office to outward signes. But we affirme, that whatsoever instruments he vse, his original working is nothing hindered thereby. When this is taught concerning the sacraments, both their dignities is honorably set out, & their vse is plainly shewed, & their profitableness is abundantly reposed, and the best meane in all these things is retained, that neither any thing be giuen to them which ought not, nor again any thing be taken from them which is not conuenient to be taken from them. In the meane time that fained deuise is taken away, whereby the cause of iustification and power of the holy Ghost is inclosed in elements as in vessels or waggons, and that principall force which hath bin omitted of other is expressly set out. Heere also it is to be noted, that God inwardly worketh that which the minister figurth and testifieth by outward doing: least that be drawn to a mortall man, which God claimeth to himselfe alone. The same thing also doth Augustine wisely touch. How (saith he) doth both Moses sanctifie, and God? not Moses for God: but Moses with visible sacraments by his ministerie, but God with inuisible grace by his holy Spirit: where alio is the whole fruite of visible sacraments. For without this sanctification of inuisible grace, what doe those visible sacraments profite?

13 The name of Sacrament, as we haue hitherto entreated of the nature of it, doth generally containe all the signes that euer God gaue to men, to certifye and assure them of the truth of his promises. Those he sometime willed to remaine in naturall things, for time he deliuered them in miracles. Of the first kinde these be examples, as when he gaue to Adam and Eue, the tree of life for an earnest of immortallitie, that they might assure themselves of it, so long as they did eate of the fruite thereof. And when he did set the heauenly bowe for a monument to Noe and his posteritie, that he woulde no more from thence forth destroy the earth with overflowing of water. These Adam and Noe had for sacraments. Not that the tree did giue them immortallitie, which it coulde not giue to it selfe: nor that the Bowe (which is but a striking backe of a sunbeame vpon the clouds against it) was of force to holde in the waters: but because they had a marke grauen in them by the word of God, that they should

should be examples and seales of his testaments. And the tree was a tree before, and the bowe a bowe. When they were written vpon with the worde of God, then a new forme was put into them, that they should begin to be that which they were not before. That no man should thinke these things spoken without cause, the bowe it selfe is at this daie also a witness of that couenant, which God made with Noe: which bowe so oft as we behold, we read this promise of God written in it, that the earth shal neuer be destroyed with ouerflowing of waters. Therefore if any fond Philosopher, to scorne the simplicitie of our faith, doe affirme that such varietie of colours doth naturally arise of reflected beames and a cloude set against them: let vs grant it indeede, but let vs laugh to scorne his senselesse follie, which doth not acknowledge God the Lorde and gouernour of nature: which at his owne will vseth all the elements to the seruice of his owne glorie. If he had imprinted such tokens in the sunne, the starres, the earth, stones, and such like, they should all haue bene sacramentes to vs. Why are not vncoyned and coyned siluer both of one value, sith they are both one metall? euen because the one hath nothing but nature: when it is stricken with a common marke, it is made money, and receiueth a newe valuation. And shall not God be able to marke his creatures with his worde, that they may be made sacraments, which before were naked elements? Of the second kinde these were examples, when he shewed to Abraham a light in a smoking ouen: when he watered the fleece with dewe, the earth remaining drie: againe he watered the earth, the fleece being vntouched, to promise victorie to Gideon: when he drew the shadowe of the diall ix. lines backwarde, to promise safete to Ezechias. These things, when they were done to relieue and stablsh the weakenes of their faith, were then also sacraments.

19 But our present purpose is, to discourse peculiarly of those sacramentes, which the Lorde willed to be ordinarie in his Church, to nourish his worshippers and seruants into one faith and the confession of one faith. For (to vse the wordes of Augustine) men can bee congealed together into no name of religion either true or false, vnlesse they be bounde together with some fellowship of visible signes and sacraments. Sith therefore the most good father foresawe this necessitie, he did from the beginning ordeine certaine exercises of godlinesse for his seruants, which afterwarde Satan by turning them to wicked and superstitious worshippings, hath manie waies depraued and corrupted. Heereupon came those solemne professions of the the Gentiles into their holy orders, and other bastarde vsages: which although they were full of errour and superstition, yet they also were therewith a prooffe that men coulde not in profession of religion bee without such outward signes. But because they neither were grounded vpon the word of God, nor were referred to that truth wherunto all signes ought to be directed, they are vnwoorthie to be rehearsed where mention is made of the holy signes which are ordeined of God, and haue not swarued from their foundation, that is, that they should be helpes of true godlines. They consist not of bare signes, as were the bowe and the tree, but vpon ceremonies: or rather the signes that be here giuen are ceremonies. But as it is about saide, that they be on the Lordes behalfe testimonies of grace and saluation: so they bee againe on our behalfe markes of profession, by which we openly sweare to the name of God, for our partes binding our faith vnto him. Therefore Chrysostome in one place firstly calleth them couenantings wherby God bindeth himselfe in league with vs, & we be bound to purenesse and holinesse of life, because heere is made a mutuall forme of couenancing betweene God and vs. For as the Lorde therein promiseth that hee will cancell and blot out whatsoever guiltinesse and penaltie we haue gathered by offending, and doth reconcile vs to himselfe in his onely begotten sonne: so we againe on our behalves doe by this profession binde our selues vnto him to the following of godlinesse and innocencie: so that a man may rightly saie that such sacraments are ceremonies, ceremonies, by which God will exercise his people first to the nourishing, stirring vp, and strengthening of faith inwardly, then to the testifying of religion before men.

20 And euen these sacraments also were diuers, after the diuers order of time, according to the distribution whereby it pleaseth the Lorde to shewe himselfe after this or that manner to men. For to Abraham and his posteritie Circumcision was commanded whereunto afterward purifyinges and Sacrifices, and other Ceremonies were added out of the lawe of Moses. These were the Sacraments of the Iewes vntill the coming of Christ: at which coming those being abrogate, two Sacraments were ordained, which now the Christian Church vseth, Baptisme, and the Supper of the Lorde. I speake of those that were ordained for the vse of the whole Church. For as for the laying on of hands, whereby the ministers of the Church are entred into their office, as I do not vnwillingly suffer it to be called a Sacrament, so I do not reckon it among the ordinary sacraments. As for the rest which are commonly called sacraments, what they are to be accounted, we shall see by and by. Howbeit the olde Sacraments also had respect to the same marke, wherunto ours do tend, that is, to direct and in a maner lead by the hand to Christ: or rather as images to represent him, and shew him forth to be knowen. For whereas we haue already taught, that they are certaine seales wherewith the promises of God are sealed: and where it is most certaine, that there was neuer offered any promise of God to men but in Christ: that they may teach vs of some promise of God, they must needs shew Christ. Wherunto pertaineth that heauenly pattern of the tabernacle and of the worshipping in the law, which was giuen to Moses in the mount. One onely difference there is, that those did shadow out Christ being promised, when he was yet looked for: these doe testify him alreadie giuen and deliuered.

21 When these things shall all be particularly and ech one severally declared, they shall be made much plainer. Circumcision was to the Iewes a signe, whereby they were put in minde, that whatsoever cometh of the seede of man, that is to say the whole nature of man is corrupt, and hath neede of proyming. Moreover it was a teaching, and token of remembrance whereby they shoulde confirme themselves in the promise giuen to Abraham, concerning that blessed seede in whom all the nations of the earth were to be blessed, from whom they had their owne blessing to be looked for. Nowe that healthfull seede (as wee are taught of Paul) was Christ, in whom alone they hoped that they shoulde recouer that which they had lost in Adam. Wherefore Circumcision was to them the same thing which Paul saith that it was to Abraham, namely the seale of the righteousnes of faith: that is to saie, the seale whereby they should be more certainly assured, that their faith wherewith they looked for that seede, shoulde be accounted to them of God for righteousnes. But we shall vpon a better occasion in another place go through with the comparison of Circumcision and Baptisme. Baptisinges and purifyinges did set before their eyes their owne vncleanness, filthinesse and pollution, wherewith they were defiled in their owne nature: but they promised another washing, whereby all their filthinesse shoulde be wiped and washed away. And this washing was Christ, with whose blood we being washed do bring his cleannes into the sight of God, that it may hide all our deflings. Their sacrifices did accue them of their owne wickednes, and therewithal did teach, that it was necessarie that there shoulde be some satisfaction which shoulde be paide to the iudgement of God. That therefore there shoulde be some one chiefe bishop, a mediatur betweene God and men, which shoulde satisfie God by shedding of bloude, and by offering of a sacrifice which shoulde suffice for the forgienes of sins. This chiefe Priest was Christ: he himselfe shed his owne blood: he himselfe was the Sacrifice: for hee offered himselfe obedient to his father vnto death: by which obedience he tooke away the disobedience of man, which had prouoked the displeasure of God.

The sacraments of the new testament baptisme and the supper of the Lord, wherein Christi (buncks) more cleerely shew in the sacraments of the olde.
1. Iohn. 5. 6.

22 As for our sacraments, they doe so much more cleerely present Christ vnto vs, as he was more neerely shewed to men, since he hath beene truly deliuered of his father such as he had beene promised. For baptisme doth testifie vnto vs that we are cleansed and washed, the Supper of thanksgyuing testifieth that we be redeemed. In water, is figured washing: in blood, satisfaction. These two things are founde in Christ, which (as Iohn saith) came in water and blood, that is to say that hee might cleanse and redeeme. Of which thing the Spirit of God also is a witness. Yea there are three witnesses in one, Water, Blood, and Spirit. In water and blood we haue a testimonie of cleansing and redeeming: but the Spirit the principall witness bringeth vnto vs assured credite of such witness. This high mysterie hath notably well beene shewed vs in the crosse of Christ, when water and blood flowed out of his holy side: which side for that cause Augustine rightfully called the fountaine of our Sacraments: of which yet we must intreate somewhat more at large. There is no doubt but that more plentifull grace also of the Spirit doth here shew forth it selfe if you compare time with time. For that pertaineth to the glory of the kingdom of Christ, as we gather out of many places, but specially out of the 7. Chapter of Iohn. In which sense we must take that saying of Paul, that vnder the law were shadowes, but in Christ is the body. Neither is it his meaning to spoile of their effect the testimonies of grace, in which Gods will was in the olde time to prouue himselfe to the Fathers a true speaker, euen as at this day he doth to vs in Baptisme and in the holy Supper. But onely his purpose was by way of comparison to magnifie that which was giuen vs, least any should thinke it maruellous, that the Ceremonies of the law were abolished by the coming of Christ.

Too great a difference made by Schoolemen betweene the Sacraments of the law and ours.
1. Cor. 10. 3.

23 But that same schoole doctrine (as I may also briefly touch this by the way) is viterly to be hissed out, whereby there is noted so great a difference betweene the Sacraments of the old and new law, as though those did nothing but shadow out the grace of God, and these doe presently giue it. For the Apostle speaketh no lesse honorably of those than of these, when he teacheth that the Fathers did eate the same spirituall meate, which we eate, and expoundeth that same meate to be Christ. Who dare make that an emptie signe, which deliuered to the Iewes a true communion of Christ? And the gronde of the cause which the Apostle there handleth, doth plainly fight on our side. For, that no man trusting vpon a colde knowledge of Christ, and emptie title of Christianitie, and outward tokens, should presume to despise the iudgement of God: hee sheweth forth examples of Gods seueritie to be seene in the Iewes: that we should know that the same paines which they haue suffered, hang ouer vs, if we follow the same faults. Now that the comparison may be fit, it behoued that he should shew that there is no vnequalitie betweene vs and them in those good things whereof he did forbid vs to boast falsely. Therefore first hee maketh vs equall in the Sacraments, and leaueth to vs not so much as any small peece of prerogatiue, that might encourage vs to hope of escaping vnpunished. Neither verily is it lawfull to giue any more to our Baptisme, than he in another place giueth to circumcision, when he calleth it the seale of the righteousnesse of faith. Whatsoeuer therefore is at this day giuen vs in our Sacraments, the same thing the Iewes in olde time receiued in theirs, that is to say, Christ with his spirituall riches. What power our Sacraments haue, the same they also felt in theirs: that is to say, that they were to them seales of Gods good will towards them, into the hope of eternall saluation. If they had beene apt expositors of the Epistle to the Hebrues, they would not haue so been blinded. But when they reade there, that sinnes were not cleansed by the Ceremonies of the law, yea that the old shadowes had no auailing force to righteousnesse: they neglecting the comparison which is there handled, while they tooke holde of this one thing, that the lawe of it selfe nothing profited the followers of it, thought simple that the figures were void of truth. But the Apostles meaning is to bring

Rom. 4. 11.

Heb. 10. 1.

bring the ceremoniall lawe to nothing, vntill it come to Christ, vpon whom alone hangeth all the effectuallnes of it.

24 But they will obiekt those things which are read in Paul concerning the circūcision of the letter, that it is in no estimation with God, that it giueth nothing, that it is vaine. For such sayings seeme to presse it downe farre beneath Baptisme. Not so. For the verie same might rightfully be said of Baptisme. Yea and also the same is said, first of Paul himselfe, where he sheweth that God regardeth not the outward washing whereby we enter into profession of religion, vnlesse the minde within be both clesed and continue in cleanness to the ende: againe of Peter, when he testifieth that the truth of Baptisme standeth not in the outwarde washing, but in a good witnessing of conscience. But he seemeth also in another place vterly to despise the circūcision made with hand, when he cōpareth it with the circūcision of Christ. I answer that euen in this place nothing is abated of the dignitie of it. Paul there disputeth against them, which required it as necessarie when it was nowe abrogate. Therefore he warneth the faithfull, that leauing the old shadowes they should stand fast in the truth. These maisters (saith he) instantly call vpon you, that your bodies may be circūcised. But yee are spirituallly circūcised according to the soule and body. Yee haue therefore the deliuerance of the thing indeede, which is much better than the shadow. A man might take exception to the contrary and say that the figure is not therefore to be despised because they had the thing in deede: forasmuch as the putting off of the olde man, of which he there spake, was also among the fathers, to whom yet outward circūcision had not bin superfluous: He preuenteth this obiection, when he by and by addeth, that the Colossians were buried with Christ by Baptisme. Whereby he signifieth that at this day baptisme is the same to Christians, which circūcision was to the old people: and therefore that circūcision cannot bee enioyned to Christians without wrong done to Christ.

25 But that which followeth, and which I euen now alleaged, is harder to assoile, that all the Iewish ceremonies were shadowes of things to come, and that in Christ is the body: but most harde of all is that which is intreated in many Chapters of the Epistle to the Hebrues, that the blood of beastes, attained not to consciences: that the law had a shadow of good things to come, not an image of things: that the followers of it obtained no perfection of the Ceremonies of Moses and such other. I goe backe to that which I haue already touched, that Paul doth not therefore make the ceremonies shadowish, because they had no sounde thing in them: but because the fulfilling of them was after a certaine maner hanged in suspence vntill the deluering of Christ. Againe I say that this is to be vnderstanded not of the effectuallnes, but rather of the maner of signifying. For till Christ was manifestly shewed in the flesh, all the signes did shadowe him out as absent, howsoever hee did inwardly vtter to the faithfull the presence of his power and of himselfe. But this we ought chiefly to mark, that in all those places Paul doth not speake simplie, but by way of contention. Because he strued with the false Apostles, which woulde haue geelines to consist in the ceremonies onely without any respect of Christ: to confute them, it sufficeth onelie to intreate, of what value ceremonies are by themselves. This marke also the author of the Epistle to the Hebrues followed. Let vs therefore remember that there is dispured of ceremonies, not as they be taken in their owne and naturall signification, but as they be wrested to a false and wrongfull exposition: not of the lawfull vse of them, but of the abuse of superstition. What maruel is it therefore if ceremonies being seuered from Christ, are vnclodded of all force? For all signes whatsoeuer they be, are brought to nought, when the thing signified is taken away. So when Christ had to do with them which thought that Manna was nothing else but meate for the belly, hee applieth his speech to their grosse opinion, and saith that he ministrereth better meate, which may feede soules to hope of immortalitie. But if you require a plainer solution, the summe of all tenderh to this : First, that all that furniture of ceremonies, which was in the law of Moses, is a vanishing thing and of no value, vnlesse it be directed to Christ. Secondly, that they so had respect to Christ, that when hee at length was manifestly shewed in the flesh, they had their fulfilling. Finally that it behooued that they should be taken away by his comming, euen as a shadow vanissheth away in the cleare light of the sun. But because I do yet defer longer discourse of that matter vnto that place where I haue purposed to compare baptisme with circumcision, therefore I do now more sparingly touch it.

What is spoken in Scripture to diminish the estimation of circūcision, the same in like occasion and sense might as well bee said of baptisme.

In what sense the fathers haue so much extolled the sacraments of the new testament above the old.
In prooem. nar.
Pia. 73. quæst. super. Nam. c. 33.
Lib. 9. c. 14.

26 Perhaps also those immeasurable praises of sacraments, which are read in old writers concerning our signes, deliued those miserable Sophisters. As this of Augustine. That the Sacraments of the old law did onely promise the Sauiour, but ours do giue saluation. When they marked not that these and such other formes of speaking were spoken : they also published their excessiue doctrines, but in a cleane contrarie sense from the writing of the old fathers. For Augustine meant no other thing in that place, than as the same Augustine writeth in another place. That the Sacraments of the law of Moses did foretell of Christ, but ours do tell of him present. And against Faustus. That those were promises of things to be fulfilled, these were tokens of things fulfilled : as if he should say, that those figured him when he was looked for, but ours do as it were shew him present which hath bene already deliuered. Moreover he speaketh of the manner of signifying, as also he sheweth in another place. The law (saith he) and the Prophets had Sacraments, foretelling of a thing to come : but the Sacraments of our time do testifie that that is already come, which those did declare to be to come. But what he thought of the thing and effectuallnesse, he expoundeth in many places : as when hee saith, that the Sacraments of the Iewes were in signes, diuers : but in the thing signified, equal with ours : diuers in visible forme, but equal in spirituall power. Again : in diuers signes is all one faith : so in diuers signes, as in diuers words : because words change their sounds by times : and truly wordes are nothing but signes. The Fathers did drinke the same spirituall drinke, for they drunke not the same bodily drinke. See ye therefore, faith remaining one, the signes varied. To them the rocke was Christ : vs that is Christ which is set vpon the altar. And they dranke for a great Sacrament, the water flowing out of the rocke : what we drinke, the faithfull know. If thou consider the visible forme they drunke an other thing : if an vnderstandable signification they drunke the same spirituall drinke. In an other place, in the mysterie the same is their meate and drinke which is ours : but the same in signification, not in forme : because the selfe same Christ was figured to them in the rocke, and shewed to vs in the flesh. Howbeit in this behalfe also we grant that there is some difference. For both sacraments do testifie that the fatherly good wil of God and the graces of the holy Ghost are offered vs in Christ : but our sacraments testifie it more clearly and brightly. In both is a deliueing of Christ : but in these more plenteous & fuller, namely as that difference of the old & new Testament beareth, of which we haue intreated before. And this is it that the same Augustine meant (whom we more often alieage as the best and faithfulllest wimes of all the old writers) where he teacheth that when Christ was reuealed, sacraments were ordained both in number fewer, in signification higher, in force more excellent. Of this thing also it is expedient that the readers briefly be warned, that whatsoeuer the sophisters haue triflingly taught concerning the worke wrought, is not onely false, but disagreeeth with the nature of the Sacraments, which God hath ordained, that the faithfull being void and needie of all good things should bring nothing thither but beggerie. Whereupon followeth that in receiuing them, these men do nothing whereby they may deserue praise : or that in doing (which in this their respect is mecrely passiue) no worke can be ascribed vnto them.

The xv. Chapter.

Of Baptisme.

Baptisme is a signe of the entring wherewith we are receiued into fellowship of the Church, that being grafted into Christ, wee may be reckened among the children of God. Now it was giuen vs of God to this end, (which I haue taught to be common to all the mysteries) first, that it should serue to our Faith with him, and to our confession before men. We will orderly declare the manner of both purposes. Baptisme bringeth three things to our Faith, which also must be seuerally intreated of. This is the first which the Lord setteth out vnto vs, that it should be a token & prooue of our cleansing: or (to expresse my minde better) it is like to a certaine sealed charter, whereby he confirmeth vnto vs, that all our finnes are so defaced, cancelled, and blotted out, that they may neuer come in his sight, nor be rehearsed, nor be imputed. For he willeth that all they that beleue, should be baptised into forgiveness of finnes. Therefore they which thought that baptisme is nothing else but a marke and token whereby we professe our religion before men, as souldiers beare the conuance of their Captaine for a marke of their profession, weigh not that which was the cheefe thing in Baptisme. That is this, that we should receiue it with this promise, that whoe soeuer beleue and are baptised, shall be saued.

2 In this sense is that to be vnderstood which Paul writeth, that the Church is sanctified of Christ her spouse, and cleansed with washing of water in the worde of life. And in another place, that we are saued according to his mercie by the washing of regeneration and of the renewing of the holy Ghost. And that which Peter writeth, that baptisme saueth vs. For Pauls will was not to signifie, that our washing and saluation is perfectly made by water, or that water containeth in it selfe the power to cleanse, regenerate and renew. Neither did Peter meane the cause of saluation, but onely the knowledge and certaintie of such giftes to be receiued in this Sacrament: which is euidently enough exprest in the words themselues. For Paul kniteth together the worde of life, and baptisme of water: as if he had said, that by the Gospell the message of washing and sanctifying is brought vs, that by baptisme such message is sealed. And Peter immediately adioyneth, that that baptisme is not the putting away of the filthynes of the flesh, but a good conscience before God, which is of faith. Yea baptisme promisseth vs no other cleansing, but by the sprinkling of the blood of Christ: which is figured by water, for the likeness of cleansing and washing. Who therefore can say that we be cleansed by this water, which certainly testifieth that the blood of Christ is our true and onely washing? So that from no where else can be fetched a surer reason to confute their blinde error which referre all things to the power of the water, than from the signification of Baptisme it selfe: which doth withdraw vs as well from that visible element which is set before our eyes, as from all other means, that it may bind our mindes to Christ alone.

3 Neither is it to be thought that Baptisme is applied onely to the time past, that for new fallings, into which we fall backe after Baptisme, we must seeke new remedies of cleansing in I wote not what other Sacramentes, as though the force of Baptisme were worne out of vse. By this error it came to passe in olde tyme, that some would not be baptised but in the vttermost perill of life, and at their last gaspings, that so they might obtaine pardon of their whole life. Against which wayward little prouision the olde Bishops so oft inueigh in their writings. But thus we ought to thinke, that at what time soeuer we be Baptised, we are at once washed and cleansed for all our life. Therefore so oft as we fall we must goe backe to the remembrance of baptisme, and therewith we must arme our minde, that it may be alway certaine and assured of the forgiveness of sins. For though when it is once ministred, it seemeth to be past, yet by later finnes it is not abolished. For the cleannes of Christ is therein offered vs: that alway flourisheth, is oppressed with no spots, but ouerwhelmeth and wipeth away all our filthines: yet ought we not to take thereof a libertie to sinne in time to come (as verily we be not hereby armed to such boldnes) but this doctrine is giuen onely to them, which when they haue sinned, do groane wearied and oppressed vnder their sins, that they may haue wherewith they may raise vp and comfort themselves, least they should fall into confusion and desperation. So Paul saith, that Christ was made to vs a propitiator, vnto the forgiuens of faults going before. Wherein he denieth not that therein is obtained perpetuall and continuall forgiuenes of sins euen vnto death: but he meaneth that it was giuen of the father, onely to poore sinners, which wounded with the searing iron of conscience, do sigh to the phisition. To these the mercie of God is offered. They which by escaping of punishment do hunt for matter and libertie to sin, do nothing but prouoke to themselves the wrath and iudgment of God.

Rom. 3. 25.

The force of baptisme as well as repentance extended throughout our whole liues.

4 I know in deede that it is commonly thought otherwise: that by the benefite of repentance and of the keyes we do after Baptisme obtaine forgiuenes, which at our first regeneration is giuen vs by onely Baptisme. But they which deuise this do erre herein that they do not remember that the power of the keyes, whereof they speake, doth so hang vpon baptisme that it ought in no wise to be secured. The sinner receiueth forgiuenes by the ministerie of the Church, namely not without the preaching of the Gospell. But what maner of preaching is that? That we be cleansed from finnes by the blood of Christ. But what signe and testimonie is there of that washing, but baptisme? We see therefore how that absolution is referred to baptisme. And this error hath bred vs the fained Sacrament of penance: of which I haue touched somewhat before, and the residue I will make an end of in place fit for it. But it is no maruell if men, which according to the grossenes of their wit were immeasurably fast tied to outward things, haue in this behalfe also bewrayed that fault, that not contented with the pure institution of God, they did thrust in newe helpes fained of themselves. As though baptisme it selfe were not a Sacrament of repentance. But if repentance be commended to vs for our whole life, the force also of baptisme ought to be extended to the same bounds. Wherefore it is also no doubt but that all the godly throughout all their life long, so oft as they be vexed with knowledge in conscience of their owne sins, dare call back themselves to the remembrance of baptisme, that thereby they may confirme themselves in the assiance of that only and continuall washing which we haue in the blood of Christ.

A second vse of baptisme to shew vs our mortification & newnes of life.
Rom. 6. 3.

5 It bringeth also another fruit, because it sheweth vs our mortification in Christ, and new life in him. For (as the Apostle saith) we are baptised into his death, being buried together with him into death, that we may walke in newnesse of life. By which words he doth not onely exhort vs to the following of him (as though he did say, that we are by Baptisme put in minde, that after a certaine example of the death of Christ, we should die to our lustes: and after the example of his resurrection, we should be raised vp to righteousnesse,) but he fetcheth the matter much deeper: that is to say, that by baptisme Christ hath made vs partakers of his death, that we may be grafted into it. And as the grasse receiueth substance and nourishment of the roote into which it is grafted: so they that receiue baptisme with such faith as they ought, do truly feele the effectualnesse of the death of Christ in the mortifying of their flesh: and therewithall also they feele the effect of his resurrection in the quickening of the Spirit. Hereupon he gathereth matter of exhortation: that if we be Christians, we ought to be dead to sinne, and to liue to righteousness. This selfe same argument he vseth in another place that we bee circumcised, and haue put off the olde man, since that we bee buried in Christ by Baptisme. And in this sense, in the same place which we haue before alleaged, hee called it the washing of regeneration and of re-renewing

Col. 2. 12.
Tit 3. 5.

renuing. Therefore first free forgiveness of sins and imputation of righteousness is promised vs, and then the grace of the holy Ghost, which may reforme vs into newnes of life.

6 Last of all our faith receiveth also this profite of Baptisme, that it certainly testifieth vnto vs, that we are not onely grafted into the death and life of Christ, but that we are ioyned to Christ himselfe that we are partakers of all his good things. For therefore hee hath dedicated and hallowed Baptisme in his owne bodie, that hee might haue it common with vs, as a most strong bonde of the vnitie and fellowship which he vouchsafed to enter into with vs: so that Paul prouoeth thereby that we be the children of God, because we haue put on Christ in Baptisme. So wee see that the fulfilling of Baptisme is in Christ, whom also for this reason we call the proper object of Baptisme. Therefore it is no maruell if it be reported that the Apostles baptised in his name, which yet were commanded to baptise into the name of the Father also and of the holy Ghost. For whatsoever giftes of God are set forth in baptisme, are found in Christ alone. And yet it cannot be, but that he which baptiseth into Christ, doth therewithall call vpon the name of the Father and of the holy Ghost. For we are therefore clenfed with his bloude, because the mercifull father according to his incomparable kindnes, willing to receiue vs into fauor, hath set him a mediator in the midst to procure to vs fauour with him. But regeneration we so onely obtaine, by his death and resurrection, if being sanctified by the spirite we be endued with a new and spirituall nature. Wherefore both of our cleansing and regeneration wee obtaine and after a certaine maner distinctly perceiue the cause in the Father, the matter in the Sonne, and the effect in the holy Ghost. So Iohn first baptised, so afterwarde the Apostles, with the baptisme of repentance into the forgiveness of sinnes: meaning by this word repentance, such regeneration: and by forgiveness of sins, washing.

7 Whereby also it is made most certaine, that the ministrie of Iohn was altogether the same which was afterwarde committed to the Apostles. For the diuers hands wherewith it is ministred, make not the baptisme diuers: but the same doctrine sheweth it to be the same baptisme. Iohn and the Apostles agreed into one doctrine: both baptised into repentance, both into the forgiveness of sinnes, both into the name of Christ, from whom was both repentance and forgiveness of sins. Iohn saide that hee was the lambe of God, by whom the sins of the worlde should be taken away: where he made him the sacrifice acceptable to the father, the Propitiator of righteousness, the author of saluation. What could the Apostles adde to this confession? Wherefore let it trouble no man, that the olde writers labour to seuer the one from the other, whose voice we ought not so much to esteeme that it may shake the certaintie of the Scripture. For who will rather harken to Chrysostome denying that forgiveness of sins was comprehended in the baptisme of Iohn, than to Luke contrariwise affirming that Iohn preached the baptisme of repentance into the forgiveness of sin? Neither is that furdertie of Augustine to be receiued, that in the Baptisme of Iohn sinns were forgiven in hope, but in the baptisme of Christ they are forgiven in deed. For whereas the Evangelist plainly testifieth, that Iohn in his baptisme promised the forgiveness of sins: what need we to abate this title of commendation, when no necessitie compelleth vs vnto it? But if any man seeke for a difference out of the word of God, he shall finde none other but this, that Iohn baptised into him that was to come, the apostles into him that had already presented himselfe.

8 As for this that more abundant graces of the Spirite were poured out since the resurrection of Christ, it maketh nothing to stablish a diuersitie of baptisme. For the baptisme which the Apostles ministred while he was yet conuerfant in earth, was called his: yet it had no larger plentifulnesse of the spirite, than the baptisme of Iohn. Yea, euen after his ascension, the Spirite was not giuen to the Samaritans aboute the common measure of the faithfull before the ascension, although they were baptised

Act. 19. 4.

The baptising not diuerse because the graces of the spirite were diuers wh. ch followed the ministrie of Iohn, and of his apostles, yea euen of the apostles before and after Christs ascension.

Cap. 15. Of the outward meanes

Act. 8. 14.

into the name of Iesus, till Peter and Iohn were sent vnto them to lay their hands vpon them. This onely thing, as I thinke, deceued the olde writers, that they saide that the baptisme of Iohn was but a preparation to the baptisme of Christ, because they reade, that they were baptised againe of Paul, which had once receiued the Baptisme of Iohn. But how much they were herein deceived, shall else where be plainly declared in place fit for it. What is it therefore that Iohn said, that he baptised in deed with water, but that Christ shoulde come which shoulde baptise with the holy Ghost, and with fire? This may in fewe wordes be asswoyed. For hee meant not to put difference betweene the one baptisme and the other, but hee compared his owne person with the person of Christ, saying that himselfe was a minister of water, but that Christ was the giuer of the holy Ghost, and shoulde declare his power by visible myracle the same day that hee shoulde sende the holy Ghost to the Apostles vnder fytie roongs. What could the Apostles boast of more than this? What more could they also that baptise at this day? For they be onely ministers of the outward signe, and Christ is the author of the inward grace: as the same old writers themselves do curre where teach, and specially Augustine, whose principall stay against the Donatistes is this, that what a one soeuer he be that baptiseth, yet onely Christ is ruler of it.

Matt. 3. 11.

Act. 2. 8.

The grace of mortification or expurification assured vnto vs by baptisme shadowed to the people of Israel darkly vnder other figures.
1. Cor. 10. 2.
Exod. 14. 21.

9 These things which we haue spoken both of mortification and of washing, are shadowed out in the people of Israel, whom for the same cause the Apostle saith to haue bene baptised in the cloud and in the sea. Mortifying was figured, when the Lord deliuering them out of the hande of Pharao and from cruell bondage, made for them a way through the red sea, and drowned Pharao himself, and the Ægyptians their enemies, that followed them hard at their backes, and were euen in their neckes to ouertake them. For after the same manner also he promiseth to vs in baptisme, and by a signe giuen sheweth vs, that we are by his power brought forth and deliuered out of the thraldome of Ægypt, that is to say out of the bondage of sinne: that our Pharao is drowned, that is to say the diuell, although euen so also he ceaseth not to exercise and wearie vs. But as that Ægyptian was not throwen downe into the bottome of the sea, but being ouerthrowen on the shore, did yet with terrible fight make the Israelites afraide, but could not hurt them: so this our enimie yet in deed threateneth, sheweth his weapons, is felt, but cannot overcome. In the cloud was a signe of cleansing. For as then the Lord couered them with a cloud cast ouer them, and gaue them refreshing cold, least they should faint and pine away with too cruell burning of the sunne: so in baptisme we acknowledge our selues couered and defended with the blood of Christ, least the seueritie of God, which is in deede an intollerable flame, should lie vpon vs. But although this mysterie was then darke and known to fewe: yet because there is none other way to obtaine saluation, but in those two graces, God would not take away the signe of them both from the old fathers, whome he had adopted to be heires.

Num 9. 14.

Frischfall men by baptisme not rid of original sinne but contented with the corruption of the corrupture of the nature which is done away.
Gal. 5. 19.

10 Now it is cleare, how false that is which some haue lately taught, and where- in some yet continue, that by baptisme wee be loosed and deliuered from original sinne, and from the corruption which was from Adam spread abroad into his whole posteritie, and that we be restored into the same righteousness and purenes of nature, which Adam should haue obtained, if he had stand fast in the same vprightnes wherein he was first created. For such kinde of teachers neuer vnderstoode what was original sin, nor what was original righteousness, nor what was the grace of baptisme. But we haue already proued, that original sinne is the puerenes and corruption of our nature, which first maketh vs gullie of the wrath of God, and then also bringeth forth workes in vs, which the Scripture calleth the workes of the flesh. Therefore these two points are seuerally to be marked, namely that we being in all partes of our nature defiled and corrupted are alreadye for such corruption onely, holden worthily condemned and conuicted before God, to whom nothing is acceptable but righteousness, righteousnes, innocencie and cleannes. Yea, and very infants themselves bring their owne damnation with them from their mothers wombe. Who, although they haue not yet brought forth the fruites of their iniquitie, yet haue the seede thereof enclosed within them. Yea, their whole nature is certaine seede of sinne, therefore it cannot but be hateful and abhominable to God. The Faithfull are certified by Baptisme that this damnation is taken away, and driuen from them: forasmuch (as we haue already said) the Lord doth by this signe promise vs that full and perfect remission is granted both of the fault which should haue bene imputed to vs, and of the paine which we should haue suffred for the fault: they take hold also of righteousness, but such as the people of God may obtaine in this life, that is to say by imputation onely: because the Lord of his owne mercie taketh them for righteous and innocent.

11 The other point is, that this peruenisance neuer ceaseth in vs, but continually bringeth forth new fruites, namely those works of the flesh which we haue before described: none otherwise than a burning fornace continually bloweth out flame and sparkles, or as a spring infinitely casteth out water. For lust neuer utterly dieth and is quenched in men, vnless being by death deliuered out of the body of death, they haue utterly put off themselves. Baptisme in deede promiseth vs that our Pharao is drowned, and the mortification of sin: yet not so that it is no more, or may no more trouble vs, but onely that it may not overcome vs. For so long as we liue enclosed within this prison of our body, the remnants of sin shall dwell in vs: but if we hold fast by Faith the promise giue vs of God in Baptisme, they shall not beare rule nor reigne. But let no man deceiue himselfe: Let no man flatter himselfe in his owne euill, when he heareth that sinne alway dwelleth in vs. These things are not spoken to this end, that they should carelessly sleepe vpon their sins, which are otherwise too much inclined to sinne: but onely, that they should not faint and be discouraged, which are tickled and pricked of their flesh. Let them rather thinke that they are yet in the way, and let them beleue that they haue much profited, when they feele that there is dayly somewhat diminished of their lust, till they haue attained thither whither they trauaile, namely to the last death of their flesh, which shall be ended in the dying of this mortall life. In the meane tyme let them not cease both to strue valiantly, and to encourage them to goe forward and to stirre them vp to full victorie. For this also ought more to whet on their endeouours, that they see that after that they haue long trauailed, they haue yet no small business remaining. This we ought to hold: we are baptised into the mortifying of our flesh, which is begun by baptisme in vs, which we dayly follow: but it shall be made perfect when we shall remouee out of this life to the Lord.

12 Here we say no other thing, than the Apostle Paul in the seventh Chapter to the Romanes most clearly setteth out. For after that he had disputed of free righteousness, because some wicked men did thereof gather, that we might liue after our owne lust, because we should not be acceptable to God by the desertings of works: he addeth, that all they that are clothed with the righteousness of Christ, are therewith regenerate in Spirit, and that of this regeneration we haue an earnest in baptisme. Hereupon he exhorteth the faithful, that they suffer not sin to haue dominion in their members. Now because he knew that there is alway some weakenesse in the faithful: that they should not therefore be discouraged, he adioyneth a comfort, that they are not vnder the law. Because againe it might seeme, that Christians might grow insolent, because they are not vnder the yoke of the law, he entreateth what manner of abrogation, that is, and therewithal what is the vse of the law: which question he had now the second tyme deferred. The summe is, that we be deliuered from the rigor of the law, that we should cleaue to Christ: but that the office of the law is, that we being conuincid of our perversnes should confesse our owne weakenesse and miserie. Now forasmuch as that perversnesse of nature doth not so easilie

Secondly that the works of the flesh shall not beare rule and haue dominion over them.

Baptisme according to Saint Paul the earnest of our regeneration, the weaknes of our nature hereunto, and the greatnesse of our comfort therein, standing thus we shewesse.
Rom. 6. 14.

appeare in a prophane man, which followeth his owne lust without feare of God: he fettech an example in a man regenerate, namely in himselfe. He saith therefore that he hath a continuall wrastring with the remnants of his flesh, and that he is holden bounde with miserable bondage, that he cannot consecrate himselfe wholly to the obedience of the law of God. Therefore he is compelled with groning to crie out. Vnhappy am I. Who shall deliuer me out of this body subiect to death? If the children of God be holden captiue in prison so long as they liue, they must needs be much carefully grieued with thinking vpon their owne perill, vnlesse this feare be met withall. Therefore he adioyneth to this vlt a comfort, that there is no more damnation to them that are in Christ Iesu. Where he teacheth, that they whom the Lord hath once receiued into fauour, engrafted into the communion of his Christ, hath by baptisme admitted into the fellowship of his Church, while they continue in the faith of Christ, although they be besieged of sinne, yea and carrie sinne about within them, yet are acquitted from guiltines and condemnation. If this be the simple and naturall exposition of Paul, there is no cause why we should seeme to teach any new vnwonted thing.

Rom. 7. 24.

Rom. 8.

Baptisme the badge of our profession.

1. Cor. 1. 2.

13 But Baptisme so scrueeth our confession before men. For it is a marke, whereby we openly professe that we should be accounted among the people of God: whereby we testifie that we agree with all Christians into the worshipping of one God and into one religion: finally whereby we openly affirme our Faith: that not onely our hearts should breath out the praise of God, but also our tooing, and all the members of our body should sound it out with such vtterances as they be able. For so, as we ought, all our things are employed to the seruice of the glorie of God, whereof nothing ought to be void, and other may by our example be stirred vp to the same endeouours. He creunto Paul had respect, when he asked the Corinthians whether they had not bene baptised into the name of Christ: meaning verily, that euen in this that they were baptised into his name, they auowed themselues vnto him, swore to his name, and bound their Faith to him before men, that they could no more confesse any other, but Christ alone, vnlesse they would forsake the confession which they had made in Baptisme.

The Author of baptisme is also the worker of grace (p. 12.) all therein figured not included.

14 Now sith it is declared what our Lord had regard vnto in the institution of Baptisme: it is plaine to iudge what is the way for vs to vse and receiue it. For so far as it is giuen to the raising, nourishing and confirming of our Faith, it is to be taken as from the hand of the Author himselfe: we ought to hold it certaine and fully perswaded, that it is he which speaketh to vs by the signe, that it is he which cleanseth vs, washeth vs, and putteth away the remembrance of our finnes, that it is he which maketh vs partakers of his death, which taketh away from Satan his kingdome, which feebleth the forces of our lust, yea which groweth into one with vs, that being cloathed with him we may be reckoned the children of God: that these things, I say, he doth inwardly so truly and certainly performe to our Soule, as we certainly see our body outwardly to be washed, dipped, and cloathed. For this either relation, or similitude, is the most sure rule of Sacraments: that in bodily things we should behold spirituall things, as if they were presently set before our eyes, forasmuch as it hath pleased the Lord to represent them by such figures: not for that such graces are bound and enclosed in the Sacrament, that they should be giuen vs by the force thereof: but onely because the Lord doth by this token testifie his will vnto vs, that is, that he will giue vs all these things. Neither doth he onely feede our eyes with a naked sight, but he bringeth vs to the thing present, and together fulfilleth that which it figureth.

Cornelius and Paul by baptisme were endued with grace in outward

15 Hereof let Cornelius the Captaine be an example, which was baptised, hauing before receiued forgiveness of finnes and visible graces of the holy Ghost: seeking not by baptisme a larger forgiveness, but a more certaine exercising of faith, yea

yea an increase of confidence by a pledge. Peradventure some man will object: Why therefore did Ananias say to Paul, that he should wash away his sins by baptisme, if finnes be not washed away by the power of baptisme it selfe? I answer: We are said to receiue, to obtaine, to get that which so far as concerneth the feeling of our faith, is giuen vs of the Lord, whether he do then first testifie it, or being testified doth more and certainer confirme it. This therefore onely was the meaning of Ananias: that thou maist bee assured Paul, that thy sins are forgiven thee, bee baptised. For the Lord doth in baptisme promise forgiveness of sins: receiue this, and be out of care. Howbeit I meane not to diminish the force of baptisme, but that the thing and the truth is present with the signe, so far as God worketh by outward meanes. But of this Sacrament, as of al other, we obtain nothing but so much as we receiue by faith. If we want faith, it shall be for a witness of our vnthankfulness, whereby we may be declared guiltie before God, because we haue not beleued the promise there giuen. But so far as it is a signe of our confession, we ought by it to testifie that our assurance is in the mercie of God, and our cleannes is in the forgiveness of sins, which is gotten vs by Iesus Christ: and that by it we enter into the Church of Christ, that we may with one consent of faith and charitie lue of one minde with al the faithfull. This last point did Paul meane, when he saith that we are all baptised in one Spirit, that we may be one body.

16 Now if this be true which we determine, that a Sacrament is not to be waied according to his hande of whom it is ministred, but as of the verie hand of God, from whom without doubt it proceeded: hereupon we may gather that nothing is added to it nor taken from it by the worthinesse of him by whose hand it is deliuered. And euen as among men, if a letter be sent, so that the hand and the seale be well knownen, it maketh no matter who or what maner of man be the carrier: so it ought to suffice to acknowe the hand and seale of the Lord in his Sacraments, by what carrier soeuer they be brought. Hereby the error of the Donatistes is very well confuted, which measured the force & value of the sacrament by the worthines of the minister. Such at this day are our Carabaptists, which deny that we be rightly baptised, because we were baptised by wicked men and idolaters in the Popish kingdome: therefore they furiously call vpon vs to be baptised againe. Against whose follies we shall be armed with a reason strong enough, if we thinke that we were professed by baptisme not into the name of any man, but into the name of the Father, the Son, and the holy Ghost, and that therefore it is not the baptisme of man, but of God, of whom soeuer it be ministred. Although they were neuer so much ignorant or despisers of God and all godlines, which baptised vs, yet they did not baptise vs into the fellowship of their owne ignorance or sacrilege, but into the faith of Iesus Christ: because they called not vpon their owne name, but the name of God, nor baptised vs into any other name. Now if it were the baptisme of God, it hath verily inclosed in it a promise of the forgiveness of finnes, the mortifying of the flesh, the spirituall quickening, and the partaking of Christ. So it nothing hindered the Iewes, to haue beene circumcised of vnclane priestes and apostataes: neither was the signe therefore void, that it needed to be done of newe: but it was sufficient to returne to the naturall beginning. Where they object that baptisme ought to be celebrate in the assemblies of the godly, that prooueth not, that that which is faulty in part, should destroy the whole force thereof: or when we teach what ought to be done that baptisme may be pure, and void of all defiling, we do not abolish the ordinance of God, although idolaters corrupt it. For when in old time Circumcision was corrupted with many superstitions, yet it ceased not to be taken for a signe of grace: neither did Iosias and Ezechias, when they gathered out of al Israel them that had departed from God, call them to a second Circumcision.

17 Now whereas they aske vs, what faith of ours hath yet followed baptisme in that they were excluded through faith, without which baptisme doth not testifie our vnthankfulness.

Act. 10. 48.
Act. 9. 17.

1. Cor. 12. 13.

Nothing added vnto or taken from baptisme by their worthines or vnworthines which are ministers of it: and therefore rebaptisation not to be receiued.

Matt. 28. 19.

Baptisme not made void by their remaying a long time in blindnesse that are baptised.

in certaine yeeres past, that they thereby might prooue that the baptisme is void, when it is not sanctified vnto vs, but by the word of promise receued by faith: to this question we answer that we in deede being blinde and vnbeleeuing, did in a long time not holde fast the promise giuen vs in baptisme: yet the promise it selfe, for as much as it was of God, continued alway staued, stedfast, and true. Although all men beliers and faithbreakers, yet God ceaseth not to be true: although al men be lost, yet Christ remaineth saluation. Wee confesse therefore that Baptisme, for that time profited vs nothing at all: for as much as in it the promise offered vs, without which Baptisme is nothing, lay nothing regarded. Now sith by the grace of God, we haue begunne to waxe wiser, wee accuse our owne blindnesse and hardnesse of heart, which haue so long bene vnthankfull to his so great goodnesse. But we beleue that the promise it selfe is not vanished away: but rather thus we consider, God by baptisme promiseeth the forgiuenesse of sinnes, and sith he hath promised it, will vndoubtedly performe it to all that beleue it. That promise was offered vs in baptisme: by faith therefore let vs embrace it. It hath in deede long bene buried from vs because of infidelitie: nowe therefore let vs receiue it by faith. Wherefore where the Lorde calleth the Iewish people to repentance, he giueth them no commaundement of a second Circumcision, which being (as we haue said) circumcised with a wicked and vngodly hande, liued a certaine time intangled with the same wickednesse. But he earnestly calleth vpon the onely turning of the heart. Because, how fouer the couenant was broken of them, yet the signe of the couenant, by the ordinance of the Lord, remained alway stedfast and inuiolable. Therefore with the onely condition of repentance they were restored into the couenant which the Lord had once made with them in circumcision: which yet being receued by the hand of a leaguebreaker priest, so much as in them lay, they had defiled againe, and the effect whereof they had quenched.

Rom. 3. 3.

They whom Iohn had baptised not rebaptised by Paul.
Act. 19. 3.

18 But they thinke that they shake a fierie dart at vs, when they alieage that Paul rebaptised them which were once baptised with the baptisme of Iohn. For if by our owne confession, the baptisme of Iohn was altogether the same that ours is now: euen as they hauing bene before peruersely instructed, when they were taught the true faith, they were againe baptised into it: so that baptisme, which was without true doctrine, is to be taken for nothing, and we ought to be newly baptised againe into the true religion, wherewith wee are nowe first instructed. Some thinke, that there was some wrongfully affectioned man to Iohn, which had entred them with their first baptisme rather to a vaine superstition. Of which thing they seeme to gather a coniecture hereupon, because they confessed themselves to be vterly ignorant of the Holy Ghost: whereas Iohn verily would neuer haue sent away from himselfe such holers so vntaught. But neither is it likely that the Iewes although they had not bene baptised at all, were destitute of all knowledge of the holy Ghost, which is famously spoken of by so many testimonies of the scripture. Whereas therefore they answered that they knowe not whether there be a holy Ghost, it is to be vnderstanded as if they had said that they haue not yet heard, whether the graces of the Spirit, of which Paul asked them, were giuen to the Disciples of Christ. But I graunt that that was the true baptisme of Iohn, and all one and the selfe same with the baptisme of Christ: but I denie that they were baptised againe. What then meant these words, they were baptised in the name of Iesus? Some doe expounde it, that they were but instructed of Paul with true doctrine. But I had rather vnderstand it more simply, to be the baptisme of the holy Ghost, that is to say, that the visible graces of the Spirit were giuen them by the laying on of hands: which to be expressed by the name of baptisme, is no new thing. As on the day of Pentecost it is saide, that the Apostles remembered the wordes of the Lorde, concerning the baptisme of fire and of the spirit. And Peter saith that the same came to his remembrance, when he sawe those those graces powred out vpon Cornelius, and his household and kinred. Neither is that contrarie which is after adioyned: When he had laid his hands on them, the Holy Ghost came downe vpon them. For Luke doeth not tell of two diuerse things: but followeth the manner of telling commonly vsed among the Hebrewes, which do first propound the summe of the matter, and then do set it out more at large. Which euery man may perceiue by the very fraining together of the words. For he saith, When they had heard these things, they were baptized in the name of Iesus. And when Paul had laid his hands vpon them, the holy Ghost came downe vpon them. In this latter sentence is described, what manner of baptisme that was. If ignorance do so corrupt a former Baptisme, that it must be amended with a second baptisme: the Apostles should haue bene rebaptized first of all, which in whole three yeares after their baptisme, had scarcely tasted any small parcell of purer doctrine. And now among vs what riuers might suffice to renew so many washings, as there be ignorances by the mercie of the Lord daily amended in vs?

Act. 1. 5.

19 The force, dignitie, profit, and end of the mysterie if I be not deceiued, ought by this time to be plaine enough. So much as concerneth the outward signe, I would to God the naturall institution of Christ had preuailed so much as was meete, to restraine the boldnes of men. For, as though it were a contemptible thing to be baptized with water according to the precept of Christ, there is inuented blessing, or rather inchantment, to defile the true hallowing of the water. Afterward was added a taper with chiefe: but the blowing seemeth to open the gate to baptisme. But although I am not ignorant, how ancient is the beginning of this added packe: yet it is lawfull both for me and all the godly to refuse whatsoever things men haue presumed to adde to the ordinance of Christ. When Satan saw that by the foolish light credit of the world at the verie beginnings of the Gospell his deceits were easily receiued, he brake forth into grosser mockeries. Hereupon spittle, and like trifles, were openly brought in with vnbrided libertie to the reproch of baptisme. By which experiences let vs learne that nothing is either holier, or better, or safer, than to be content with the authoritie of Christ alone. How much better therefore was it, leaving stigelike pompes, which dazell the eyes of the simple, and dull their mindes, so oft as any was to be baptized, that he should be presented to the assembly of the faithful, and be offered to God, the whole Church looking on as a witness: and praying ouer him: that the confession of faith should be rehearsed, wherewith he that is to be catechized should be instructed: that the promises should be declared which are contained in baptisme: that the instructed should be baptized in the name of the Father, and the Sonne, and the holy Ghost: at length that he be sent away with praies and thanksgiuing. So is nothing omitted that might make to the matter, and that the onely Ceremonie which proceeded from God the author thereof, should most clearly shone, being not ouerwhelmed with any forreine filthines. But whether he be wholly dipped which is baptized, and that thrice or once, or whether he be but sprinkled with water onely powred vpon him, it maketh verie little matter: but that ought to be at libertie to Churches according to the diuersitie of countries. Howbeit the verie word of baptizing signifieth to dip, and it is certaine that the maner of dipping was vsed of the old Church.

20 This also pertaineth to the purpose, to knowe that it is done amisse if private men take vpon themselves the administration of baptisme. For as well the distribution of this as of the supper is a part of the Ecclesiasticall ministry. For Christ did not command women, nor yet euery sort of men, that they should baptize: but whom he had ordained his Apostles, to them he gaue this commandement. And when he commanded his disciples to do that in the ministracion of the Supper which they had seene him do, when he executed the office of a right distributor: he would without doubt, that they should therein follow his example. As for this that in many ages past,

yea and in a maner at the verie beginning of the Church, it hath beene received in vse, that lay men might baptise in perill of death, if the minister were not present in time. I see not with how strong a reason it may be defended. The very old fathers themselves, which either held or suffered this maner, were not sure whether it were well done. For Augustine seemeth to haue this doubt, when he saith: Although a lay man compelled by necessitie doe giue baptisme, I can not tell whether a man may godly say that it ought to be iterate. For if it be done when no necessitie compelleth, it is the vsurping of an other mans office: but if necessitie enforce, it is either none or a veniall sinne. Moreouer of women it was decreed without any exception in the Councell at Carthage, that they should not presume to baptize at all. But there is daunger, leaft if he which is sicke should die without baptisme, he should be deprived of the grace of regeneration. Not so, God pronounceth that he adopteth our infants to be his owne, before they be borne, when he promiseth that he will be a God to vs and to our seed after vs. In this word is contained their saluation. Neither shall any man dare to be so reprochfull against God, to denie that his promise is of it selfe sufficient to worke the effect thereof. How much harme that doctrine being euill expounded, that baptisme is of necessitie to saluation, hath brought in, few do marke: and therefore they take lesse heede to themselves. For where this opinion is growen in force, that all are lost to whom it hath not happened to be washed with water, our state is worse than the state of the old people, as though the grace of God were now more narrowly strengthened than it was vnder the lawe. For Christ shall be thought to be come, not to fulfill the promises, but to abolish them: forasmuch as the promise which then was of it selfe effectually enough to giue health before the eighth day, now should not be of force without help of the signe.

Women not authorized to baptise.

21 But how the custome was before that Augustine was borne, first is gathered of Tertullian, that it is not permitted to a woman to speake in the Church, nor to teach, nor to baptise, nor to offer, that she should not claime to her selfe the execution of any mans office, much lesse of the priests. Of the same thing Epiphanius is a substantiall witness, where he reprocheth Marcion, that he gaue women libertie to baptise. Neither am I ignorant of their answers which thinke otherwise, that is, that common vse much differeth from extraordinarie remedy, when extreme necessitie enforce: but when he pronouncing that it is a mockerie to giue women libertie to baptise, excepteth nothing, it sufficiently appeareth that he condemneth this corruption, so that it is by no colour excusable. Also in the third booke, where teaching that it was not permitted euen to the holy mother of Christ, he addeth no restraint.

Sephora no prescribes for womens taking vpon them to baptise. Exod. 4. 25.

Matt. 28. 19.

Heb. 5. 4.
Rom. 14. 23.

22 The example of Sephora is vnreasonable alleged. For whereas the Angell of God was appeased, after that she taking a stone, circumcised her sonne, thereupon it was wrongfully gathered that her doing was allowed of God. Otherwise it ought to be said, that the worshipping which the nations that were brought out of Assyria raised vp, pleased God. But by other strong reasons it is proued, that that which a foolish woman did, is wrongfully drawn to an example of imitation. If I should say that it is a certaine singular case, which ought not to be made an example, and specially that sith it is no where read that in old time there was giuen to the priests a speciall commandment to circumcise, the order of Circumcision and Baptisme is vnlike: this should be strong enough to confute them. For the words of Christ are plaine: Go ye, teach all nations, and baptise. When he ordeined the selfe same men publishers of the Gospell, and ministers of Baptisme: and none (as the Apostle witnesseth) doeth take honour vpon himselfe in the Church, but he that is called as Aaron: whosoeuer without lawfull calling baptiseth, he rusheth into an other mans office. Euen in the smallest things, as in meate and drinke, whatsoeuer we enterprife with a doubtful confidence, Paul openly crieth out to be sinne. Therefore in womens baptising is much more grievously sinne, where it is euident that they brake the rule appointed appointed by Christ, forasmuch as we know that it is vnlawfull to plucke in sunder those things that God conioyneth. But all this I passe ouer. Onely I would haue the readers to note, that Sephoras purpose was nothing lesse, than to doe any seruice to God. Seeing hir sonne to be in danger, she grudgeth, and murmured, and not without stomacking threw the foreskinne vpon the ground, she so taunted hir husband, that she was also angry with God. Finally it is plaine that all this came of a furiousnesse of minde, because she murmured against God and hir husband, for that she was compelled to shed the blood of hir sonne. Moreouer if she had in all other things behaued hir selfe well, yet herein is an vnexcusable rash presumption that the circumcised hir sonne, hir husband being present, not any priuate man, but Moses the principall Prophet of God, than whom there neuer rose any greater in Israel: which was no more lawfull for hir to doe, than at this day it is for women in the sight of the Bishop. But this controuersie shall by and by be easily taken away by this principle, that infants are not debarred from the kingdome of heauen, whio it happeneth to depart out of this present life before that it be graunted them to be dipped in water. But it is already prooued that no small wrong is done to the couenant of God, if we doe not rest in it, as though it were weake of it selfe: whereas the effect thereof hangeth neither vpon baptisme, nor vpon any additions. There is afterward added to it a Sacrament like a seale, not that it bringeth effectualnes to the promise of God as to a thing weake of it selfe, but onely confirmeth it to vs. Whereupon followeth, that the children of the faithfull are not therefore baptised, that they may then first be made the children of God, which before were strangers from the Church, but rather that they be therefore receiued by a solemne signe into the Church, because by the benefite of the promise they did already belong to the body of Christ. Therefore if in omitting the signe there be neither slouthfulnesse, nor contempt, nor negligence, we are free from all danger. It is therefore much more holy, to giue this reuerence to the ordinance of God, that we seeke Sacraments from no where else, than where the Lord hath left them. When we may not haue them of the Church, the grace of God is not so bound to them, but that we may obtaine the by faith out of the word of the Lord.

The xvj. Chapter.

That the Baptisme of Infants doth very well agree with the institution of Christ and the nature of the signe.

BUt forasmuch as in this age, certaine phrentike Spirites haue raised vp sore troubles in the Church for the Baptisme of infants, and do not yet cease to turmoile: I can not choofe but I must ioyne here an addition to restraints their furiousnesse. If peraduenture it shall seeme to some man to be very much too long, let him (I beseech him) weigh with himselfe, that we ought so much to esteeme the puresnes of doctrine in a most great matter, together with the peace of the Church, that nothing ought to be lothsomely receiued, which may auale to procure them both. Beside that, I so studie to frame this discourse, that it shall be of no small importance to the clearer declaration of the mysterie of Baptisme. They assaile the baptisme of infanties with an argument indeede fauorable in shew, saying that it is grounded vpon no institution of Christ, but that it was brought in onely by the boldnes of men, and peruerse curiousnesse, and then afterward with fond easinesse rarily receiued in vse. For a Sacrament, vnlesse it rest vpon a certaine foundation of the word of God, hangeth but by a threede. But what if, when the matter is well considered, it shall appere that the Lords holy ordinance is falsely and vniuilly charged with such a slander? Let vs therefore search out the first beginning of it. And if it shall appere, that it was deposed by the only rashnes of men, then bidding it farewell, let vs measure the true obseruation

The baptising of infants not devised and receiued onely by the rashnes of men without warrant from God himselfe.

uation of baptisme by the onely will of God. But if it shall be prooued that it is not destitute of his certaine authoritie, we must beware, least in pinching the holy ordinances of God, we be also slenderous against the author himselfe.

The right consideration of baptisme grounded vpon the promise and spirituall misterie ther-of, not vpon the outwarde ceremonie alone.

2 First it is a doctrine wel enough knowen, and confessed among al the godly, that the right consideration of the signes, consisteth not onely in the outward ceremonies:
but principally hangeth vpon the promise, and vpon the spirituall misteries, for figuring whereof the Lord ordeineth the ceremonies themselues. Therefore hee that will perfectly learne of what value baptisme is, to what end it tendeth, finally what it is: let him not stay his thought vpon the clement and bodily sight: but rather let him raise it vp to the promises of God, which are therein offered vs, and to the inwarde secrets which are therein represented vnto vs. Hee that knoweth these things hath attained the sound truth of baptisme, and the whole substance thereof as I may so call it: and thereby also he shall be taught, what is the reason, and what is the vse of the outward sprinkling. Againe, he that contemptuously passing ouer these, shall haue his minde wholly fastened and bounde to the visible ceremonie, shall vnderstande neither the force nor propertie of baptisme: nor yet so much as this, what the water meaneth, or what vse it hath. Which sentence is prooued with so many and so cleere testimonies of scripture, that we need not at this present to carrie long about it. Therefore it remaineth now, that we seek out of the promises giuen in baptisme, what is the force and nature of it. The scripture sheweth, that the cleansing of sins, which we obtaine of the blood of Christ, is heere first shewed: then the mortifying of the flesh, which standeth vpon the partaking of his death, by which the faithfull are regenerate into newenesse of life, yea, and into the fellowship of Christ. To this summe may be referred whatsoeuer is taught in the Scriptures concerning baptisme: sauing that beside this it is a signe to testifie religion before men.

The vse of circumcision vnder the law.

3 But forasmuch as before the institution of baptisme, the people of God had circumcision instead thereof: let vs see what these two signes differ the one from the other, and with what likenes they agree together. Whereupon may appeere what is the relation of the one to the other. Where the Lord gaue circumcision to Abraham to be kept, he telleth him before, that he would be God to him and to his seede: adding, that with him is the flowing store and suffisance of all things, that Abraham should account that his hand should be to him a spring of all good things. In which words the promise of eternall life is contained, as Christ expoundeth it, bringing an argument from hence to prooue the immortallitie of the faithfull, and the resurrection.
For God (saith he) is not the God of the dead, but of the liuing. Wherefore Paul also shewing to the Ephesians from what destruction the Lord had deliuered them, ga-thereth by this that they had not bene admitted into the couenant of circumcision, that they were without Christ, without God, without hope, strangers from the testaments of the promise: all which things the couenant it selfe contained. But the first access to God, the first entrie to immortall life, is the forgiveness of sinnes. Where-vpon is gathered, that this forgiveness answereth to the promise of Baptisme concerning our cleansing. Afterwarde the Lord taketh couenant of Abraham that he should walke before him in purenesse and innocencie of hart which belongeth to mortifying or regeneration. And that no man should doubt, that circumcision is a signe of mortifying, Moses in another place doth more plainly declare it, when he exhortheth the people of Israel, to circumcise the vncircumcised skin of the hart, because they were severally chosen to be the people of God out of all the nations of the earth. As God, where he adopteth the posteritie of Abraham to his people, com-mandeth them to be circumcised: so Moses pronounceth that the harts ought to bee circumcised, declaring verily what is the truth of this circumcision. Then that no man shoulde endeavour toward it by his owne strength, he teacheth that they need the grace of God. All these things are so often repeated of the prophets, that

I neede not to heape into this place many testimonies which do each where offer themselves. We haue proued therefore, that in circumcission a spirituall promise was vterred to the fathers, such as in baptisme is giuen: for as much as it figured to them the forgiuencesse of finnes, and the mortifying of the flesh. Moreouer as we haue taught that Christ is the foundation of baptisme, in whome both these things remaine: so it is euident that he is also of circumcission. For he is promised to Abraham, and in him the blessing of all nations. To the sealing of which grace, the signe of circumcission is added.

4 Now we may easily see, what there is like in these two signes, or what there is differing. The promises, whereupon we haue declared that the power of the signes consisteth, is all one in both, namely of the fatherly fauor of God, of the forgiuencesse of finnes, of life cuerlasting. Then, the thing figured also is all one and the same, namely regeneration. The foundation whereupon the fulfilling of these things standeth, is all one in both. Wherefore there is no difference in the inward mysterie, whereby the whole force and propertie of the Sacraments is to be weighed. The vnlikenes that remaineth, lieth in the outward ceremonie, which is the smallest portion: whereas the chiefest part hangeth vpon the promise and the thing signified. Therefore we may determine, that whatsoeuer agreeth with circumcission, doth also belong to baptisme, except the difference of the visible Ceremonie. To this relation and comparison, the Apostles rule leadeth vs by the hand, whereby we are comman- Rom. 12. 3.
ded to examine all exposition of Scripture by the proportion of faith. And truly the truth doth in this behalfe almost offer it selfe to be felt. For as circumcission, because it was a certaine token to the Iewes, whereby they were certified that they were chosen to be the people and household of God, and they againe on their behalfe professed that they yeilded themselves to God, was their first entrie into the Church: so now also we by baptisme enter into profession of God, that we may be reckoned among his people, and mutually sweare to his name. Whereby it appeareth out of controuersie, that baptisme is come into the place of circumcission, that it may haue the same office with vs.

5 Now if we list to search out, whether baptisme be lawfully communicate to infants: shall we not say that he doth too much play the foole, yea dote, which will rest only vpon the element of water, and the outward obseruation, but cannot abide to bend his minde to the spirituall mysterie? Whereof if there be any consideration had, it shall without doubt certainly appeare that Baptisme is rightfully giuen to infants, as the thing that is due vnto them. For the Lord in old time did not vouchsafe to admit them to circumcission, but that he made them partakers of all those things which were then signified by circumcission. Otherwise he should with meere deceites haue mocked his people, if he had fed them with deceitfull signes, which is horrible euen to be heard of. For he pronounceth expressly, that the circumcission of a little infant should be in steede of a seale to seale the promise of the couenant. But if the couenant remaine vnbroken and stedfast, it doth at this day no lesse belong to the children of Christians, than vnder the olde testament it pertained to the infants of the Iewes. But if they be partakers of the thing signified, why shall they be debarred from the signe? if they haue the trueth, why shall they be put backe from the figure? Although the outward signe cleaue fast together with the word in the Sacrament, so that they can not be plucked in sunder: yet if they be seuerally considered, whether of them, I pray you shall we esteeme of more value? Truly sith we see that the signe serueth the word, we must say that it is vnder it, and must set it in the inferiour place. Sith therefore the word of Baptisme is extended to infants: why shall the signe, that is to say, the addition hanging to the word, be debarred from them? This one reason, if there were no more, were abundantly enough to confute all them that will speake to the contrarie. That which is objected, that there

Rom. 12. 3.

Infants being partakers of the spirituall grace may not be denied the outward signe of baptisme more than Iewish children circumcission.

there was a day certainly set for circumcision, is altogether but a shift. We graunt that we be not now bound to certaine dayes, like the Iewes: but when the Lorde howsoever he certainly appointeth no day, yet declareth that he is pleased that infants should with a solemne formall vsage be receiued into his couenant: what seeke we more?

The children of Christian parents being holy seede as Abrahams were, as necessarily the one bound to be baptizd as the other to be circumcisd.

1. Cor. 7. 14.
Gen. 17. 12.

6 Howbeit the scripture openeth vnto vs yet a certainer knowledge of the truth. For it is most eident, that the couenant which the Lord once made with Abraham, is at this day no lesse in force to Christians, than it was in old time to the Iewish people: yea and that this word hath no lesse respect to Christians, than it then had respect to the Iewes. Vnlesse perhaps we thinke, that Christ hath by his coming diminished, or cut short the grace of his father. Which saying is not without abhominable blasphemie. Wherefore as euen the children of the Iewes were called a holy seede, because being made heires of the same couenant they were made differing from the children of the vngodly: for the same reason euen yet also the children of Christians are accounted holy, yea although they be the issue but of one parent faithfull: and (as the Apostle witnesseth) they differ from the vnclane seede of Idolaters. Now when the Lord immediately after the couenant made with Abraham, commaunded the same to be sealed in infants with an outward Sacrament: what cause will Christians alleadge, why they should not at this day testifie and seale the same in their children? Neither let any man obiect against me, that the Lord commaunded his couenant to be confirmed with no other signe than of circumcision, which is long ago taken away. For we haue in readinesse to answer, that for the time of the old testament he ordeined circumcision to confirme his couenant: but circumcision being taken away, yet alway remaineth the same maner of confirming which we haue common with the Iewes. Wherefore we must alway diligently consider what is common to both, and what they haue feuerall from vs. The couenant is common, the cause of confirming it is common. Onely the manner of confirming is diuerse, because circumcision was that to them, in place whereof baptisme hath succeeded among vs. Otherwise if the testimonie whereby the Iewes were assured of the saluation of their seed, be taken away from vs, it should be brought to passe by the coming of Christ, that the grace of God should be darker and lesse approoued by testimonies to vs, than it was before to the Iewes. If that cannot be said without extreme slander of Christ, by whom the infinite goodnesse of the Father hath more clearely and liberally than euer heretofore bene poured forth vpon the earth, and declared to men: we must needs graunt, that it is at the least not more pinchingly to be suppressed, nor to be set forth with lesse testimonie, than it was vnder the darke shadowes of the lawe.

Infantes embraced, prayed for, rearmd the heires of the kingdom of heauen by our Saviour Christ, and therefore not to be excluded from baptisme.
Mat. 9. 13.

7 Wherefore the Lord Iesus, minding to shewe a token whereby the world might vnderstand that he was come rather to enlarge than to limit the mercie of God, gently embraced children offered vnto him, rebuking the disciples which went about to forbid them to come to him: forasmuch as they did leade those, to whome the kingdome of heauen belongeth, away from him by whome alone the entrie is open into heauen. But (will some man say) what like thing hath baptisme with this embracing of Christ? For neither is it reported that he bapuzed them, but that he receiued them, embraced them, and wished them well. Therefore if we list to follow his example, let vs help infants with prayer, but not baptise them. But let vs weigh the doings of Christ somewhat more heedfully, than such kinde of men do. For neither is this to be lightly passed ouer, that Christ commandeth infants to be brought vnto him, adding a reason why, because of such is the kingdome of heauen. And afterward he witnesseth his will with deede, when embracing them he commended them to his Father with his prayer and blessing. If it be meete that infants be brought to Christ, why is it not also meete that they be receiued to baptisme, the signe of our communion communion and fellowship with Christ? If the kingdome of heauen be theirs, why shall the signe be denied them, whereby there is as it were an entrie opened into the Church, that being admitted into it they may be adnumbred among the hentes of the heauenly kingdome? How vniust shall we be, if we driue away them whom Christ calleth vnto him? if we spoile them, whom he garnisheth with his giftes? if we shut out them whom he willingly receiaeth? But if we will examine how much that which Christ there did, differeth from baptisme, yet of how much greater price shall we haue baptisme, (whereby we testifie that infantes are contained in the couenant of God) than receiuing, embracing, laying one of hands, and prayer, whereby Christ himselfe being present: declareth that they both are his, and are sanctified of him? By the other caualiations, whereby they labour to mocke out this place, they doe nothing but bewray their owne ignorance. For they gather an argument of this which Christ saith. Let little ones come to me, that they were in age good bigge ones which were already able to goe. But they are called of the Euangelistes, brephe, and paidia, by which wordes the Greekes doe signifie babes yet hanging on the brestes. Therefore this word (to come) is simply set for (to haue access). Loe what snares they are compelled to make, which are growen hard against the truth. Now where they say, that the kingdome of heauen is not giuen to them, but to such as be like them, because it is said to be of such, not of them: that is no sounder than the rest. For if that be graunted, what manner of reason shall the reason of Christ be, whereby he meaneth to shew, that infantes in age are not strangers from him? When he commaundeth that infantes be suffered to haue access vnto him, nothing is plainer than that vely infante in feede is there spoken of. And that this should not seeme an absurditie, he by and by addeth: of such is the kingdome of heauen. But if it must needs be that infantes be comprehended herein, it must be plaine that by this word (such) are meant very infantes themselves, and such as be like them.

8 Now there is no man that seeth not, that baptisme of infantes was not framed by man, which is vpholden by so great approving of Scripture. Neither doe they colourably enough play the fooles, which object that it is no where found, that any one infant was baptised by the hands of the Apostles. For although it be not expressly by name reheared of the Euangelistes: yet because againe they are not excluded, so oft as mention happeneth to be made of the baptising of any household: who, vnlesse he be mad, can reason thereupon that they were not baptised? If such argumentes were of any force, women should be forbidden to partake of the Lodes Supper, whom we reade not to haue bene receiued vnto it in the time of the Apostles. But here we be content with the rule of Faith. For when we consider, what the institution of the Supper requireth, thereby also we may easily iudge to whom the vse thereof ought to be communicated. Which we obserue also in baptisme. For when we make, to what end it was ordained, we evidently espie, that it belongeth no lesse to infantes, than to elder folkes. Therefore they cannot be deprived of it, but that the will of the Author must be manifestly defrauded. But whereas, they spread abroad among the simple people, that there passed a long row of yeares after the resurrection of Christ, in which the baptisme of infantes was vnknown: therein they most fowly doe lie. For there is no writer so old, that doth not certainly referre the beginning thereof to the time of the Apostles.

9 Now remaineth that we briefly shew, what fruite cometh of this obseruation, both to the Faithfull which present their children to the Church to be baptised, and also to the infantes themselves that be baptised with the holy water: that no man should despise it as vnprofitable or idle. But if it come in any mans minde, vpon this pretence to mocke at the baptisme of infantes, he scorneth the commandment of Circumcision giuen by the Lord. For what will they bring forth to impugn the baptisme of infantes, which may not also be thrown backe against Circumcision?

Though it be not expressly mentioned in Scripture what infants were baptised by the Apostles: yet where they are reported to haue baptised families, we haue no reason to thinke that the children in such families were not baptised: no writer so old that maketh not the baptisme of infantes as ancient as the Apostles times.
Act. 16. 15. & 23.

The suite that cometh by baptisme, both to children presented, & to such as are presented them themselves.

So the Lord taketh vengeance of their arrogance, which doe by and by condemne that which they comprehend not with the sense of their owne flesh. But God furnisheth vs with other armours, whereby their foolishnesse may be beaten flat. For neither this his holie institution, by which we feele our faith to be holpen with singular comfort, deserueth to be called superfluous. For Gods signe communicated to a childe doth as it were by an emprinted seale confirme the promise giuen to the godly parent, and declareth that it is ratified that the Lord will be God not onely to him but also to his seed, and will continually shew his good will and grace, not to him onely, but also to his posteritie euen to the thousandth generation. Where when the great kindnesse of God vttereth it selfe, first it yeeldeth most large matter to aduance his glorie, and ouerspreadeth godly hearts with singular gladnes, because they are therewithall more earnestly moued to loue againe so godly a Father, whom they see to haue care of their posteritie for their sakes. Neither do I regarde, if any man take exception, and saye that the promise ought to suffice to confirme the saluation of our children: for as much as it hath pleased God otherwise, who as hee knoweth our weakenes, willed in this behalfe to much to beare tenderly with it. Therefore let them that embrace the promise of Gods mercy to be extended to their children, thinke that it is their duetie to offer them to the Church to be signed with the signe of mercie, & therby to encourage themselues to a more assured confidence, because they do with present eye behold the couenant of the Lord grauen in the bodies of their children. Againe, the children receive some commoditie of their baptism, that being engrafted into the bodie of the Church, they be somewhat the more commended to the other members. Then when they are grown to riper age, they be thereby not selenderly stirred vp to earnest endeouour to worship God, of whom they haue been receiued into his children by a solemne signe of adoption, before that they could by age acknow him for their Father. Finally that same condemnation ought greatly to make vs afraide, that God will take vengeance of it, if any man despise to make his sonne with the signe of the couenant, because by such contempt the grace offered is refused and as it were forsworne.

Gen. 17. 14.

The difference which the enemies of baptism ministred vnto children do put betweene the thing signified by baptism and circumcision, for as ouerthrow them, their difference betweene the one and the other couenant most false.

10 Now let vs examine the arguments, whereby certaine furious beasts do not cease to assaile this holy institution of God. First because they see that they be exceedingly neere driuen and hard strained with the likenes of baptism and Circumcision, they labour to plucke in sunder these two signes with great difference, that the one should not seeme to haue any thing common with the other. For they say that both diuers things are signified, and that the couenant is altogether diuers, and that the naming of the children is not all one. But while they goe about to prouoe that first point, they alleage that Circumcision was a figure of mortification and not of baptism. Which verily we do most willingly graunt them. For it maketh verie well for our side. Neither do we vse any other prooue of our sentence, than that baptism and circumcision are signes of mortification. Hereupon we determine that baptism is set in the place of circumcision, that it should represent vnto vs the same thing which in old time it signified to the Iewes. In affirming the difference of the couenant, with how barbarous boldnes do they turmoile & corrupt the scripture: and that not in one place alone, but so as they leaue nothing safe or whole? For they depraue vnto vs the Iewes so to be carnal that they be liker beasts than men: with whom forsooth the couenant made proceedeth not beyond the temporal life, to whom the promises giuen do rest in present and bodily good things. If this doctrine take place, what remaineth but that the nation of the Iewes were for a time filled with the benefits of God, none otherwise than as they fat a hearde of swine in a stie, that at length they should perish with eternall damnation. For so soone as we alleage Circumcision and the promises annexed vnto it, they answer that circumcision was a littell signe, and the promises thereof were carnall.

11 Truly if circumcision was a littéral signe, there is no otherwise to be thought of baprisme. For the Apostle in the second Chapter to the Colossians maketh the one no more spirituall than the other. For he sayeth that we are circumcised in Christ, with a circumcision not made with hand, putting away the body of sinne that dwelled in our flesh: which he calleth the circumcision of Christ. Afterward for declaration of that saying, he adioyneth, that we be buried with Christ by baprisme. What meaneth he by these words, but that the fulfilling and truth of baprisme, is alio the truth and fulfilling of circumcision, because they figure both one thing? For he traileth to shew, that baprisme is the same to Christians, which circumcision had been before to the Jewes. But forasmuch as we haue now euidently declared, that the promises of both the signes, and the mysteries that are represented in them, doe agree together, we will for this present tarme no longer vpon them. Onely I will put the faithfull in minde, that though I hold my peace, they should weigh with themselues whether it be taken for an earthly and littéral signe, vnder which nothing is contented but spirituall and heavenly. But that they should not sell their smokes to the simple, we will by the way confute one objection wherewith they colour this most shamelesse lie. It is most certaine that the principall promises, wherein was contained the covenant which in the Old Testament God stablished with the Israeletes, were spirituall and tended to eternal life: and then againe, that they were receiued of the Father, spirituallly, as it was meete, that they might thereof receiue affiance of the life to come, whereunto they longed with the whole affection of their hart. But in the meane time we deny not, but that he witnessed his good wil toward them with earthly and carnall benefites: by which also we say that the same promise of spirituall things was confirmed. As when he promised euerlasting blessednesse to his seruant Abraham, that he might set before his eyes a manifest token of his fauour, he addeeth an other promise concerning the possession of the land of Chanaan. After this manner we ought to vnderstand all the earthly promises that are giuen to the Jewish nation, that the spirituall promise, as the head, whereunto they are directed, should alway haue the chiefe place. But sith I haue more largely entreated of these things in the difference of the new and olde Testament, therefore now I doe the more slightly knit it vp.

Gen.15.1.& 18.

12 In the naming of the children they finde this diuersitie, that in the old Testament they were called the children of Abraham, which issued of his seede: but that now they are called by that name, which follow his faith: And that therefore that carnall infancie, which was by circumcision grafted into the fellowship of the covenant, figured the infants of the New Testament, which are regenerate by the word of God to immortal life. In which words we beholde in deed a small sparkle of truth: but herein these light spirites grieuouly offend, that when they catch hold of that which first commeth to their hand, when they should goe further and compare many things together, they stand stilly vpon one word. Whereby it cannot otherwise be but that they must sometime be deceiued which rest vpon the sound knowledge of nothing. We graunt in deed that the carnall seed of Abraham did for a time hold the place of the spirituall seede which is by faith grafted into him. For we be called his children howsoever there is no naturall kinred betweene him and vs. But if they meane, as they plainly shew that they doe, that there was neuer spirituall blessing promised to the carnall seede of Abraham, herein they are much deceued. Wherefore we must leuell to a better marke, whereunto we are directed by the most certaine guiding of the Scripture. The Lord therefore promised to Abraham, that he should haue a seede, wherein all nations of the earth shall be blessed: and therewithall assureth him, that he would be a God to him and his seede. Whofoeuer doe by Faith receiue Christ the Author of blessing, are heires of this promise, and therefore are called the children of Abraham.

The supposed difference which the aduersaries of infants baprisme doe put betwene the ancient circumcision, and the new baprisme of Abraham.

13 But although since the resurrection of Christ the boundes of the kingdome of God haue begun to be farre and wide enlarged into all nations without difference, that according to the saying of Christ, faithfull ones should be gathered from euery part to sit downe in the heauenly glorie with Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob: yet he had many ages before extended that same to great mercie to the Iewes. And because passing ouer all other, he had chosen out that onely nation, in which he would reframe his grace for a time, called them his peculiar possession, and his purchased people. For testifying of such liberalitie, Circumcision was giuen, by the signe whereof the Iewes might be taught that God is to them the author of saluation: by which knowledge their mindes were raised into hope of eternall life. For what shall hee want, whom God hath once receiued into his charge? Wherefore the Apostle meaning to prooue that the Gentiles were the children of Abraham as well as the Iewes, speaketh in this manner: Abraham (saith he) was iustified by faith in vncircumcision. Afterward he receiued the signe of circumcision, the seale of righteoufnesse of faith, that he should be the father of all the faithfull, both of vncircumcision and of circumcision, not of them that glorie of onely circumcision, but of them that follow the faith which our father Abraham had in vncircumcision. Do not we see that both sorts are made egall in dignitie? For during the time appointed by the decree of God, he was the father of circumcision. When, the wall being plucked downe (as the Apostle writeth in another place) by which the Iewes were seuered from the Gentiles, the entry was made open to them also into the kingdom of God, he was made their father, and that without the signe of circumcision, because they haue baptism in steed of circumcision. But where he expressly by name denieth, that Abraham is father to them which are of circumcision only, that same was spoken to abate the pride of certaine, which omitting the care of godlines, did boast themselues of onely ceremonies. After which manner at this day also their vanitie may be confuted which seeke in baptism nothing but water.

14 But another place of the Apostle out of the ninth chapter of the Epistle to the Romanes shall be alleged to the contrary, where he teacheth that they which are of the flesh, are not the children of Abraham: but they only are counted his seed, which are the children of promise. For he seemeth to signifie, that the carnall kindred of Abraham is nothing, which yet we do see in some degree. But it is more diligently to be marked, what matter the Apostle there entreateth of. For, meaning to shew to the Iewes how much the goodnesse of God was not bound to the seed of Abraham, yea how it nothing auaileth of it selfe, he bringeth forth Ismael and Esau for example to prooue it: whom being refused, as if they were strangers, although they were according to the flesh the naturall offspring of Abraham, the blessing rested in Isaac and Iacob. Whereupon is gathered that which he afterward affirmeth, that saluation hangeth of the mercie of God, which he extendeth to whom it pleateth him: and that there is no cause why the Iewes should stand in their owne conceit, or boast vpon the name of the couenant, vnlesse they keepe the lawe of the couenant, that is to say, do obey the word. Againe when he hath throwen them downe from vaine confidence of their kindred, yet because on the other side he sawe, that the couenant which was once made of God with the posteritie of Abraham, could in no wise be made voide, in the eleuenth chapter, he argueth that the carnall kindred is not to be spoiled of his due dignitie: by the beneficiall meane whereof he teacheth that the Iewes are the first and naturall heires of the Gospell, but in respect that by their vnthankfulness, they were forsaken as vawoorthie: yet so that the heauenly blessing is not vtterly remoued from their nation. For which reason, how much fouer they were stubborne and couenant breakers, neuertheless he calleth them holy (so much more he giueth to the holy generation, with whom God had vouclifised to make his holy couenant) but calleth vs, if we be compared with them, as it were after borne, yea or the vntimely borne borne children of Abraham, and that by adoption, not by nature: as if a twig broken off from his naturall tree, should be grafted into a strange stocke. Therefore that they should not be defrauded of their prerogative, it behooued that the gospel should be first preached to them: for they be in the household of God as it were the first begotten children. Wherefore this honor was to be giuen them, vntill they refused it being offered them, and by their owne vnthankfulnesse brought to passe that it was carried away to the Gentiles. Neither yet, with how great obstinacy soeuer they continue to make warre against the Gospell, ought they to be despised of vs: if we consider that for the promises sake, the blessing of God doth yet stil remaine among them: as verily the Apostle testifieth that it shall neuer vterly depart from thence: because the giftes and calling of God are without repentance.

15 Behold of what force is the promise giuen to the posteritie of Abraham, and with what balance it is to be weied. Wherefore although in discerning the heires of the kingdome from bastards and strangers, we nothing doubt that the onely election of God ruleth with free right of government: yet we also therewithall perceiue, that it pleased him peculiarly to embrace the seede of Abraham with his mercie, and that the same mercie might be the more surely witnessed, to seale it with Circumcision. Now altogether like state is there of the Christian Church. For as Paul there reasoneth that the Iewes are sanctified of their parents: so in another place he teacheth, that the children of Christians receiue the same sanctification of their parents. Whereupon is gathered, that they are worthily seuered from the rest, which on the other side are condemned of vncleannes. Now who can doubt, but that it is most false which they do therupon conclude, that say that the infants which in old time were circumcised, did only figure spirituall infancie, which ariseth of the regeneration of the word of God. For Paul doth not so subtly play the Philosopher, where he writeth that Christ is the minister of Circumcision, to fulfill the promises which had beene made to the fathers, as if he said thus: Forasmuch as the couenant made with Abraham hath respect to his seede, Christ, to performe and discharge the promise once made by his Father, came to saluation to the nation of the Iewes. See you not how also after the resurrection of Christ, he iudgeth that the promise of the couenant is to be fulfilled, not onely by way of allegorie, but as the very words doe found to the carnall seede of Abraham. To the same entent serueth that which Peter in the second Chapter of the Actes, declareth to the Iewes, that the benefit of the Gospell is due to them and their seede by right of the couenant, and in the Chapter next following he calleth them the children of the Testament, that is to say heires. From which also not much disaccordeth the other place of the Apostle about alleaged, where he accounteth and setteth Circumcision emprinted in infants, for a testimonie of that communion which they haue with Christ. But if we harken to their trifles, what shall be wrought by that promise, wherby the Lord in the second article of his law vndertaketh to his seruants, that he will be fauorable to their seede euen to the thousandth generation? Shall we here flee to allegories? But that were too trifling a shift. Or shall we say that this is abolished? But so the law should be destroyed, which Christ came rather to stablish, so farre as it turneth vs to good vnto life. Let it therefore be out of contouersie, that God is so good and libetall to his, that for their sakes, he will haue also their children, whom they shall beget, to be adnumbred among his people.

16 Moreover the differences which they go about to put betweene baptism and circumcision, are not onely woorthy to be laughed at, and voide of all colour of reason, but also disagreeing with themselves. For when they haue affirmed that baptism hath relation to the first daye of the spirituall battell, but Circumcision to the eight when mortification is already ended, by and by forgetting the same, they turne their song, and call Circumcision a figure of the flesh to be mortified, but baptism they call buriall, into which none are to be put till they be already dead. What dotages of phrentike men, can with so great lightnesse leape into sundry diuersities? For in the first sentence, baptisme must goe before circumcision: by the other, it is thrust backe into the later place. Yet is it no new example, that the wits of men be so tossed vp and downe, when in steed of the most certaine worde of God they worship whatsoever they haue dreamed. We therefore say that that former difference is a meer dreame. If they list to expound by way of allegorie vpon the eight day, yet it agreed not in that manner. It were much sifter, according to the opinion of the old writers, to referre the number of eight to the resurrection which was done on the eight day, whereupon we know that the newnes of life hangeth: or to the whole course of this present life, wherein mortification ought alway to goe forward, till when life is ended, mortification it selfe may also be ended. Howbeit God may seeme to haue minded to prouide for the tendernes of age, in deferring circumcision to the eight day, because the wound should haue bene more dangerous to the children new borne and yetted from their mother. How much stronger is that, that we being dead before, are buried by baptisme: when the scripture expressly crieth to the contrary that we are buried into death to this intent, that we should die, and from thenceforth should endeouour to this mortification? Now, a likewise handling it is, that they cauil that women ought not to be baptised, if baptisme must be framed like to circumcision. For if it be most certaine that the sanctifying of the seed of Israel was testified by the signe of circumcision: thereby also it is vndoubted, that it was giuen to sanctifie both males and females. But the only bodies of male children were marked with it, which might by nature be marked: yet so that women were by them after a certaine manner companions and partners of circumcision. Therefore sending far away such follies of theirs, let vs sticke fast in the likenes of baptisme and circumcision, which we most largely see to agree, in the inward mysterie, in the promises, in vse, in effectualnes.

Childrens want of understanding no reason to keepe them from being baptised which is the seale of their sanctitie whereof they are capable.

17 They thinke also that they bring forth a most strong reason, why children are to be debarred from baptisme, when they alleage that they are not yet for age able to vnderstand the mysterie there signified. That is spirittall regeneration, which cannot be in the first infancie. Therefore they gather, that they are to be taken for none other than the children of Adam, till they be growen to age meete for a second birth. But the truth of God each where speaketh against all these things. For if they be to be left among the children of Adam, then they are left in death: forasmuch as in Adam we can do nothing but die. But contrariwise Christ commandeth them to be brought vnto him. Why so? because he is life: Therefore that he may giue life to them, he maketh them partakers of himselfe: when in the meane time these fellows driving them far away do adudge them to death. For if they say for a flint that infants do not therefore perish if they be accounted the children of Adam, their error is abundantly confuted by witness of the scripture. For whereas it pronounceth that all do die in Adam, it followeth that there remaineth no hope of life but in Christ. Therefore that we may be made heires of life, we must communicate with him. Again when it is written in another place, that by nature we are subiect to the wrath of God, and conceived in sinne, whereunto damnation perpetually cleauech: wee must depart out of our owne nature, before that the entrie be open to vs into the kingdome of God. And what can be more plainly spoken, than that flesh and blood can not possesse the kingdome of God? Therefore let all be done away whatsoever is ours (which shall not be done without regeneration) then we shall see this possession of the kingdome. Finally if Christ say truly, when he reporteth that he is life, it is necessarie that we be grafted into him, that we may be deliuered out of the bondage of death. But (say they) how are infants regenerate, which are not endued with knowledge neither of good nor of euil? But we answer, that the worke of God is not yet no work at all, although it be not subiect to our capacity. Moreover it is nothing doubtful, that the infants which are to be saued (as verily of that age some are saued) are before regenerate of the Lord. For if they bring with them from their mothers wombe the corruption naturally planted in them: they must be purged thereof, before that they be admitted into the kingdome of God, whereinto nothing entreteth that is defiled or spotted. If they be borne sinners, as both Dauid and Paul affirme: either they remaine out of fauour and hatefull to God, or they must needes be iustified. And what seeke we more, when the Iudge himselfe openly affirmeth that the enuy into heavenly life is open to none but to them that be borne againe? And to put such carpers to silence, he shewed an example in Iohn the Baptist, whom he sanctified in his mothers wombe, what he was able to doe in the rest. Neither doe they any thing preuaile by the shift wherewith they here mocke, that that was but once done: whereupon it doth not by and by follow that the Lord is wont commonly to doe so with infants. For neither doe we reason after that manner: onely our purpose is to shew, that the power of God is by them vniustly & cnuiously limited within those narrow boundes within which it suffreth not it selfe to be bound. Their other by shift is euen of as great weight. They alleage that by the vsuall manner of the Scripture, this word (from the wombe,) is almost in effect, as if it were said, frō childhood. But we may clearly see, that the Angell when he declared the same to Zachary, meant an other thing: that is, that it which was not yet borne, should be filled with the holy Ghost. Let vs not therefore attempt to appoint a law to God, but that he may sanctifie whom it pleaseh him, as he sanctified this child, forasmuch as his power is nothing minished.

18 And truly Christ was therefore sanctified from his first infancie, that he might sanctifie in himselfe his elect out of euery age without difference. For as, to doe away the fault of disobedience which had been committed in our flesh, he hath put on the same flesh vpon himselfe, that he might in it for vs and in our steede performe perfect obedience: so he was conceived of the holy Ghost, that hauing the holinesse thereof fully poured into him in the flesh which he had taken vpon him, he might power forth the same into vs. If we haue in Christ a most perfect paterne of all the graces which God continually sheweth to his children, verily in this behalfe alio he shall be a proofof vnto vs, that the age of infancie is not so farr vnfit for sanctification. But howsoeuer it be, yet this we hold out of controuersie, that none of the elect is called out of this present life, which is not first made holy and regenerate by the Spirit of God. Whereas they object to the contrary, that in the Scriptures the Spirit acknowledgeth no other regeneration but of incorruptible seede, that is, of the word of God: they doe wrongfully expound that saying of Peter, v. herein he comprehendeth only the faithfull which had bene taught by preaching of the Gospell. To such in deed we graunt that the word of the Lord is the onely seede of spirituall regeneration: but we denie that it ought therupon to be gathered, that infants cannot be regenerate by the power of God, which is to him as easie & ready as to vs it is incomprehensible and wonderfull. Moreover it should not be safe enough for vs to take this away frō the Lord, that he may not be able to shew himselfe to be knowne to the by whatsoever way he will.

19 But Faith, say they, is by hearing, whereof they haue not yet gotten the vse, neither can they be able to know God, whom Moses teacheth to be destitute of the knowledge both of good and euil. But they consider not that the Apostle, when he maketh hearing the beginning of Faith, describeth onely the ordinarie distribution of the Lord and disposition which he vseth to keepe in calling them that be his: but appointeth not to him a perpetuall rule, that he may not vse any other way. Which way verily he hath vsed in the calling of many, to who he hath giuen the true knowledge of himselfe by an inward manner, by the enlightening of the Spirit, without any preaching vsed for meane thereof. But wheras they thinke it shall be a great absurdity, if any knowledge of God be giuen to infants, from whom Moses taketh away the vnderstanding of good and euil: I beseech them to answere me what danger is there if they be said to receiue some part of that grace, whereof a little after they shall enjoy the full plentifulnesse. For if the fulnesse of life standeth in the perfect knowledge of God, when many of them, whom in their vne first infancie death by and by taketh away, do passe into eternall life, truly they are receiued to behold the most present face of God. Whom therefore the Lord will enlighten with the full brightnesse of his light, why may he not presently also, if it so please him, send out to shine vpon them some small sparkle thereof: specially if he do not first vnclouth them of ignorance, before that he take them out of the prison of the flesh? Not that I mean rashly to affirme that they be endued with the same Faith which we feele in our selues, or that they haue altogether like knowledge of faith: (which I had rather leaue in suspence) but somewhat to retraineth their foolish arrogance, which according as their mouth is puffed vp with fulnes, do boldly deny or affirme they care not what.

Infants not excluded from baptism more than from circumcision for want of faith and repentance.
Rom. 14. 11.

20 But that they may yet stande more strongly in this point, they adde that baptism is a Sacrament of repentance and of Faith, wherefore sith neither of these can befall in tender infancie, we ought to beware least if they be admitted to the communion of baptism, the signification of it be made void and vaine. But these dares are thrown rather against God than against vs. For it is most euident by many testimonies of Scripture, that circumcision also was a signe of repentance. Moreover it is called of Paul the seale of the righteousnesse of Faith. Let therefore a reason be required of God himselfe why he commaunded it to be marked in the bodies of infants. For sith baptism and circumcision are both in one case, they can giue nothing to the one but that they must also therewithall graunt the same to the other. If they looke backe to their wonted starting hole, that then by the age of infancie were figured spiritual infants, the way is already stopped vp against them. We say therefore, sith God hath communicated to infants circumcision a Sacrament of repentance and faith, it seemeth no absurditie if they be made partakers of baptism: vnlesse they list openly torage against the ordinance of God. But both in all the dooings of God, and in this selfe same doing also shineth wisdome and righteousnesse enough, to beat down the backbitings of the wicked. For though infants, at the same instant that they were circumcised, did not comprehend in vnderstanding what that signe meant: yet they were truly circumcised into the mortification of their corrupt and desiled nature, in which mortification they should afterwarde exercise themselves when they were growen to riper age. Finally it is verie easie to assoile this obiection, with saying that they be bapuzed into repentance and Faith to come: which although they be not formed in them, yet by secret working of the Spirit the seed of both lyeth hidden in them. With this answer at once is ouerthrown whatsoever they wrest against vs which they haue fetched out of the signification of baptism. Of which sort is that title wherewith it is commended of Paul, where he calleth it the washing of regeneration and of renewing. Whereupon they gather that it is to be giuen to none but to such a one as is able to conceiue those things. But we on the contrary side may answer, that neither was circumcision which betokened regeneration, to be giuen to any other than to them that were regenerate. And so also we condemne the ordinance of God. Wherefore (as we haue already touched in diuers places) whatsoever arguments do tend to the shaking of circumcision, they haue no force in the assailing of baptism. Neither do they escape away, if they say that we ought to take that for determined and certaine, which standeth vpon the authoritie of God, although there appeare no reason of it: which reuerence is not due to the baptism of infants, nor to such other things which be not comended vnto vs by the expresse word of God: sith they are still fast holden with this double argument. For the commandment of God concerning infants to be circumcised, was either lawfull and subiect to no cauillations, or worthy to be found fault withall. If there were no inconuenience nor absurditie in the commandment of circumcision, neither can there any absurditie be noted

21 As for the spot of absurditie which in this place they go about to lay vpon it, we thus wipe it away. Whom the Lord hath vouchsafed to elect, if hauing receiued the signe of regeneration, they depart out of this present life before that they be come to riper age, he reneweth them with the power of his spirite incomprehensible to vs, in such maner as he alone foreseeeth to be expedient. If they chance to growe vpper to age, wherby they may be taught the truth of baptisme, they shall hereby be the more inkindled to the endeour of renewing, the token wherof they shall learne to haue beene giuen them from their first infancie, that they shoulde exercise themselues in it throughout the whole course of their life. To the same entent ought that to be applied which Paul teacheth in two places, that by baptisme wee are buried together with Christ. For he doth not meane thereby, that he which is to be baptised, must be alreadie first buried together with Christ: but simple declareth what doctrine is contained vnder baptisme, yea and that to them that be alreadie baptised: so that verie mad men would not affirme by this place that it goeth before baptisme. After this maner Moses and the prophets did put the people in minde what circumcision ment, wherewith yet they had been marked while they were infants. Of the same effect also is that which he writeth to the Galathians, that they when they were baptised, did put on Christ. To what ende? Verily that they shoulde from thence forth liue to Christ, because they had not liued before. And although in the older sort the receiuing of the signe ought to follow the vnderstanding of the mysterie: yet it shall be by and by declared that infants ought to be otherwise esteemed and accounted of. And no otherwise ought we to iudge of the place of Peter, in which they thinke that they haue a strong hold: when he saith that it is not a washing to wipe away the filthines of the body, but the witness of a good conscience before God, by the resurrection of Christ. They indeed doe gather thereby, that nothing is left to the baptisme of infants, but that it should be a vaine smoke, namely from which this truth is farre distant. But they often offend in this error, that they wil haue the thing in order of time to go alway before the signe. For the truth of circumcision also consisted of the same witness of good conscience. If it ought of necessitie to haue gone before, infants should neuer haue been circumcised by the commandement of God. But he shewing that the witness of a good conscience was contained vnder the truth of circumcision, and yet therewithall also commanding infants to be circumcised, doth in that point sufficiently declare that circumcision is applied to the time to come. Wherefore there is no more present effectualnes to bee required in baptisme of infants, than that it should confirme and stablish the covenant made by the Lord with them. The rest of the signification of that Sacrament shall afterward followe at such time as God himselfe foreseeeth.

22 Now I thinke there is no man, that doth not cleerely see that all such reasons of theirs are meere misconstruings of Scripture. As for the rest that bee of a neere kinde to these, we will lightly iunne through them by the way. They object that baptisme is giuen vnto the forgiuenes of sinnes: which when it is granted, will largelic make for defence of our sentence. For sith we be borne sinners, wee doe cnen from our mothers wombe neede forgiuenes and pardon. Nowe seeing the Lorde doth not cut off, but rather assure to that age the hope of mercy: why shoulde wee take from them the signe which is much inferior than the thing it selfe? Wherefore that which they go about to throw against vs, we thus throw backe against themselues: infants haue remission of sins giuen them, therefore they ought not to haue the signe taken from them. They alleage also this out of the Epistle to the Ephesians: that the church is cleafed of the Lorde, with the washing of water in the worde of life. Than which there could be nothing bee alleged more fit to ouerthrowe this enour: for ther upon groweth an easie prooffe of our side. If the Lord will haue that washing wherewith he cleanse his church, to be testified by baptisme: it seemeth not rightfull that it should want the testimonie of it in infants, which are rightfully accounted part of the church, forasmuch as they be called heires of the heavenly kingdome. For Paul speaketh of the whole church, where he saith that it was cleanse with the baptisme of water. Likewise of this that in another place hee saith that wee be by baptisme grafed into the bodie of Christ, wee gather that infantes, whom hee reckoneth among his members, ought to bee baptised, least they bee plucked awaie from his bodie. Beholde with what violence with so many engines they assault the fortresses of our faith.

1. Cor. 12:7.

The apostles in not baptising any come vnto yeeres of discretion without repentance & profession made of their faith, meant not hereby to teach that none should be baptised but onely such as were of yeeres to doe this.

Act. 2:37.

Act. 8:37.

23 Then they come downe to the practise and custome of the time of the apostles, wherein none is found to haue bene admitted to baptisme, but hee which hath before professed faith and repentance. For where Peter was asked of them that were minded to repent, what was needfull to bee done, he counsell'd them first to repent, and then to be baptised into the forgiuenes of sinnes. Likewise Philip, when the Eunuch required to be baptised, answered that he might be baptised if he beleueed with all his hart. Heereby they thinke that they may winne, that it is not lawfull that baptisme be graunted to any, but where faith and repentance go before. Truly if we yeeld to this reason, the first of these two places where is no mention made of faith, will prooue that repentance alone sufficeth: and the other place, wherein repentance is not required, will prooue that faith onely is enough. I thinke they will answer that the one place is holpen with the other, and therefore must be ioyned together. I saie also likewise, that other places must be laid together which make somewhat to the vndoing of this knot: forasmuch as there be many sentenes in scripture, the vnderstanding whereof hangeth vpon the circumstance of the place. As this presently is an example. For they to whom Peter and Philip spake these things were of age sufficient to haue practise of repentance and to conceiue faith. Wee earnestly denie that such ought to be baptised, vntil after perceiuing of their conuersion and faith, at least so farre as it may be searched out by the iudgement of men. But, that infantes ought to be accounted in another number, it is more than euident enough. For in old time if any man did ioyne himselfe into communion of religion with Israel, it behooued that he should first be taught the couenant of the Lord, and instructed in the lawe, before that he were marked with circumcision, because in birth he was a stranger from the people of Israel, with whom the couenant had bene made with circumcision established.

As saith in Abraham went before circumcision, but in his seed circumcision before faith, so it is with baptisme in christian men and children.

Gen. 15:1.

Gen. 17:16.

Gen. 16:20.

24 As also the Lord, when he adopteth Abraham to himselfe, doth not begin at circumcision, hiding in the meane time what hee meaneth by that signe: but first hee declareth what couenant he intendeth to make with him, and then after faith giuen to the promise, he maketh him partaker of the Sacrament. Why doth in Abraham the sacrament follow faith, and in Isaac his sonne it goeth before all vnderstanding? Because it is meete that he, which being in full growen age is received into fellowship of the couenant, from which he had bene hitherto a stranger, shoulde first learne the conditions thereof: but an infant begotten of him needed not to, which by right of inheritance according to the forme of the promise is euen from his mothers wombe contained in the couenant. Or (that the matter may be more cleerely and briefly shewed) if the children of the faithfull, without the helpe of vnderstanding, are partakers of the couenant, there is no cause why they should be debarred from the signe for this that they cannot sweare to the soime of the couenant. This vtrily is the reason, why in some places God affirmeth that the infantes which are issued of the Israelites, are begotten and borne to him. For without doubt he esteemeth as his children the children of them to whose seede hee promiseth that hee will beea Father. But he which is vnfaithfull, issued of vngodly parents, till hee be by faith vniited to God, is iudged a stranger from the communion of the couenant. Therefore it is no marvell if he be not partaker of the signe, the signification whereof should be deceitfull and voide in him. To this effect Paul also writteth, that the gentiles so long as they were drowned in their idolatrie, were out of the Testament. With this short summe, (as I thinke) the whole matter may be cleerely opened: that they which in grown age, embrace the faith of Christ, for as much as they were hitherto strangers from the covenant, are not to be marked with baptisme, but whereas faith and repentance come betweene, which onely can open them the entrie into fellowship of the covenant: but the infants that are issued of Christians, as they are receued of God into the inheritance of the covenant, so soone as they be borne; so ought to be receued to baptisme. Hereunto must that be applied which the Euangelist speaketh of, that they were baptised of John which confessed their finnes. Which example at this day also we thinke meete to be kept. For if a Turke offer himselfe to baptisme, he should not be rashly baptised of vs, namely not till after confession whereby hee may satisfie the Church.

25 Moreouer they bring forth the wordes of Christ, which are rehearsed in the thirde Chapter of John, whereby they thinke that a present regeneration is required in baptisme. Vnlesse a man be borne againe of water and the spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdome of God. Loe (say they) how baptisme is by the Lordes owne mouth called regeneration. Then therefore whome it is more than enough known to be vnable to receiue regeneration, by what colour doe we admit to baptisme which cannot bee without regeneration? First they are deceived in this that they thinke that in this place mention is made of baptisme, because they heare the name of water. For after that Christ had declared to Nicodemus the corruption of nature, and taught him, that men must be borne of new, because Nicodemus dreamed of a bodily new birth, he there shewed the manner how God doth regenerate vs, namely by water and the spirit: as though he should say by the spirit which in cleansing and watering faithfull soules, doth the office of water. Therefore I take water and the spirit simply for the spirit, which is water. Neither is this a new forme of speech, for it altogether agreeth with the same which is in the third Chapter of Matthew: He that followeth me, it is he that baptiseth in the holy Ghost and fire. Therefore as to baptise in the holy Ghost and fire, is to giue the holy Ghost, which hath the office and nature of fire: so to be borne againe of water and the spirit, is nothing else but to receiue that power of the holy spirit which doth the same thing in the soule that water doth in the bodie. I knowe that other doe otherwise expounde it: but I am out of doubt that this is the naturall meaning: because the purpose of Christ is none other, but to teach that all they must put off their owne nature which aspire to the heauenly kingdome. Howbeit if we list to caull vnsauorily as they doe, it were easie for vs (when we haue graunted as they would haue it) to inferre vpon them that baptisme is before faith and repentance: for as much as in the wordes of Christ it goeth before the spirit. It is certaine that this is vnderstanded of spirituall giftes: which if it come after baptisme, I haue obtained what I require. But leauing caualiations, we must hold fast the plaine exposition, which I haue brought, that no man till he haue bene renewed with liuing water, that is, with the spirit, can enter into the kingdome of God.

26 Now hereby also it is euident that their famed inuention is to be hissed out, which adudge all the vnbaptised to eternall death. Therefore let vs according to their request imagine baptisme to be ministred to none but to them that be grown in age: What will they say, shall become of a childe, which is rightly and well instructed with the introductions of godlinesse, if when the day of baptising is at hand, he happen to be taken away with sudden death beside all mens hope? The Lordes promise is cleere, that whosoever hath beleued in the sonne, shall not see death, nor shall come into iudgement, but is already passed from death into life: and it is no where where founde that he euer damned him that was not yet baptised. Which I woulde not haue so taken of mee as though I meant that Baptisme might freely bee despised (by which despising I affirme that the Lordes couenant is defiled: so much lesse can I abide to excuse it) onely it is enough for mee to prooue, that it is not so necessarie, that he should be immediately thought to be lost, from whome power is taken away to obtaine it. But if we agree to their fained deuise, we shall damne all them without exception, whome any chance withholdeth from baptisme, with how great faith foucer (by which Christ himselfe is possessed) otherwise they are endued. Morcouer they make all infants guiltie of eternall death, to whome they denie baptisme, which by their owne confession is necessarie to saluation. Now let them looke how trimly they agree with the words of Christ, by which the kingdome of heauen is adiuaged to that age. But, to graunt them euery thing so much as pertaineth to the vnderstanding of this place, yet they shall gather nothing thereof, vnlesse they ouerthrowe the former doctrine which we haue stablished concerning the regeneration of infants.

Luk. 3. 23.

27 But they glorie that they haue the strongest hold of all in the very institution of baptisme, which they fetch out of the last Chapter of Matthew: where Christ sending forth his Apostles to all nations, giueth them the first commandement to teach them, and the second to baptise them. Then also out of the last of Marke they adioyne this, He that beleueeth and is baptised, shall be saued. What seeke we further (say they) when the Lords owne words doe openly found, that we must first teach ere we baptise, and doe assigne to baptisme the second state after faith? Of which order the Lord also shewed an example in himselfe, which woulde be baptised not till the thirtieth yeere. But here, O good God, how many waies do they both entangle themselves, and bewray their owne ignorance? For herein they now more than childishly erre, that they fetch the first institution of baptisme from thence, which Christ had from the beginning of his preaching giuen in charge to his Apostles to minister. Therefore there is no cause why they should affirme that the law and rule of baptisme is to be fetched out of these places, as though they contained the first institution thereof. But to beare with them for this fault, yet how strong is this manner of reasoning? Truly if I listed to dallie with them, there is not a little lurking hole, but a most wide field offereth it selfe open for vs to escape them. For when they sticke so fast to the order of words, that they gather that because it is saide, Go, preach and baptise. Again, he that beleueeth and is baptised, therefore they must preach before that they baptise, and beleue before that they require baptisme: why may not we againe answere them with saying that we must baptise before that we must teach the keeping of those things that Christ hath commanded, namely sith it is said, baptise ye, teaching them to keepe whatsoever things I haue commanded you? which same things we haue noted in that saying of Christ which hath been euen now alleged concerning the regeneration of water and the Spirit. For if it be so vnderstood as they would haue it, verily in that place baptisme must be before spirituall regeneration, because it is named in the first place. For Christ doth teach that we must be regenerate, not of the spirite and water, but of water and the spirite.

Mark. 16. 15.

The Gospell by Christes appointment to be preached to men of capacity and they to beleue before they be baptised: but not infants therefore to be unbaptised till they come vnto yeeres of habit: to heare and beleue.

28 Now this inuincible reason whereupon they beare themselves so bolde, seemeth to be somewhat shaken: but because truth hath defence enough in simplicitie, I will not escape away with such light arguments. Therefore let them take with them a full answer. Christ in this place giueth the chiefe commandement concerning preaching of the Gospell, whereunto he adioyneth the ministerie of baptisme as an addition hanging vpon it. Againe he speaketh none otherwise of baptisme, but so farre as the ministracion of it is vnder the office of teaching. For Christ sendeth the Apostles to publish the Gospell to all the nations of the worlde, that they should from eachwhere with the doctrine of saluation gather together into his kingdome men that

that before were lost. But whom, or what maner of men? It is certaine that there is no mention but of them that are able to receiue teaching. Afterwarde hee addeth that such, when they are instructed, ought to be baptised, adioyning a promise, that they which belecue and are baptised shall be saued. Is there in all that saying so much as one syllable of Infants? What forme therefore of reasoning shall this be wherewith they assaile vs: they which are of growen age, must first be instructed, that they may belecue, ere they be baptised: therefore it is vnlawfull to make baptisme common to infants? Although they woulde buist themselues, they shall prooue nothing else by this place but that the Gospell must be preached to them that are of capacitie able to heare it, before that they be baptised, forasmuch as he there speaketh of such onely. Let them hereof if they can make a stop to debar infants from baptisme.

29. But that euen blinde men also may with groping finde out their deceits, I will point them out with a very cleere similitude. If any man cauill that infants ought to haue meate taken from them, vpon this pretence that the Apostle sufferieth none to eate but them that labour, shall he not be woorthie that all men shoulde spit at him? Why so? Because he with difference draweth that to all men, which was spoken of one kind and one certaine age of men. No whit handsomer is their handling in this present cause. For that which euery man seeth to belong to one age alone, they draw to infants, that this age also may be subiect to the rule which was made for none but them that were more growen in yeeres. As for the example of Christ it nothing withholdeth their side, He was not baptised before that he was thirtie yeeres old. That is indeed true: but there is a reason thercof readie to be shewed: because he then purposed by his preaching to lay a sound foundation of baptisme, or rather to stablish the foundation which had been before laid of Iohn. Therefore when he minded with his doctrine to institute baptisme, to procure the greater authoritie to his institution, hee sanctified it with his owne bodie, and that in such times of time as was most conuenient, namely when he began his preaching. Finally, they shall gather nothing else hereof, but that baptisme tooke his original and beginning at the preaching of the Gospell. If they list to appoint the thirtie yeere, why do they not keepe it, but do receiue euery one to bapisme as he hath in their iudgement sufficiently profited? yea and Sernettus one of their masters, when he stultely required this time, yet began at the 21. yeere of his age to boast himselfe to be a prophet. As though he were to be satisfied that taketh vpon himselfe the place of a teacher in the church, before that he be a member of the Church.

30. At the last they obiekt, that there is no greater cause why baptisme should be giuen to infants, than the Lords supper, which yet is not granted them. As though the scripture did not euery way expresse a large difference. The same was indeed vially done in the old church, as it appeareth by Cyprian and Augustine: but that manner is worthily growen out of vse. For if we consider the nature and propertie of baptisme, it is truly an entrie into the Church, and as it were a forme of admission, whereby wee are adnumbred into the people of God, a signe of our spiritual regeneration by which wee are borne againe into the children of God: whereas on the other side the supper is giuen to them that bee more growen in age, which hauing passed tender infancie, are nowe able to beare strong meate. Which difference is verie euidently shewed in the scripture. For there the Lorde so much as pertaineth to baptisme, maketh no choise of ages. But he doth not likewise giue the supper to all to take part of it, but onely to them which are fit to discern the bodie and bloud of the Lorde, to examine their own conscience, to declare the Lords death, to weigh the power thereof. Woulde we haue any thing plainer, than that which the apostle teacheth when he exhorteth that euery man shoulde prooue and examine himselfe, and then eate of this bread and drinke of this cup? Therefore examination must goe before; which shoulde in vaine be looked for of infants. Againe, he that eateth vnworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himselfe, not discerning the Lords body. If none can partake worthily but they that can well discern the holines of the Lordes bodie, why should we giue to our tender children, poison in steed of liuely foode? What is that commandement of the Lord, ye shall do it in remembrance of me? what is that other which the Apostle denieth from the same, So oft as yee shall cate of this bread, yee shall declare the Lords death till he come? What remembrance (I beseech you) shall we require at our infants of the thing which they neuer attained with vnderstanding, what preaching of the crosse of Christ, the force and benefit whereof they do not yet comprehend in minde? None of these things is prescribed in baptisme. Therefore betwene these two signes is great difference: which we note also in like signes in the old testament; Circumcision, which is known to answer to our baptisme, was appointed for infants. But the Passouer into whose place the Supper hath now succeeded, did not receiue all maner of guesstes without difference. But was rightly eaten of them onely that might by age enquire of the signification of it. If these men had remaining one crum of sound braine, would they be blinde at a thing so cleere and offering it selfe to sight.

Twenie arguments of Seruet-tus against the baptisme of children answered.

31 Although it grieueth me to lode the Readers with a heap of trifles: yet it shall be worth the trauaile briefly to wipe away such gay reasons as Seruetus not the least of the Anabaptistes, yea the great glorie of that companie, thought himselfe to bring when he prepared himselfe to confict. He alleageth, that Christs signes as they be perfect, so do require them that be perfect or able to conceiue perfection. But the solution is easie: that the perfection of baptisme, which extendeth euen to death, is wrongfully restrained to one point of tyme. I say yet further, that perfection is foolishly required in man at the first day, whereunto baptisme allureth vs all our life long, by continuall degrees. He obiecteth that Christs signes were ordained for remembrance, that euery man should remember that he was buried together with Christ. I answer that that which he hath fained of his owne head, needeth no confutation: yea that which he draweth to baptisme, Pauls words shewe to be proper to the holie Supper, that euery man should examine himselfe: but of baptisme there is no where any such thing. Whereupon we gather that they be rightly baptised which for their smalnesse of age, are not yet able to receiue examination. Whereas hee thirdly alleageth, that all they abide in death which beleue not the sonne of God, & that the wrath of God abideth vpon them: and therefore that infants which cannot beleue lie in their damnation: I answer that Christ there speaketh not of the general guiltinesse wherewith all the posteritie of Adam are enwrapped, but onely threatneth the despisers of the Gospell, which doe proudly and stubbornly refuse the grace offered them. But this nothing pertaineth to infants. Also I set a contrarie reason against them: that whomsoever Christ blesteth, he is discharged from the curse of Adam and the wrath of God: Sith therefore it is known that infants are blessed of him, it followeth that they are discharged from death. Then he falsely citeth that which is no where read, that whosocuer is borne of the spirite, heareth the voice of the spirite. Which although wee grant to be written, yet shall prouoe nothing else but that the faithfull are framed to obedience, according as the spirite worketh in them. But that which is spoken of a certaine number, it is faultie to drawe indifferently to

4 all. Fourthly, he obiecteth: because that goeth before which is naturall wee must carrie ripe time for baptisme which is spirituall. But although I grant that all the posteritie of Adam begotten of the flesh doe from the verie wombe beare their owne damnation, yet I deny that that withstandeth but that God may presently bring remedie. For neither shall Seruetus prouoe, that there were many yeres appointed by God that the spirituallnesse of life may begin. As Paul testifieth, although they which are borne of the faithfull are by nature damned: yet by supernaturall grace they are saued. Then hee bringeth forth an allegoric, that Dauid going vp into the towre of Sion, did leade neither blinde men nor lame men with him: but strong souldiers. But what if I ser a parable against it, wherein God calleth to the heavenly bancker blinde men and lame men: how will Sernettus vnywilde himsele out of this knot? I aske also whether lame and maimed men had not first beene souldiers with David. But it is superfluous to tarrie longer vpon this reason, which the readers shall finde by the holy historie to be made of meere falshood. There followeth another allegorie, that the Apostles were fishes of men, not of little children. But I aske, what that saying of Christ meaneth, that into the net of the Gospell are gathered all kindes of fishes. But because I like not to play with allegories, I answer that when the office of teaching was enioyned to the Apostles, yet they were not forbidden from baptising of infants. Howbeit I would yet knowe, when the Euangelist nameth them Anthropous, men, (in which word is comprehended all mankind without exception) why they should deny infants to be men. Scuenthly he allegeth, that sith spirituall things agree with spirituall, infants which are not spirituall, are also not meete for baptisme. But first it is plainly euident how wrongfully they wrest the place of Paul. There is entreated of doctrine: when the Corinthians did too much stande in their owne conceite for vaine sharpenesse of wit, Paul rebuketh their sluggishnesse, for that they were yet to be instructed in the first introduction of heavenly wisdom. Who can thereof gather that baptisme is to be denied to infants, whom being begotten of the flesh God doth by free adoption make holy to himselfe? Whereas hee saith, that they must be fed with spirituall meate, if they be newe men, the solution is easie, that by baptisme they are admitted into the flocke of Christ, and that the signe of adoption sufficeth them, til being growen to age they be able to beare strong meate: that therefore the time of examination which God expressly requirerth in the holy Supper, must be tarried for. Afterwarde he obiecterth that Christ calleth all his to the holy Supper. But it is certaine enough that he admitteth none, but them that be already prepared to celebrate the remembrance of his death. Whereupon followeth that infants whome he vouchsafed to embrace, doe stay in a seuerall and proper degree by themselves til they grow to age, and yet are not strangers. Whereas he saith, that it is monstrous that a man after that he is borne, should not eate: I answer that soules are otherwise fed than by the outward eating of the Supper: and that therefore Christ is neuertheless meate to infants, although they abstaine from the signe. But of baptisme the case is otherwise, by which onely the gate into the Church is opened to them. Againe he obiecterth that a good steward distributerh meate to the householde in due time. Which although I willingly graunt: yet by what right will he appoint vnto vs the certaine time of baptisme, that he may prooue that it is not giuen to infants out of time. Moreouer he bringerth in that commandement of Christ to the Apostles, that they should make haste into the harvest, while the fieldes waxe white. Verily Christ meaneth this onely, that the Apostles seeing the fruite of their labour present, should the more cheerefully prepare themselves to teach. Who shall therefore gather that the onely time of hauest is the ripe time for baptisme? His eleuenth reason is, that in the first Church Christians and disciples were all one: but we see now that he sondly reasoneth from the part to the whole. Disciples are called men of full age, which had been already throughly taught, and had professed Christ: as it behooued that the Iewes vnder the law should be the disciples of Moses: yet no man shall thereof rightly gather, that infants were strangers, whom the Lord hath testified to be of his householde. Beside these he allegeth, that all Christians are brethren, in which number infants are not vnto vs, so long as we debarre them from the Supper. But I returne to that principle, that none are heires of the kingdome of heauen, but they that are the members of Christ: then, that the embracing of Christ was a true token of the adoption, whereby infants are ioyned in common with full growen men, and that the abstaining for a time from spirites, as though they were vexed with a phrensie, doe thrust in all the grossest absurdities for defence of their errors, because God doth with such giddines iustly take vengeance of their pride and stubbornnesse. Verily I trust I haue made plaine with how feeble succours Sermetus hath holpen his silly brethen the Anabaptists.

32 Now I thinke it will be doubtfull to no sober man, how rashly they trouble the Church of Christ, that moue brawles and contentions for the bapisme of infants. But it is profitable to consider, what Satan goeth about with this so great subtletie: euen to take away from vs the singular fruite of affiance & spirituall ioy which is to be gathered hereof, and to diminish as much also of the glory of the goodnes of God For how sweete is it to godly mindes, to be certified not onely by word, but also by sight to be seene with eyes, that they obtaine so much fauour with the heavenly Father, that he hath also care of their posteritie? For here it is to be seene, how he taketh vpon him the person of a most prouident father of household toward vs, which euen after our death doth not lay away his carefulnesse of vs, but prouideth and foreseeth for our children. Ought we not here after the example of Dauid with all our hart to leape vp vnto thanksgiving, that by such shew of his goodnes, his name may be sanctified? This, verily Satan intendeth, in assailing vs with so great armies the bapisme of infants: namely, that this testifying of the grace of God being taken away, the promise which by it is present before our eyes, may at length by little and little vanish away. Whereupon should grow not onely a wicked vnthankfulness toward the mercie of God, but also a certaine slouthfulness in instructing our children to godlinesse. For by this spurre we are not a little pricked forward to bring them vp in the earnest feare of God and in the keeping of his law, when we consider that euen immediatly from their birth, he taketh and acknowledgeth them for his children. Wherefore vnlesse we sitt enuiously to darken the bountifullnes of God, let vs offer to him our children, to whom he giueth a place among them that be of his familie and household, that is to say, the members of the Church.

The drift of Satans influring vp contention about the bapisme of infants.

Psal. 48. 11.

The xvij. Chapter.

Of the holy Supper of Christ: and what it auaileth vs.

AFTER that God hath once receiued vs into his familie, and not onely to take vs as his seruants, but as his children: that he may fulfill the office of a most good Father, and carefull for his issue, he taketh also vpon him to nourish vs throughout the whole course of our life. And not contented therewith, it pleased him by a pledge giuen to assure vs of this continuall liberaltie. To this end therefore he hath giuen his Church an other Sacrament by the hand of his onely begotten Sonne, namely a spirituall banquet, wherein Christ testifieth himselfe to be the quickning bread, wherewith our soules are fed to true and blessed immortalitie. But forasmuch as the knowledge of so great a mysterie is very necessaric, and according to the greatnesse thereof, requireth a diligent declaration: and Satan, that he might bereaue the Church of this inestimable treasure, hath long ago spread mistes, and since that time darkened, to obscure the light of it, and then hath stirred strifes and batailes that might estrange the mindes of the simple from tasting of this holy foode, and hath also in our time attempted the same craft: therefore when I shall haue briefly knit vp the summe for the capacitie of the vnlearned, I will vndoe those knottes, wherewith Satan hath endeouored to snare the world. First, bread and wine are signes, which represent vnto vs the inuisible foode, which we receiue of the flesh and blood of Christ. For as in bapisme God againe begetting vs doth graffe vs into the fellowship of his Church, and by adoption doth make vs his owne: so we haue said that he performeth the office of a prouident Father of household, in this that he continually ministreth vs meate, that he sustaineth and preferueth vs in that life whereunto he hath by his word begotten vs. Now the onely meate of our soule is Christ, and therefore the heavenly father calleth vs to him, that being refreshed with common partaking of him, we may from time to time gather lively force, vntill we attaine to heavenly immortality. But for as much as this mysterie of the secret vniuing of Christ with the godly is by nature impossible to bee comprehended, hee giueth the figure and image thereof in visible signes most fit for our small capacite: yea, as it were by earnest and tokens giuen, he maketh it so assured vnto vs as if it were seene with our eyes, because this so familiar a similitude entrencheth euen to the grossest minds, that soules are so fed with Christ, as bread and wine do sustaine the bodily life. Now therefore we haue it declared, to what end this mysticall blessing tendeth, namely to assure vs, that the bodie of the Lord was so once offered for vs, that we now eate it, and in eating it do feele in vs the effectuall working of that onely sacrifice that his blood was so once shed for vs, that it is vnto vs continuall drinke. And so sound the words of the promise there adioyned. Take, this is my body, which is deliuered for you. The body therefore which was once offered vp for our saluation, we are commanded to take and eate: that when we see our selues to be made partakers of this, we may certainly determine that the power of his death which bringeth life shall be effectuall in vs. Whereupon also he calleth the cup, the couenant in his blood. For after a certain maner it reneweth, or rather continueth the couenant which he hath once stablished with his blood, so much as pertaineth to the confirming of our faith, so oft as he reacheth vnto vs that holy blood to be tasted of.

The Sacrament of the supper of Christ infused to testifie that our soules are not onely once made a liue, but continually kept and nourished by Christ as by foode.

Luk. 22. 19.
1. COR. 11. 24.

The exchange which Christ hath made by taking that vpon him which was ours, & communicating that which is his to vs confirmed by this sacrament.

2 A great fruit verily of assurance and sweetnes may godly soules gather of this sacrament, because they haue a witness, that we are grown together into one body with Christ, so that whatsoever is his we may call ours. Heereupon followeth that we may boldly promise vnto our selues, that euerlasting life is ours, whereof he is heire: and that the kingdome of heauen, whereinto he is now entred, can no more fall away from vs than from him: againe that we cannot now be condemned by our finnes, from the guiltines whereof he hath acquitted vs, when he willed them to be imputed to himselfe as if they were his owne. This is the maruellous exchange, which of his immeasurable bountifullnes he hath made with vs: that he being made with vs the sonne of man, hath made vs with him the sonnes of God: that by his coming downe into earth, he hath made vs a way to goe vp into heauen: that putting vpon him our mortallitie, he hath giuen vs his immortallitie: that taking on him our weaknes, he hath strengthened vs with his power: that taking our pouertie to himselfe, he hath conueyed his riches to vs: that taking to him the weight of our vnihteousnes, wherewith we were oppressed, he hath clothed vs with his righteousnes.

Christ truly giuen & made ours in this sacrament the whole pith wherof in a manner standeth herein, that for vs the body and blood of Christ were offered which we receiue represented vnder bread and wine to teach that they are so the same which these visible creatures to the bodie.

3 Of all these things we haue so full a witnessing in this sacrament, that we must certainly determine, that Christ is truly giuen vs, as if Christ himselfe were set present before our eyes, and handed with our hands. For this word can neither lye to vs, nor mocke vs: Take, eate, drinke: this is my body which is deliuered for you: this is the blood, which is shed into the forgiveness of finnes. Whereas he commaundeth to take, he signifieth that it is ours. Whereas hee commaundeth to eate, he signifieth that that is made one substance with vs. Whereas he saith of the body, that it is deliuered for vs: of the blood, that it is shed for vs: therein he teacheth that both are not so much his as ours: because he tooke and laid away both, not for his commoditie, but to our saluation. And truly it is to be diligently marked, that the chiefe and in a manner whole pith of the sacrament standeth in these words. Which is deliuered for you, which is shed for you. For otherwise it should not much profit vs, that the body and blood of our Lord are now distributed, vnlesse they had bene once giuen forth for our redemption and saluation. Therefore they are represented vnder bread and wine, that we should learne that they are not onely ours, but also ordeined for the nouishment of spirituall life. This is it that we before said, that from the corporall things which are shewed forth in the Sacraments, we are by a certain proportionall relation guided to spirituall things. So when bread is giuen vs for a signe of the body of Christ, we ought by and by to conceiue this similitude: As bread nourisheth, sustaineth, and maintaineth the life of our body: so the body of Christ is the onely meate to quicken and giue life to our soule. When we see wine set forth for a signe of his blood: we must call to minde what vices wine bringeth to the body, that we may consider that the same are brought to vs spirituallly by the blood of Christ: those vices be, to cherish, to refresh, to strengthen, to make merry. For if we sufficiently weigh, what the deliuering of this holy body, what the shedding of this holy blood, hath profited vs: we shall plainly perceiue that these things which are spoken of bread and wine, according to such proportionall relation doe very well accord with them toward vs when they are communicated vnto vs.

4 Therefore the chiefe partes of the Sacrament are not simple and without higher consideration to reach to vs the body of Christ: but rather that same promise, whereby he testifieth, that his flesh is verily meate, and his blood is drunke, with which we are fed into eternall life: whereby he affirmeth himselfe to be the bread of life, of which who so eateth, he shall liue for euer: to seale (I say) and confirme that promise: and for bringing the same to passe, to send vs to the crosse of Christ, where that promise hath bene truely performed, and in all pointes fulfilled. For we doe not well and healthfully cate Christ but crucified, when we doe with liuely feeling conceiue the effectualnes of his death. For whereas he calleth himselfe the bread of life, he did not borrow that name of the Sacrament, as some do wrongfully expound it: but because he was giuen vs such of the Father, & performed himselfe such, when being made partaker of our humane mortalitie, he made vs partners of his diuine immortalitie: when offering himselfe for sacrifice, he tooke our accursednes vpon himselfe, that he might fill vs with blessing: when with his death he deuoured and swallowed vp death: when in his resurrection he raised vp this our corruptible flesh which he had put on, to glory and vncorruption.

5 It remaineth that by applause all the same may come to vs. That is done, both by the Gospell, and more clearly by the holy Supper, where both he offereth himselfe to vs with all his good things, and we receiue him by Faith. Wherefore the Sacrament maketh not that Christ first beginneth to be the bread of life: but when it bringeth into remembrance, that he was made the bread of life, which we continually cate, and when it giueth vnto vs the tast and saueur of that bread, then it maketh vs to feele the strength of that bread. For it promisseth vs, that whatsoever Christ did or suffred, the same was done to giue life to vs. Then, that this giuing of life is eueralting, by which we may without end be nourished, sustained, and preserved in life. For as Christ should not have bene to vs the bread of life, vnlesse he had been borne and had died for vs, vnlesse he had risen againe for vs: so now he should not be the same vnlesse the effectualnesse and fruite of his birth, death and resurrection, were an eueralting and immortall thing. All which Christ hath very well expressed in these words. The bread which I will giue, is my flesh, which I will giue for the life of the world. By which words without doubt he signifieth, that his body should therefore be to vs for bread, to the spirituall life of the soule, because it should be giue forth to death for our saluation: and that it is deliuered to vs to cate of it, when by Faith he maketh vs partakers of it. Once therefore he gaue it, that he might be made bread, when he gaue forth himselfe to be crucified for the redemption of the world: dayly he giueth it, when by the word of the Gospell he offereth it vnto vs to be receiued, so farre as it was crucified: where he sealeth that deliuerance with the holy mystery of the Supper: where he inwardly fulfilleth that which he outwardly betokeneth. Now herein we must beware of two faultes, that neither dooing too much in abasing the signes, we

The highest consideration in this sacrament is of the promise whereby Christ hath testified his flesh to be meate & his blood to be drunke vs deede.

This Sacrament maketh not Christ to be the bread of life, but testifieth vnto vs that he is so: so such as receiue him in the due estimation of these mysteries whereby he is receiued, so receiue him to cate his flesh & drinke his blood, an effect of beliefe and a thing to be distinguished fro faith. Iohn 6. 51.

seeme to plucke them from their mysteries to which they are in a manner knit fast : nor that being immeasurable in aduancing the same, we seeme in the meane time somewhat to darken the mysteries themselves. That Christ is the bread of life, wherewith the faithfull are nourished into eternall saluation, there is no man but he graunteth, vnlesse he be altogether without religion. But this point is not likewise agreed vpon among all men, what is the maner of partaking of him. For there be that in one word define, that to eate the flesh of Christ and to drinke his blood, is nothing else but to beleue in Christ himselfe. But I thinke that Christ meant some certainer and higher thing, in that notable sermon where he commendeth to vs the eating of his flesh, namely, that we are quickened by the true partaking of him; which also he therefore expressed by the words of eating and drinking, least any man should thinke, that the life which we receiue of him is conceiued by bare knowledge onely. For as not the sight, but the eating of bread sufficeth the body for nourishment: so it behooueth that the soule be truly and throughly made partaker of Christ, that by the power of him it may be quickened into a spirituall life. But in the meane time we confesse that there is no other eating, but of faith: as there can no other be imagined. But this is the difference betweene my words and theirs, that with them to eate is onely to beleue. but I say that the flesh of Christ is eaten with beleueing, because by faith he is made ours, and I say that eating is the fruit and effect of faith. Or, if you will haue it plainer, with them eating is faith: and I thinke it rather to follow of faith. In words verily the difference is but small: but in the thing itselfe, not small. For though the Apostle teacheth that Christ dwelleth in our harts by faith: yet no man will expound this dwelling to be faith: but all men do perceiue that there is expected a singular effect of faith, for that by it the faithfull do obtaine to haue Christ dwelling in them. After this manner, the Lord meant, in calling himselfe the bread of life, not onely to teach that in the faith of his death and resurrection, saluation is reposed for vs: but also that by true partaking of himselfe it is brought to passe, that his life passeth into vs, and becommeth ours: like as bread, when it is taken for foode, ministreth liuelinesse to the bodie.

The meaning of saint Augustine and saint Chryso-stome when they speake of the participation of the body of Christ.

6 Neither did Augustine, whom they bring in for their patrone, in any other meaning write that we eate by beleueing, than to shew that this eating is of faith, not of the mouth. Which I also denie not: but yet therewithall I adde, that we do by faith embrace Christ, not appeering a farre of, but making himselfe one with vs, that he may be our head, and we his members. Yet do not I vterly disallow that manner of speaking: but onely I deny it to be a full declaration, if they meane to define what it is to eate the flesh of Christ. Otherwise I see that Augustine hath oft vsed this forme of speech: as when he saith in the third booke of Christian doctrine, Vnlesse ye eate the flesh of the sonne of man: this is a figure teaching that wee must communicate with the passion of the Lord, and must sweetly and profitably lay vp in remembrance that for vs his flesh was crucified and wounded. Againe when he saith that the three thousand men which were conuerted at Peters sermon, did drinke the blood of Christ by beleueing, which they had shedde by cruell dealing. But in many other places hee honourably setteth out that benefite of faith, that by it our soules are no lesse refreshed with the communicating of the flesh of Christ, than our bodies are with the bread which they eate. And the same is it which in a certaine place Chrysostome writeth, that Christ doth not onely by faith, but also in dedde make vs his bodie. For he meaneth not that we do from any other where than from faith, obtaine such a benefite: but this onely he meaneth to exclude, that none when hee heareth faith to be named, should conceiue a naked imagination. As for them that will haue the Supper to be onely a marke of outward profession, I doe now passe them ouer: because I thinke that I haue sufficiently confuted their error, when I entreated of sacraments generally. Onely this thing let the readers marke, that that when the cup is called the couenant in the blood, there is a promise expressed that may be of force to confirme Faith. Whereupon followeth, that vnlesse we haue respect to God, and embrace that which he offereth, we doe not rightly vse the holy Supper. Luke 22. 20.

7 Morcouer they also doe not satisfie me, which acknowledging that we haue some communion with Christ, when they meane to expresse it, do inake vs partakers only of the spirite, without making any mention of flesh & blood. As though all those things were spoken of nothing, that his flesh is verily meate, that his blood is verily drinke: that none hath life, but he that eateth that flesh, and drinketh that blood: and such other sayings that belong to the same ende. Wherefore if it be certaine that the full communicating of Christ proceedeth beyond their description, as it is too narrowly framed: I will now goe about to knit vp in few words, how large it is and how farre it extendeth it selfe, before that I speake of the contrary fault of excesse. For I shall haue a longer disputation with the excellēt teachers, which, when according to their owne grossenesse they frame a manner of eating and drinking full of absurditie, doe also transfigure Christ stripped out of his flesh into a fantasie: if yet a man may with any words comprehend so great a mysterie, which I see that I can not sufficiently comprehend with minde: and therefore I doe willingly confesse it, that no man should measure the highnes thereof by the small proportion of my childishnes. But rather I exhort the readers, that they doe not restraine the sense of their munes within these two narrow bounds: but endeavour to rise vp much higher, than they can by my guiding. For I my selfe, so oft as I speake of this thing, when I haue traueled to say all, thinke that I haue yet said but little in respect of the worthines thereof. And although the minde can do more in thinking than the tooing in expressing: yet with greatnesse of the thing, the minde also is furnished and ouerwhelmed. Finally therefore nothing remaineth, but that I must beake forth into admiration of that mysterie, which neither the minde can suffice to thinke of, nor the tooing to declare. Yet after such manner as I can, I will set forth the summe of my sentence: which as I nothing doubt to be true, so I trust that it will not be disallowed of Godly hearts.

8 First of al, we are taught out of the Scripture, that Christ was frō the beginning that life bringing word of the Father, the fountaine and originall of life, from whence all things euer receiued their hauing of life. Wherefore John sometime calleth him the word of life, and sometime writeth that life was in him: meaning that he euen then flowing into all creatures, powred into them the power of breathing and liuing. Yet the same John addeth afterward, that the life was then and not till then openly shewed, when the Sonne of God taking vpon him our flesh, gaue himselfe to be seene with eyes and felt with handes. For though he did before also spread abroad his power into the creatures: yet because man, being by sinne estranged from God, hauing lost the communion of life, lay on euery side death hanging ouer him: that he might recouer hope of immortalitie, it behooued that he should be receiued into the communion of that worde. For how small a confidence maicst thou conceiue thereof, if thou heare that the word of God in deede, from which thou art most farre remooued, containeth in it selfe the fulnesse of life, but in thy selfe and round about thee nothing offereth it selfe and is present before thine eyes but death? But since that fountaine of life beganne to dwell in our flesh, now it lieth not a farre off hidden from vs, but presently deliuereth it selfe to be partaken of vs. Yea and it maketh the very flesh, wherein it resteth, to be of power to bring life to vs, that by partaking thereof we may be fedde to immortalitie. I am (saith he) the bread of life, that am come downe from heauen And the bread which I will giue is my flesh, which I will giue for the life of the world. In which wordes he teacheth not onely that he is life, in respect that he is the eternall word of God which came downe to vs from heauen, but that in comming down he powred the same power into the flesh which he did put on, that from thence the communicating of life might flow forth vnto vs. Hereupon also these things now follow, that his flesh is verily meate, and his blood is verily drinke, with which sustentances the faithfull are fostered into eternall life. Herein therefore consisteth singular comfort to the godly, that now they finde life in their owne flesh. For so they do not onely with easie passage attaine vnto it, but haue it of it selfe laid abroad for them and offering it selfe vnto them. Onely let them hold open the boosome of their hart that they may embrace it being present, and they shall obtaine it.

The flesh of Christ being (though not of it selfe) in vnwashed fountaine from whence life floweth, he sheweth howe much of necessitie be partaker thereof, and haue fellowship with it.
Ioh. 5. 19.

9 But although the flesh of Christ haue not so great power of it selfe, that it can giue life to vs, which both in the owne first estate of it was subiect to mortalitie, and now being endued with immortalitie, liueth not by it selfe: yet it is rightfully called life bringing, which is filled with fulnesse of life to powre it into vs. In which meaning I do with *Cyri*l expound that saying of Christ: as the father hath life in himselfe, so he hath also giuen to the sonne to haue life in himselfe. For there he properly speaketh of his giftes, not which he from the beginning possessed with the father, but with which he was garnished in the same flesh in which he appeared. Therefore he sheweth that in his manhoode also dwelleth the fulnes of life, that whosoever partaketh of his flesh and blood, may therewithall also enjoy the partaking of life. Of what sort that is, we may declare by a familiar example. For as out of a fountaine water is sometime drunke, sometime is drawn, sometime by furrowes is conueied to the watering of grounds, which yet of it selfe doth not ouerflow into so many vses, but from the very spring it selfe which with euerlasting flowing yeeldeth and ministrerth vnto it from time to time new abundance: so the flesh of Christ is like a rich and vnwashed fountaine which powreth into vs the life springing from the Godhead into it selfe. Now who seeth not that the communion of the flesh and blood of Christ is necessarie to all that aspire to heauenly life? Hereunto tendeth that saying of the Apostle, that the Church is the bodie of Christ and the fulfilling of it: and that he is the head out of which the whole bodie coupled and knit together by ioints maketh increase of the bodie: that our bodies are the members of Christ. All which things we vnderstand to be impossible to be brought to passe, but that he must wholly cleaue to vs in spirit and body. But that most neere fellowship whereby we are coupled with his flesh, he hath yet set out with a more glorious title, when he said that we are members of his bodie, and are of his bones and of his flesh. At the last, to declare it to be a matter greater than all wordes, he concludeth his saying with an exclamation. This is (saith he) a great secret. Therefore it should be a point of extreme madnesse to acknowledge no communion of the faithfull when the flesh and blood of the Lord, which the Apostle declarerth to be so great, that he had rather wonder at it than expresse it.

Iphc. 5. 30.

The body & blood of Christ truly giuen vs, & not bare and naked figures thereof in this sacrament.

10 Let the summe bee, that our soules are so fed with the flesh and blood of Christ, as bread and wine do maintaine and sustaine the bodily life. For otherwise the proportionall relation of the signe should not agree, vntill soules did find their food in Christ. Which cannot be done, vntill Christ do truly grow into one with vs, and refresh vs with the eating of his flesh and drinking of his blood. But although it seeme incredible, that in so great distance of places the flesh of Christ reacheth to vs that it may be meate to vs: let vs remember how much the secret power of the Spirit surmounteth aboue all our senses, and how foolish it is to goe about to measure his vniuevsal benefesse by our measure. That therefore which our minde comprehendeth not, let our faith conceiue, that the spirit truly knitteth in one those things that are scuered in places. Now that same holy communicating of his bodie and blood, whereby Christ powreth his life into vs, euen as if hee pearced it into our bones and marrowes, hee in the Supper also testifieth and sealcth: and that not with setting before vs a vaine or voide signe, but bringing forth there the effectuall working of his spirite whereby he fulfilleth that which he promiteth. And verily he there offereth and deliuereth the thing signified to all them that sit at that spirituall bancker: although it be receiued with fruite of the faithfull onely, which receive so great bountifullnes with true Faith and thankfulness of minde. After which maner the Apostlic saide, that the bread which we breake is the communion of the body of Christ: and that the cuppe which we hallowe with the word and prayers to that purpose, is the communion of his blood. Neither is there any cause why any man should object, that it is a figuratiue speech, by which the name of the thing signified is giuen to the signe. I graunt verily that the breaking of the bread is a signe, not the thing it selfe. But this being admitted, yet we shall rightly gather of the deliuerance of the signe, that the thing it selfe is deliuered. For vnlesse a man will call God a deceiver, he can neuer be so bold to say that he setteth before vs an emptic signe. Therefore if by the breaking of bread the Lord doth truly represent the partaking of his body, it ought to be out of doubt that he truly performeth and deliuereth it. And this rule is alway to be holden of the Godly, that so oft as they see the signes ordained of the Lord, they certainly thinke and perswade themselues that the truth of the thing signified is there present. For to what purpose should the Lord deliuer to thee into thy hand the signe of his body, but to assure thee of the true partaking of it? If it be true, that a visible signe is giuen vs, to seale the gift of an inuisible thing: when we receiue the signe of the body, let vs no lesse certainly beleue that the body it selfe also is giuen vs.

2. Cor. 10. 16.

11 I say therefore (which both hath beene alway receiued in the Church, and all they teach at this day that thinke right) that the holy mysterie of the Supper consisteth of two things: that is to say of the bodily signes, which being set before our eyes doe represent vnto vs inuisible things: according to the capacite of our weaknesse: and of spirituall trueth, which is by those signes both figured and deliuered. Of what sort that is, when I meane to shew it familiarly, I vse to set three things: the signification, the matter which hangerh of the signification, the verue or effect which followeth of both. The signification consisteth in the promises, which are after a certaine maner wrapped together with the signe. The matter of substance I call Christ with his death and resurrection. By effect I vnderstand the redemption, righteousnesse, sanctification, and eternall life, and whatsoever other benefites Christ bringeth vs. Now although all these things haue respect to Faith: yet I leaue no place to this cauillation: as though when I say that Christ is receiued by Faith, I would haue him conceiued with vnderstanding onely and imagination. For the promises offer him, not that we should sticke fast in the sight alone and in bare knowledge: but that we should enioy the true communicating of him. And truly I see not how any man may haue confidence that he hath redemption and righteousnesse in the crosse of Christ, and life in his death, but principally standing vpon the true communion of Christ himselfe. For those good things should not come to vs, vnlesse Christ first made himselfe ours. I say therefore, that in the mysterie of the Supper, by the signes of bread and wine Christ is truly deliuered to vs, yea and his body and blood, in which he hath fulfilled all obedience for purchasing of righteousness to vs: namely that first we should grow together into one body with him: and then being made partakers of his substance, we may also feele his power in the communicating of all his good things.

Christ himselfe by faith, euen his bodie & blood truly participateth, in this Sacrament.

12 Now I come down to the excessiue mixtures, which superstition hath brought in. For herein Satan hath played with maruellous surlerie, that withdrawing the mindes of men from heauen, he might fill them with peruerse error, as though Christ were fastened to the element of breade. And first wee must not dreaime such a presence of Christ in the Sacrament, as the craftsmen of the court of Rome haue

A locall presence of the bodie of Christ not needfull vnto vs, that we may enioy the partaking of it which the spirite of Christ performeth in vs: without such presence.

fained: as though the body of Christ were made present with presence of place, to be handled with hands, to be broosed with teeth, and swallowed with mouth. For this forme of recantation Pope Nicholas endited to Berengarius, to bee a witness of his repentance: namely with wordes so faire monstrous, that the author of the glose crieth out that there is danger, if the readers do not wisely take heed to themselves, least they sucke out of them an heresie worse than was that of Berengarius. In the second distinction, in the Chapter beginning thus, Ego Berengarius. But Peter Lombarde, although he traueil much in excusing the absurditie, yet more inclineth to the contrary sentence. For as we nothing doubt that it hath limits according to the perpetuall nature of the bodie of men, and is holden in heaven, into which it was once receiued, vntill he returne to iudgement: so to draw it backe vnder these corruptible elements or to imagine it present euery where, we account it to be vltimately vnlawfull. Neither verily is it so needfull to this that we may enioy the partaking of it: for as much as the Lord giueth vs this benefit by his Spirit that we be made one with him in body, Spirit, and soule. The bonde therefore of this conioyning is the spirit of Christ, by the knitting whereof we be coupled together, and as it were a certaine conduct, by which whatsoever Christ himselfe both is and hath, is conueyed to vs. For if we behold the sunne shining forth with his beames vpon the earth after a certaine manner to cast forth his substance vnto it to engender, nourish, and quicken the fruits thereof: why should the extending of beames of the spirit of Christ be inferiour to conuey the communion of his flesh and blood into vs? Wherefore the scripture, when it speaketh of our partaking with Christ, referreth the whole force thereof to the spirit. Yet in steed of many, one place shall be sufficient. For Paul in the eighth chapter to the Romanes, saith that Christ dwelleth in vs none other wise than by his spirit: wherby yet he taketh not away that communion of his flesh & blood of which we now speake, but teacheth that the Spirit alone worketh that we possesse whole Christ and haue him dwelling in vs.

13 The schoolmen thought more shamefastly which were withholden with horrour of so barbarous vngodlinesse. Yet they also themselves do nothing but mocke with subtler decites. They graunt that Christ is not contained there by way of cir-cumscription nor after a bodily manner: but afterward they inuent a way, which neither themselves doe vnderstand, nor they can declare to other: yet it is such as falleth to this point that Christ must be sought in the forme of breade as they call it.
 For what is it? When they say that the substance of breade is turned into christ, do they not fasten him to the whiteness which they there leaue? But (say they) he is so contained in the Sacrament, that he abideth in heaven: and we determine no other presence but of habitude. But whatsoever words they bring in to cloake it with a deceitfull colour, this is the end of all, that that is by consecration made Christ, which before was breade: that from thenceforth Christ lieth hid vnder that colour of breade.
 Which also they are not ashamed in plaine words to expresse. For these be the words of Lombarde: that the body of Christ, which in it selfe is visible, when the consecration is ended, lieth hidden and is couered vnder the forme of breade. So the forme of that breade is nothing else but a visour, that taketh away the sight of the flesh from the eyes. Neither need we many coniectures, to finde what snares they minded to lay with these words, sith the thing it selfe plainly speaketh it. For it is to be seene with howe great superstition in certaine ages past, not only the common sort of men, but also the verie chiefe of them haue bene holden, and at this day be holden in popish Churches.
 For hauing little care of true faith (by which alone we both come into the fellowship of Christ, and do cleaue together with him) so that they haue a carnall presence of him, which they haue framed beside the word, they thinke that they haue him present enough. Therefore in a summe, we see that thus hath bene gotten by this wittie subtilty that breade was taken for God.

Lib. 4. dist.

14 From hence proceeded that same fained transubstantiation, for which at this day they fight more earnestly than for all the other articles of their faith. For the first builders of that locall presence could not vnwinde themselues from this doubt howe the bodie of Christ shoulde be mingled with the substance of bread, but that by and by many absurdities did thrust themselues in place. Therefore they were driuen of necessity to flee to this inuention, that there is made a turning of bread into the body: not that the body is properly made to God, but because Christ that hee might hide himselfe vnder the forme, bringeth the substance to nothing. But it is maruellous, that they fell to to great ignorance, yea senselesse dulnesse, that not onely that Scripture but also the consent of the olde Church fighting against it, they brought abroad that monster. I grant indeede that some of the olde writers sometime vsed the name of turning: not for that they woulde destroy the substance in the outwarde signes, but that they might teach that the bread dedicate to the mysteric differeth far from common bread and is now other. But ech where they all plainly declare, that the holy supper consisteth of two partes, an earthly part, and a heauenly: and the earthly part they doe without controuersie expounde to be bread and wine. Truly whatioeuer they babble, it is plaine that in confitting of this doctrine they want the defence of antiquitie, which they oftentimes presume to set against the euident word of God. For it is not so long ago since it was inuented, it was verily vnknown not onely to those better ages, in which the purer doctrine of religion yet flourished, but also euen when that same purenesse was much defiled. There is none of the old writers that doth not in expresse wordes confesse that the holie signes in the supper are bread and wine: although, as we haue saide, they sometime set it out with diuers titles, to aduance the dignitie of the mysteric. For whereas they say that in the consecration is made a secret turning, that nowe it is another thing then bread and wine: I haue euen now giuen warning that they do not ther by meane that the things themselves, are brought to nought, but that they are nowe to bee otherwise esteemed than common meats, which are appointed only to feede the belly: for as much as in them is deliuered to vs the spirituall meate and drinke of the soule. This we also deny not. If (say these men) there bee a turning, it must needes bee that there is of one thing made another thing. If they meane that there is some thing made which before was not, I agree with them. If they will drawe it to that in their owne imagination, let them answere what change they thinke to be made in baptisme. For herein the fathers also do determine a maruellous turning, when they say that of a corruptible element is made a spirituall washing of the soule, yet none of them denieth that water remaineth. But (say they) there is no such thing in baptisme, as is that in the Supper. This is my body. As though the question were of those wordes, which haue a meaning plaine enough: and not rather of that worde of turning, which ought to signifie no more in the Supper than in baptisme. Therefore farewell they with these snaires of syllables, whereby they doe nothing else but bewray their owne hungrienesse. For otherwise the signification woulde not agree together vnlesse the truth which is there figured, had a liuely image in outwarde signe. Christes will was by the outwarde signe to testifie that his flesh is meate. If he did set before vs onely an optic imaginariue forme of bread not true bread, where were the conelation or similitude which should lead vs from the visible thing to the invisible? For, that all things may agree together, the signification shall extend no further, but that we be fed with the forme of the flesh of Christ. As, if in baptisme the forme of water shoulde deceiue our eyes, it shoulde not be to vs a certaine pledge of our washing: yea by that decentfull shewe there shoulde be giuen vs an occasion of waucring. Therefore the nature of the sacrament is ouerthrowen, vnlesse in the manner of signifying the earthly signe answereth to the heauenly thing. And therefore we loose the truth of this mysteric, vnlesse true bread represent to vs the true bodie of Christ. I repeat it againe:

Cap. 17. Of the outward meanes

Sith the supper is nothing else, than a visible testifying of that promise which is in the sixt Chapter of Iohn, namely that Christ is the bread of life, which came down from heauen: there must bee visible bread vsed for a meane whereby that same spirituall bread may be figured: vnlesse wee will that we loose all the fruite which in this behalfe God tenderly granteth to susteine our weakenes. Now by what reason shoulde Paul gather, that al we are one body and one bread, which do together partake of one bread, if there remained onely an imaginatiue forme and not rather a naturall truth of bread?

1. Cor. 10. 17.

The visible elements in this Sacrament changed not in respect of their nature but of their use onely.

15 But they could neuer haue beene so fowly beguiled with the deceites of Satan, but because they were already bewitched with this error, that the body of Christ inclosed vnder bread was by the bodily mouth sent downe into the bellie. The cause of so brutish imagination was, that consecration signified as much among them as a magicall enchantment. But this principle was drawn to them, that bread is a sacrament to none but to men, to whom the worde is directed: like as the water of baptism is not changed in it selfe, but so soone as the promise is adioyned, it beginneth to be that vs which it before was not. This shall better appeere by example of a like Sacrament. The water springing out of the rocke in the desert was to the fathers a token and signe of the same thing, which the wine doth figure to vs in the Supper. For Paul teacheth that they drunke the same spirituall drinke. But it was a common watering for the beasts and cattell of the people. Whereupon it is easily gathered, that in earthly elements, when they are applyed to a spirituall vse, there is made no other turning but in respect of men, insomuch as they are to them leases of the promises. Moreouer sith Gods purpose is (as I often repeate) as it were by handfome chariots to lift vs vp to himselfe, they do by their waywardnes wickedly disappoynt the same, which doe indeede call vs to Christ, but lurking inuisibly vnder bread. For it is not possible that the minde of men, vncouering it selfe from the immeasurableness of places, shoulde attaine to Christ euen aboue the heauens. That which nature denied them, they attempted to amende with a more hurtfull remedie: that abiding in earth, we shoulde neede no heauenly neerensse of Christ. Loe, this is the necessitie, that compelled them to transfigure the bodie of Christ. In Bernards time, although a harder manner of speaking was grown in vse, yet transubstantiation was not then knowne. And in all ages before that, this similitude did flie about in euerie mans mouth, that there is with bread and wine a spirituall thing ioyned in this mysterie. Of the wordes they answere as they thinke, wittilie: but bringing nothing fit for this present cause. The rodde of Moses (say they) being turned into a serpent, although it did get the name of a Serpent, yet keepeth still the olde name, and is called a rodde. So in their opinion it is as probable, that although the bread passe into a newe substance, it may be abusiuely and yet not vnaptly called that which it appeereth to the eyes. But what likelihood or neerensse find they betwene a cleere myracle, and their fained illusion, of which no ere in earth is witnesse? The Magicians had mocked with deceits, so that the Ægyptians were persuaded, that they excelled in diuine power to change creatures aboue the order of nature. Moses came forth, and driuing awaie all their deceites, shewed that the inuincible power of God was on his side, because his owne rod consumed all the rest. But forasmuch as that was a turning discernable with eyes, therefore as wee haue saide, it pertaineth nothing to this present cause: and a litle time after, the rod visible returned into his owne forme. Beside that it is not knowne, whether that sudden turning was of substance or no. Also the alluding to the rodde of the Magicians is to be considered, which the Prophet therefore would not call Serpents, least he should seeme to signifie a turning where none was: because those deceiuers had done nothing but cast a mist before the eyes of the beholders. What likenes herewith haue these formes of speech. The bread which we breake, So oft we eat shal eat this bread, They communicated in breaking breakeing of bread, and such other? It is certaine that their eyes were onely deceiued with the enchauntment of the Magicians. As concerning Moses, the matter is more doubtfull, by whose hand it was no more hard for God to make of a rod a Serpent, and againe of a Serpent to make a rod, than to cloth Angels with fleshly bodies, and by and by after to vncloath them. If the nature of this mysterie were the same or like, there were some colour for their solution. Let this therefore remaine certaine, that it is not truly nor fildy promised vs that in the Supper the flesh of Christ is truly to vs for meate, vnlesse the true substance of the outward signe agree with it. And (as one error groweth of another) the place of Ieremie is so foolishly wrested to prooue transubstantiation, that it irketh me to rehearse it. The Prophet complaineth that wood Ier. 11. 19. is put in his bread: meaning that by the crueltie of his enemies, his bread was infected with bitternesse. As Dauid with a like figure bewaileth that his meate was corrupted with gall, and his drinke with vineger. These men will haue it that the body of Christ was by way of allegorie fastened to the crosse. But some of the olde fathers thought so. As though we ought not rather to pardon their ignorance, and to burie their shame, than to adde shamelesnesse to compell them yet still to fight like enemies with the naturall meaning of the Prophet.

16 Other, which see that the proportionall relation of the signe and the thing signified, cannot be ouerthrowen, but that the truth of the mysterie must fall, doe confesse that the bread of the Supper is verily a substance of an earthly and corruptible element, and suffereth no change in it selfe, but hath vnder it selfe the body of Christ inclosed. If they did so declare their meaning, that when the bread is deliuered in the mysterie, there is adioyned the deliuering of the body, because the truth is vnseuerable from the signe: I would not much strue with them. But because they placing the body in the bread, doe faime to it a being euery where contrarie to the nature thereof, and in adding vnder the bread, they will haue it lie there hidden: it is necessarie a litle while to draw such subtleties out of their dennes. For my minde is not as of set purpose to go through with all this point: but onely that I may lay the foundations of the disparation which shall by and by follow in place fit for it. They will therefore haue the body of Christ to be inuisible and immeasurable, that it may be hid vnder the bread: because they thinke they doe not otherwise communicate with him than if he descend into the bread: but they comprehend not the manner of descending, whereby he listeth vs vpward to himselfe. They lay vpon it all the colours that they can: but when they haue said all, it sufficiently appeereth, that they stay vpon the local presence of Christ. Whence commeth that? euen because they can abide to conceiue no other partaking of the flesh and bloud, but which consisteth either of ioyning and touching of place, or of some grosse enclosing.

17 And, that they may obstinately defende the error once rashly conceiued, some of them strike not to say, that the flesh of Christ had neuer any other mensurings, but so farre and wide as heauen and earth is broad. Whereas he was borne a childe out of the wombe, whereas he grew, whereas he was spread abroad on the crosse, whereas he was inclosed in the sepulchre, the same was done by a certaine dispensation, that he might be borne and die, and performe the other duties of man. Whereas after his resurrection he was seene in his wonted forme of body, whereas he was taken vp to heauen, whereas last of all also after his ascension he was seene of Stephen and Paul: it was done by the same dispensation, that it might appeere to the sight of men that he was made a king in heauen. What is this else, but to raise vp Marcion out of hel. For no man can doubt that the body of Christ was a fantastic or a fantastical thing, if he was of such state. Some slip away somewhat more subtly, with saying that this body which is giuen in the sacrament is glorious and immortall: and that therefore it is no absurditie, if it be contained in many places, if in no place, if with no forme, vnder the Sacrament. But I aske what manner of body Christ gaue:

The error of consubstantiation & the cause whereof it is such.

The flesh of Christ by some grossly extolled as wide as heauen and earth, by others subtillie imagined to lye because glorious therefore free from the naturall properties of things corporall.

Cap. 17. Of the outward meanes to the disciples, the day before that he suffered? doe not the wordes founde that he gaue the same mortall bodie, which was within a little after to be deliuered? He had already before (say they) shewed his glorie to be seene to three of the disciples. That is true in decde, but his will was by that brightnesse to giue them a taste of immortalitye for an hower. In the meane time they shall not there finde a double body, but that one body which Christ did beare, garnished with new glorie. But when he distributed his body at his first supper, the time was now at hande, when he being striken of God, and humbled shoulde lie without glorie as a leprous man: so farre is it off that he then would shew foorth the glorie of his resurrection. And how great a windowe is here opened to Marcion, if the body of Christ was seene in one place mortall and base, and in another place was holden immortall and glorious? Howbeit if their opinion take place, the same happeneth daily: because they are compelled to confesse that the bodie of Christ being visible in it selfe, lieth hid inuisibly vnder the signe of bread. And yet they that vomit out such monstrousnesse are so not ashamed of their owne shame, that they doe vnprovoked hainously raile at vs, because we doe not subscribe to them.

Matt. 17. 2.

The bodie and bloud of Christ though not fastned vnto, yet spirituallly deliuered vs the bread and wine of the holy Eucharist.

18 Now if they list to fasten the body and bloud of the Lord to bread and wine: the one shall of necessitie be plucked in sunder from the other. For as the bread is deliuered severally from the cup, so the body vnto the bread must needs be diuided from the bloud inclosed in the cup. For when they affirme that the body is in the bread and the bloud in the cup: and the bread and wine are by spaces of place distant the one from the other: they can by no shift escape, but that the body must be severed from the blood. But whereas they are wont to alleage, that by accompanying (as they faine) in the body is the bloud, and likewise in the bloud is the body, that verily is too trifling: for as much as the signes in which they are inclosed, are so severed. But if we be lifted vp with our eyes and minds to heauen, that we seeke Christ there in the glorie of his kingdome: as the signes doe allure vs to him whole, so vnder the signe of bread, we shall be fed with his body, vnder the signe of wine we shall severally drinke his bloud, that at length we may enjoy him whole. For although he hath taken away his flesh from vs, and in his body is ascended vp into heauen, yet he sitteth at the right hand of the father, that is to say he reigneth in the power, and maiestie, and glorie of the father. This kingdome is neither bounded with any spaces of place, nor compassed about with any measurings, but that Christ may shew foorth his might wherefoeuer it pleaseth him both in heauen and in earth: but that he may shew himselfe present with power and strength: but that he may alway be at hande with them that be his breathing his life into them, may lue in them, strengthen them, quicken them, preferre them safe, euen as if he were present in body: finally, but that he may feede them with his owne body, the communion wherof hee doth by the power of his spirit powre into them. After this manner the body and bloud of Christ is deliuered to vs in the Sacrament.

The true maner of Christes presence, & the substantiall communicating of his bodie and blood in the Lords supper made hateful to the world by the vnjust iudgements of men.

19 But we must appoint such a presence of Christ in the supper, as may neither fasten him to the element of bread, nor shut him vp in the bread, nor by any meane compass him in, (for it is plaine that all these things abate his heavenly glorie) finally such as may neither take from him his owne measure, nor diuersly drawe lum in many places at once, nor faue to him such an vnmeasurable greatnesse as is spread abroad throughout heauen and earth, for these things are plainly against the truth of the nature of manhood. Let vs (I say) neuer suffer these two exceptions to be taken away from vs. The one, that nothing be abated from the glorie of Christ, which is done, when he is brought vnder the corruptible elements of this world, or is bounde to any earthly creatures. The other, that nothing be by fayning, applied to his bodie, that agreeth not with the nature of man: which is done, when it is either saide to bee infinite, or is set in many places at once. But these absurdities being taken away, away, I willingly receiue whatsoeuer may auail to expresse the true and substantiall communicating of the bodie and bloud of the Lorde, which communicating is deliuered to the faithfull vnder the holy signes of the supper: and so that they may be thought not to receiue it by imagination onely or vnderstanding of minde, but to enioy it in deede to the foode of eternall life. Why this sentence is so hatefull to the worlde, and all defence taken away from it by the vniust iudgements of many, there is no cause at all, but for that the diuell hath with horrible bewitching madded their mindes. Truly that which we teach, doth in all points verie well agree with the Scriptures: it containeth neither any absurditie, nor darkenes, nor doubtfullnesse: it is not against true godlines and sound edification: finally, it hath nothing in it, that may offend, sauing that in certaine ages past, when that ignorance and barbarousnes of Sophisters reigned in the Church, so cleere light and open truth hath been vnworthily oppressed. Yet because Satan at this day also trauaileth by troublesome spiritres to spot it with all the slanders and reproches that he can, and bendeth himselfe to no other thing with greater endeuour: it is profitable the more diligently to defende and rescue it.

20 Nowe before that we go any further, we must entreate of the selfe institution of Christ: specially because this is the most glorious obiection that our aduersaries haue, that we depart from the words of Christ. Therefore, that we may be discharged of the false cause of malice wherewith they burden vs, our fittest beginning shall be at the exposition of the words. Three Euangelistes and Paul recheise, that Christ tooke bread: when he had giuen thanks he brake it, gaue it to his disciples and said, Take, eate, this is my bodie which is deliuered, or broken for you. Of the cup Matthewe and Marke saie thus: This cup is the bloude of the newe Testament, which shall be shed for manie vnto forgiveness of sinnes. But Paul and Luke saie thus: This cup is the newe testament in my bloude. The patrones of transubstantiation wil haue by the pronoune (this) the forme of bread to be signified, because the consecration is made in the whole content of the sentence, and there is no substance that can be shewed. But if they be holden with religious care of the words, because Christ testified, that that which he reached into the disciples handes, was his bodie: truly this their denise, that that which was bread is nowe the bodie, is most farre from the proper meaning of them. That which Christ tooke into his handes and gaue the Apostles, hee affirmeth to be his bodie: but he tooke bread: who therefore cannot vnderstande that bread is yet shewed? and therefore there is no greater absurditie, than to remouee that to the forme, which is spoken of the bread. Other, when they expound this worde (is) for (to be transubstantiate,) do flee to a more enforced and violently wrested gloise. Therefore there is no cause why they should pretende that they be moued with reuerence of wordes. For this was vniheard of among all nations and languages, that the worde (is) should be taken in this sense, namely for to be turned into another thing. As for them that leaue bread in the supper, and affirme that there is the body of Christ, they much differ among themselves. They which speake more modestly, although they precisely exact the letter. This is my bodie, yet afterwarde swaue from their presentie, and say that it is as much in effect as that the body of Christ is with bread, in bread, and vnder bread. Of the matter it selfe which they affirme, we haue already touched somewhat, and we shall by and by haue occasion yet to speake more. Now I dispute onely of the wordes, by which they say they are restrained that they cannot admit bread to be called the bodie, because it is a signe of the bodie. But if they flunne all figures, why do they leape away from the plaine shewing of Christ, to their owne manners of speaking faire differing from it? For there is great difference betwene this that bread is the bodie, and this that the bodie is with bread. But because they saue it to be impossible, that this simple proposition might stande, that bread is the bodie: they haue attempted to scape away by those formes of speech, as it were by crooked turnings. Some more bolde sticke not to affirme that euen in proper speaking, bread is the body, and by this mean they truly prouoe themselves to be literall men. If it be objected, that therefore the bread is Christ, and is God: this verlie they will denie, because it is not expressed in the wordes of Christ. But they shall nothing preuaile by denying it: forasmuch as all doe agree that whole Christ is offered vs in the Supper. But it is an intollerable blasphemie, that it be without figure spoken of a fraile and corruptible element, that it is Christ. Nowe I aske of them, whether these two propositions bee both of one effect, Christ is the sonne of God, and bread is the bodie of Christ. If they grant that they are diuerse, (which we will enforce them to grant whether they will or no) then let them answer whence commeth the difference. I thinke they will bring none other but that the bread is after the sacramentall manner called the body. Whereupon followeth, that Christes wordes are not subiect to the common rule, nor ought to be tried by Grammar. Also I aske of the precise and stricke requirers of the letter, where Luke and Paul do call the Cup the Testament in the bloude, whether they do not expresse the same thing which they did in the first part, where they call bread the bodie. Truly the same religion was in the one part of the mysterie that was in the other: and because shortnesse is darke, longer speech doth better open the meaning. So oft therefore as they shall affirme by one worde, that the bread is the bodie: I will out of moe wordes bring a fit exposition, that it is the Testament in the bodie. For why? Shall we neede to seeke a more faithfull or surer expositor than Paul and Luke? Neither yet doe I tende heereunto, to diminish any thing of that communicating of the bodie of Christ which I haue confessed: onely my purpose is to confute that foolish waiwardnesse, whereby they doe so hatefully braule about words. I vnderstand, by the authoritie of Paul and Luke, that the bread is the body of Christ, because it is the covenant in the body. If they fight against this, they haue warre not with me, but with the spirite of God. Howsoever they crie out that they be touched with reuerence of the wordes of Christ, whereby they do not figuratiuely vnderstande those things that are plainly spoken: yet this is not a pretence rightfull enough, why they should refuse all the reasons which wee obiect to the contrarie. In the meane time, as I haue alreadye giuen warning, it is conuenient to learne, what maner of thing this is, The testament in the body and bloud of Christ: because the covenant stablished with the sacrifice of death, shoulde otherwise not profite vs, vnlesse there were adioyned that secret communicating whereby we growe into one with Christ.

Luk. 22. 10.

Figuratiue speech vsuall, and vnto signes the names of things signified giuen when sacramentall mysteries are entreated of: which thing S. Augustine plainly teacheth.

21 It remaineth therefore that for the affinitie which the things signified haue with their signes, we confesse that the selfe name of the thing was giuen to the signe: figuratiuely in deed, but not without a most fit proportionall agreement. I leaue allegories and parables, least any man shoulde quarrell that I seeke startingholes, and wander out of the present purpose. I say that this is a speech by figure of transnominatiou which is commonly vsed in the Scripture, when mysteries are entreated of. For neither can you otherwise vnderstand that which is saide: that circumcision is a covenant: that the lambe is the passeouer: that the Sacrifices of the law are expiations: finallye that the rocke, out of which water flowed in the desert, was Christ, vnlesse you take it to be spoken by way of transferring of names. Neither are names transferred only from the higher name to the lower: but contrariwise the name of the visible signe is also giuen to the thing signified: as when it is said that God appeared to Moses in the bush: when the arke of covenant is called God, and the face of God: and the doue is called the holy Ghost. For though the signe differ in substance from the thing signified: because this is spirituall and heauenly, and that is corporall and visible: yet because it doth not onely figure the thing which it is holily appointed to represent, as a naked and empty token, but doth also truly deliuer it in dede: why

Exod. 3. 2.
Psal. 84. 8. & 42. 3.
Matt. 3. 16.

may not the name of the thing rightly accorde with it? If signes deuised by men, which are rather images of things absent, then marks of things present, which selfe absent things, they doe oftentimes deceitfully shadowe, are yet sometime garnished with the titles of the things: then those things that are ordained of God, doe by much greater reason borrowe the name of those things, of which they alway both beare a sure and not deceitfull signification, and haue the truth adioyned with them. There is therefore so great likenesse and neerenesse of the one to the other, that it is easie to drawe their names to and fro. Therefore let our aduersaries cease to heape vnflauourie scoffings against vs, in calling vs Trinitists, because we expound the sacramentall manner of speaking after the common vse of the Scripture. For whereas the Sacraments agree together in many things: in this transferring of names, they haue all a certaine communitie together. As therefore the Apostle teacheth, that the stone out of which spirituall drinke did spring to the Israelites, was Christ, because it was a visible signe, vnder which that spirituall drinke was truly indeede but not discernably to the eye perceived: so bread is at this day called the bodie of Christ, for as much as it is a signe whereby the Lorde offereth to vs the true eating of his body. Neither did Augustine otherwise thinke or speake least any man should despise this as a new inuention. If (saith he) the sacraments had not a certaine likenesse of those things wherof they are sacraments, they should not be sacraments at all. And of this likenesse oftentimes they take the names of the things themselues. As therefore after a certaine manner the sacrament of the body of Christ, is the body of Christ: the sacrament of the bloud of Christ, is the bloud of Christ: so the sacrament of faith is faith. There be in him many like places, which it were superfluous to heape together, sith that one sufficeth: sauing that the readers must be warned that the holy man teacheth the same thing in the epistle to Euodius. But it is a trifling shift to say, that where Augustine teacheth, that when transferring is often and commonly vsed in mysteries, he maketh no mention of the Supper: because if this shift were receiued, we might not reason from the generaltie to the specialtie, neither were this a good argument: Euerie feeling creature hath power of mouing, therefore an ox and an horse haue power of mouing. Howbeit long disputation hereof is in another place ended by the words of the same holy man, where he saith, that Christ stuck not to call it his body, when he gaue the signe of his body. Against Adimantus the Manichean, in the twelfth chapter, And in another place, vpon the third Psalm. Maruellous (saith he) is the patience of Christ, that he receiued Judas to the banquet, wherem he committed and deliuered to his disciples the figure of his body and bloud.

22 But if some precise man, being blinde at all the rest, doe stand onely vpon this word (this is) as though it severed this mysterie from all other, the solution is easie. They say that the vehemence of the substantiue verbe (is) is so great that it admitteth no figure. Which if we graunt to them: euen in the words of Paul is read the substantiue verbe, where he calleth bread the communicating of the body of Christ. But the communicating is another thing than the body it selfe. Yea commonly where Sacraments are entreated of, we finde the same word vsed. As: this shall be to you a coudenant with me. This Lambe shall be to you a passeouer. To rehearse no more: when Paul saith that the rocke was Christ, why doe they take the substantiue verbe in that place to be of lesse vehemence than in the speech of Christ? Let them also answer, where John saith, the holy Ghost was not yet, because Iesus was not yet glorified, of what force the substantiue verbe is in that place. For if they abide fastened to their rule, the eternall essence of the holy Ghost shall be destroyed, as though it tooke beginning at the ascension of Christ. Finally let them answer, what meaneth that saying of Paul, that Baptisme is the washing of regeneration and renewing, which it is euident to be vnprofitable to many. But nothing is stronger to confute them, than that saying of Paul, that the Church is Christ. For bringing a similitude of the body of man, he addeth, So is Christ: in which place he vnderstandeth the onely begotten sonne of God, not in himselfe, but in his members. Hereby I thinke I haue obtained that to sound witted and vncorrupted men the slaunders of our enemies, are lothsome, when they spread abroade, that we withdrawe credite from the words of Christ: which we doe no lesse obediently embrace than they, and doe weigh them with more godly reuerence. Yea their negligent carelesnesse sheweth that they doe not greatly care what Christ meant, so that it giue them a buckler to defend their obstinacie: like as our earnest searching ought to be a witness how much we esteeme the authoritie of Christ. They odiously spread abroade, that naturall sense of man withholdeth vs from beleueing that which Christ hath vttered with his owne holy mouth: but how maliciously they burden vs with this slander, I haue a great part already made plaine, and hereafter it shall more cleerely appeere. Therefore nothing withholdeth vs from beleueing Christ when he speaketh, nor from obeying to soone as he doth but with becke will this or that. Onely this is the question, whether it be vnlawfull to inquire of the naturall meaning.

The words and syllables of Christ's speech not so precisely to be stood upon, that all exposition be rejected which being sound and sober bringeth light, but no discredit vnto the speaker.

23 These good masters, that they may seeme well lettered, doe forbid men to depart be it neuer so little from the letter. But I on the other side, when the scripture nameth God a warlike man, because I see that without figuratiue translation it is too rough a manner of speaking, doe not doubt that it is a comparison taken from men. And truly vpon none other pretence in the olde time the Anthropomorphites troubled the true teaching fathers, but that catching fast hold of these sayings, The eyes of God doe see, It went vp to his eares, His hand stretched out, The earth his foote-stoole, they cried out that God had his body taken from him, which the Scripture assigneth vnto him. If this law be receiued, outrageous barbarousnesse shall ouerwhelme the whole light of faith. For what monsters of absurdities may not phrenitike men picke out, if it be granted them to alleage euery small title to stablish their opinions? That which they object, that it is not likely, that when Christ prepared for his Apostles a singular comfort in aduersities, he did then speak in a riddle or darkly, maketh of our side. For if it had not come in the minds of the Apostles that bread was figuratiuely called the body, because it was the signe of the body, they had without doubt been troubled with so monstrous a thing. Almost at the same moment Iohn reporteth that they did sticke in perplexitie at euery of the least difficulties. They which strue among themselues, how Christ wil go to the father: and do moue question, how he wil go out of the world: they which vnderstand nothing of those things that are spoken concerning the heavenly father, till they see him: how would they haue been so easie to beleue that which al reason refuseth, that Christ sitteth at the boord in their fight, and is inclosed inuisible vnder bread? Whereas therefore they in eating the bread without doubting, testified their consent, hereby appeereth that they tooke Christes wordes in the same sense that we doe, because they remembered that which ought not to seeme strange in mysteries, that the name of the thing signified is transferred to the signe. Therefore it was to the disciples, as it is to vs, a certaine and cleere comfort, entangled with no riddle. Neither is there any other cause why some should depart from our exposition, but because the inchantment of the diuell hath blinded them, namely that they shouldaine darknesse to themselues, where the exposition of an apt figure offereth it selfe. Moreover if wee precisely stande vpon the wordes, Christ should wrongfully haue spoken in one place feuerally another thing concerning the bread than he speaketh of the cup. He calleth the bread his bodie, he calleth the wine his blood: either it shall be a confused vaine repetition, or it shall be such a partition as shall diuide the body from the blood. Yea it shall as truly be saide of the cup, This is my body, as of the bread it selfe, and it may likewise interchangeably be saide, that the bread is the blood, If they answer that we must consider to what ende or vse the signes were ordained: I graunt it in deede: but in the meane time they shall not vnwinde themselves, but that their error must draw this absurditie with it, that the bread is the blood, and the wine is the body. Now I wote not what this meaneth, when they graunt the bread and the body to be diuers things, yet to affirme that the one is spoken of the other properly and without any figure, as: if a man should say that a garment is indeede a thing differing from a man, and yet that it is properly called a man. In the meane while as though their victorie consisted in obstinacie and railing, they say that Christ is accused of lying, if an exposition be sought of the wordes. Now it shall be easie for vs to shew to the Readers how vnjust wrong these catchers of syllables doe vs, when they fill the simple with this opinion, that we withdraw credit from the words of Christ, which we haue proued to be furiously peruerted and confounded by them, but to be faithfully and rightly expounded by vs.

24 But the slander of this lie cannot be vtterly purged, till another crime be wiped away. For they spread abroad, that we be so addicted to naturall reason, that we giue no more to the power of God, than the order of nature suffereth and common sense teacheth. From so malicious slanders I appeale to the very doctrine it selfe which I haue declared: which doth clearly enough shew, that I doe not measure this mystery by the proportion of mans reason, nor doe make it subiect to the lawes of nature. I beseech you, haue we learned out of naturall physylophie, that Christ doth so from heauen feede our Soules and bodies with his flesh, as our bodies are nourished with bread and wine? Whence commeth this power to flesh, that it may giue life? All men will say that it is not done naturally. It will no more please mans reason, that the flesh of Christ reacheth to vs, that it may be food vnto vs. Finally whosocuer hath tasted of our doctrine, shall be rauished into admiration of the secret power of God. But these good men that be so zealous of it, forge to themselues a miracle, which being taken away, God himselfe vanisheth with his power. I desire to haue the Readers once againe warned, that they diligently wey what our doctrine bringeth, whether it hang vpon common sense, or with the winges of Faith, surmounting the world, climbeth vp beyond it into the heauens. We say that Christ as well with the outward signe as with his spirit, descendeth to vs, that he may truly quicken our soules with the substance of his flesh and of his blood. In these few words he that perceiueth not to be contained many miracles, is more than senselesse: forasmuch as there is nothing more beside nature, than that Soules should borow spirituall and heauenly life, of the flesh which tooke her beginning of the earth, and which was subiect to death. Nothing is more incredible, than that things distant and a sunder by the whole space of heauen and earth, should in so great distance of places not onely be conioyned but also vnited, that Soules may receiue foode of the flesh of Christ. Therefore let wayward men cease to procure hatred to vs, by a filthy slander, as though we did enuiously restrain any thing of the immeasurable power of God. For they doe either too foolishly erre or too maliciously lie. For it is not here in question what God could, but what he would. We affirme that to be done which pleased him. But it pleased him, that Christ should be made like to his brethren in all things, except sin. What maner of thing is our flesh? Is it not such as consisteth of the certaine measure of it, as is contained in place, as is touched, as is scene? And why (say they) may not God make, that one selfe same flesh may occupie many and diuers places, may be contained in one place, may be without measure and forme? Thou mad man, why requirest thou of the power of God to make flesh at one selfe time to be and not to be flesh? Like as if thou shouldst instantly require, him to make at one selfe time the light to be both light and darkenes. But he willet light to be light, darknesse to be darknesse, flesh to be flesh. He shall in dede when it pleaseth him, turne darkenes into light, and light into darkenes, but when thou requirest that light and darknesse may not differ, what doest thou else but peruert the order of the wisdom of God?

The unmeasurable power of God nos at all diminished by them who refuse the doctrine of consubstantiation.

Heb. 4. 15.

Therefore flesh must be flesh: and Spirite Spirite, euery thing in such law and condition as God hath created it. But such is the condition of flesh, that it must be in one yea and that a certaine place, and consist of her measure and of hir forme. With this condition Christ tooke flesh vpon him, to which (as Augustine witnesseth) he hath giuen indeed vncorruption and glory, but he hath not taken from it nature and truth.

1. or 15. 47.
Phil. 2. 7.*

25 They answer, that they haue the worde, whereby the will of God is made plaine: namely if it be graunted them to banish out of the Church the gift of exposition, which may bring light to the word, I grant that they haue the word: but such as in olde time the Anthropomorphites had, when they made God hauing a body: such as Marcion and the Manichees had, when they fained the body of Christ to be, either heauenly or phantasticall. For they alleaged for testimonies, The first Adam was of the earth earthly, the second Adam is of heauen, heauenly: Againe, Christ abased himselfe, taking vpon him the forme of a seruant, and was found in likenes as a man. But the grosse eaters thinke that there is no power of God, vnlesse with the monster forged in their braines, the whole order of nature be ouerthrown: which is rather to limre God, when we couet with our fained inuentions to prooue what he can doe. For out of what word haue they taken that the body of Christ is visible in heauen, but lurketh inuisible in earth vnder innumerable litle peeces of bread? They will say that necessitie requireth this that the body of Christ should be giuen in the supper. Verily because it pleased them to gather a fleshly eating out of the wordes of Christ: they being caried away by their owne foreiudgement, were druen to necessitie to coine this subtletie, which the whole Scripture crieth out against. But that any thing is by vs diminished of the power of God, is so false that by our doctrine the praise of it is very honorably set out. But forasmuch as they alway accuse vs, that we defraud God of his honor, when we refuse that which according to common sense is hard to be beleued, although it haue been promised by the mouth of Christ: I make againe the same ansuere that I made euen now, that in the mystiques of Faith we doe not aske counsell of common sense, but with quiet willingnes to learne, and with the spirite of meekenes, which Iames commendeth, we receiue the doctrine come from heauen. But in that when they perniciously erre, I deny not that we follow a profitable moderation. They hearing the words of Christ, This is my body, imagine a miracle most far from his mind. But when out of this fained inuention arise fowle absurdities, because they haue already with headlong hast put snares vpon themselves, they plunge themselves into the bottomlesse depth of the almightines of God, that by this meane they may quench the light of truth. Hereupon cometh that proude precisenes: We will not know how Christ lieth hid vnder the bread, holding our selues contented with this saying of his, This is my body. But we, as we doe in the whole Scripture, doe with nollse obedience than care, studie to obtaine a sound vnderstanding of this place: neither doe we with preposterous heate rashly and without choise catch hold of that which first thrusteth it selfe into our mindes: but vsing diligent musing vpon it, we embrace the meaning which the spirite of God ministrerth: and standing thereupon we doe from aloft despise whatsoever earthly wisdom is set against it. Yea we hold our mindes captiue that they may not be bolde so much as with one litle word to carpe against it: and doe humble them, that they may not dare to rise vp against it. Hereupon sprung vp the exposition of the wordes of Christ, which to be by the continuall vsage of the Scripture common to all Sacraments, all they that haue been thought but meanely exercised therein, doe know. Neither doe we, after the example of the holy Virgin, thinke it lawfull for vs, in a hard matter to enquire how it may be done.

1. Cor. 13. 2. 1.

Luke 1. 34.

Chr. 2. prooued by Scripture not to be owenly according

26 But because nothing shall more auaile to confirme the Faith of the Godly, than when they haue learned that the doctrine which we haue taught is taken out of the word of God, and standeth vpon the authoritie thereof: I will make this also euident with as great briefenes as I can. The body of Christ, since the time that it rose againe, not Aristotle but the Holy Ghost teacheth to be limited, and that it is comprehended in heauen vntill the last day. Neither am I ignorant that they boldly mocke out those places that are alleaged for this purpose. So oft as Christ saith that he will depart, leauing the world, they answer that that departing is nothing else but a changing of mortall state. But after this manner, Christ should not set the Holy Ghost in this place to supply (as they call it) the want of his abience: forasmuch as he doth not succede into this place, nor Christ himselfe doth descend againe out of the heauenly glory to take vpon him the state of mortall life. Truly the coming of the Holy Ghost, and the ascending of Christ are things set as contrary: therefore it cannot be that Christ should according to the flesh dwell with vs after the same manner that he sendeth his Spirit. Moreouer he in plaine words expresth, that he will not be alway with his Disciples in the world. Thus saying also they thinke that they doe gayly wipe away, as though Christ said that he will not alway be poore and miserable or subiect to the necessities of this fraile life. But the circumstance of the place cryeth plainly to the contrarie, because there is not intreated of pouertie and neede, or of the miserable state of earthly life, but of worship and honor. The anointing pleased not the Disciples, because they thought it to be a superfluous and vnprofitable cost, and neere vnto riotous excesse, therefore they had rather that the price thereof which they thought to be ill wasted, had bene bestowed vpon the poore. Christ answereth that he shall not alway be present that he may be worshipped with such honour. And none otherwise did Augustine expound it, whose words be these which are nothing doubtfull. When Christ said, Ye shall not alway haue me, he spake of the presence of his body. For according to his maiestie, according to his prouidence, according to his vspeakeable and inuisible grace, this was fulfilled which he said, behold, I am with you euent to the ending of the world. But according to the flesh which the word tooke vnto him, according to this that he was borne of the Virgin, according to this that he was taken of the Iewes, that he was fastened to the tree, that he was taken downe from the crosse, that he was wrapped in linnen clothes, that he was laid in the graue, that he was manifestly shewed in the resurrection, this was fulfilled, Yee shall not alway haue me with you. Why so? Because he was conuerfant according to the presence of his body fortie daies with his Disciples, and while they accompanied him in seeing not in following he ascended. He is not here: for he sitteth there at the right hand of the Father. And yet he is here: because he is not gone away in presence of Maiestie. Otherwise according to the presence of Maiestie we haue Christ alway: and according to the presence of the flesh it is rightly said, But me ye shall not alway haue. For according to the presence of the flesh, the Church had him a few daies: now she holdeth him by Faith, but seeth him not with eies. Where (that I may note this also briefly) he maketh him present to vs three waies, by maiestie, prouidence, and vspeakeable grace, vnder which I comprehend this maruellous communion of his body and blood: if so that we vnderstand it to be done by the power of the holy Ghost, not by that fauced enclosing of his body vnder the element. For our Lord hath testified, that he hath flesh and bones which may be felt and seene. And to goe away and Ascende doe not signifie to make a shew of one ascending and going away, but to doe in deede that which the words founde. Shall we then (will some man say) assigne to Christ some certaine coast of heauen? But I answer with Augustine that this is a most curious and superfluous question, if so that yet we beleuee that he is in heauen.

27 But what doth the name of ascending so oft repeated? doth it not signifie a remoouing from one place to another? They deny it: because after their opinion, by height is onely signified Maiestie of Empire. But what meaneth the very manner

of ascending? was he not in sight of his Disciples looking on, lifted vp on high? Doe not the Euangelistes plainlie declare that he was taken vp into the heauens? These wittie Sophisters doe answer that with a cloud set betweene him and thence hee was conueyed out of their sight, that the faithfull might learne that from thence fourth he should not be visible in the world. As though, to make credit of his inuisible presence, he ought not rather to vanish away in a moment, or as though the cloud ought not rather to compas him before that he stirred his foote. But when he is caried vp on high into the aire, and with a cloud cast vnderneath him, teacheth that he is no more to be sought in the earth: we safely gather, that now he hath his dwelling place in the heauens: as Paul also affirmeth, and from thence biddeth vs to looke for him. After this maner the Angels warned the Disciples, that they in vaine gazed vp into heauen: because Iesus which is taken vp into heauen, shall so come as they haue seene him goe vp. Here also the aduersaries of sound doctrine start away with a pleasant shift as they thinke, saying that he shall then come visible, which neuer went out of the earth but that he abideth inuisible with them that be his. As though the Angels did there signifie a double presence, and doe not simply make the Disciples witnesses of his going vp seeing it with their eyes, that no doubting might remaine: euen as if they had said: he in your sight beholding it, being taken vp into heauen, hath claimed to himselfe the heavenly Empire: it remaineth that ye patiently abide in expectation, till he come againe the Iudge of the world: because he is now entred into heauen, not that he may alone possesse it, but that he may gather together with him you and all the godly.

Phil. 3. 10.

Augustine wrested and abused by the maintainers of consubstantiation.

28 But forasmuch as the defenders of this bastard doctrine are not ashamed to garnish it with the consenting voices of the old writers, and specially of Augustine: I will in few wordes declare how peruersly they goe about it. For whereas their testimonies haue bene gathered together of learned and godly men, I will not doe a thing already done: let him that will, seeke them out of their workes. I will not heape together, neither out of Augustine himselfe, all that might make to the purpose: but will be content to thew by a fewe that he is without controuersie whole on our side. As for this that our aduersaries, to writhe him from vs, doe alleage that it is commonly read in his bookes, that the flesh and blood of Christ is distributed in the Supper, namely the sacrifice once offered in the crosse: it is but a tiling: sith he also calleth it either thanksgiuing, or the Sacrament of the body. But in what sense he useth the words of flesh and blood, we neede not to seeke with long compassing about: forasmuch as he declareth himselfe, saying that Sacramentes take their names of the likenes of the things which they signifie: and that therefore after a certaine manner the sacrament of the body is the body. Wherewith accordeth another place which is well enough knowen, The Lord stuck not to say, This is my body, when he gaue the signe of it. Againe they object, that Augustine writeth expressly, that the bodie of Christ falleth to the ground, and entreth into the mouth: euen in the same sense, that he affirmeth it to be consumed, because he ioyneth them both together. Neither doth that make to the contrary, which he saith, that when the mystery is ended the bread is consumed: because he had a little before said: sith these things are knowen to men, forasmuch as they are done by men, they may haue honor as things: but as maruellous things, they may not. And to no other end tendeth that which our aduersaries doe too vnadvisedly dray to themselves: that Christ did (after a certaine manner) beare himselfe in his owne hands, when he reacheth the mysticall bread to the Disciples. For by entreating this aduerbe of likeness (after a certaine maner) he sufficiently declareth, that he was not truly nor really inclosed vnder the bread. And no maruell: sith in another place he plainly affirmeth that bodies, if spaces of places be taken from them, shall be no where: and because they shall be no where, they shall not be at all. It is a hungry caualtion, to say that in that place is not entreated entreated of the Supper, in which God vttereth speciall power : because the question was mooued concerning the flesh of Christ, and the holy man of set purpose answering saith : Christ gaue immortallitie to his flesh, but tooke not nature from it. After this forme it is not to be thought that he is ech where spread abroad : for we must beware that we do not so affirme the Godhead of the man, that we take away the truth of the body. And it followeth not, that that which is in God must be eche where as GOD is. There is a reason by and by added : for one person is God and man, and both are one Christ : ech where, by this that he is God : in heauen, by this that he is man. What a negligence had it beene, not to except the mystery of the Supper being a thing so earnest and weighty, if there had beene in it any thing against the doctrine which he entreated of. And yet if a man doe heedefully read thit which followeth within a litle after, he shall finde that vnder that generall doctrine, the Supper is also comprehended, that Christ the onely begotten Sonne of God and the same the Son of man, is ech where whole present as God : that he is in the Temple of God (that is in the Church) God as it were there dwelling, & in some certaine place of heauen by reason of the measure of his true body. We see how, to the vniing of Christ with the Church, hee doth not drawe his body out of Heauen : which surely he would haue done, if the body of Christ were not truly meate to vs vnlesse it were enclosed vnder bread. In an other place defining how the faithfull doe now possesse Christ. Thou hast him (saith he) by the signe of the Crosse, by the Sacrament of Baptisme, by the meate and drinke of the Altar. How rightly he reckoneth a superstitious vsage among the signes of the presence of Christ, I doe not now dispute : but he that compareth the presence of the flesh to the signe of the Crosse, sufficiently sheweth that he faineth not a two bodied Christ, that the same he may lurke hidden vnder the bread, which sitteth visible in heauen. If this neede plainer declaration, it is by and by after added in the same place, that according to the presence of maicstie, we alway haue Christ : that according to the presence of the flesh, it is rightly saide, Me ye shall not alway haue. They answere, that this is also added, that according to an vspeakeable and inuisible grace, it is fulfilled which is said of him, I am with you, euen vnto the ending of the world. But that is nothing for their aduantage : because this is at length restrained to his maicstie, which is euer in comparison set against the body, and his flesh by expresse name is made different from his grace and power. As in an other place the same comparitson of contraries is read in him, that Christ by bodily presence left the Disciples, that by spirituall presence he may be still with them : where it is plaine that the substance of the flesh is distinguished from the power of the spirite, which conioyneth vs with Christ, though we be otherwise farre seuered by distance of places. The same manner of speaking he oftentimes vseth, as when he saith : He is to come againe to the quicke and the dead with bodily presence, according to the rule of Faith and sound doctrine. For with spirituall presence he was also to come to them, and to abide with the whole Church in the world vntill the ending of the world. Therefore this speech is directed to the belecuers whom he had already begonne to saue with bodily presence, and whom he was to leaue with bodily absence : that he might with his Father saue them with spirituall presence. To take bodily for visible is but trifling : sith he setteth also the body in comparison against the diuine power : and adding (to saue with the Father) he clearly expresseth that he doth poure abroad his grace from heauen to vs by his Spirite.

29 And sith they put so much confidence in this lurking hole of inuisible presence, goe too let vs see how well they hide themselves in it. First they shall not bring forth one syllable out of the Scriptures, whereby they may prouue that Christ is inuisible : but they take that for confessed which no man that hath his sound wit will graunt them, that the body of Christ can not otherwise be giuen in the Supper but being couered with the visor of bread. And this is the very point about which they strue with vs, so farre is it off from hauing the place of a principle. And when they so babble, they are compelled to make a double body of Christ: because after their opinion it is in it selfe visible in heauen, but inuisible in the Supper after a speciall manner of dispensation. But how truly this agreeth, it is casie to iudge both by other places of Scripture, and by the witness of Peter. Peter saith that Christ must be holden or contained in heauen, till he come againe. The'se men teach that he is euery where, but without forme. They take exception & say that it is vnusit dealing, to make the nature of a glorified body subiect to the lawes of common nature. But this answere draweth with it that doting error of Seruius, (which is worthily to be abhorred of all the godly) that the body was swallowed vp of the Godhead. I doe not say that they thinke so. But if this be reckoned among the qualities of a glorified body, to fill all things after an inuisible manner, it is euident, that the bodily substance is destroyed, and that there is left no difference of the Godhead and the nature of man. Againe if the body of Christ bee of so many fashions and diuers, that it is scene in one place, and is inuisible in an other: where is the very nature of a bodie which consisteth of his measured proportions? and where is vnnie? Much more rightly doth Tertullian say, which affirmeth that the bodie of Christ was a true and naturall body, because in the mysterie of the Supper the figure of it is set before vs for a pledge and assurance of the spirituall life. And verily Christ saide of his glorified body, see and seele, for a Spirit hath not flesh and bones. Loe by Christs owne mouth the truth of the flesh is prooued, becauie it can be felt and scene: Take away these things, then it shall cease to be flesh. They shall seee to their denue of dispensation which they haue framed to themselues. But it is our parte so to embrace that which Christ absolutely pronounceth, that that which he meaneth to affirme may be of force with vs without exception. He proueth himselfe to be no Ghost, because he is visible in his flesh. Let that be taken away which he claimeth as proper to the nature of his body: must they not then be faine to come a newe definition of a body? Nowe whither soeuer they turne themselues about, their framed dispensation hath no place in that place of Paul where he saith, that we looke for a Sauiour from heauen which shall fashion our base body like to his glorious body. For we may not hope for a like fashioning in those qualities which they faine to Christ, in that euery one should haue an inuisible and vnmeasurable body. Neither shall there be found any man so dull witted whom they may make to beleue to great abundance. Let them not therefore ascribe this gift to Christs glorified body, to be at once in many places, and to be contained in no space. Finally let them either openly deny the resurrection of the flesh, or let them graunt that Christ being clothed with heauenly glory, did not put off his flesh, who shall make vs in our flesh fellowes and parteners of the same glory, when we shall haue the resurrection common with him. For what doth the Scripture teach more plainly, than that as Christ did put on our true flesh when he was borne of the Virgine, & suffered in our true flesh when he tasted for vs: so he receiued againe also the same true flesh in rising againe, and caried it vp to heauen? For this is to vs the hope of our resurrection and ascending into heauen, that Christ is risen againe and ascended: and (as Tertullian saith) hee caried the earnest of our resurrection into the heauens with him. No, how weake and fraile should that hope be, vnlesse this our selfe flesh had bene raised vp with Christ and entred into the kingdome of heauen? But this is the proper truth of a body, to be contained in space, to consist of his measured proportions, to haue his forme. Therefore away with this foolish denise, which doth fasten both the mindes of man and Christ to the bread. For to what purpose scructh the secret presence vnder bread, but that t. ey which come to haue Christ ioynd with them, may see in that signe? But the Lorde himselfe willed vs to withdraw not onely our eyes but all our senses from the earth, forbidding himselfe to be touched of the women vntill he had gone vp to his Father. When he seeth Marie with godly zeale of reuerence to make haste to kisse his feete, there is no cause why he should disallowe and forbid this touching till hee haue bene taken vp into heauen, but because he will be sought no where else. Whereas they obiekt that he was afterwarde fene of Stephen, the solution is easie. For neither was it therefore necessarie that Christ should change place, which could giue to the eies of his seruant such sharpnesse of sight as might pearce through the heauens. The same also is to be saide of Paul. Whereas they obiekt that Christ came out of the Sepulchre being shut: and entred in among the disciples, the doores being shut: that maketh neuer a whit more for maintenance of their error. For as the water like a fast pauiement made a way to Christ walking vpon the lake: so it is no maruell, if at his comming the hardnes of the stone yeelded it selfe. Howbeit it is more prooueable, that by his commandement the stone was remooued, and by and by after passage giuen him returned into his place. And to enter the doores being shut, is not as much in effect as to pearce through the whole substance, but by diuine power to open an entrie for himselfe, that he suddenly stood among the disciples, verily after a maruellous maner, when the doores were fast locked. That which they alleage out of Luke, that Christ suddenly vanished away from the eies of the disciples with whom he went to Emmaus, proueth them nothing, and maketh for vs. For, that he might take away the sight of himselfe from them, he was not made inuisible, but onely went out of sight. As when he went in iourney together with them (as the same Luke witnesseth) he did not put on a newe face, that he might not be knowen, but held their eies. But these fellows do not only transforme Christ, that he may be conuersant in earth, but in diuers places they make him diuers and vnlike himselfe. Finally, in so trifling they do not by one word in deed, but by a circumstance, make of the flesh of Christ a spirit: and not contented therewith, they put vpon it altogether contrarie qualities. Wherupon of necessitie followeth that it is double.

30 Now although we graunt them that which they prate of the inuisible presence, the vnmeasurableness shall not be yet prooued, without which they shall in vaine attempt to enclose Christ vnder bread. Vnlesse the bodie of Christ may be euerie where at once, without any compasse of place, it shall not be likely that he lyeth hidden vnder bread in the supper. By which necessitie they brought in the monstrous being euerie where. But it is shewed by strong and plaine witness of Scripture, that it was limited about by the measure of the body of a man: and then that by his ascending he hath made it plaine that he is not in all places, but that when he passeth into one place, he leaueth the other that he was in before. Neither is the promise which they alleage, to be drawn to the bodie, I am with you euen to the ending of the world. First the continual conioyning cannot stand, vnlesse Christ dwell in vs corporally without the vse of the supper. Therefore there is no iust cause why they should so sharply brawle about the wordes of Christ, that they may in the Supper enclose Christ vnder bread. Againe the text it selfe prooueth, that Christ speaketh nothing lesse than of his flesh, but promiseth to his disciples inuincible helpe, wherby he may defend & sustaine them agunst all the assaults of Satan and the world. For when he emoynd them a hard charge: least they should doubt to take it in hand, or should fearefully execute it, he strengtheneth them with assistance of his presence: as if he had said, that his succour shall not faile them, which shall be impossible to be overcome. Vnlesse they list to confound all things, ought they not to haue made distinction of the manner of presence. And verily some had rather with great shame to vter their ignorance, than to yeeld neuer so little of their error. I speake not of the Papistes: whose doctrine is more tolerable, or at the least more shamefast. But contentiuousnes so carrieth some away, that they say that by reason of the natures vnited in Christ, wheresoeuer the Godhead of Christ is, there is also his flesh, which cannot be seuered from his Godhead. As though that same vnitng haue compounded of those two natures I wote not what meane thing which was neither God nor man. So indeede did Eutiches and after him Seruetus. But it is plainly gathered out of the Scripture, that the onely one person of Christ doth so consist of two natures, that either of them hath still her owne propercie remaining safe. And that Eutiches was rightfully condemned, they will be ashamed to denie: it is maruell that they marke not the cause of his condemning, that taking away the difference betweene the natures, enforcing the vnitie of person, he made of God man, and of man God. What madnesse therefore is it, rather to mingle heauen and earth together, than not to draw the body of Christ out of the heauenly sanctuarie? For whereas they bring for themselves these testimonies, None is gone vp to heauen but he that is come downe the sonne of man which is in heauen. Againe, The sonne which is in the bosome of the Father, he shall declare them: it is a point of like senselesse dulnesse, to despite the communicating of properties which was in olde time not without cause inuented of the holy Fathers. Truly, when the Lord of glorie is said to be crucified, Paule doth not meane that he suffered any thing in his Godhead: but because the same Christ which being an abiect and despised in the flesh did suffer, was both God and Lord of glorie. After this maner also the Sonne of man was in heauen: because the selfe same Christ, which according to the flesh did dwell the Sonne of man in earth, was God in heauen. In which sort he is saide to haue descended from the saide place according to his Godhead: not that the Godhead did forsake heauen, to hide it selfe in the prison of the body: but because, although it filled all things, yet in the verie manhood of Christ it dwelled corporally, that is to say naturally and after a certaine vn-speakable maner. It is a common distinction in schooles, which I am not ashamed to rehearse: that although whole Christ be euerie where, yet not the whole that is in him is euerie where. And I would to God the schoolemen themselves had well weyed the pith of this saying: for so should the vnfauorie inuention of the fleshy presence of Christ haue bin met withall. Therefore our mediator, sith he is whole euery where, is alway at hand with his, and in the supper after a speciall maner giueth himselfe present: but yet so, that whole he is present, not the whole that he is: because, as it is said, in his flesh he is contained in heauen til he appeare to iudgement.

1. Cor. 2.8)

Christ present in the supper though he descend not to present his body visible in bread.

31 But they are far deceiued, which conceiue no presence of the flesh of Christ in the supper, vnlesse it be made present in bread. For so they leaue nothing to the secret working of the Spirit, which vniteth Christ himselfe vnto vs. They thinke not Christ present, vnlesse he come downe to vs. As though if he did lift vs vp to him, we should not aswell enjoy his presence. Therefore the question is onely of the maner: because they place Christ in the bread, but we thinke it not lawfull for vs to plucke him out of Heauen. Let the readers iudge whether is the righter. Onely let this caullation be driuen away, that Christ is taken away from his supper, vnlesse hee be hidden vnder the couer of bread. For sith this mysteric is heauenly, it is no need to draw Christ into the earth, that he may be ioyned to vs.

*The maner of the presence of Christ in the sacrament incomprehensible

32 Now if any man do aske me of the manner, I will not be ashamed to confesse, that it is a higher secret than that it can be either comprehended with my wit, or vitered with my words: and, to speake it more plainly, I rather teele it, than I can vnderstand it. Therefore I do herein without controuersie embrace the truth of God, in which I may safely rest. He pronounceth that his flesh is the meate of my soule, and his blood is the drinke. With such soode I offer my soule to him to be fedde. In his holy Supper he commaundeth me vnder the signes of breade and wine to take, eate, and drinke his bodie and blood. I nothing doubt that both he doth truly deliuer them, and I do receiue them. Onely I refuse the absurdities, which appeare to be either vnwoorthy of the heauenly maiestie of Christ, or disagreeing from the truth of his nature of manhood: for as much as they must also fight with the word of God,

which also teacheth that Christ was so taken vp into the glory of the heavenly kingdom that it lifteth him vp above all state of the world, and no lesse diligently setteth forth in his nature of man, those things that are properly belönging to his true mañhood. Neither ought this to seeme incredible, or not conionant to reason, because as the whole kingdom of Christ is spirituall, so whatsoeuer he doth with his Church, ought not to be reduced to the reason of this world. Or, that I may vse the wordes of Augustine, this mysterie, as other are, is done by men, but from God: in earth, but from heaven. Such I say is the presence of the body, as the nature of the sacrament requireth: which we say here to excell with so great force, and great effectualnes, that it not onely bringeth to our mindes vndoubted trust of eternall life, but also assureth vs of the immortalitie of our flesh. For it is now quickned of his immortal flesh, & after a certaine maner communicateth of his immortalitie. They which are caried about this with their excessiue speeches, doe nothing but with such entanglements darken the simple and plaine truth. If any be not yet satisfied, I would haue him here a while to consider with me, that we now speake of a sacrament, all the parts whereof ought to be referred to faith. But we do no lesse deintly and plentifully feed faith with this partaking of the body which we haue declared, than they that plucke Christ himselfe out of heauen. In the meane time I plainly confesse, that I refuse that mixture of the flesh of Christ with our soule, or the powring out of it such as they teach: because it sufficeth vs, that Christ doth out of the substance of his flesh breath life into our soules, yea doth power into vs his owne life, although the very flesh of Christ doth not enter into vs. Moreover it is no doubt that the proportion of faith, wherby Paul Rom. 12.3. willett vs to examine all exposition of Scripture, doth in this behalfe very well agree with mee. As for them that speake against so euident a truth, let them looke after what rule of faith they fashion themselves. Hee that doth not confesse that Iesus Christ is come in the flesh, is not of God. These men, although they cloke it, or marke it not, do spoile him of his flesh. 2. Iohn. 7.

33 Of communicating is to bee likewise thought, which they acknowledge none, valesse they denoue the flesh of Christ vnder breade. But there is no small wrong done to the holy Ghost, vnlesse we beleue that it is brought to passe by his incomprehensible power, that we communicate with the flesh and bloud of Christ. Yea if the force of the mysterie, such as it is taught of vs, and as it was known to the old Church from tówer hundred yeeres ago, were weighed according to the worthines of it, there was enough and more wherupon we might be satisfied: the gate had been shut against many foule errors, out of which haue been kindled many horrible dissensions wherewith both in old time and in our age the Church hath bene miserable vexed, while curious men doe enforce an excessiue manner of presence, which the scripture neuer sheweth. And they surmoile about a thing fondly and rashly conceiued, as if the enclosing of Christ vnder bread were (as the prouerbe is) the proue and poupe of godlines. It principally behooued to knowe, howe the bodie of Christ, as it was once deliuered for vs, is made ours: how we are made partakers of his bloud that was shedde: because this is to possess whole Christ crucified, that we may enjoy all his good things. Now these things, in which was to great importance, being omitted yea neglected and in a manner buried, this onely crabbed question pleaseeth them, howe the body of Christ lieth hid vnder bread or vnder the forme of bread. They falsly spread abroad that whatsoeuer we teach concerning spirituall eating, is contrarie to the true and reall eating, as they call it: because we haue respect to nothing but to the maner, which among them is carnall, while they enclose Christ in bread: but to vs it is spirituall, because the secret power of the spirite is the bond of our conioyning with Christ. No truer is that other obiection, that we touch onely the fruit or effect which the faithfull take of the eating of the flesh of Christ. For we haue said before, that Christ himselfe is the substance of the Supper: and that there-

Our communicating of Christ in the sacrament spirituall not carnal, such as receiueth Christ himselfe not the effectes of his grace onely, otherwise sacraments all then Lombard and after him others haue dreamed, who thinke his flesh eaten without our taste, without faith.

upon followeth the effect, that by the sacrifice of his death we are cleansed from sins, by his blood we are washed, by his resurrection we are raised up into hope of the heavenly life. But the foolish imagination, whereof Lombard was the author, hath perverted their mindes, while they thinke that the eating of the flesh of Christ is the sacrament. For this saith he: The Sacrament and not the thing are the formes of bread and wine: the Sacrament and the thing, are the flesh and blood of Christ: the thing and not the Sacrament, is the mysticall flesh. Againe within a litle after. The thing signified and contained, is the proper flesh of Christ: the thing signified and not contained, is his mysticall body. Whereas he maketh difference betwene the flesh of Christ, and the effectuall power of nourishing, wherewith it is endued, I agree: but whereas he saith it to be a sacrament, yea and contained vnder bread, it is an error not to be suffred. Hereupon hath growen the false exposition of sacramentall eating, because they haue thought that wicked men also and euill doers do eate the flesh of Christ, how much soeuer they be strangers from him. But the flesh of Christ, it selfe in the mysterie of the Supper is no lesse a spirituall thing than eternall saluation. Whereupon we gather, that who soeuer be void of the spirit of Christ, can no more eate the flesh of Christ, than they can drinke wine wherewith is ioyned no taste. Truly Christ is too hainously torne in sunder, when that dead body and which hath no liuely strength, is giuen forth in common to vnbeleeuers: and his expresse words are directly against it. Who soeuer eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, abideth in me, and I in him. They answer that in that place is not entreated of the sacramentall eating: which I grant, so that they will not nowe and then stumble against the same stone, saying that the flesh it selfe is eaten without faith. But I woulde know of them, how long they holde it when they haue eaten it. Heere, in my iudgement, they shall haue no way to get out. But they object, that nothing can be withdrawn or faile of the promises of God by the vnthankfulnesse of men. I graunt in deed, and I say that the force of the mysterie remaineth whole, howsoeuer wicked men do, as much as in them lieth, endeuour to make it void. Yet it is one thing to be offered, and another thing to be receiued. Christ reacheth this spirituall meate and offereth this spirituall drinke to all men, some do greedily eate of it, some doe lothingly refuse it: shall these men refusing make the meate and the drinke to loose their nature? They will say that their opinion is holpen by this similitude, namely, that the flesh of Christ, though it be vnfaurie, is neuertheless his flesh. But I denie that it can be eaten without the taste of faith: or (if we list rather to speake as Augustine doth) I say that men beare away no more of this Sacrament, than they gather with the vessell of faith. So nothing is abated from the Sacrament, yea the truth and effectuallnesse thereof remaineth vnminished, although the wicked depart empirie from the outward partaking of it. If they againe object that this worde, this is my bodie, is diminished, if the wicked receiue corruptible bread and nothing else, we haue a solution readie, that God will not be acknouen true in the receiuing it selfe, but in the stedfastnesse of his owne goodnesse, when he is readie to giue, yea liberally offereth to the vnworthie that which they refuse. And this is the fulnesse of the Sacrament, which the whole world can not breake, that the flesh and blood of Christ is no lesse giuen to the vnwoorthie than to the chosen faithfull ones of God: but therewithall it is true, that as water lighting vpon a hard stone, faileth away, because there is no entrie open into the stone: so the wicked do with their hardnes drue backe the grace of God that it cannot pierce into them. Moreouer, that Christ shoulde be receiued without faith, is no more agreeing with reason, than seede to budde in the fire. Whereas they aske, howe Christ is come to damnation to some, vnlesse they receiue him vnworthily, it is a very cold question: forasmuch as we no where read, that men do procure death to themselves by vnworthily receiuing Christ, but rather by refusing him. Neither doth Christs parable helpe them, where he saith that seede groweth

there entreath, of what value the faith is which endureth but for a time, which they doe not thinke to bee necessarie to the eating of Christes flesh and drinking of his blood, that in this behalfe doe make Judas egally fellow with Peter. But rather by the same parable their error is confuted, where Christ saith that some seeke falseth in the high way, othersome vpon stones, and neither of them taketh roote. Whereupon followeth that to the vnbeleeuers their owne hardnesse is a let that Christ attaineth not to them. Whofoeuer desireth to haue our saluation holpen by this mysterie, shall finde nothing fitter, than that the faithfull being led to the very fountaine, should drawe life out of the Sonne of God. But the dignitie of it is honourably enough set out, when we keepe in minde that it is a helpe whereby we be grafted into the body of Christ, or being grafted doe more and more growe together, till he doe fully make him selfe one with vs in the heauenly life. They obiect that Paul ought not to haue made them gulfie of the body and blood of Christ, vnlesse they were partakers of them. But I answer that they are not therefore condemned because they haue eaten them, but onely because they haue prophaned the mysterie, in treading vnder feete the pledge of the holy conioyning with God, which they ought reuerently to receiue. 1. Cor. 11. 29.

33 Now because Augustine among the olde writers chiefly hath affirmed that article of doctrine, that nothing is abated from the Sacraments, nor the grace which they figure is made void: by the infidelitie or naughtinesse of men: it shall be profitable to prooue cleerely by his owne words, how visibly and peruerfly they doe drawe that to this present euill, which call the body of Christ to dogs to eate. The sacramentall eating, after their opinion, is whereby the wicked receiue the body and blood of Christ without the power of the Spirit, or any effect of grace. Augustine contrariwise wryeth welye these words, He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, shall not die for euer, saith: Namely the power of the sacrament, not onely the visible sacrament: and verily within, not without: he that eateth it with hart, not he that presseth it with tooth. Whereupon at length he concludeth that the sacrament of this thing, th it is to say, of the vnitie of the body and blood of Christ, is set before men in the supper of the Lord, to some vnto life, to some vnto destruction: but the thing it selfe where of it is a Sacrament, to all men vnto life, to none vnto destruction, whofoeuer be partakers of it. That none should here cauil, that the thing is called not the body, but the grace of the Spirit which may be severed from the bodie, the contrarie comparison betweene these two wordes of addition Visible and Inuisible drieth away all these mistis: for vnder the first of them cannot be comprehended the body of Christ. Whereupon followeth that the vnbeleeuers doe communicate onely of the visible signe. And that all doubung may be better taken away, after that he had said that this bread requireth the hunger of the inward man, he addeth: Moses and Aaron and Phinees, and many other that did eate Manna, pleased God. Why so? because the spirituall meate they spirituallly vnderstood, spirituallly hungred, spirituallly tasted, that they might be spirituallly filled. For we also at this day haue receiued spirituall meate: but the Sacrament is one thing, and the power of the Sacrament is an other. A litle after: and by this he that abideth not in Christ, and in whome Christ abideth not, without doubt neither eateth spirituallly his flesh, nor drinketh his blood, though carnally and visibly he presseth with teeth the signe of the body and blood. We heare againe that the visible signe is set in compariton as contrarie to spirituall eating. Wherby the error is confuted, that the body of Christ inuisible is in dedde eaten sacramentally, though not spirituallly. We heare also that nothing is granted to prophane & vnleane men beside the visible receiuing of the signe. Hereupon cometh his famous saying, that the other disciples did eate the bread the Lorde: but Judas did eate the bread of the Lorde: wherein he plainly excludeth the vnbeleeuers vnbeleuers from the partaking of the body & blood. Neither tendeth it to any other end which he saith in another place: What maruellest thou, if to Iudas was giuen the bread of Christ, by which he might be made bond to the diuel: when thou seest on the contrarie side that to Paul was giuen the angell of the diuell, by whom he might be made perfect in Christ? he saith verily in another place, that the bread of the Supper was the body of Christ to them to whom Paul said, He that eateth vnworthily, eateth and drinketh iudgement to himselfe: and that they haue not therefore nothing, because they haue receiued naughtily. But in what sense, he declareth more fully in another place. For taking in hand purposely to define how the wicked and euill doers, which professe the Christian faith with mouth but with deedes doe denie it, doe eate the body of Christ, (and that against the opinion of some which thought that they did not eate in sacrament onely but in very deede.) But neither (saith he) ought it to be saide that they eate the body of Christ, because they are not to be reckoned among the members of Christ. For (to speake nothing of the rest) they cannot together be the members of Christ, and the members of a harlot. Finally where himselfe saith, He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, abideth in me, and I in him, he sheweth that it is not sacramentally but in very deede to eate the body of Christ. For this is to abide in Christ, that Christ may abide in him. For he so said this, as though he had said, he that abideth not in me, and in whom I abide not, let him not say or thinke that he doth eate my body, or drinke my blood. Let the readers weigh the things set as contraries in the comparison to eate, sacramentally, and in very deede: and there shall remaine no doubt. He confirmeth the same, no lesse plainly in these words: Prepare not your iawes, but your hart. Hereupon is this Supper commended. Loe we beleue in Christ, when we receiue by faith: in receiuing we know what to thinke. We receiue a little and are fatted in hart. Therefore not that which is seene, but that which is belceued, doth feede. Here also that which the wicked receiue, he restraineth to the visible signe: and teacheth that Christ is none otherwise receiued than by faith. So also in another place, pronouncing expressly that the good and the euill doe communicate together in the signes, he excludeth the euill from the true eating of the flesh of Christ. For if they receiued the thing it selfe, he would not vterly haue left that vnspoken which was more fit for his matter. Also in another place, entreating of the eating and the fruite thereof, he concludeth thus: Then shall the body and blood of Christ be life to euery man, if that which in the sacrament is visibly receiued, be in the truth it selfe spiritually eaten, spiritually drunke. Therefore who so make vnbeleuers partakers of the flesh and blood of Christ, that they may agree with Augustine, let them shew vs the visible body of Christ: forasmuch as, by his iudgement, the whole truth is spirituall. And it is certainly gathered out of his words, that the sacramentall eating, when vnbeleefe closeth vp the entrie to truth, is as much in effect as visible or outward eating. If the body of Christ might be eaten truly and yet not spiritually, what should that meane which he saith in another place? Yee shall not eate this body which ye see, and drinke the blood which they shall shed that shall crucife me. I haue commended a certaine sacrament vnto you, being spiritually vnderstanded it shall quicken you. Verily he would not denie but that the same body which Christ offered for sacrifice, is deliuered in the Supper: but he did set out the manner of eating: namely that being receiued into heavenly glorie, by the secreete power of the Spirit, it breatheth life into vs. I graunt in deede that there is oftentimes founde in him this manner of speaking, that the body of Christ is eaten of the vnbeleuers: but he expoundeth himselfe, adding, In Sacrament. And in another place he describeth spirituall eating, in which our bitings consume not grace. And least mine aduersaries should say, that I fight with them with a heape of places, I would know of them how they can vnwinde themselves from one saying of his, where hee saith that Sacraments doe worke in the onely elect that which they figure. Truly they dare not deny but that the bread in the supper figureth the body of Christ. Whereupon followeth that the reprobate are debarred from the partaking of it. That Cyril also thought none otherwise, these words do declare. As In 6. Ioan. ca. 17. if a man vpon molten waxe do powre other wax, he wholly tempereth the one wax with the other: so it is necessarie if any man receiue the flesh & blood of the Lord that he be ioyned with him that Christ may be found in him and he in Christ. By these wordes I thinke it is euident, that they are bereaued of the true and reall eating, that do but sacramentally eat the body of Christ, which cannot be seuered from his power: and that therefore faitheth not the faith of the promises of God, which ceaseth not to raine from heauen, although the stones and rockes conceiue not the liquor of the raine.

35 This knowledge shall also easily draw vs away from the carnall worshipping, which some haue with peruerse rashnesse erected in the sacrament: because they made account with themselves in this manner: If it be the body, then both the soule and the Godhead are together with the body, which now cannot be seuered: therefore Christ is there to be worshipped. First if their accompanying which they pretend be denied them, what will they do? For how much soeuer they cry out vpon an absurdity, if the body be seuered from the soule & the Godhead: yet what sound witted and sober man can perswade himselfe that the body of Christ is Christ: They thinke themselves in deed gaily to prooue it with their logicall arguments. But sith Christ speaketh distinctly of his body and blood, but describeth not the manner of presence: how will they of a doubtfull thing gather certainly that which they would? What then? if their consciences chauce to be exercised with any more grieuous feeling, shall not they by and by with their logicall arguments be dissolved and melt? namely when they shall see themselves destitute of the certaine wordes of God, vpon which alone our soules do stand fast, when they are called to account, and without which they faint at euery silit moment: when they shall call to minde that the doctrine and examples of the Apostles are against them, and that themselves alone are to themselves the authors of it. To such motions shall be added other not small prickings. What? Shall it be a matter of no importance, to worshipping God in this forme, where nothing was prescribed vnto vs? When it concerned the true worshipping of God, ought they with so great lightnes to haue attempted that of which there is no where reade any one word? But if they had, with such humblenes as they ought, holden all their thoughts vnder the word of God, they would truly haue haikened to that which he said, Take, eat, drinke, and would haue obeyed this commandment, wherein he biddeth the Sacrament to be receiued, not to be worshipped. But they which, as it is commanded of god, do receiue it without worshipping, are assured that they do not swaue from Gods commandment: than which assurednes there is nothing better when we take any worke in hand. They haue the example of the Apostles, whom we reade not to haue fallen downe flat and worshipped it, but euen as they were sitting to haue receiued it and eaten it. They haue the vse of the Apostolike Church, wherein AQ. 2. 4. Luke reporteth that the faithfull did communicate not in worshipping but in breaking of bread. They haue the Apostles doctrine, wherewith Paul instructed the Church of the Corinthians, professing that he had receiued of the Lord that which he deliuered.

36 And these things verily tend to this ende, that the godly reader should weye how perillous it is in so hie matters to wander from the simple wordes of God to the dreames of our owne braine. But those things that are aboue said, ought to deliuer vs from all doubt in this behalfe. For that godly soules may therein rightly take hold of Christ, they must needs be lifted vp to heauen. If this be the office of a Sacrament, to helpe the mind of man which otherwise is weake, that it may rise vpward to reach the height of spirituall mysteries: then they which are holden downe in the outward signe do stray from the right way of seeking Christ. What then? Shall we denie that Adoration of Christ in the sacrament vnuaranted.

AQ. 2. 4.

1. Cor. 11.

Adoration of the sacraments of Christs body superstitious, condemned in effect by the council of Nice, by the vse of the old Church and by Scripture.

Cap. 17. Of the outward meanes

it is a superstitious worshipping, when men do throw themselues down before bread, to worship Christ therein? Doubtlesse the Nicene Synode meant to meete with this mischiefe, when it forbad vs to be humbly intentiue to the signes set before vs. And for none other cause was it in olde time ordained, that before the consecration the people should with a loud voice be put in minde to haue their hearts lifted vpwarde. The Scripture it selfe also, beside that it diligently declareth vnto vs the ascension of Christ, wherby he conueyed away the presence of his body from our sight and conuerfation: to shake away from vs all carnall thinking of him, so oft as it maketh mention of him, commandeth vs to be in mindes raised vpward, and to seeke him in heauen sitting at the right hand of the father. According to this rule he was rather to be spiritually worshipped in heauenly glorie, than this so perillous a kinde of worshipping to be deuised, full of carnall and grosse opinion of God. Wherefore they that haue inuented the worshipping of the Sacrament, haue not onely dreamed it of themselues beside the Scripture, in which no mention of it can be shewed (which yet should not haue been ouerpassed if it had been acceptable to God:) But also all the Scripture crying out against it, they haue framed to themselues a God after the will of their owne lust, leauing the liuing God. For what is Idolatrie, if this be not, to worship the gifts in steed of the giuer himselfe? Wherein they haue doubly offended: For both the honor taken from God was conueyed to a creature: and he himselfe also dishonored in the defiling and prophaning of his benefite, when of his holy Sacrament is made a cursed idole. But let vs contrariwise, least we fall into the same pit, througely settle our eares, eyes, hearts, minds, and tooings in the holy doctrine of God. For that is the schoole of the holy Ghost, the best schoolemaster, in which such profit is attained, that nothing neede more to be gotten from any where else, but we willingly ought to be ignorant of whatfoeuer is not taught in it.

Christ in the sacrament offered and giuen by promise vnto them not which behold and adore, but which eate and giue thanks: this sacrament being instituted for the participation of Christ by faith and the profession of our gratefull remembrance as two speciall vses.

37 But now (as superstition, when it hath once passed the right bounds, maketh no ende of sinning) they fell a great way further. For they haue deuised Ceremonies altogether straunge from the institution of the Supper, to this end only that they might giue diuine honors to the signe. We yeeld (say they) this worship to Christ. First, if this were done in the Supper, I would say that that worshipping only is lawfull, which resteth not in the signe, but is directed to Christ sitting in heauen. But now by what pretense doe they boast that they worship Christ in that bread: when they haue no promise thereof? They consecrate an host, as they call it, which they may cary about in pompe, which they may shew forth in a common gazing to be looked vpon, worshipped, and called vpon. I aske by what power they thinke it to bee rightly consecrate. Verily they will bring forth those words, This is my body. But I will obiekt to the contrarie, that it was therewithall saide, Take and eate. Neither will I do that of nothing. For when a promise is knit to a commaundement, If say that the promise is so contained vnder the commaundement, that being seuered it is made no promise at all. This shall be made plainer by a like example. God gaue a commaundement, when he said. Call vpon me: He added a promise, I will heare thee. If any man calling vpon Peter and Paul, do glorie vpon this promise, will not all men crie out that he doth wrongfully? And what other thing I pray, do they which leauing the commaundement concerning eating, do catch hold of a maimed promise, this is my body, to abuse it to strange Ceremonies from the institution of Christ? Let vs therefore remember that this promise is giuen to them which keepe the commaundement ioyned with it: but that they be destitute of all the word, which remooue the Sacrament to any other way. We haue heretofore entreated how the mysterie of the holy Supper serueth our Faith before God. But for as much as the Lord doth here not onely bring into our remembrance so great largenes of his bountie, as we haue before shewed, but doth as it were from hand to hand bring it forth, & stirreth vs to acknowledge it: he doth therewithall warne vs that we be not vnthankfull to so plentiful liberality.

Psal. 50. 15.

liberality: but rather that we would publish it with such praises as it is meete, and aduance it with thanksgiving. Therefore when he deliuered the institution of the sacrament it selfe to the Apostles, he taught them that they should do it in remembrance of him. Which Paul expoundeth, to declare the Lords death. That is, publicly and altogether with one mouth openly to confesse, that all our affiance of life and saluation is reposed in the death of the Lord: that we may glorifie him with our confession, and may by our example exhort other to giue glorie to him. Here againe it appeareth wherunto the marke of this sacrament is directed, namely to exercise vs in the remembrance of the death of Christ. For, this that we are commaunded to declare the Lords death till he come to iudge, is nothing else but that we should publish that with confession of mouth, which our faith hath acknowledged in the sacrament, that is, that the death of Christ is our life. This is the second vse of the Sacrament, which pertaineth to outward confession.

Luk. 22. 19.
1. Cor. 11. 26.

38 Thirdly the Lord also willed it to be to vs in steede of an exhortation, than which none other can more vehemently encourage and enflame vs both to purenes and holinesse of life, and also to charitie, peace and agreement. For the Lord doth therein so communicate his body to vs, that he is made throughly one with vs, and we with him. Now sith he hath but one body, where of he maketh vs all partakers, it is necessarie that all we also be by such partaking made one body. Which vnite the bread which is deliuered in the sacrament, representeth: which as it is made of many graines in such sort mingled together that one cannot be discerned from an other: after the same manner we also ought to be conioyned and knit together with so great agreement of minds, that no disagreement or diuision come between vs. This I had rather to be expressed with Pauls wordes. The cup of blessing (saith he) which we blessed is the communicating of the blood of Christ: and the bread of blessing which we breake, is the partaking of the body of Christ. Therefore we all are one body that partake of one bread. We shall haue verie well profited in the Sacrament, if this thought so shall be imprinted and ingrauen in our mindes, that none of the brethren can be hurt, despised, refused, abused, or any wise be offended of vs, but that therewithall we do in so dooing hurt, despise, and abuse Christ with our iniurious dealings: that we cannot disagree with our brethren but that we must therewithall disagree with Christ: that Christ cannot be ioued of vs, but that hee must be loued in our brethren: that what care wee haue of our owne body, such also wee ought to haue of our brethren which are members of our bodie: as no part of our bodie is touched with any feeling of griefe, which is not spread abroad into all the other partes, so we must not suffer our brother to be grieved with any euill wherof we should not also be touched with compassion. Therefore Augustine not without cause so oft calleth this sacrament that bond of charitie. For what sharper spur could be put to vs, to stirre vp mutuall charitie among vs, than when Christ giuing himselfe to vs, doth not onely allure vs with his owne example that we should mutually dedicate and deliuer our selues one to another: but in so much as he maketh himselfe common to all, he maketh all vs also one in himselfe?

A third vse of this sacrament is stirring vp vs to purenes and loue.

1. Cor. 10. 16

39 But hereby is that verie well confirmed which I haue saide in another place, that the true ministracion of the sacrament standeth not without the word. For whatsoever profite cometh to vs of the Supper, requireth the worde: whether we be to be confirmed in faith, or to be exercised in confession, or to be stirred vp to ductie, prayer is needfull. Therefore nothing can be more disorderly done in the supper, than if it be turned to a dumbe action: it hath bene done vnder the tyranny of the Pope. For they would haue the whole force of consecration to hang vpon the intent of the Priest, as though this nothing pertained to the people, to whom it most of all behooued that the mysterie should be declared. But thereupon hath grown this error, that they marked not that those promises wherewith the consecration is made, are directed not to the elements themselves, but to them that receive them. But Christ speaketh not to the bread, that it may be made his bodie, but commandeth his disciples to eate, and promiseth to them the communicating of his body and blood. And none other order doth Paul teach than that together with the bread and the cup, the promises should be offered to the faithfull. Thus it is truly. We ought not to imagine any magicall inchantment, that it be sufficient to have mumbled vp the words, as though the elements did heare them: but let vs vnderstand that those wordes are a liuely preaching, which may edifie the hearers, which may inwardly pearce into their mindes, which may be imprinted and setled in their hearts, which may shew forth effectualnesse in the fulfilling of that which it promiseth: by these reasons it clearly appeareth that the laying vp of the sacrament, which many do earnestly require, that it may be extraordinarily distributed to the sicke, is vnprofitable: For either they shall receive it without rehearsing of the institution of Christ, or the minister shall together with the signe ioyne the true declaration of the mystery. In silence is abuse and fault. If the promises be rehearsed, and the mysterie declared, that they which shall receive it may receive it with fruite, there is no cause why we should doubt that this is the true consecration. To what end then will that other consecration come, the force whereof commeth not so far as to the sicke men? But they that do so, haue the example of the olde Church. I graunt: but in so great a matter, and in which wee erre not without great daunger nothing is safer than to followe the truth & selfe.

The danger of vnworthily receiving this sacrament.

40 Now as we see that this holy bread of the Supper of the Lorde is spirituall meat, no lesse swete and delicate than heathfull to the godly worshippers of God, by the taste whereof they feele that Christ is their life, whom it trayseth vp to thanksgiving, to whom it is an exhortation to mutuall charitie among themselves: so on the other side it is turned into a most noysom poison to all them whose Faith it doth not nourish and confirme, and whom it doth not stir vp to confession of praise & to charitie. For as bodily meate, when it findeth a stomacke possessed with euill humors, being it selfe also thereby made euill and corrupted doeth rather hurt than nourish: so this spirituall meate, if it light vpon a soule defiled with malice and naughtinesse, throweth it downe headlong with greater fall: verily not by the fault of the meate it selfe, but because to defiled and vnbeeluing men nothing is cleane, though otherwise it be neuer so much sanctified by the blessing of the Lord. For (as Paul saith) they that eate and drinke vnworthily are guiltie of the body and blood of the Lorde, and doe eate and drinke iudgement to themselves, not discerning the bodie of the Lord. For such kinde of men as without any sparkle of Faith, without any zeale of charitie, do thrust themselves foorth like swine to take the supper of the Lord, do not discern the body of the Lord. For in so much as they do not beleeue that that body is their life, they doe as much as in them lieth dishonour it, spoyling it of all the dignitie thereof, and finally in so receiving it they prophane and defile it. But in so much as being estranged and disagreeing from their brethren, they dare mingle the holy signe of the body of Christ with their disagreements, it is no thanks to them that the body of Christ is not rent insunder, and limme caele torne in peeces. And so not vnworthily they are guiltie of the body and blood of the Lord, which they do with vngodlinesse ful of sacriledge so fowly defile. Therefore by this vnworthie eating, they take to themselves damnation. For whereas they haue no faith reposed in Christ, yet receiving the sacrament they profess that there is saluation for them no where else than in him, and do foreswear al other assistance. Wherefore they themselves are accusers to themselves, they themselves pronounce witness against themselves, and they themselves seale their owne damnation. Again when they beeing with hatred and euill will decided and drawn in sunder from their brethren, that is from the members of Christ, haue no part in Christ: yet they do

Tit. 1. 15.
2. Cor. 11. 29.

doe testifie that this is the onely saluation to communicate with Christ, and to be made one with him. For this cause Paul commandeth, that a man prouue himselfe, before that he eate of this bread or drinke of this cup. Whereby (as I expound it) he meant that euery man should descende into himselfe, and weigh with himselfe, whether he doe with inward assistance of hart rest vpon the saluation which Christ hath purchased: whether he acknowledge it with confession of mouth: then whether he doe with desirous endeouour of innocencie and holinesse aspire to the following of Christ: whether after his example he be ready to giue himselfe to his brethren, and to communicate himselfe to them with whome hee hath Christ common to him: whether, as hee himselfe is accepted of Christ, he doe likewise on his behalfe take all his brethren for members of his owne body: whether he couet to cherish, defend and helpe them as his owne members. Not for that these duties both of Faith and Charitie can now be perfect in vs: but because we ought to enduour this, and with all our desires to long toward it, that we may daily more and more encrease our Faith begun.

41 Commonly when they goe about to prepare men to such woorthines of eating, they haue in cruell wise tormented and vexed poore consciences: and yet they brought neuer a whitte of all those things that might serue to the purpose. They said that those did eate woorthily which were in state of grace. To be in state of grace they expounded to be pure and cleansed from all sinne. By which doctrine all the men that euer haue at any time bene or now be in earth, were debarred from the vse of this Sacrament. For if we goe about this, to fetch our woorthines from our selues, we are vterly vndone: onely despaire and damnable ruine abideth for vs. Though we endeouour with our whole strengthes, we shall nothing more preuaile, but that then at last we shall be most vnwoorthy, when we haue most of all travelled about seeking of woorthines. To salue this sore, they haue deuised a way to attaine woorthines: that, as much as in vs lieth, making examination, and requiring of our selues account of all our dooings, we should with contrition, confession, and satisfaction cleanse our vnwoorthines, which way of cleansing, what manner of thing it is, we haue already shewed there where was more conuenient place to speake of it. So much as serueth for our present purpose, I say that these be two hungrie and vanishing comforts, to dismaid and discouraged consciences, and such as are stricken with horror of their sinne. For if the Lord by speciall forbidding admitteth none to the partaking of the Supper but the righteous and innocent: there needeth no small heede that may make a man assured of his own righteousnes which he heareth to be required of God. But wherby is this assurednes confirmed vnto vs, that they are discharged afore God, which haue done so much as in them lay? But although it were so, yet when shall it be that a man may be bold to assure himselfe that he hath done as much as in him lay? So when there is made no certaine assurance of our woorthines, the entrie shall alway remaine shut by that horrible forbidding, wherby is pronounced that they eate and drinke iudgement to themselves, which eate and drinke vnwoorthily.

42 Now it is easie to iudge what manner of doctrine this is which reigneth in the Papacie, and from what Author it hath proceeded, which with the outrageous rigor thereof, bereaueth and spoylth, miserable sinners and such as be tormented with feare and sorrow, of the comfort of this Sacrament in which yet all the sweete delicates of the Gospel were set before the. Surely the deuil could by no readier way destroy men, than by so making them senselesse, that they could not perceiue the tast & fauour of such foode, wherewith it was the wil of the most good heavenly Father to feede them. Least therefore we runne into such headlong downefall, let vs remember that this holy banquet is medicineto the sicke, comfort to sinners, liberall gift to the poore: which bring no profite to the healthie, righteous, and rich, if any such could be found. For whereas in it Christ is giuen vs for meate: we vnderstand Consciences tormented by these woorthines of receiving which is taught in the Church of Rome.

The medicinall vertue of the Sacrament is thus weakened with the conscience of their own vnwoorthines.

that without him we pine, starue, and faint, like as famine destroyeth the liuely strength of the body. Againe whereas he is giuen vs for life: we vnderstand that without him we are in our selues vtterly dead. Wherefore this is the worthinesse both the onely and best that we can bring to God, if we offer to him our owne vilenes and (as I may so call it) vnworthines, that of his mercie he may make vs worthie of him: if we despaire in our selues, that we may be comforted in him: if we humble our selues, that we may be raised vp of him: if we accuse our selues, that we may be iustified of him: moreouer if we aspire to that vnitie which he commendeth to vs in his supper: and as he maketh vs all one in himselfe, so if we wish to vs all altogether one soule, one hart, one tongue. If we haue these things throughly well weied and considered, such thoughts although they shake vs, yet shall neuer ouerthrow vs. As how should we being needy and naked of all good things, we defiled with filthines of sins, we halfe dead, eate the body of the Lord worthily? We will rather thinke that we being poore come to the liberall giuer, we sicke to the phisitian, we sinners to the author of righteousnes, finally we dead men to him that giueth life: that that worthines which is commanded of God, consisteth chiefly of Faith, which reposeth all things in Christ and nothing in vs: and next of charitie, and the self same charitie which is enough to offer vnperfect to God, that he may increase it to better, forasmuch as it cannot be giuen perfect. Som other agreeing with vs in this, that the worthines it selfe consisteth in Faith and Charitie: yet in the measure of worthines haue gone farre out of the way, requiring a perfection of Faith, whereunto nothing may be added, and a charitie egall with that which Christ hath shewed toward vs. But hereby they do none otherwise than those other before, driue all men away from comming to this holy Supper. For if their sentence should take place, no man should receue but vnworthily, forasmuch as all without exception should be holden guiltie and couict of their vnperfectnes. And truly it were a point of too much amazed dulnes, I will not say foolishnes, to require such perfection in the Sacrament, as may make the Sacrament void and superfluous: which was not ordained for the perfect, but for the weake and feeble to awake, to stir vp, to pricke forward and exercise the affection of Faith and Charitie, and to correct the default of either of them.

The libertie granted vnto men and their waiours, the shewed in ceremonies annexed to the administration of this Sacrament.

Luke 22. 17.

43 But so much as concerneth the outward forme of dooing, whether faithfull receiue it in their hand or no, whether they deuide it, or euery one eate that which is giuen him: whether they put againe the cup in the hand of the Deacon, or deliuer it to the next: whether the bread be leaueued, or vleaueued: whether the wine be red or white: it maketh no matter. These things be indifferent and left in the libertie of the Church. Howbeit it is certaine, that the vsage of the olde Church was, that euery one should take it into his hand. And Christ said, Diuide it among you. The histories report that it was leaueued and common bread before the time of Alexander Bishop of Rome, which first delided in vleaueued bread: But for what reason I see not, vnlesse it were with a new sight to draw the eyes of the common people to wondering at it, rather than to instruct their mindes with good religion. I adure all them that are touched with any though but light zeale of godlinesse, to tell whether they doe not euidently see, both how much more brightly the glory of GOD shineth herein, and how much more aboundant sweetenesse of spirituall comfort cometh to the faithfull, than in these colde and playe-like trifles, which bring none other vse but to deceue the sense of the amazed people. Thus they call the holding of the people in religion, when being made foolish & senselesse with superstition it is drawn whither they list. If any man will defende such inventions by antiquitie, I my selfe also am not ignorant how auuncient is the vse of chresme, and blowing in Baptisme: Howe nie to the age of the Apostles the Supper of the Lorde was infected with rustinesse: but this verily is the wauardnes of mans boldnesse, which can not withholde it selfe but that it must alway play and be wanton in the mysteries of God.

God. But let vs remember that God doth so highly esteeme the obedience of his word, that he willet vs in it to iudge both his angels and the whole world. Now, bidding farewell to so great a heape of ceremonies: it might thus haue bin most comly ministred, if it were oft and at least euery weeke set before the Church, but that first they should begin with publike prayers: then a sermon should be made; then the minister hauing bread and wine set vpon the boord, should rehearse the institution of the supper: and then should declare the promises that are in it left vnto vs: and therewithall should excommunicate all them that by the Lordes forbidding are debarred from it, afterward they should pray that with what liberalitie the Lord hath giuen vs this holy foode, he would instruct and frame vs also with the same faith, and thankfulness of minde to receiue it, and that forasmuch as we are not of our selues, he would of his mercie make vs woorthie of such a banquet: that then either Psalmes should be song, or somewhat read, and the faithfull should in seemely order communicate of the holy banquet, the ministers breaking the bread and giuing it to the people: that when the supper is ended, exhortation should be made to pure faith and confession of faith, to charitie, and to maners meete for Christians: last of all that giuing of thanks should be rehearsed, and praises be song to God: which being ended the congregation should be let go in peace.

44 These things that wee haue hitherto spoken of this Sacrament doe largely shew, that it was not therefore ordeyned, that it should be receiued yeerely once, and that slightly for manners sake (as nowe commonly the custome is) but that it should be in often vse to all Christians that with often remembrance they should repeate the passion of Christ: by which remembrance they might susleine and strengthen their Faith, and exhort themselues to sing confession of praie to God, and to publish his goodnesse: finally by which they might nourish mutuall charitie, and testifie it among themselues, whereof they sawe the knot in the vnitie of the body of Christ. For so oft as we communicate of the signe of the body of the Lord, we do as by a token giuen and receiued, interchangeably binde our selues one to another vnto all duties of loue, that none of vs do any thing whereby he may offend his brother, nor leaue any thing vndone whereby he may helpe him, when neede requireth and abilitie sufficeth. That such was the vse of the Apostolike Church, Luke rehearseth in the Acts, when he saith that the faithfull were continuing in the doctrine of the Apostles, in communicating, in breaking of bread, and in prayers. So was it altogether meete to be done, that there should be no assemble of the Church without the worde, prayers, partaking of the Supper and almes. That this order was also institute among the Corinthians we may sufficiently gather of Paul, and it is certaine that in many ages afterwarde it was in vse. For therupon came those olde Canons, which they fater vpon Anacletus and Calixtus, that when the consecration is done, all should communicate, that will not be without the doers of the Church. And it is read in those old Canons, which they call the Canons of the Apostles: that they which continue not vnto the end, and do not receiue the holy Communion must be corrected as men that moue vnquietnesse of the Church. Also in the Council at Antioch, it was decreed that they which enter into the Church, and heare the Scriptures, and do abstaine from the Communion, should be remooued from the church, till they haue amended this fault. Which although in the first Council at Toletum it was either somewhat qualified or at least set forth in milder words, yet it is there also decreed, that they, which when they haue heard the sermon, are found neuer to communicate, should be warned: if after warning they abstaine, they should be debarred from it.

45 Verily by these ordinances the holy ment ment to retaine and maintaine the often vse of the Communion, which often vse they had receiued from the Apostles themselues, which they sawe to be most wholsome for the faithfull, and by hild and little by the negligence of the common people to grow out of vse, Augustine testifieth of his owne time: The Sacrament (saith he) of this thing, of the vnitie of the Lords body, is somewhere daily, somewhere by certaine distances of the daies, prepared vnto the Lodes table, and is there receiued at the table, to some vnto life, to othersome vnto destruction. And in the first Epistle to Iamarius: some do daily communicate of the body and blood of the Lord: some receiue it at certaine daies: in some places there is no day let passe wherein it is not offered: in some other places onely vpon the Saturday and the Sunday, and in some other places neuer but on the Sunday. But forasimuch as the common people was (as we haue said) somewhat slack, the holy men did call earnestly vpon them with sharpe rebukings, least they shoulde seeme to winke at such slothfulnesse. Such an example is in Chrysofome vpon the Epistle to the Ephesians. It is not said vnto him that dishonoured the banquet: wherefore didst thou sit downe? but wherefore diddest thou come in? Who soeuer is not partaker of the mysteries, he is wicked and shamelesse for that he standeth here present. I beseech you if any be called to a banquet, washeth his hands, sitteth downe, seemeth to prepare himselfe to eat, and then doth taste of nothing: shall he not shame both the banquet, and the maker of the banquet? So thou standing among them that with prayer do prepare themselves to receiue the holy meate, hast euen in this that thou hast not gone away, confessed that thou art one of the number of them, at the last thou dost not partake: had it not been better that thou hadst not been present? Thou wilt say, I am vnworthie. Therefore neither wast thou worthe of the communion of prayer, which is a preparing to the receiuing of the holy mysterie.

The custome of yeerely once recei-
uing peruerse.

46 And truly this custome, which commaundeth to communicate yeerely once, is a most certaine inuention of the diuell, by whose ministerie soeuer it was brought in. They say that Zepherinus was author of that decree, which it is not likely to haue been such as we now haue it. For he by his ordinance did peraduenture not after the worst manner prouide for the Church, as the times then were. For it is no doubt but that then the holy supper was set before the faithfull so oft as they came together in assembly, neither is it any doubt but that a good part of them did communicate. But when it scarcely at any time happened that all did communicate together, and whereas it was necessarie that they which were mingled with prophane men and idolaters, should by some outward signe testifie their faith: the holy man for order and policies sake, appointed that day, wherein the whole people of Christians should by partaking of the Lords Supper vtter a confession of their faith. The ordinance of Zepherinus being otherwise good hath been cuill wristed of them that came after, when a certaine lawe was made of one communicating yeerely: whereby it is come to passe, that almost all men when they haue once communicate, as though they had gaily discharged themselves for all the rest of the yeere, sleepe soundly on both eares. It ought to haue been farre otherwise done. Euery weeke at the least, the Lords table should be set before the assembly of the Christians: the promises should be declared, which might feed vs spiritually at it: none should indeed be compelled by necessitie, but all should be exhorted and pricked forward: the sluggishnes also of the slothfull should be rebuked. All should by heapes, as hungrie men, come together to such dainties. Not without rightful cause therefore at the beginning I complained, that by the craft of the diuell this custome was thrust in, which when it appointeth one certaine day of the yeere, maketh men slothfull for all the rest of the yeere. We see in deece that this peruerse abuse was crept in euen in the time of Chrysofome: but wee may also therewithall see how much it displeased him. For he complaineth with greuous wordes in the same place which I euen now alleaged, that there is so great inequalitye of this matter, that often in some times of the yeere they came not euen when they were cleane, but at Easter they came euen when they were vn-cleane. Then he crieth out: O custome, O presumption. Then in vaine is the daily offering

used: in vaine we stand at the altar: there is none that partaketh together with vs. So farre is it off that he allowed it by his authoritie adioyned to it.

47 Out of the same shop proceeded also another ordinance, which hath stolen away or violently taken away the halfe of the supper from the better number of the people of God, namely the signe of the blood, which being denied to lay and profane men (for with such titles forsooth they set out Gods inheritance) became a peculiar possession to shauen and annointed men. It is the commandement of the eternall God, that all should drinke: which commandement man dare discontinue and repell with a new and contrary law, commanding that not all should drinke. And that these lawmakers should not seeme to fight without reason against their God, they pretend perils that might happen if this holy cup were commonly giuen to all: as though those dangers had not bene foreseene and marked of the eternall wisdom of God. And then suttly forsooth they reason, that the one is enough for both. For if (say they) it be the body, it is whole Christ, which cannot now be seuered from his body. Therefore by accompanying the bodie containeth the blood. Lo how our wit agreeth with God, when it hath neuer so little begun with loose reines, to be wanton and wilde. The Lord shewing bread saith that it is his body: when he sheweth the cup, he calleth it his blood. The boldnes of mans reason, crieth out contrariwise, that the bread is the blood, and the wine is the body: as though the Lord had for no cause seuered his body from his blood both in words and in signes: or as though it had euer bene heard spoken that the body or blood of Christ is called God and Man. Verily if he had meant to signifie whole himselfe, he might haue said: it is I: as he is wont to speake in the Scriptures, and not, this is my body, this is my blood. But he willing to helpe our weakenes, did set the cup seuerally from the bread, to teach that he sufficeth no lesse for drinke than for meate. Now let one part be taken away, then we shall finde but the one halfe of the nourishments in him. Therefore, although it be true which they pretend, that the blood is in the bread by way of accompanying, and againe, the body in the cuppe, yet they defraude godly soules of the confirmation of Faith which Christ deliuereth vs as necessary. Therefore bidding their suttleties fare well, we must hold fast the profite which is by the ordinance of Christ in the two earnestes.

48 I know in deede that the ministers of Sathan doe here cauill, as it is an ordinarie thing with them to make mockery of the Scriptures. First they alleage that of one bare doing ought not to be gathered a rule whereby the Church should be bound to perpetuall obseruing. But they lie when they say that it was but a bare dooing: for Christ did not onely deliuer the cup, but also did institute that his Apostles should in time to come doe the same. For they are the words of a commaunder, drinke ye all of this cup. And Paul so rehearseth that it was a deede, that he also commendeth it for a certaine rule. Another starting hole is, that the Apostles alone were receiued of Christ to the partaking of this Supper whom he had already chofen and taken in to the order of the sacrificing Priestes. But I would haue them answer me to these questions, from which they shall not be able to escape, but that they shall be easie conuincd with their lies. First, by what oracle haue they this solution reuealed, being so strange from the word of God? The Scripture reckeneth twelue that sate with Iesus: but it doth not so obscure the dignitie of Christ that it calleth them sacrificing Priestes of which name we will speake hereafter in place fit for it. Though he gaue it then to the twelue, yet he commaunded that they should doe the same, namely that they should so distribute it among them. Secondly, why in that better age, from the Apostles almost a thousand yeares, were all without exception made partakers of both the signes? was the old Church ignorant what gusts Christ had receiued to the Supper? It were a point of most desperate shamelesnes, here to sticke and dally in granting it to be true. There remaine the Ecclesiasticall histories, there remaine the bookes of the olde writers, which minister euident testimonies of this matter. The flesh (saith Tertullian) is fed with the body and blood of Christ, that the Soule may be fatted with feeding vpon God. How (saith Ambrose to Theodosius) wilt thou receiue with such hands the holy body of the Lord? With what boldnes wilt thou with thy mouth partake of the cup of the precious blood? And Hierome saith. The Priestes which make the Thankesgiuing, and doe distribute the blood of the Lord to the people. Chrysostome, Not as in the olde law the priest did eate part, and the people part: but one body is set before all, and one cup. Those things that pertaine to the Thankesgiuing are all common betwene the Priett and the people. The selfe same thing doth Augustine testifie in many places.

The custome of

any drop of pure-ties in the Church.

49 But why dispute I about a thing most knowne? Let all the Greekes and Latine writers beread ouer: such testimonies shall ech where offer themselves. Neither was this custome growen out of vse, while there remained one drop of puretise in the Church. Gregory, whom you may rightly say to haue beene the last Bishop of Rome, teacheth that it was kept in his time. What is the blood of the Lambe, ye haue now learned, not by hearing but by drinking. His blood is poured into the mouthes of the faithfull. Yea it yet endured foure hundred yeeres after his death, when all things were growen out of kinde. For neither was that taken onely for an vsage, but also for an inuolable law. For then was in force the reuerence of Gods institution, and they doubted not that it was sacfledge, to seuer those things which the Lord had conioyned. For thus saith Gelasius. We haue found, that some receiuing onely the portion of the holy body, doe abstaine from the cup. Let them without doubt, because they seeme to be bound with I wot not what superstition, either receiue the Sacraments whole, or be debarred from them whole. For the diuiding of this mysteric is not committed without great sacfledge. Those reasons of Cyprian were heard, which truly ought to mooue a Christian minde. How (saith he) doe we teach or prouoke them to shed their blood in the confessing of Christ, if we deny his blood to them that shall fight? Or how doe we make them fit for the cup of Martyrdome: if we doe not first in the Church by the right of communion admit them to drinke the cup of the Lord? Whereas the Canonites doe refraine that decree of Gelasius to the Priestes, that is so childish a cauill that it neede not to be confuted.

Three other reasons why the people should communicate in both kindeis.

50 Thirdly, why did he simply say of the bread, that they should eate: but of the cup, that they should all drinke? euen as if he had meant of set purpose to meeet with the craft of Satan. Fourthly, if (as they would haue it) the Lord vouchsafed to admit to his Supper onely sacrificiung Priestes, what man euer durst call to the partaking of it, strangers whom the Lord had excluded? yea and to be partaking of that gift, the power whereof was not in their hands, without any commandement of him which onely could giue it. Yea vpon confidence of what warrant doe they vse at this day to distribute to the common people the signe of the body of Christ, if they haue neither commandement nor example of the Lorde? Fifthly, did Paul lie, when hee said to the Corinthians, that he had receiued of the Lord that which he had deliuered to them? For afterward he declareth the thing that he deliuered, that all without difference should communicate of both the signes. If Paul receiued of the Lord, that all should be admitted without difference: let them looke of whom they haue receiued which doe drine away almost all the people of God: because they cannot now pretende God to be the Author of it, with whom there is not yea and nay. And yet full for cloking of such abominations they dare pretend the name of the Church, and with such pretence defend it. As though either these Antichristes were the Church, which so easily treade vnderfooote, scatter abroade, and destroy the doctrine and institution of Christ: or the Apostolike Church were not the Church, in which the whole force of religion flourisheth.

The xvij. Chapter.

Of the Popish Masse, by which sacriledge the Supper of Christ hath not only been prophaned, but also brought to nought.

With these and like inuentions Satan hath trauelled, as by ouerspreading of the sacrifice of the masse being held to be a sacrifice propitiatorie is nothing but a meane prophaning of the supper of the Lord.

darkenes to obscure and defile the holy supper of Christ, that at least the purenes of it should not be kept still in the Church. But the head of horrible abomination was when hee aduanced a signe, by which it might not onely be darkened and perverted, but being vtterly blotted and abolished should vanish and fall out of the remembrance of men: namely when he blinded almost the whole world with a most pestilent error that they should beleue that the Masse is a sacrifice and oblation to obtaine the forgiuenes of sins. How at the beginning the soulder sort of the schoole-men tooke this doctrine, I nothing regard: farewell they with their crabbed subtleties:
 which howsoeuer they may be defended with cauiling, yet are therefore to be refused of all good men, because they do nothing else but spread much darkenes ouer the brightnes of the supper. Therefore bidding them farewell, let the readers vnderstand that I here match in fight with that opinion, wherewith the Romish Antichrist and his prophets haue infected the whole world, namely that the Masse is a worke whereby the sacrificing priest which offereth vp Christ, and the other that do partake at the same oblation, do deserue the fauour of God: or that it is a cleansing sacrifice, whereby they reconcile God to themselues. Neither hath this beene receiued onely in common opinion of the people, but the verie doing it selfe is so framed, that it is a kind of pacifying wherewith satisfaction is made to God for the purging of the quicke and dead. The words also which they vse, do expresse the same: and no other thing may we gather of the daily vse of it. I know how deepe rootes this pestilence hath taken, vnder how great seeming of goodnes it lurketh, how it beareth in shew the name of Christ, how in the one name of Masse many beleue that they comprehend the whole summe of faith. But when it shall be by the word of God most cleerly proued, that this Masse, how much soeuer it be coloured and glorious, yet shamefully dishonoureth Christ, burneth & oppresseth his crosse, putteth his death in forgetfulness, taketh away the fruit that commeth therof vnto vs, doth weaken and destroy the sacrament wher-in was left the memorie of his death: shall there then be any so deepe rootes, which this most strong axe, I meane the word of God, shall not cut downe and ouerthrow?
 Is there any face so beautifull, that this light cannot bewray the euill which lurketh vnder it?

2 Let vs therefore shew that which hath beene set in the first place, that in it is intolerable blasphemie and dishonour done to Christ. For he was consecrate of his Father a Priest and bishop, not for a time as we read that they were ordained in the old testament, whose life being mortall their priesthood also could not be immortall:
 for which cause also there needed successors that should from time to time be put in the place of them that died. But in place of Christ, which is immortall, there needeth no vicar to be set after him. Therefore he was ordained of the father a priest for euer, according to the order of Melchisedech, that he should execute an euerslasting priesthood. This mystery had bin long before figured in Melchisedech, whom whē the scripture had once brought in for the priest of the liuing God, it neuer afterwarde made mention of him, as though he had had no end of his life. After this point of likeness, Christ was called a priest according to his order. Now they that do daily sacrifice, must needs appoint priestes to make the oblations whom they must appoint as it were successors and vicars in steede of Christ. By which putting in steede of him, they doe not onely spoile Christ of his honour, and plucke from him the prerogative of eternall priesthood, but also trauell to thrust him downe from the sight hand of his Father, on which he cannot sit immortall, but that he must therewithall remaine the eternal priest. Neither let them lay for themselues that their petie sacrificers are not put in place of Christ as if he were dead, but onely are helpers of his eternall priesthood, which ceaseth not therefore to continue. For they are more strongly holden fast with the words of the Apostle, than that they may so escape: namely, that there were many other priests made, because they were by death letted to continue. Therefore there is but one that is not letted by death, and he needeth no companions. Yet, such is their frowardnes, they arme themselves with the example of Melchisedech to defend their wickednesse. For, because it is said that he offered breade and wine, they gather that he was a foreshewing of their Masse: as though the likenesse betweene him and Christ were in the offering of bread and wine. Which is so emptie and trifling that it needeth no confutation. Melchisedech gaue bread and wine to Abraham and his companions, to refresh them being wearie after their journey and battle. What is this to a sacrifice? Moses praiseth the gentleness of the holy king: these fellows vnseasonably coyne a mysterie whereof no mention is made. Yet they deceitfully paint their error with another colour, because it followeth by & by after, And he was the priest of the highest God. I answere, that they wrongfully draw to the bread and wine that which the Apostle referreth to the blessing. Therefore when he was the priest of God he blessed Abraham. Whereupon the same Apostle (than whom we neede to seeke no better expositor) gathereth his excellencie, because the lesser is blessed of the greater. But if the oblation of Melchisedech were a figure of the sacrifice of the Masse, would the Apostle, I pray you, which searcheth out all euen the least things, haue forgotten so earnest and weightie a thing? Now (howsoeuer they wrisle) they shall in vaine goe about to ouerthrow the reason which the Apostle himselfe bringeth, that the right and honour of sacrificing priesthood ceaseth among mortall men, because Christ which is immortall, is the onely and perpetuall sacrificing priest.

The crosse of Christ therety bun. ed & oppressed.
Heb. 9. 12.

3 An other vertue of the Masse was, that it oppresseth and burieth the crosse and passion of Christ. This verily is most certaine, that the crosse of Christ is ouerthrowen so soone as the altar is set vp. For if he offered himselfe for a sacrifice vpon the crosse, that he might sanctifie vs for euer, and purchase to vs eternall redemption: vndoubtedly the force and effectualnes of that sacrifice continueth without any end. Otherwise we should thinke nothing more honorably of Christ, than of oxen & calues which were sacrificed vnder the law: the offerings whereof are proued vnfectuall and weak by this that they were oft renewed. Wherefore either we must confesse, that the sacrifice of Christ, which he fulfilled vpon the crosse, wanted the force of eternall cleansing, or that Christ hath made an ende of all with one sacrifice once for euer. This is it that the Apostle saith, that this chiefe bishop Christ once appeared by offering vp of himselfe before the ending of the world, to the dringing away of sinne. Againe, that we are sanctified by the will of God, by the offering of the body of Iesus Christ once. Againe, That Christ with one oblation for euer hath made perfect them that are sanctified: wherunto he adioyneth a notable sentence, that for quences of sinnes being once purchased, thereremaineth no more any oblation. This also Christ signified by his last saying and vtered among his last gaspings, when he saide, it is ended. Wee are wont to note the last sayings of men when they are dying, for oracles. Christ dying testifieth that by his own sacrifice is perfited and fulfilled whatsoever was for our saluation. Shall it be lawfull for vs daily to patch innumerable sacrifices to such a sacrifice, (the perfection whereof he hath so shiningly set forth) as though it were vnperfect? When the holy word of God not onely affirmeth, but also crieth out, and protesteth, that this sacrifice was once fully done that the force thereof remaineth euertlasting: who so require an other sacrifice, do they not accuse this of imperfection and weakenesse? But as for the Masse, which hath bene deliuered in uch sort that there may every day be made a hundred thousand sacrifices, to what end tendeth it, but that the passion of Christ whereby he offered him an onely sacrifice or oblation to the father, should lie buried and drowned? Who, vnlesse he be blind, cannot see that it was the boldnes of Satan, which wrastled against so open & cleare truth? Neither am I ignorant with what deceites that Father of lying vseth to colour this his fraude, saying that there are not sundrie nor diuers sacrifices, but that one selfe same sacrifice is repeated. But such smokes are easily blowen away. For in the whole discourse the Apostle trauelleth to prooue: not onely that there are no other sacrifices, but that that one sacrifice was once offered vp, and shal no more be repeated. The futeeller men do yet slippe out at a narrower hole, saying, that it is not a repeating but an applying. But this Sophisticall argument also is no lesse easily confuted. For neither did Christ once offer vp himselfe with this condition: that his sacrifice should be daily confirmed with new oblations: but that by the preaching of the Gospell, and ministring of the holy supper, the fruit thereof should be communicating vnto vs. So Paul saith that Christ our passeouer was offered vp, and biddeth vs to eate of him. This (I say) is the meane whereby the Sacrifice of the crosse is rightly applied to vs, when it is communicated to vs to take the vse of it, and we with true faith receiue it.

1. Cor. 5. 7.

4 But it is worth the labour to heare, with what other foundation beside these they vphold the sacrifice of the Masse. For they draw to this purpose the prophesie of Malachie, whereby the Lord promisseth that the time shall come when throughout the whole worlde there shall be offered to his name incense and a cleane sacrifice. As though it were a new or vnwonted thing among the prophets, when they speake of the calling of the Gentiles to expresse by the outward ceremonie of the lawe the spirituall worshipping of God, to which they exhort them, that they might the more familiarly declare to the men of their age, that the Gētiles should be called into the true fellowship of religion. Like as also they are wont altogether to describe by figures of their law, the truth that was deliuered by the Gospell. So they set for turning to the Lord, ascending into Ierusalem: for the worshipping of God, the offering of all kinds of gifts: for larger knowledge of him which was to be giuen to the faithfull in the kingdome of Christ, dreames and visions. That therefore which they alleage, is like vnto an other prophesie of Esay, where the prophet foretelleth of three altars to be set vp in Assyria, Egypt, and Iury. For first I aske, whether they do not grant that the fulfilling of this prophesie is in the kingdome of Christ. Secondly, where be these altars, or when they were euer set vp. Thirdly whether they think that to euery seuerall kingdome is appointed a seuerall Temple, such as was that at Ierusalem. These things if they weigh, I thinke they will confesse, that the prophet vnder figures agreeable with his time, prophesieth of the spirituall worship of God to be spread abroad into the whole world. Which we giue to them for a solution. But of this thing sith there doe euerie where examples commonly offer themselues, I will not busie my selfe in longer rehearsal of them. Howbeit herein also they are miserably decieued, that they acknowledge no sacrifice but of the Masse, whereas indeed the faithfull do now sacrifice to the Lord, and do offer a cleane offering, of which shall be spoken by and by.

Esay. 19. 21.

5 Now I come downe to the third office of the Masse, where I must declare how it blotteth out the true and onely death of Christ, and shaketh it out of the remembrance of men. For as among men the strength of a Testament hangeth vpon the death of the testator: so also our Lorde hath with his death confirmed the testament whereby he hath giuen vs forgiuennesse of sinnes and eternal righteousnesse. They that dare varie or make newe any thing in this testament, doe denie his death, and holde it as it were of no force. But what is the Masse, but a newe and altogether diuers testament? For why? Doeth not euerie seuerall Masse promise newe forgiuennesse of sinnes, newe purchasing of righteousness: so that now there bee so many testaments,

Cap. 18. Of the outward meanes

testamentes, as there be Masses? Let Christ therefore come againe, and with an other death confirme this testament, or rather with infinite deathes confirme innumerable testamentes of Masses. Haue I not therefore said true at the beginning, that the onely and true death of Christ is blotted out by Masses? Yea what shall we say of this that the Masse directly tendeth to this end, that if it be possible, Christ should be slaine againe? For where is a testament (saith the Apostle) there of necessitie must bee the death of the testator. The Masse sheweth it selfe to be a newe testament of Christ: therefore it requireth his death. Moreover the hoste which is offered, must necessarily be slaine and sacrificed. If Christ in euery seuerall Masse be sacrificed, then he must at euery moment be in a thousand places cruelly slaine. This is not mine but the apostles argument, If he had needed to offer himselfe oft, he must oft haue died since the beginning of the world. I know that they haue an answer in readines, whereby also they charge vs with slander. For they say that that is objected against the which they neuer thought, nor yet can. And we know, that the death and life of Christ is not in their hand. We looke not whether they go about to kill him: onely our purpose is to shewe, what manner of absurditie followeth of their vngodly and wicked doctrine. Which selfe thing I prooue by the Apostles owne mouth. Though they crie out to the contrary a hundred times, that this sacrifice is vnbloudie: I will denie that it hangeth vpon the will of men, that sacrifices should change their nature, for by this meane the holy and inuolable ordinance of God should faile. Whereupon followeth that this is a sure principle of the Apostle, that there is required shedding of blood, that washing may not be wanting.

Heb. 9. 16.

The death of Christ made vnfruitfull by the sacrifice of the Masse.

6 Now is the fourth office of the Masse to be entreated of, namely to take away from vs the fruite that came to vs of the death of Christ, while it maketh vs not to acknowledge it and thinke vpon it. For who can call to minde that he is redeemed by the death of Christ when he seeth a new redemption in the Masse? Who can trust that sinnes are forgien him, when he seeth a new forgiveness? Neither shall he escape that shall say, that we doe for no other cause obtaine forgiveness of sinnes in the Masse, but because it is already purchased by the death of Christ. For he bringeth nothing else than as if he should boast, that Christ hath redeemed vs with this condition that we should redeeme our selues. For such doctrine hath bene spread by the ministers of Satan, and such at this day they maintaine with cryings out with sworde and fire, that we when in the Masse we offer vp Christ to his Father, by this worke of offering do obtaine forgiveness of sinnes, and are made partakers of the passion of Christ. What now remaineth to the passion of Christ, but to be an example of redemption, whereby we may learne to be our owne redeemer? Christ himselfe, when in the Supper he sealeth the confidence of pardon, doth not bid his disciples to stick in that doing, but sendeth them away to the sacrifice of his death: signifying that the Supper is a monument or memoriall (as the common speech is) whereby they may learne that the satisfactorie cleansing sacrifice, by which the Father was to be appeased, must haue bene offered but once. For neither is it enough to know that Christ is the onely sacrifice, vnlesse the onely sacrificiing be ioyned with it, that our faith may be fastened to his crosse.

The Sacrament of that holy supper thereby defaced & destroyed.

7 Nowe I come to the conclusion, namely that the holy Supper, in which the Lord had left the remembrance of his passion grauen and expressed, is by the setting vp of the Masse, taken away, defaced, and destroyed. For the Supper it selfe is the gift of God, which was to be receiued with thanksgiuing. The sacrifice of the Masse is fained to pay a price to God, which he may receiue for satisfaction. How much difference there is betweene to giue and to receiue, so much doth the sacrifice differ from the Sacrament of the Supper. And this truly is the most wretched vnthankfulness of man, that where the largesse of Gods bountie ought to haue bene acknowledged, and thanks to be giuen therein he maketh God his dettor. The Sacrament promised, that that by the death of Christ we are not only once restored into life, but are continually quickened, because then all the parts of our saluation were fulfilled. The sacrifice of the Masse singeth a farre other song, that Christ must be daily sacrificed, that he may somewhat profite vs. The Supper should haue bene distributed in the common assemble of the Church, that it might informe vs of the communion whereby we all cleaue together in Christ Iesus. The sacrifice of the Masse dissolueth and plucketh in sunder this communie. For after that the errour grewe in force, that there must be sacrificers that should sacrifice for the peoples, the Supper of the Lorde as though it were posted ouer to them, ceased to be communicated to the congregation of the faithfull according to the commaundement of the Lord. An entrie was made open to priuate Masses, which might rather resemble a certaine excommunication, than that same communie ordained of the Lord, when that petie sacrificer willing feuerally by himselfe to deuoure his sacrifice, doth sever himselfe from the whole people of the faithfull. I call priuate Masse (least any man be deceiued) wherefoeuer there is no partaking of the Lordes Supper among the faithfull, although otherwise a great multitude of men be present.

8 And whence the very name of Masse first sprung, I could neuer certainly iudge: Priuate masses wicked abuses. sauing that it seemeth to me likely that it was taken of the offerings that were giuen. Whereupon the olde writers vse it commonly in the plurall number. But to leaue struing about the name, I say that priuate Masses are directly against the ordinance of Christ, and therefore they are a wicked prophaining of the holy Supper. For what hath the Lorde commaunded vs? not to take, and diuide it among vs? What manner of obseruing of the commaundement doth Paul teach? not the breaking of bread, which is the communion of the body and blood? Therefore when one taketh it without distributing, what likeness is there? But that same one man doth it in the name of the whole Church. By what commaundement? Is not this openly to mocke God, when one man priuately taketh to himselfe that which ought not to haue bene done but among many? But because the words of Christ and Paul are plaine enough, we may breffly conclude, that wherefoeuer is not breaking of bread to the communion of the faithfull, there is not the supper of the Lorde, but a false and wrongfull counterfeiting of the supper. But a false counterfeiting is a corrupting. Now the corrupting of so great a mysterie is not without wickednesse. Therefore in private Masses is a wicked abuse. And (as one fault in religion siom time to time breedeth another) after that that manner of offering without communion was once crept in, by litle and litle they began in euerie corner of churches to make innumerable Masses, and diuersly to drawe the people hither and thither, which should haue come together into one assemble, that they might reknowledge the mysterie of their owne vntie. Now let them go and denie it to be idolatry, that in their Masses they shew foorth bread to be worshipped in steede of Christ. For in vaine they boast of those promises of the presence of Christ, which howsoeuer they be vnderstood, verily were not giue to this purpose, that wicked and prophane men so oft as they will, and to whatsoeuer abuse they list, may make the body of Christ: but that the faithfull, when with religious obseruation they doe in celebrating of the Supper followe the commaundement of Christ, may enjoy the true partaking of him.

9 Beside that, this peruersnes was vnknownen to the purer church. For howsoeuer the more shamelesse sort among our aduersaries doe here goe about to disguise the matter with false colours, yet is it most sure that all antiquitie is against them, as we haue alioe prooued in other things, and it may more certainly be iudged by the continuall reading of olde writers. But ere I make an ende of speaking of it, I aske our Mailing doctors, sith they knowe that obedience is more esteemed of God than oblations, and that he more requireth that his voice be hearkened to, than that sacrifices be offered: how they beleue that this manner of sacrificing is acceptable to God, when of whereof they haue no certaine commandement, and which they see not to be allowed by any one syllable of the Scripture. Moreouer when they heare the Apostle say, that no man taketh to himselfe the name and honor of sacrificing priesthood, but he that is called as Aaron was: yea and that Christ himselfe did not thrust in himselfe, but obeyed the calling of his Father: either they must bring forth God the Author and orderer of their sacrificing priesthood, or they must confesse that the honor is not of God, into which they haue with wicked rashnes broken in vncalled. But they cannot shew one title of a letter that maintaineth their sacrificing priesthood. Why therefore shal not their sacrifices vanish away which cannot be offered without a priest?

Such sacrifice neuer allowed by old writers as the Church of Rome hath deuised in the Masse.

Gal. 3. 1.

10 If any man doe thrust in short sentences of the olde writers gathered here and there, and doe by their authoritie trauaile to prouee that the sacrifice which is done in the Supper is farre otherwise to be vnderstanded than we doe expound it: let him be brieflie answered thus: if the question be of allowing the forged deuise of sacrifice, such as the Papistes haue fained in the Masse, the olde writers doe neuer speake in defence of such sacrilege. They doe in deede vse the word Sacrifice: but therewithall they expound, that they meane nothing else but the remembrance of that true and onely sacrifice, which Christ our onely sacrificing Priest (as they eche where report of him) made on the Crosse. The Hebrues (saith Augustine) in the sacrifices of beastes which they offered to GOD, did celebrate a prophetic of the sacrifice to come, which Christ offered: the Christians doe with the holy oblation and partaking of the body of Christ celebrate a remembrance of the sacrifice already made. Heere verily he teacheth altogether the same thing, which is written in mo words in the booke of Faith to Peter the Deacon, whosoever be the author of it. The words be these, Beleeue most stedfastly and doubt not at all, that the onely begotten himselfe, being made flesh for vs, offered himselfe for vs a sacrifice and oblation to God into a fauour of sweetencesse: to whom with the Father and the Holy Ghost in the time of the old Testament beafts were sacrificed: and to whom now with the Father and the Holy Ghost (with whom he hath one Godhead) the holy Church throughout the whole world ceaseth not to offer the sacrifice of bread and wine. For in those fleshly sacrifices was a figuring of the flesh of Christ which he should offer for our sinnes, and of his blood which he should shed to the forgiuennesse of sinnes. But in this sacrifice is thanksgiving and rehearsal of the flesh of Christ which he offered for vs, and of his blood which the same he hath shed for vs. Whereupon Augustine himselfe in many places expoundeth it to be nothing else but a sacrifice of praise. Finally you shal commonly find in him, that the Supper of the Lord is for no other reason called a sacrifice, but because it is the remembrance, image, and witness of that singular, true, and onely sacrifice wherewith Christ hath cleansed vs. Also there is a notable place in his fourth booke of the Trinitie the xxij. Chapter, where after that he hath discoursed of the onely sacrifice he thus concludeth: because in a sacrifice fower things are considered, to whom it is offered, and of whom, what is offered, and for whom. The same he himselfe the one and true Mediator reconciling vs to God by the sacrifice of peace, remaineth one with him to whom he offered: maketh them one in him for whom he offered: is one himselfe which offered, and the thing which he offered. To the same effect also speaketh Chrysostome. But they so challenge the honor of sacrificing priesthood to Christ, that Augustine testifieth it to be the voice of Antichrist if any man make a Bishop intercessor betweene God and men.

11 Yet doe we not deny but that the offering vp of Christ is there so shewed in vs, that the spectacle of the Crosse is in a manner set before our eyes: as the Apostle saith that Christ was crucified in the eyes of the Galathians, when the preaching of the Crosse was set before them. But forasmuch as I see that those old Fathers also wrested this remembrance another way than was agreeable with the institution of the Lord (because their supper contained I wote not what repeated or at least renewed forme of sacrificing) sacrificing) the safest way for godly hearts shall be to rest in the pure and simple ordinance of God: whose also the supper is therefore called, because in it his authoritie alone ought to be in force. Truly sith I find that they haue kept a godly and true sense of this whole mysterie, and I do not perceiue that they meant to abate anything were it neuer so little from the onely sacrifice of the Lord, I cannot condemne them of vngodlinesse: yet I thinke that they cannot be excused, but that they haue offended somewhat in the manner of the celebration. For they counterfeited the Iewish manner of sacrificing more neerely than either Christ had ordeined, or the nature of the Gospel did beare. Therefore that same ouerthwart appliance to heauenly things is the onely thing wherein a man may worthily blame them, for that being not contented with the simple and naturall institution of Christ, they swarued to the shadowes of the law.

12 If a man do diligently wey, that this difference is put by the word of the Lord betweene the sacrifices of Moses, and our Thanksgiuing, that whereas those did represent to the Iewish people, the same effectualnesse of the death of Christ, which is at this day deliuered to vs in the supper, yet the maner of representing was diuers. For in those, the Leuiticall priests were commanded to figure that which Christ should performe it: there was brought a sacrifice which should be in the steed of Christ himselfe: there was an altar whereupon it should bee offered: Finally all things were so done, that there was set before their eyes an image of the sacrifice which was to be offered to God for a satisfactorie cleansing. But since the time that the sacrifice is ended the Lord hath appointed to vs another order: namely that it should conuey to the faithfull people the fruit of the sacrifice offered to him by the sonne. Therefore he hath giuen vs a table wherat we should eate, not an altar whereupon sacrifice should be offered: he hath not consecrated priests to sacrifice, but ministers to distribute the holy banker. How much more hie and holy the mysterie is, so much more religiously and with greater reuerence it is meete to be handled. Therefore there is no way safer, than putting away all boldnesse of mans vnderstanding, so sticke fast in that alone which the Scripture teacheth. And truly if we consider that it is the Supper of the Lord and not of men, there is no cause why we should suffer our selues to be remoued one haire breadth from it by any authoritie of men or prescription of yeeres. Therefore when the Apostle minded to cleanse it from all fautes which had already crept into the Church of the Corinthians, he vseth the readiest way thereunto, that is, he calleth it backe to the onely institution of it, from whence he sheweth that a perpetuall rule ought to be fetched.

The difference betweene the sacrifices of Moses and our thanksgiuing

1. Cor. 11. 26.

13 Now least any wrangler, should stirre vs vp strife by reason of the names of sacrifice and sacrificing priest, I will also declare, but yet breiefely what in the whole discourse I haue meant by a sacrifice, and what by a sacrificing priest. Who so stretch the word sacrifice to all holy Ceremonies and doings of religion, I see not by what reason they do it. We do know that by the continuall vse of the Scripture a sacrifice is called that which the Greekes call sometime Thusia, sometime Prophora, sometime Telete. Which being generally taken comprehendeth whatsoever is in any wise offered to God. Wherefore we must make distinction: but yet so that this distinction may haue a supernall appliance of similitude from the sacrifices of the lawe of Moses: vnder the shadowes whereof the Lord willed to represent to his people the whole truth of sacrifices. Of those although there were diuers formes, yet they may al be referred to two sortes. For either there was oblation made for sinne after a certaine maner of satisfaction, whereby guiltinesse was redeemed before God: or it was a signe of the worshipping of God, and a testifying of religion: sometime in steede of supplication, to craue the fauour of God: sometime in steede of thanksgiuing, to testifie thankfulness of minde for benefites receiued: sometime onely for an exercise of godlinesse, to renewe the stablishing of the couenant, to which latter sorte pertained.

The name of sacrifice, two kinds thereof in the law, in the Gospell, two other therewith ascribed.

Cap. 18. Of the outward meanes pertained burnt offerings, drinke offerings, oblations, first fruits, and peace offerings. Wherefore let vs also diuide ours into two kindes: and for teachings sake let vs call the one the sacrifice of worship and of godly deuotion, because it consisteth in the honouring and worshipping of God, which the faithfull both owe and yeelde vnto him: or, if you will, the sacrifice of Thankesgiuing: for as much as it is giuen to God of none but of them that being loden with immeasurable benefites, doe render to him themselues with all their doings. The other may be called propitiatory or of expiation. The sacrifice of expiation is that which tendeth to appease the wrath of God, to satisfie his iudgement, and so to wash and wipe away finnes: whereby the sinner cleansed from the filthie spots of them, and restored into puritie of righteousnes, may returne into fauour with God himselfe. So in the lawe those were called sacrifices that were offered for the purging of finnes: not for that they were sufficient to recover the fauor of God, or to put away iniquitie: but for that they shadowed out such a true sacrifice which at length was fully done by Christ alone: and by him alone, because it could be done by none other: and once, because the effectuallnesse and force of that one sacrifice which Christ hath fully don, is eternall, as he himself hath testified with his owne mouth, when he said that it was ended and fulfilled: that is to say, that whatsoeuer was necessarie to the reconciling of the fathers fauour, to the obtaining of the forgiuenesse of finnes, to righteousnesse and to saluation, all the same was performed and fulfilled with that his onely oblation, and there so nothing wanted thereof, that there was after ward no place left to any other sacrifice.

Iohn. 19. 30.

In the sacrifice of the masse Christe blasphemed and sold the sacrifice himselfe not as. shorished.

14 Wherefore I determine, that it is a most wicked reproch, and blasphemie not to be suffered, as well against Christ as against the sacrifice which he hath fully done by his death vpon the crosse for vs, if any man by renewing an oblation thinke to purchase the pardon of finnes, to appease God, and to obtaine righteousnesse. But what is else done by Massing, but that by deserring of new oblation we may be made partakers of the passion of Christ. And that there might be no measure of madding, they thought it but a small thing to say that there is made indifferently a common sacrifice for the whole Church, vnlesse they further saide that it is in their choise to apply it peculiarly to this man or that man to whom they would, or rather to euery one who soeuer he were that would buy for himselfe such ware with readie monie. Now because they could not reach to the price that Judas had, yet that they might in some marke resemble their author, they kept the likenesse of number. Judas solde him for thirtie siluer pence: these fellows sell him, after the French account, for thirtie brazen pence: but Judas solde him once, these fellows sell him as oft they can finde a buier. In this sense also we denie that they be sacrificing priestes, that is to say, they that with such an oblation are meanes to God for the people, they that appeasing God, may purchase the satisfactorie purging of finnes. For Christ is the onely bishop and sacrificing priest of the new Testament, into whome all Priesthoodes are remoued, and in whome they be shut vp and ended. And if the Scripture had made no mention of the eternall priesthoode of Christ: yet for as much as God, since that he hath taken away those olde priesthoodes, hath ordained none, the Apostles argument remaineth inuincible, that no man taketh honour to himselfe, but he that is called of God. By what affiance therefore dare these robbers of God, that boast themselues for the butchers of Christ, call themselues the sacrificing Priestes of the liuing God?

The common price of a masse in France is three karolus, which make twentie deniers, about the value of a sterling grote. Heb. 5. 4.

The very practise of the church of Rome in their masse and the grossest thereof condemned euer by Plato himselfe.

15 Plato hath an excellent place in his second booke of common weale. Where when he entreateth of the old manners of expiation, and laugheth to scorn the foolish confidence of cull men & wicked doers, which thought that their wicked doings were by these as by coverings hidden that the Gods could not see them, and did, as if they had gotten warrant of the Gods by covenant, more carelesly followe their owne lusts: he seemeth throughly to touch the manner of satisfactorie purging of the Masse,

Masse, such as is at this day in the world. To beguile and vndermine another man, all men know to be vnlawfull. To grieue widowes with wrongfull dealings, to rob the fatherlesse, to trouble the poore, by cuill craftie meanes to catch other mens goods to themselues, with foretwearings and deceits to enter forcibly into any mans possessions, to oppresse any man with violence and tyrannous feare, all men confesse to be wicked. How therefore dare so many commonly do all these things, as though they should freely be bolde to do them? Truly, if we rightly weigh it, no other cause doth so much encourage them, but because they haue confidence, that by the sacrifice of a Masse, as by payment of full price for recompence, they shall satisfie God, or at the least that this is an easie way to cōpound with him. Then Plato proceedeth further to scorn their grosse blockithnes, which think that by such satisfactorie cleantings those paines are redeemed that otherwise they should suffer in hell. And whereto serue at this day the ycerely obites, and the greater part of Masses, but that they which throughout all their life haue bene most cruell tyrants, or most rauenous robbers, or giuen tooth to all mischieuous doings, should as though they were redeemed by this price, escape the fire of purgatorie?

16 Vnder the other kind of sacrifice, which we haue called the sacrifice of thank-giuing, are contained all the dutifull workes of charitie, which when we extend to our brethren, we honour the Lord himselfe in his members: then, all our prayers, praings, giuing of thanks, and whatsoeuer we do to the worshipping of God. All which things finally do hang vpon the greater sacrifice, whereby we are in soule and body hallowed to be a holy temple to the Lord. For neither is it enough, if our outward doings be applied to the obeying of him: but first our selues, and then all that is ours ought to be consecrate and dedicate to him: that whatsoever is in vs, may serue his glorie, and may fauour of zelous endeuour to aduance it. This kind of sacrifice tendeth nothing at all to appease the wrath of God, nothing at all to obtaine forgiveness of sinnes, nothing at all to deserue righteousness: but is occupied onely in magnifying and extolling of God. For it cannot be pleasant and acceptable to God, but at their handes, whom by forgiveness of sinnes already receiued he hath by other meanes reconciled to himselfe, and therefore acquitted them from guiltines. But it is so necessarie for the Church, that it cannot be away from it. Therefore it shall be cuerlasting, so long as the people of God shall continue, as we haue before already shewed out of the Prophet: for in that meaning I will take this propheticke, For from the rising of the sunne to the going downe thereof, great is my name among the Gentiles, and in euerie place incense shall be offered to my name, and a cleane offering: because my name is terrible among the Gentiles, saith the Lord: so far is it off, that we would put it away. So Paul biddeth vs to offer our bodies a sacrifice liuing, holy, acceptable to God, a reasonable worship. Where he spake verie pithly, when he added that this is our reasonable worshipping: for he meant the spirituall manner of worshipping of God, which he did secretly set in comparison against the carnall sacrifices of the law of Moses. So liberall doing of good and communicating are called sacrifices by which God is pleased. So the liberalltie of the Philippians, whereby they had reliqued the poertie of Paul, is called a sacrifice of sweet smelling. So all the good workes of the faithfull are called spirituall sacrifices.

17 And why do I seeke out many examples? For commonly this manner of speaking is often found in the scriptures. Yea and while the people of God was yet holden vnder the outward booting of the law, yet the prophets did sufficiently expresse, that vnder those carnall sacrifices was the truth, which the Christian Church hath common with the nation of the Iewes. After which manner Dauid prayed, that his prayer might as incense ascend into the sight of God. And Osée called giuing of thanks, the caluice of lippes, which in another place Dauid calleth the sacrifices of praise. Whom the Apostle himselfe following, calleth them also the sacrifices of praise, and

This kind of sacrifice the Supper of the Lord cannot want: wherein when we declare his death and render thanksgiving, we do nothing but offer the sacrifice of praise. Of this office of sacrificing, all we Christians are called a kingly Priesthood: because by Christ we offer to God that sacrifice of praise of which the Apostle speaketh, the fruit of lips that confesse to his name. For neither do we with our gifts appeare in the sight of God without an intercessor. Christ is he, which being the Mediator comming betweene, we offer vs and ours to the Father. He is our Bishop, which being entred into the sanctuary of heauen, hath opened the entrie to vs. He is the altar, vpon which we lay our gifts, that in him we may be bold all that we are bold. It is he (I say) that hath made vs a kingdome and Priests to the Father.

18 What remaineth, but that the blinde may see, the deafe may heare, children themselves may vnderstand this abomination of the Masse: which being offered in a golden cup, hath made drunke the kings and peoples of the earth, from the hieft to the lowest, hath so striken them with drowinesse and giddinesse, that being become more senselesse than brute beastes, they haue set the whole ship of their safetie onely in this deadly deuouring gulfe. Truly Satan neuer did bend himselfe with a stronger engine than this to assaile and vanquish the kingdome of Christ. This is the Helene, for whom the enemies of the truth fight at this day with so great rage, so great furiousnesse, so great crueltie: and a Helene indeede, with whom they so desile themselves with spirituall whoredome, which is the most cursed of all. I doe not here so much as once touch with my little finger those grosse abuses wherewith they might colour the vnholly purenesse of their holy Masse: howe filthy marketings they vse, how vnholiest gaines they make with their massings, with how great raucing they fill their couetousnesse. Onely I doe point vnto, and that with fewe and plaine wordes, what maner of thing is euen the verie holiest holinesse of the Masse, for which it hath deserued in certaine ages past to be so honorable and to be had in so great reuerence. For, to haue these so great mysteries set out according to their worthinesse, requireth a greater worke: and I am vnwilling to mingle herewith those filthy vncleanesses that commonly shewe themselves before the eyes and faces of all men, that all men may vnderstand, that the Masse taken in her most piked purenesse, and wherewith it may be set out to the best shew, without her appendances, from the roote to the top is warmeth full of all kinde of wickednes, blasphemie, idolatrie, and sacriledge.

*No sacraments in the Church but onely Baptisme &
the Lordes Supper.*

19 The readers now haue in a manner almost all those things gathered into an abridgement, which we haue thought behoouefull to be knowen concerning these two sacramentes: the vse of which hath bene deliuered to the Christian Church from the beginning of the new testament, to continue to the verie end of the world: namely, that Baptisme should be as it were a certaine entrie into it, and an admission into faith: and the Supper should be as it were a continuall foode, wherewith Christ spirituallly feedeth the family of his faithfull. Wherefore as there is but one God, one faith, one Christ, one Church his bodie: so there is but one Baptisme, and is not oft ministred againe. But the supper is from time to time distributed, that they which haue bene once receiued into the Church, may vnderstand that they be continually fed with Christ. Beside these two as there is no other sacrament ordained of God, so neither ought the Church of the faithfull to acknowledge any other. For that, it is not a thing that lieth in the choise of man to raise and set vp new sacraments, he shall easily vnderstande that remembreth that which hath bene heere before plainly inough declared, that is, that sacraments are appointed of God to this end, that they should instruct vs of some promise of his, and testifie to vs his good will toward vs: and he also that calleth to minde, that none hath bene Gods counseller, that might promise vs any certaintie of his will, or assure vs, and bring vs out of care, what what affection he beareth toward vs, what he will giue, or what he will deny vs. For therewith is also determined, that no man can set foorth a signe to be a testimony of any will or promise of his: it is he himselve alone, that can by a signe giuen testifie to vs of himselve. I will speake it more briefly, and peradventure more grossly, but more plainly. A Sacrament can neuer be without promise of saluation. All men gathered on a heape together can of themselues promise nothing of our saluation. Therefore neither can they of themselues set foorth or set vp a Sacrament.

20 Therefore let the Christian Church be contented with these two, and let her not onely not admit or acknowledge any third for the present time, but also not desire or looke for any to the end of the world. For whereas certaine diuerse Sacramentes, beside those their ordinarie ones, were giuen to the Iewes according to the diuerse course of times, as Manna, Water springing out of the rocke, the brazen Serpent and such other: they were by this change put in minde that they should not stay vpon such figures whose state was not very stedfast: but that they should looke for some better thing from God, which should continue without any decaying, & without any end. But we are in a faire other case, to whom Christ is openly shewed: in whom all the treasures of knowledge and wisdome are hidden with so great abundance and plenty, that either to hope for or looke for any new encrease to these treasures, is verily to moue God to wrath, and to prouoke him against vs. We must hunger for, seeke, looke vpon, learne, and throughly learne Christ alone, vntill that great day shall appeare, wherein the Lord shall openly shew to the full the glory of his kingdom, and himselve such as he is, to be beholden of vs. And for this reason this our age is in the Scriptures signified by the last houre, the last daies, the last times, that no man should deceiue himselve with vaine looking for any new doctrine of reuelation. For many times and in many sorts he spake before of his Prophets, in these last daies the heauenly Father hath spoken in his beloved Sonne, which onely can manifestly shew the Father: and in deede he hath manifestly shewed him to the full, so much as behouereth vs, while we notwithstanding him by a glasse. As therefore this is now taken away from men, that they cannot make new Sacraments in the Church of God: so it were to be wished, that as little as were possible of mans inuention might be mingled with those Sacraments that are of God. For like as when water is powred in, the wine departeth and is delayed: and as with leauen scattered among it, the whole lump of dowe waxeth sower: so the purenesse of the mysteries of God is nothing else but defiled when man addeth any thing of his owne. And yet we see how farre the Sacraments are swarued out of kinde from their naturall purenesse, as they be handled at this day. There is echwhere too much of pompes, ceremonies, and gesturings: but of the word of God in the meane time there is neither any consideration or mention, without which euen the Sacraments themselues are not Sacraments. Yea and the very ceremonies that are ordeined of God, in so great a rout cannot once lift vp their head, but lie as it were oppressed. How little is that scene in Baptisme, which only ought there to haue shined and bene looked vpon, as we haue in an other place rightfully complained, euen Baptisme it selfe? As for the Supper, it is viterly buried, since that it hath bene turned into the Masse, suing that it is scene once euery yeere but in a mangled and halfe torne fashion.

any further, nor should without the word of God embrace any other Sacramentes beside those two which they knew to be ordained of the Lord. But forasmuch as that opinion of the seauen Sacraments, being commonly vsed in all mens talke, hauing wandred through all schooles and preachings, hath by very ancientie gathered rootes, and is yet still settled in the mindes of men: I thought that I should doe a thing worth the traucell, if I should seuerally and more neerely search those other siue that are commonly adnumbred among the true and naturall Sacramentes of the Lord, and wiping away all deceptifull colour, should set them forth to be seene of the simple such as they be, and how falsely they haue beene hitherto taken for Sacraments. First, I here protest to all the godly, that I doe not take in hand this contention about the name for any desiring of stuning, but that I am by weightie causes led to fight against the abuse of it. I am not ignorant that Christians are Lordes, as of wordes, so of all things also, and therefore may at their will apply words to things, so that a godly sense be kept, although there be some vnproperitie in the speaking. All this I graunt: although it were better that the words should be made subiect to things, than things to the words. But in the name of Sacrament there is another consideration. For they which make seuen Sacraments, doe therewithall giue to them all this definition, that they be visible formes of invisible grace: they make them altogether vessels of the holy Ghost: instruments of giuing of righteousnesse, causes of the obtaining of grace. Yea and the master of the sentences himselfe denieth that the Sacraments of the law of Moses are properly called by this name, because they did not deliuer in deede the thing that they figured. Is it, I beseech you, to be suffered, that those signes which the Lord hath hallowed with his owne mouth, which he hath garnished with excellent promises, should not be accounted for Sacraments: and in the meane time this honour should be conueyed away to those vsages which men either haue deuised of themselves, or at least doe obserue without expresse commandement of God? Therefore either let them change the definition, or let them abstaine from the wrongfull vsing of this word, which doth afterward engender false opinions and full of absurdity. Extreme anointing (say they) is a figure and cause of invisible grace, because it is a Sacrament: If we ought in no wise to grant that which they gather vpon it, then truly we must resist them in the name it selfe, least thereby we admit that it may giue occasion to such an error. Againe when they would prouoe it to be a Sacrament, they adde this cause, for that it consisteth of the outward signe and the word. If we finde neither commandement nor promise of it, what can we doe else but cry out against them?

craments,*

*Efai. 40. 13.
Rom. 11. 34.*

2 Now appeareth that we brawle not about the word, but doe mooue a controuersie not superfluous concerning the thing it selfe. Therefore this we must strongly holde fast, which we haue with inuincible reason before confirmed, that the power to institute a Sacrament is in the hand of none but of God onely. For a Sacrament ought with a certaine promise to raise vp and comfort the consciences of the faithfull: which could neuer receiue this certaintie from man. A Sacrament ought to be to vs a witnessing of the good will of God toward vs, whereof none of all men or Angels can be witness, forasmuch as none hath beene of Gods counsell. Therefore it is he alone which doth with right authoritie testifie of himselfe to vs by his word. A Sacrament is a seale, wherwith the testament or promise of God is sealed. But it could not be sealed with bodily things & elements of this world, vnles they be by the power of God framed and appointed therunto. Therefore man cannot ordaine a Sacrament, because this is not in the power of man, to make that so great mysteries of God should be hidden vnder so base things. The word of God must goe before, which may make a Sacrament to be a Sacrament, as Augustine very well teacheth. Moreover it is probable that there be kept some difference betweene the Sacraments and other ceremonies, vnlesse we will fall into many absurdities. The Apostles prayed kneeling:

Huin. Ioan. 60.

kneeling : therefore men shall not kneele without a sacrament. It is said that the disciples praied toward the East : therefore the looking into the East shal be a sacrament. Paul willeth men in every place to lift vp pure hands, & it is rehearsed that holy men oftentimes praied with their hands lifted vp; then let the lifting vp of handes also bee made a Sacrament. Finally let all the gestures of the holy ones turne into Sacraments. Howbeit I would not also much passe vpon these things, if so that they were not ioynd with those other greater discommodities.

3 If they will presse vs with the authoritie of the olde Church, I say that they pretende a false colour. For this number of seuen is no where found among the Ecclesiasticall writers: neither is it certaine at what time it first crept in. I graunt indeede that sometime they be very free in vsing the name of a sacrament: but what meane they thereby? euen all ceremonies and ourward rites, and all exercises of godlinesse. But when they speake of those signes that ought to bee witnesses of the grace of God toward vs, they are contented with these two, Baptisme, and the Supper. Least any man should thinke that I falsely boast of this, I will heere rehearse a few testimonies of Augustine. To Ianuarius he saith. First I would haue thee to holde fast that which is the chiefe point of this disputation, that our Lord Christ (as he himselfe saith in the Gospell) hath made vs subiect to a light yoke and a light burden. Wherefore he hath bound together the fellowship of the newe people with Sacraments very fewe in number, verie easie in obseruing, very excellent in signification. As are Baptisme hallowed in the name of the Trinitie, and the Communicating of the body and blood of the Lorde, and whatsoeuer else is set forth in the Canonical Scriptures. Again, in his booke of Christian doctrine. Since the Lords resurrection, the Lord himselfe and the doctrine of the Apostles hath deliuered certaine few signes in steede of many, and those most easie to be done, most reuerend in vnderstanding, most pure in obseruing: as is Baptisme and the celebrating of the body and blood of the Lord. Why doth he here make no mention of the holy number, that is, of the number of seuen? It is likely that hee would haue passed it ouer, if it had been at that time ordained in the Church, specially sith he is otherwise in obseruing of numbers more curious than neede were? Yea, when he nameth Baptisme and the Supper, and speaketh nothing of the rest: doth he not sufficiently signifie, that these two mysteries do excel in singular dignitie, and that the other ceremonies do rest beneath in a lower degree? Wherefore I say that these Sacramentarie Doctors are destitute not onely of the word of the Lord, but also of the consent of the olde Church, how much soeuer they glorie of this pretence. But now let vs come downe to the the speciall things themselves.

Of Confirmation.

4 This was the manner in olde time, that the children of Christians, when they were growen to age of discretion should be brought before the Bishop: that they should fulfil that ductie which was required of those that being growen in yeeres did offer themselves to Baptisme. For these fate among those that were to be catechised, till being fully instructed in the mysteries of the faith, they could make a confession of their faith before the bishop and the people. Therefore they that were baptised being infantes, because they had not then made confession of their faith before the church, were about the end of their childhoode or in the beginning of their yeeres of discretion presented againe by their parents, and were examined of the Bishoppe according to the forme of the Catechisme, which they had then certaine and common. And that this doing, which otherwise ought worthily to bee graue and holy, might haue the more reuerence and dignitie, there was added also the Ceremonie of laying on of hands. So that same childe, his faith being allowed, was let goe with solempne blessing. The old writers doe oft make mention of this manner. Leo the Pope writeth: If any returne from Heretikes, let him not bee baptised againe (but which he wanted among the Heretikes) let the vertue of the spirite be giuen him by the Bishops laying on of his hands. Heere our aduersaries will crie out, that it is rightfully called a Sacrament, in which the holy Ghost is giuen, but Leo himselfe doth in an other place declare what he meaneth by those wordes: Who so (saith he) is baptised among heretikes, let him not be rebaptised, but with calling vpon the holy Ghost, let him be confirmed with laying on of hands: because he receiued onely the forme of baptism: without sanctifying. Hierome also maketh mention of it, writing against the Luciferians. But although I do not denie that Hierome somewhat erreth therein, for for that he saith that it is an obseruation of the Apostles: yet hee is most farre from these mens follies, and the very same also he qualifieth, when he addeth, that this blessing is giuen to the Bishops onely, rather in honour of their priesthood than by the necessitie of law. Therefore such laying on of hands, which is done simple in steed of blessing, I praise and woulde that it were at this day restored to the pure vse thereof.

For confirmation as at this day they vse it in the Church of Rome there is in the word of God no warrant.

5 But the later age hauing in a manner blotted out the thing it selfe, hath set I wot not what fained confirmation for a Sacrament of God. They haue fained that the vertue of confirmation is, to giue the holy Ghost to the encrease of Grace, which in baptism was giuen to innocencie: to strengthen them to battaile, which in baptism were newe begotten to life. This Confirmation is celebrate with annoynting, and with this forme of words, I signe thee with the signe of the holy crosse, & confirm thee with the chresme of saluation, in the name of the father, and of the sonne, and of the holy Ghost. All this is gaily and trimly done. But where is the worde of God, that may promise heere the presence of the holy Ghost? They cannot bring forth one title. Whereby then will they certifie vs, that their chresme is the vessel of the holy Ghost? We see oyle, that it is a thicke and fat liqnor and nothing else. Let the worde (saith Augustine) be added to the element, and there shall be made a sacrament. Let them (I say) bring forth this worde, if they will haue vs in the oyle to looke vpon any thing but the oyle. If they did acknowledge themselves ministers of the Sacraments, as they ought, we neede to strue no longer. This is the first lawe of a minister, that he do nothing without commandement. Go to, let them bring forth any commandement of this point of ministry, and I will not speake one word more. If they haue no commandement, they cannot excuse their boldnes full of sacriledge. After this manner the Lorde asked the Pharisees, whether the baptism of Iohn were from heauen or from men: if they had answered, from men, then he had made them confesse that it was trifling and vaine: if from heauen then were they compelled to acknowledge the doctrine of Iohn. Therefore least they should too much slander Iohn, they durst not confesse that it was from men. If therefore Confirmation be from men, it is prouoed to bee vaine and trifling: if they will periwade vs that it is from heauen, let them prouoe it.

Mat. 12. 15.

Proposition of hands used by the apostles, as president for public confirmation. Act. 8. 17.

6 They do indeed defend themselves with the example of the Apostles, whom they thinke to haue done nothing rashly. This is well in deed: neither woulde we blame them, if they shewed themselves followers of the Apostles. But what did the Apostles? Luke reporteth in the Acts, that the apostles which were at Hierusalem, when they heard that Samarita had receiued the word of god, sent thither Peter & Iohn: they prayed for the Samaritans, that they might receiue the holy Ghost, which was not yet come into any of them, but they were baptised onely in the name of Iesus: when they had prayed, they laide their hands vpon them: by which laying on, the Samaritans receiued the holy Ghost. And of this laying on of hands he diuers times maketh mention. I heare what the Apostles did: that is, they faithfully executed their ministerie. The Lorde willed that those visible and wonderfull graces of the holy Ghost, which he then poured out vpon his people, should be ministered and distributed of his Apostles by the laying on of hands. But vnder this laying on

of.

of hands: I thinke there was not contained any higher mysterie: but I expound it, that they adioyned such a ceremony, that by the very outward dooing they might signifie, that they commended and as it were offered to God him vpon whom they laid their hands. If this ministerie which the Apostles then executed, were yet still remainyng in the Church, the laying on of handes also ought to be kept. But since that same grace hath ceased to be giuen, whereto serueth the laying on of hands? Truly the holy Ghost is yet present with the people of God, without whom being guider and director, the Church of God cannot stand. For we haue the eternall promise and which shall euer stand in force, by which Christ calleth to himselfe them that thirst, that they may drinke liuing waters. But those miracles of powers, and manifest workings, which were distributed by the laying on of hands, haue ceased, neither behooued it that they should be but for a time. For it behooued that the preaching of the Gospell while it was new, should be gloriously set forth and magnified, with vnheard of and vnwonted miracles. From which when the Lord ceased, he did not by and by forsake his Church, but taught that the royaltie of his kingdome and the dignitie of his word was excellently enough disclosed. In what point therfore will these stageplayers say that they follow the Apostles? They should haue done it with laying on of hands, that the euident power of the holy Ghost might by and by shew forth it selfe. Thus they bring not to passe: why therefore doe they boast that the laying on of hands maketh for them, which we read in deede that the Apostles vsed, but altogether to an other ende?

7 This hath like reason as if a man should teach that the breathing wherewith the Lord breathed vpon his Disciples, is a Sacrament whereby the holy Ghost is giuen. But whereas the Lord did this once, he did not also will that we should doe the same. After the same manner also the Apostles laide on their hands, during the time that it pleased the Lord that the visible graces of the holy Ghost should be distributed at their prayers: not that they which come after, should onely playlike and without the thing in deede counterfite an emptie and cold signe, as these Apes doe. But if they prouue that in laying on of hands they follow the Apostles, (wherein they haue no like thing with the Apostles, sauing I wote not what overthwait wrongfull counterfiting) yet whence cometh their oyle which they call the oyle of saluation? Who taught them to seeke saluation in oyle? Who taught them to giue to it the power of strengthening? Did Paul, which draweth vs farre away from elements of the world, which condemneth nothing more than the sticking to such peety obseruations? But thus I boldly pronounce not of my selfe, but from the Lord. Who so call oyle the oyle of saluation, they forswear the saluation which is in Christ, they deny Christ, they haue no part in the kingdome of God. For oyle is for the belly, and the belly for oyle, the Lord shall destroy both. For all these weake elements, which decay with very vse, belong nothing to the kingdome of God, which is spirituall and shall neuer decay. What then? will some men say: doe you measure with the same measure, the water wherewith we be baptised, and the bread and wine vnder which the Supper of the Lord is giuen? I answere that in Sacraments giuen of God, two things are to be looked vnto: the substance of the bodily thing which is set before vs, and the forme that is by the word of God printed in it, wherein lieth the whole strength. In respect therefore that the bread, wine, and water that are in the Sacraments offered to our sight, doe keepe their owne substance, this saying of Paul alway hath place, Meate for the belly, and the belly for meates: God shall destroy them both. For they passe and vanish away with the fashion of this world. But in respect that they be sanctified by the word of God, that they may be Sacraments, they doe not hold vs in the flesh, but doe truly and spirituallly teach vs.

8 But let vs yet more neerly looke into it, how many monsters this fat liquor fostereth and feedeth. These annointers say, that the holy Ghost is giuen in baptisme, to innocencie : in confirmation, to encrease of grace : that in Baptisme, we are newe begotten into life : in confirmation, we are prepared to battle. And they are so past shame, that they deny that Baptisme can well be done without confirmation. O wickednesse ! Are we not therefore in Baptisme buried together with Christ, being made partakers of his death, that we may be also partners of his resurrection? But this fellowthip with the death and life of Christ Paul expoundeth to bee the mortifying of our flesh, and quickning of our Spirit: for that our olde man is crucified, that we may walke in newnes of life. What is to be armed to battell if this be not? If they counted it a matter of nothing, to tread vnder feete the word of God : why did they not yet at least reuerence the Chnrch, to whom they will in euery point seeme so obedient? But what can be brought foorth more strong against their doctrine, than that decree of the Mileuitane councill? Who so saith that Baptisme is giuen only for forgiveness of sinnes, and not for a helpe of grace to come, accursed be he. But whereas Luke, in the place which we haue alleaged, saith that they were baptised in the name of Iesus Christ, which had not receiued the holy Ghost : he doth not simply deny that they were endued with any gift of the holy Ghost, which beleued in Christ with hart, and confessed him with mouth : but meaneth of that receiuing of the holie Ghost, whereby the open powers and visible graces were receiued. So is it said that the Apostles receiued the Spirit on the day of Pentecost, whereas it had beene long before said vnto them of Christ, it is not you that speake, but the Spuited of my Father which speaketh in you. Behold all ye that are of God, the malicious and poysonous deceite of Sathan. That thing which was truly giuen in baptisme, he lyingly saith to be giuen in his confirmation, that he may by stealth leade you vnware from baptisme. Who now can doubt that this is the doctrine of Satan, which cutting away from baptisme the promises properly belonging to baptisme, doth conuey away and remooue them, to an other thing? It is found (I say) vpon what manner of foundation this godly anointing standeth. The word of God is, that all they which are baptised in Christ, haue put on Christ with his giftes. The word of the annointers is, that they receiued in baptisme no promise, by which they may be armed in battails. That is the voice of truth, therefore this must be the voice of lying. Therefore I can more truly define this confirmation than they haue hitherto defined it : namely, that it is a notable slander of baptisme, which darkeneth, yea abolisheth the vse thereof : that it is a false promise of the Deuill, which draweth vs away from the word of God. Or if you will, it is oyle defiled with the lying of the Deuill, which as it were by ouerspreading of darkenes deceiueth the eyes of the simple.

9 They adde furthermore, that all the faithfull ought after baptisme to receiue the holy Ghost by laying on of hands, that they may be found full Christians : because he shall neuer be a Christian, that is not chrestned with the Bishops Confirmation. These be their owne sayings word for word. But I had thought that whatsoeuer things pertained to Christianitie, were all set foorth in writing and comprehended in Scriptures. Now, as I perceiue, the true forme of religion is to be sought and learned from else where than out of the Scriptures. Therefore the whole wisedome of God, the heavenly truth, the whole doctrine of Christ, doth but beginne Christians, and oyle maketh them perfect. By this sentence are damned all the Apostles, and so many Martyrs, whom it is most certaine to haue neuer bene chrestned : forasmuch as the oyle was not yet made, which being poured vpon them, they might fulfill all the parts of Christianitie, or rather might be made Christians which yet were none. But, though I hold my peace, they doe largely confute themselves. For how many of the number of their owne people doe they anoint after baptisme? why therefore doe they suffer such haile Christians in their flocke, whose imperfection, might easily be holpen? Why doe they with so carelesse negligencie suffer them to omit that which was not lawfull to be omitted without greuous offence? Why doe they no more seuerely call vpon the keeping of a thing so necessarie, and without which saluation cannot be obtained, vnlesse peraduenture some be preuented by death? Verily when they so freely suffer to be despised, they secretly confesse that it is not of so great value as they boast it.

10 Last of all they determine that this holy anointing is to be had in greater reuerence than baptisme: because this anointing is peculiarly ministred by the hands of the chiefe Bishops, but baptisme is commonly distributed by euery priest. What may a man here say, but that they are vterly mad, which so flatter their owne inuentiones, that in comparison of them they carelessly despise the holy ordinances of God? O mouth that robbest God, darest thou set a fatte liquor only defiled with the stinke of thine owne breath, and enchanted with murmuring sound of wordes, against the Sacrament of Christ, and to compare it with water hallowed with the word of God? But thy wickednes accounted this but a small matter, vnlesse thou didst also prefer it about the same. These be the answers of the holy sea, these be the Oracles of the Apostolike trestle. But some of them, euen in their owne opinion, begunne somewhat to qualifie this vnbridled madnesse. It is (say they) to be worshipped with greater reuerence: peraduenture not for the greater vertue and profit that it giueth: but because it is giuen of the worthier men, and is made in the worthier part of the body, that is, in the forehead: or because it bringeth a greater encrease of vertues, although baptisme auails more to forgiuenesse. But in the first reason do they not bewray themselves to be Donatists, which measure the force of the Sacrament by the worthines of the minister. But I will admit, that Confirmation bee called the worthier by reason of the worthines of the Bishops hand. But if a man aske of them, from whence so great prerogatiue hath bene giuen to bishops, what reason will they bring beside their owne lust? The Apostles alone vsed that power, which alone distributed the holy ghost. Are the bishops alone apostles? Yea are they apostles at all? But let vs also grant them that: why do they not by the same argument affirme, that bishops alone ought to touch the Sacrament of the blood in the Supper of the Lord: which they therefore denie to lay men, because the Lord gaue to the Apostles alone? If to the Apostles alone, why do they not conclude: therefore to the bishops alone? But in that place they make the apottles, simple priests: but now the giddines of their head carrieth them another way, suddenly to create them bishops. Finally Ananias was no Apostle, to whom yet Paul was sent that he should receiue his sight, be baptised, and be filled with the holy ghost. I will adde this also to the heape. If by the law of God this was the proper office of bishops, why haue they been so bold to giue it away to common priests? as we read in a certaine epistle of Gregorie.

Confirmation the worthier because in it the former, is baptisme the hinder part of the head anointed.

11 As for their other reason, how trifling, fond, and foolish is it, to call their confirmation woorthier than the baptisme of God, because in it the forehead is annointed with oyle, and in baptisme the hinder part of the head, as though baptisme were done with the oyle and not with the water? I call all the godly to witnesse, whether those losels do not endeavour themselves to this onely ende, to corrupt the purenesse of the sacraments, with their leauen. I haue already spoken: this in another place, that in the Sacraments, that which is of God, scarcely glimmereth through at holes, among the route of the inuentiones of men, If any man did not belecue me therein, let him now at least belecue his owne maisters. Loe passing ouer the water, and making no accompt of it, they highly esteeme the onely oyle in baptisme. Wee therefore on the contrarie side do say, that in baptisme the forehead also is dipped in water. In comparison of this, we esteeme not your oyle woorth one peece of dung, whether it be in baptisme or in confirmation. If any alleage that it is sold for more: by this adding of price, the goodnes (if any were in it) is corrupted: so much lesse may they commend a most filthie deceite by this. In the third reason they bewray their owne vngodlinesse, while they prate that in confirmation is giuen a greater increase of vertues than in baptisme. By the laying on of hands the Apostles distributed the visible graces of the spirit. In what thing do these mens sin? Liquor shew it selfe fruitfull? But away with these qualifiers, that couer one sacriledge with many sacriledges. It is like the Gordian: which it is better to breake in sunder, than to labour so much in vndoing it.

*Confirmation not establisht by consent of antiquitie and if it were yet not prooued thereby
a sacrament.*

12 But now when they see themselues destitute of the word of God and probable reason, they pretende as they are wont, that it is a most auncient obseruation and established by consent of many ages. Although that were true, yet they winne nothing thereby. A Sacrament is not from the earth, but from heauen: not from men, but from God alone. They must prooue God to be the author of their confirmation if they will haue it taken for a sacrament. But why do they obiect antiquitie, whereas the old writers, when they mind to speake properly, do not where reckon more sacraments than two? If a fortress of our faith were to be sought from men, we haue an inuincible tower, that the old fathers neuer acknowledged those for sacraments which these men do lyingly saie to the sacraments. The old writers speake of the laying on of hands: but do they call it a sacrament? Augustine plainly affirmeth that it is no other thing than prayer. Neither let them here bark against me with their stinking distinctions, that Augustine meant that not of the laying on of hands vsed to confirmation, but which was vsed to healing or reconciliation. The booke remaineth and is abroad in the hands of men. If I wrot it to any other sense than Augustine himselfe wrot it, I giue them leaue after their ordinarie maner to oppresse me not onely with railing but also with spitting at me. For he speaketh of them that returned from schisme to the vnitie of the church. He denieth that they needed to be newly baptised: for he saith, that the laying on of hands sufficeth, that by the bonde of peace the Lord may giue them the holy Ghost. But for as much as it might seeme an absurditie, that the laying on of hands should be done of new rather than baptisme: he sheweth a difference. For (saith he) what other thing is the laying on of hands, than prayer vpon a man? And that this is his meaning appeareth by another place, where he saith: Hande is laide vpon Heretikes amended, for the coupling of Charitie, which is the greatest gifte of the holy Ghost, without which whatsoever holy things are in man they auail not to salvation.

right, and profitable vse of true
confirmations.*

13 But I would to God we did keepe still the manner which I haue saide to haue bene in the old time, before that this vntimely deliuered image of a sacrament was borne: not that it should be such a confirmation as they saie, which cannot once be named without injury to baptisme: but a catechising, whereby children or they that were neere to the age of discretion did declare an accompt of their faith before the Church. But it should be the best manner of Catechising, if a forme were written to that vse, containing and familiarly setting out a summe in a maner of all the articles of our religion, in which the whole Church of the faithfull ought without controuersie to agree: that a child being ten yeres old should offer himselfe to the Church to declare a confession of his faith, should be examined of euery article, and answer to euery one: if he were ignorant of any thing, or did not vnderstand it, he might be taught. So should he, before the Church witnessing and beholding it, profess the onely, true, and pure faith, wherewith the people of the faithfull doth with one minde worship the one God. If this discipline were at this day in force, truly the slothfulness of some parents would be whetted, who do carelesly neglect the instruction of their children as a thing nothing belonging to them, which then without open shame they could not omit: there should be among Christian people a greater consent of faith, and not so great ignorance and rudenes of many: some should not be so rashly carried away with new and strange doctrines: finally all should haue as it were a certaine orderly instruction of Christian learning.

Of Penance.

14 In the next place they set Penance, of which they intreate so confusedly and disorderedly, that consciences can beare away no sure or sounde thing of their doctrine. We haue alreadie in another place declared at large what we haue learned out of the Scriptures concerning repentance, and then what they also teach of it. Nowe we haue this onely to touch, what reason they had that raised vp the opinion, which hath heere tofore raigned in Churches and schooles, that it is a Sacrament. But first I wil briefly say somewhat of the vsage of the old church, the pretence whereof they haue abused to establish their fained inuention. This order they kept in publike penance, that they which had fully done the satisfactions enioined them, were reconciled with solemn laying on of hands. That was the signe of absolution, whereby both the sinner himselfe was raised vp before God with trust of pardon, & the church was admonished gently to receiue him into fauour, putting away the remembrance of his offence. This Cyprian oftentimes calleth, to giue peace. That this doing might be of great dignitie, and haue more commendation among the people, it was ordeined that the bishops authoritie should alway be vsed for the meane herein. From hence came that decree of the second councell at Carthage: Be it not lawfull to a priest at the Masse publike to reconcile a penitent. And another decree of the councell at Arausum, let those which in time of their penance depart out of this life, be admitted to the Communion without the laying on of hands vsed in the reconciling: if they recover of their sicknes let them stand in the degree of penitents, & when the time is fully expired, let them receiue of the bishop the laying on of hands vsed in reconciling. Againe the decree of the third councell at Carthage: Let not the priest without the authoritie of the bishop, reconcile a penitent. All these tended to this end, that the severitie which they would haue to be vsed in that behalfe, should not with too much lenitie grow to decay. Therefore they willed the bishop to be iudge of it, which was likely that he would be more circumspect in the examination thereof. Howbeit Cyprian in a certaine place sheweth, that not onely the bishop, but also the whole clergie laid their hands on him. For thus he saith. At the full time they do penance, then they come to the Communion, & by the laying on of hands of the bishop and the clergie they receiue power to partake of the Communion. Afterward by processe of time it came to this point, that beside publike penance they vsed this ceremonie also in priuate absolutions. Heereupon came that distinction in Gratian betweene publike and priuate reconciliation. I iudge that same old vsage of which Cyprian maketh mention, to haue bin holy and healthfull for the church, and I would that it were at this day restored. As for this latter, although I dare not disallow it, or speake more sharply against it, yet I thinke it to be lesse necessarie. Howsoever it be, yet wee see that the laying on of hands in penance is a ceremonie ordeined of men, not of God, which is to be set among meane things & outward exercises: and those verily which are not to be despised, but which ought to be in a lower degree than those that are commended vnto vs by the word of the Lord.

15 But the Romanistes and schoolemen, (which haue an ordinarie custome to corrupt all things with wrong expounding them) do heere very carefully trauell in finding out a Sacrament. Neither ought it to seeme any maruell, for they seeke a knot in a rush. But where they haue it best, they leaue a thing entangled in suspence, vncertaine, and confounded and troubled with diuersitie of opinions. They saie therefore that the outward penance is a Sacrament, and if it be so, that it ought to be taken for a signe of the inward penance, that is, of the contrition of hart, which shall be the thing of the Sacrament: or that they both together are a Sacrament, not two Sacraments, but one full one. But, that the outward penance is onely the sacrament: the inward is both the thing and the sacrament: and that the forgiveness of sins is the thing and not the Sacrament. Let them which keepe in remembrance the definition of a Sacrament which we haue aboue set, examine therby that which these men call a sacrament, and they shall finde that it is not an outward ceremonie ordained of the Lord for the confirming of our faith. If they caull that my definition is not a law which they need to obey: let them heare Augustine, whom they faine that they esteeme as most holy. Visible Sacraments (saith he) were ordained for carnall mens sake, that by degrees of Sacraments they may be conueyed from those thinges that are seene with eies to those thinges that are vnderstanded. What like thing do either they themselues see, or can they shew to other in that which they call the sacrament of Penance? The same Augustine saith in another place: It is therefore called a Sacrament, because in it one thing is seene, and an other thing is vnderstanded. That which is seene hath a bodily forme, that which is vnderstanded, hath a spirituall fruite. Neither doe these things in any wise agree with the Sacrament of penance such as they faine it, where there is no bodily forme that may represent a spirituall fruite.

16 And, to kill these beastes vpon their owne fighting place, if there be any sacrament here to be fought, may it not be much more colourably said that the absolution of the priest is a sacrament, than penance either inward or outward? for it might readily be said, that it is a ceremonie to assure our faith of the forgiuenes of sins, and hath a promise of the keyes as they call it, Whatsoeuer yee shall binde or loose vpon earth, shall be bound or loosed in heauen. But some man would haue obiected, that the most part of them that are absolved of the Priests obtaine no such thing by such absolution, whereas by their doctrine the sacraments of the new law ought to worke indeed that which they figure. This were but to be laughed at. For, as in the Supper, they make a double eating, a Sacramentall eating which is egally common to good and to euill, and a spirituall eating which is onely proper to the good: why might they not also faine that absolution is receiued two waies? Yet could I not hitherto vnderstand what they meant with this their doctrine, which we haue already taught how far it disagreeeth frō the truth of God, when we purposely intreated of that argument. Here my minde is onely to shew, that this doubt withstandeth not, but that they may call the absolution of the Priest a Sacrament. For they might answer by the mouth of Augustine that sanctification is without the visible sacrament, and the visible sacrament without inward sanctification. Again, that the sacraments do worke in the onely clekt that which they figure. Again, that some do put on Christ so farre as to the partaking of the Sacrament, other some to sanctification: the one, the good and euill egally do: this other the good onely. Truely they haue more than childishly erred and be blinded in the cleere sunne, which traouling with great hardnesse, yet espied not a thing so plaine and open to euery man.

17 Yet least they should waxe too proud, in what part soeuer they set the Sacrament, I denie that it ought rightfully to be taken for a Sacrament. First, because there is no speciall promise to it, which is the onely substance of a Sacrament. Again, because whatsoeuer ceremonie is here shewed foorth, it is the mere inuention of men: whereas we haue already prooued that the ceremonies of Sacraments cannot be ordeined but of God. Therefore it was a lie and deceit which they haue inuented of the Sacrament of penance. This fained sacrament they haue garnished with a meete commendation, calling it a second boord after shipwracke, because if a man haue by sinning marred the garment of innocency which he receiued in baptism, he may by penance repaire it. But it is the saying of Hierom. Whose soeuer it be, it cannot be excused but that it is vterly wicked if it be expounded after their meaning. As though baptism be blotted out by sin, & is not rather to be called to remembrance of euery sinner, so oft as hee thinketh of the forgiuenesse of sinne, that hee may thereby gather vp himselfe, and recouer courage, and strengthen his faith? that he shall shall obtaine the forgiveness of finnes which is promised him in baptisme. But that which Hierome hath spoken hardly and vnproperly, that by penance baptisme is repaired (from which they fall away that deserue to be excommunicate from the Church) these good expositors drawe to their wickednesse. Theretore you shall most slyly speake, if you call baptisme the sacrament of penance, sith it is giuen for a confirmation of grace, and scale of conscience, to them that purpose repentance. And least you should thinke this to be our deuse, beside this that it agreeth with the words of the Scripture, it appeareth that it was in the olde Church commonly spoken like a most certaine principle. For in the booke of Faith to Peter, which is said to be Augustines, it is called the Sacrament of Faith and of penance. And why see we to vncertaine sayings? As though we could require any thing more plaine, than that which the Euangelist reciteth: that John preached the baptisme of repentance vnto forgiveness of finnes?

Of extreme vnction as they call it.

18 The third sained Sacrament is extreme vnction, which is not done but of the priest, and that in extremes (so they terme it) and with oile consecrate of the bishop, and with this forme: By this holy anointing, and by his most kinde mercie, God pardon thee whatsoeuer thou hast offended by seeing, by hearing, by smelling, feeling, tasting. They saie that there be two vertues of it, the forgiveness of finnes, and ease of bodily sickness if it be so expedient: if not, the saluation of the soule. They say that the institution of it is set of Lames, whose words are these: Is any sicke among you? Let him bring in the Elders of the Church, and let them pray ouer him, anointing him with oile in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall saue the sicke man, and the Lord shall raise him vp: and if he be in finnes, they shall be forgiven him. Of the same sort is this anointing, of which we haue above shewed that the other laying on of hands is, namely a playne like hypocrisie, whereby without reason and without fruit they would resemble the Apostles. Marke rehearseth that the Apostles at their first tending, according to the commaundement which they haue receiued of the Lord, raised vp dead men, cast out diuels, cleansed leprous men, healed the sicke, and that in healing of the sicke they vsed oile. They anointed (saith he) many sicke men with oile, and they were healed. Hereunto James added respect, when he commaunded the Elders to be called together to anoint the sicke man. That vnder such Ceremonies is contained no higher mysterie, they shall easily iudge which marke how great libertie the Lorde and his Apostles vsed in these outward things. The Lorde going about to restore sight to the blinde man, made clay of dust and spittle, some he healed with touching, other some with his word. After the same manner the Apostles healed some diseases with the word onely, some with touching, other some with anointing. But it is likely that this anointing was not (as all other things also were not) causelesly put in vrc, I graunt: yet not that it should be a meane of healing, but onely a signe, that the dulnesse of the vnskillfull might be put in minde from whence so great power proceeded, to this end that they should not giue the praise thereof to the Apostles. And that the holy Ghost and his gifts are signified by oile it is a common and vsual thing. But that time grace of healings is vanished away, like as also the other miracles, which the Lorde willed to be shewed for a time, whereby he might make the new preaching of the Gospell maruellous for euer. Therefore though we graunt neuer so much, that anointing was a sacrament of those powers which were then ministred by the hands of the apostles, it is nothing pertained: so vs to whom the ministration of such powers is not committed.

19 And by what greater reason doe they make a sacrament of this anointing, than of all other signes that are rehearsed vs in the Scripture? Why doe they not appoint some Syluab to swim in, wherinto at certaine ordinarie recourses of time sicke men may plunge themselves? That (say they) should be done in vaine. Truly no more in vaine than anointing. Why doe they not lie along vpon dead men, because Paul raised vp a dead childe with lying vpon him? Why is not clay made of spittle and dust, a Sacrament? But the other were but singular examples: but this is giuen of Iames for a commandement. Verily Iames spake for the same time, when the Church yet still enjoyed such blessing of God. They affirme in deede that there is yet still the same force in their anointing: but we finde it otherwise by experience. Let no man now maruell, how they haue with such boldnesse mocked soules, which they knowe to be senselesse and blinde when they are spoiled of the worde of God, that is, of their life and light: sith they are nothing ashamed to goe about to mocke the liuing and feeling senses of the bodie. Therefore they make themselves woorthie to be scorned, while they boast that they are endued with the grace of healings. The Lord verily is present with his in all ages, and so oft as neede is he helpeth their sickness no lesse than in olde time: but he doth not so vtter those manifest powers, nor distributeth miracles by the hands of the Apostles: because this gift both was but for a time, and also is partly fallen away by the vnthankfulnesse of men.

Extreme anointing hath neither ordinance of God to be grounded on nor promise of grace annexed.
Math. 3. 16.
Iohn. 1. 32.

20 Therefore as not without cause the Apostles haue by the signe of oile openly testified, that the grace of healings committed to them was not their owne power, but the power of the holy Ghost: so on the other side they are wrongdoers to the holy Ghost, which make a stinking oile and of no force, to be his power. This is altogether like as if one would say that all oile is the power of the holy Ghost, because it is called by that name in Scripture: that euery doue is the holy Ghost, because he appeared in that forme. But these things, let them looke too. So much as for this present is enough for vs, we doe most certainly perceiue that their anointing is no Sacrament: which is neither a Ceremonie ordained of God, nor hath any promise. For when we require these two things in a Sacrament, that it be a ceremonie ordained of God, and that it haue a promise of God: we doe therewithall require that the same ceremonie be giuen to vs, and that the promise belong vnto vs. For no man doth affirme that Circumcision is now a Sacrament of the Christian Church, although it both was an ordinance of God, and had a promise knit vnto it: because it was neither commanded to vs, nor the promise which was adioyned to it was giuen to vs with the same condition. That the promise which they proudly boast of in their anointing, is not giuen to vs, we haue evidently shewed, and they themselves declare by experience. The Ceremonie ought not to haue bene vsed, but of them that were endued with the grace of healings, not of these butchers that can more skill of slaying and murdering than of healing.

If S. Iames did command anointing as a thing to continue in the Church, yet not anointing at such vnreasonable time, by such persons, with such oile, in such person, as the Church of Rome vsed.
Iam. 5. 14.

21 Howbeit although they obtaine this, that that which Iames commandeth concerning anointing, agreeth with this age (which they are most farre from) yet euen so they shall not haue much prevailed in proouing of their vnction wherewith they haue hitherto annointed vs. Iames willet that all sicke men be annointed: these men infect with their fat liquor, not sicke men, but corpses halfe dead, when the life lieth alreadye labouring at the top of their lips, or (as they themselves terme it) in extremes. If they haue in their Sacrament a present medicine, whereby they may either ease the sharpnesse of diseases, or at least may bring some comfort to the soule, they are too cruell that doe neuer heale in time. Iames willet that the sicke man be annointed of the elders of the Church: these men allowe no annointer but the petty sacrificing Priest. Whereas they expound in Iames presbyteros the Elders to be Priests, and fondly say that the plural number is there set for comelinesse like that is but trifling: as though the churches at that time abounded with swarms of sacrificing Priests, that they might goe in a long pompous shew to carrie a pageant of holy oile. When Iames simply biddeth that sicke men be annointed, I vnderstand by it none other anointing but of common oile: and none other is founde in Markes rehearsefall. These men vouchsafe to haue none other oile, but that which is hallowed of the Bishop, that is to say, warmed with much breathing on it, enchanted with much mumbling, and with the knee bowed nine times saluted in this manner: thrise haile holy oile: thrise haile holy chrisme: thrise haile holy balm. Out of whom haue they sucked such coniurations? James saith: that when the sicke man is annoined with oile, and praier hath bene pronounced ouer him, if he be in sinnes they shall be forgiuen him: namely, that the guiltlesse being taken away, they may obtaine release of the paine: not meaning that sinnes are put away with fat liquor, but that the praiers of the faithfull whereby the afflicted brother is commended to God, shall not be vaine. These men doe wickedly lie, that by their holy, that is to say, abominable anointing, sinnes are forgiuen. Loe howe gaily they shall preuaile, when they haue bene at large suffered to abuse the testimonie of James at their pleasure. And least we should neede to trauell long in prooffe hereof, their owne chronicles doe discharge vs of this hardnesse. For they report that Pope Innocentius which in Augustines time gouerned the Church of Rome, ordained that not onely priestes, but also all Christians should vse oile to annoint for their necessitie and others. Autor heretof is Sigebert in his Chronicles.

Of Ecclesiasticall Orders.

22 The fourth place in their register hath the Sacrament of Order, but the same so fruitfull, that it breedeth out of it selfe seuen little Sacraments. But this is verie woorthie to be laughed at, that whereas they affirme that there be seuen Sacraments, when they goe about to rehearse them, they reckon vp thirteene. Neither can they alleage for themselves, that they are but one Sacrament, because they tend all to one priesthood, and are as it were certaine degrees vnto it. For sith it is euident that in euery one of them are seuerall Ceremonies, and they themselves say that there bee diuers graces: no man can doubt but that they ought to be called seuen Sacraments if their opinions be receiued. And why straine we about it as though it were a thing doubtfull, for as much as they themselves doe plainly and generally declare seuen? But first we will briefly knit vp by the way, how many and how vnsauourie absurdities they thrust in vnto vs, when they goe about to commend to vs their Orders in steede of Sacraments: and then we will see whether the Ceremonie which Churches vse in ordering of Ministers, ought to be called a Sacrament at all. They make therefore seuen Ecclesiasticall orders or degrees, which they garnish with the name of a Sacrament. Those be doorekeepers, Readers, Exorcistes, Acolythes or followers, Subdeacons, Deacons, Priestes. And seuen they say that they be, for the seuenfold grace of the Holy Ghost, wherewith they ought to be endued that are promoted vnto them. But it is increased and more largely heaped to them in their promotion. Now the number it selfe is hallowed with a wrongfull expounding of Scripture, when they thinke that they haue read in Esay seuen vertues of the holy Ghost, whereas both in deede Esay there rehearseth but sixe, and also the Prophet meant not to comprehend them all in that place: for he is else where as well called the Spirit of life, of sanctification, of adoption of the children, as he is in that place called the Spirit of wisdom, of vnderstanding, of counsell, of strength, of knowledge, and of the feare of the Lord. Howbeit some suttler men make not seuen orders, but nine, after the likeness (as they say) of the Church triumphing. But among them also there is strife: because some would haue the shauing of the Clergie to bee the first order of all, and Bishopricke the last: other some excluding shauing altogether, reckon Archbishopricke among the orders. Isidore other wise diuideth them. For hee maketh psalmists and Readers to be diuers: he appointeth the psalmists for songs, and the Readers to the reading of the Scriptures, wherewith the people may bee instructed. And this distinction is kept by the Canons. In fo great diuersitie what will they haue vs to follow or flee? Shall we say that there be seauen orders? So teacheth the master of the schoole: but the most illuminate doctors do otherwise determine. Againe they also disagree among themselues. Moreouer the most sacred Canons call vs another way. Thus forsooth do men agree, when they dispute of godly matters without the word of God.

23 But this exceedeth all folkie, that in euery one of these they make Christ fellow with them. First (say they) he executed the office of dore-keeper, when he did with a whip made of cordes, drive the buiers and sellers out of the temple. He signifieth himselfe to be a dorekeeper, when he saith, I am the dore. He tooke vpon him the office of Reader, when he read Esay in the Synagoge. He did the office of an Exorcist, when touching the toong and eares of the deafe and dumme man, he restored to him his hearing. He testified himselfe to be an Acoluth or follower in these words. He that followeth me walketh not in darkenesse. He executed the office of Subdeacon, when being girded with a linnen cloth he washed the disciples feete. Hee did beare the person of a Deacon, when he distributed his body and bloud in the Supper. He fulfilled the office of Priest, when he offered himselfe vpon the crosse a sacrifice to his Father. These things cannot so be heard without laughing, that I maruell that they were written without laughing, if yet they were men that wrote them. But most notable is their subtiltie wherewith they plaie the Philosophers about the name of Acoluth, calling him a Ceroferar, a taper bearer with a worde (as I thinke) of forcerie, truly such a one as was neuer heard of in all nations and languages, whereas Acoluthos in Greeke simply signifieth a follower. Howbeit if I should earnestly tarry in confuting these men, I should my selfe also woorthily be laughed at, they are so trifling and verie mockeries.

lowed men, and yet men unhallow-ed, and unconse-crated suffered to 24 But that they may not be able yet still with false colours to deceiue euen verily silly women, their vanitie is by the way to be vttered. They create with great pompe and solemnitie their Readers, Psalmists, Dorekeepers, Acoluthes, to execute those offices, whereunto they appoint very children, or those whom they call lay men. For who for the most part lighteth the candles, who poureth wine and water into the cruets, but a childe or some base fellowe of the laitie, that maketh his gaine thereof? Doe not the same men sing, Doe they not shut and open the church dores? For who euer saw in their temples an Acoluth, or a Dorekeeper executing his office? But rather he that when he was a boy did the office of an Acoluth, when he is once admitted into the order of Acoluthes, ceaseth to be that which he begetteth to be called, that they may seeme to will of purpose to cast off the office when they take vpon them the title. Behold why they haue need to be consecrate by Sacraments, & to receiue the holy Ghost, namely, that they may do nothing. If they alleage for excuse, that this is the forwardnes of times, that they forsake and neglect their ministeries: let them therewithall confesse that there is at this day in the church no vse nor fruite of their holy orders, which they marvellously aduance, and that their whole Church is full of curse: because it suffereth tapers and cruets to be handled of children and prophane men, which none are worchie to touch but they that are consecrate Acoluthes: and because it committeth the songs to children, which ought not to be heard but of a hallowed mouth. As for their Exorcists, to what end do they consecrate them? I heare that the Iewes had their Exorcists: but I see that they were so called of the exorcismes or coniurations which they vsed. Of these counterfaite exorcistes who euer heard it spoken, that they shewed any example of their profession? It is fained that they haue power giuen them to lay their hands vpon mad men, them that are to be catechised, and men possessed with diuels: but they cannot persuade the diuels that they haue such power, because the diuels doe not onely not yeelde to their commandements, but also vse commanding authoritie ouer them. For a man can scarcele finde euery tenth of them, that is not ledde with an euill

Spinte.

Spirite. Therefore whatsoever things they babble concerning their petie Orders, they are patched together of foolish and vsfaourie lies. Of the old A coluibes, and Doore-keepers, and Readers, we haue spoken in another place, when we declared the order of the Church. Our purpose here is onely to fight against that new found inuention of the seuensold sacrament in Ecclesiasticall orders. Of which there is no where any thing read, but among these foolish praters the Sorbonists and Canonists.

25 Now let vs consider of the ceremonies which they vse about it. First whomsoever they receiue into their order of soldiers, they doe with one common signe enter them into Clergie. For they shauethem in the crowne, that the crowne may betoken kingly dignitie, because Clerks ought to be kings, that they may rule themselues and other. For Peter speaketh thus of them, Yee are a chosen kinde, a kingly priesthood, a holy nation, a people of purchase. But it was sacrilege to take to themselues alone that which is giuen to the whole Church, and proudly to glorie of the title which they had taken from the faithfull. Peter speaketh to the whole Church: these fellows wrest it to a few shauen men: as though it were said to them alone: be ye holy: as though they alone were purchased by the blood of Christ: as though they alone were by Christ made a kingdome and priesthood to God. Then they assigne also other reasons: the top of their head is made bare, that their minde may be declared to be free vnto the Lorde, which with open face may behold the glorie of God. Or that they may be taught the faultes of their mouth and their eyes must be cut off. Or the shauing of their head is the putting away of temporall things, and the haire compassed about the crowne are the remnants of goods that are retained for their sustenance. All in signes: because forsooth the veile of the temple is not yet cur in sunder. Therefore being perswaded that they haue gaily discharged their duties, because they haue figured such things by their crowne, of the very things indeede they performe nothing at all. How long will they mocke vs with such false colours and deceites? The Cleargie by shearing off a few haire doe signifie that they haue cast away the abundance of temporall goods, that they behold the glorie of God, that they haue mortified the lust of the eares and eyes: but there is no kinde of men more rauening, more senslesly dull, more lustfull. Why doe they not rather truly performe holineste, than with false and lying signes counterfai a shew of it?

26 Moreover when they say that the crowne of the Cleargie hath the beginning and reason from the Nazarites: what other thing doe they alleage than that their mysteries are sprung out of the Iewish ceremonies, or rather that they are inere Iewishnesse? But whereas they further say, that Priscilla, Acila, and Paul himselfe, taking a vow upon them did sheare their heads, that they might be purified: they bewray their grosse ignorance. For it is no where read of Priscilla: and of Acila also it is doubtful: for that same shearing may as well be referred to Paul as to Acila. But, that wee may not leaue to them that which they require, that they haue an example of Paul: the simpler must note, that Paul did neuer sheare his head for any sanctification, but onely to serue the weakenesse of his brethren. I am woont to call such vowes the vowes of charitie not of godlinesse: that is to say, not taken in hand for any seruice of God, but to beare with the rudenesse of the weake: as he himselfe saith, that he was made a Iew to the Iewes, &c. Therefore he did this, and the same but once, and for a short time, that he might for a time fashion himselfe to the Iewes. These men when they will without any vie counterfai the purifying of the Nazarites, what doe they else but raise vp another Iewishnesse, when they wrongfully couer to follow the olde Iewishnesse? With the same religionnesse was that decretall Epistle made, which according to the Apostle, forbiddeth clearkes that they should not suffer their haire to growe, but sheare it round like a bowle. As though the Apostle, when he treateth what is comely for all men, were carefull for the round shearing of the Cleargie. Hereby let the readers consider, of what force and woorthinesse are those other mysteries that Rasure of the crowne ministered in token of spirituall kingly dignitie, and scepter to that purpose abused.

27 Whence the shearing of Clerkes tooke beginning, appeareth sufficiently euen by Augustine alone. Whereas at that time none suffered their haire to grow, but nice men, and such as coueted a smoothnesse and trimnesse not meete enough for men: it seemed to be a point of no good example, if that were permitted to the clergie. Therefore Clerkes were commaunded either to sheare their head or to shauie it, that they should not beare any shew of womanlike trimming. But this was so common, that certaine Monkes, that they might the more set out their holinesse with notable and seuerall attire from other men, did let their haire grow long. But afterward when the fashion turned to wearing of haire, and certaine nations were added to Christian-dome which alway vsed to weare long haire, as Fraunce, Germanie, and England: it is likely that clerkes did euerie where sheare their heads, least they should seeme to couet the gaineffe of haire. At the last in a corrupter age, when all old ordinances were either peruerted or gon out of kind into superstition, because they saw no cause in the shearing of the clergie (for they had retained nothing but a foolish counterfaying) they fled to a mysterie, which now they superstitiously thrust in vnto vs for the approving of their Sacrament. The doorekeepers at their consecration receiue the keyes of the Church, whereby they may vnderstand that the keeping of it is committed to them. The readers receiue the holy Bible. The exorcists receiue the formes of exorcismes, which they should vse ouer mad and them that are to be catechised. The Acoluthes receiue their tapers and cruets. Lo, these are the ceremonies wherin (if God will) there is so much secer power, that they may be not onely signes and tokens, but also causes of inuisible grace. For this they require by their definition, when they will haue them taken among the sacraments. But to make an end in few words, I say it is an absurditie that in their schooles and canons they make these lesser orders Sacraments: whereas euen by their owne confession that teach this, they were vnknown to the primitiue Church, and deuised many yeres after. For sacraments, sith they containe the promise of God, cannot bee ordained of Angels, nor of men, but of God alone, whose office alone it is to giue promise.

28 There remaine three orders, which they call the greater. Of the which, Subdeaconrie (as they call it) was remooued into that number, since that the route of the smaller ones beganne to grow. But because they seeme to haue a testimonie for these out of the word of God, they do peculiarly for honois sake, call them holy orders. But now it is to be scene, how crookedly they abuse the ordinances of God to their pretence. We will beginne at the order of the priesthood or the sacrificers office. For by these two names they signifie one thing, and so they call them to whom they say that it pertaineth to offer vpon the altar the sacrifice of the body and blood of Christ, to pronounce praier, and to blesse the giftes of God. Therefore at their consecration they receiue the patine with the hostes, for tokens of power giuen to them, to offer acceptable sacrifices to God. And their hands are annointed: by which signe they are taught, that they haue power giuen them to consecrate. But of the Ceremonies we shall speake hereafter. Of the thing it selfe I say: it so hath no title of the word of God which they pretend, that they could not more wickedly corrupt the order set by God. First verily this ought to stande for a thing confessed (which we haue affirmed in entreating of the Popish Masse) that they are all wrong doers to Christ, which call them selues sacrificing priestes, or offer a sacrifice of appeasement. He was appointed and consecrate of the Father a priest with an oath, according to the order of Melchisedech, without any end, without any successour. He once offered a sacrifice of eternall satisfactorie cleansing, and reconciliation: and nowe also being entred into the sanctuarie of heauen, he maketh intercession for vs. In him we are all sacrificing priestes, but to praies and giuing of thanks, finally to offer vs and ours to God. It was his singular office alone, with his offering to appease God, and and to purge finnes. When these men take that vpon them, what remaineth but that their sacrificing Priesthood is vngodly and full of faciledge? Truly they are too wicked, when they dare garnish it with the name of a Sacrament. As touching the true office of Priesthood, which is commended to vs by the mouth of Christ, I willingly account it in that degree. For therein is a ceremony, first taken out of the Scriptures, then such a one as Paul testifieth not to be vaine nor superfluous, but a faithfull signe of spirituall grace. But whereas I haue not set it for a third in the number of Sacraments, I did it because it is not ordinarie and common among all the faithfull, but a speciall rite for one certaine office. But sith this honor is giuen to the Christian ministerie, there is no cause therefore why the Popish sacrificers should be proude. For Christ commanded distributers of his Gospell and mysteries to be ordemed, not sacrificers to be consecrated. He gaue them commandement to preach the Gospell and to feede the focke, not to offer sacrifices. He promised them the grace of the Holy Ghost, not to make satisfactorie purging of finnes, but rightly to execute and to maintaine the gouernement of the Church:

29 The ceremonies agree verie well with the thing it selfe. Our Lord when he sent forth the Apostles to preach the Gospell, did blow vpon them. By which signe he represented the power of the holy Ghost which he gaue vnto them. This blowing these good men haue retained, and as though they did put forth the holy Ghost out at their throate, they whisper ouer their silly Priestes that they make, Receiue the holy Ghost. So leaue they nothing which they doe not ouertwhartly counterfaite: I will not say like players (which vse their gesturings neither without art nor without signification) but like Apes, which counterfait euery thing wantonly and without any choise. We keepe (say they) the example of the Lord. But the Lord did many things which he willed not to be examples to vs. The Lord said to the Disciples, Receiue the holy Ghost. He said also to Lazarus, Lazarus come forth, He saide to the Man sicke of the Palsie, Rise, and walke. Why doe not they say the same to all dead men and sicke of the Palsie? He shewed a prooffe of his diuine power, when in blowing vpon the Apostles he filled them with the grace of the holy Ghost. If they goe about to doe the same thing, they enuiously counterfaite God, and doe in a manner challenge him to strue with them: but they are farre from the effect, and doe nothing with this foolish gesturing but mocke Christ. Verlie they be so shamelesse, that they dare affirme that they giue the holy Ghost. But how true that is, experient teacheth, which crieth out that so many as be consecrated Priestes are of Horses made Asses, of fooles made mad men. Neither yet doe I strue with them for that: onely I condemne the ceremony it selfe, which ought not to haue bene drawne to be an example, forasmuch as it was vsed of Christ for a singular signe of one myracle: so farre is it off, that the excuse of following his example ought to defend them.

30 But of whom receiued they the anointing? They answer that they receiued it of the Sonnes of Aaron, from whom their order also tooke beginning. Therefore they had rather alway to defend themselues with wrongfull examples, than to confesse that themselues haue deuised that which they vse without cause. But in the meane time they consider not, that while they profess themselves the successours of the Sonnes of Aaron, they are wrong doers of the Priesthood of Christ, which alone was shadowed and figured by all the old sacrificing Priesthoodes. In him therefore they were all contained and fulfilled, in him they ceased, as we haue sometimes already repeated, and the Epistle to the Hebrues without helpe of any glosses testifieth. But if they be so much delited with the ceremonies of Moses, why doe they not hastilie take Oxen, Calues, and Lambes to make sacrifices? They haue in dede a good part of the olde tabernacle and of the whole Iewish manner of worshipping: but yet this wanteth in their religion, that they doe not sacrifice calues & oxen. We cannot see, that this obseruation of anointing is much more hurtfull than Circumcision, specially when there is adioyned superstition and Phariscaill opinion of the worthines of the worke? For the Iewes did set in Circumcision, trust of righteousness: these men doe set in anointing, spirituall graces. Therefore while they couet to be counterfaiers of the Leuites, they are made Apostataes from Christ, and doe put themselves from the office of Pastors.

No reason why the Church of Rome shouldis the making of her Prustes, use the ceremony of anointing more than the rest, which were used in the making of Leuiticall prestes, the laying on of hands like in that action which no commandment of God doth warrant.

Exod. 30. 31.

31 This is (if God will) the holy oyle that printeth the marke that cannot be raced out. As though oyle could not be wiped away with dust and salt, or if it sticke faster, with sope. But this marke is spirituall. What hath oyle to doe with the Soule? Haue they forgotten that which they oft chaunt to vs out of Augustine, that if the word be taken from the water, it shall be nothing but water, and that it hath this from the word that it is a Sacrament? What word will they shew in their fat liquor? Will they shew the commandment that was giuen to Moses, concerning the anointing of the sonnes of Aaron? But there is also commandment giuen, of the coate, the ephod, the hat, the crowne of holmes, with which Aaron was to be garnished, and of the coates, girdles, and miters, wherewith the sonnes of Aaron were to be clothed. There is commandment giuen, to kill a Calfe, and burne the fat of him for incense, to cut rammes and burne them, to sanctifie their eares and garments with the blood of another ram, and innumerable other obseruations, which being passed ouer, I maruell why the onely anointing of oyle pleaseth them. But if they loue to be sprinkled, why are they rather sprinkled with oyle than with blood? Forsooth they goe about a wittie thing, to make one religion of Christianitie, Iewishnesse, and paganism, as it were of patches sowed together. Therefore their anointing stinketh which is without the salt, that is, the word of God. There remaineth laying on of hands, which as I graunt in true and lawfull Orderings to be a Sacrament, so I deny that it hath any part in this plaie, where they neither obey the commandment of Christ, nor haue respect to the ende wherunto the promise ought to lead vs. If they will not haue the signe denied them, they must applic it to the thing it selfe, wherunto it is appointed.

The order of Deaconrie.

32 About the order also of Deaconrie I would not stuiue with them, if that same ministerie which was in the Apostles time and in the purer Church, were restored to the vncorrupted state thereof. But what like thing haue they whom those men saie to be Deacons? I speake not of the men (least they should cōplaine that the doctrine is wrongfully weighed by the faultes of the men) but I affirme that for those whom they deliuer vs by their doctrine, they vt. worthily fetch testimony from the example of them whom the Apostolike Church ordained Deacons. They say that it pertaineth to their Deacons to stand by the Priestes, to minister in all things that are done in the Sacraments, namely in Baptisme, in the Chresme, in the Patine, in the Chalice: to bring in the offerings and lay them vpon the Altar, to make ready the Lords table, and to couer it: to carry the Crosse, to pronounce and sing the Gospell and Epistle to the people. Is here any one word of the true ministerie of Deacons? Now let vs heare the instituting of them. Vpon the Deacon that is ordered, the Bishop alone laieth his hand. He laeth a prayer booke and a Stoale vpon his left shoulder, that he may vnderstand that he hath receiued the light yoke of the Lord, whereby he may subdue to the feare of God those things that pertaine to the left side. He giueth him the text of the Gospell, that he may perceiue himselfe to be a publisher of it. And what belong these things to Deacons? They doe euen like as if a man would say that he ordained them Apostles whome hee appointed onely to burne frankincense, to trimme the images, to steepe the Churches, to cathe misse, to drine away dogges. Who could suffer such kinde of men to be called Apostles, and to be compared with the very Apostles of Christ? Therefore let them not hereafter lyingly say that they be Deacons, whom they institute onely for their enterlude like plaies. Yea and by the very name it selfe they sufficientlie declare what maner of office they haue. For they call them Leuites, and wil haue their order and beginning referred to the children of Leui. Which I giue them leaue to do, so that they do not afterwarde garnish them with the fetters of other.

33 Of Subdeacons to what purpose is it to speake? For whereas indeed they were in old time appointed for care of the poore, they assigne to them I wot not what trifling businesse, as to bring the chalice and the patine, the little cruets with water, and the towel to the altar, to powre water to wash hands, &c. Now whereas they speake of receiuing and bringing in of offerings, they meane those which they deuoure as abandoned to their holy vse. With this office very well agreeth the forme of their consecrating. That he receiue of the bishop, the patine and the chalice: of the Archdeacon, the cruets with water, the manuales, and such other baggage. Within these trifles they require to haue vs confesse that the holy ghost is enclosed. What godly man can abide to graunt this? But, to make once an ende, we may determine the same of them that we do of the rest. Neither need we to repeate further these things that are aboue declared. This may be enough to teach the sober and willing to learne (whom I haue taken in hand to instruct) that there is no Sacrament of God but where is shewed a Ceremonie iointed with a promise: or rather verily but where is a promise seen in a Ceremonie. Here is not found one syllable of any certaine promise: therefore it were in vaine to seeke a Ceremonie to confirme the promise. Againe of those Ceremonies that they vse, it is not read that any one is institute of God. Therefore here can be no Sacrament.

The order of Subdeaconie and the trifling vse thereof.

Of Matrimonie.

34 The last is Matrimonie, which as all men confesse to be ordained of God, so no man vntill the time of Gregorie euer sawe that it was giuen for a Sacrament. And what sober man would euer haue thought it? It is a good and a holy ordinance of God, so tillage, carpentrie, shoemakers craft, barbers craft, are lawfull ordinances of God, and yet they are no Sacraments. For there is not only this required in a Sacrament, that it be the worke of God, but that it be an outward Ceremonie appointed of God to confirme a promise. That there is no such thing in Matrimonie, vey children also can iudge. But (say they) it is a signe of the holy thing, that is, of the spirituall conioyning of Christ with the Church. If by this word Signe, they vnderstand a Token set before vs of God to this end to raise vp the assurednes of our faith, they are far beside the truth. If they simply take a signe for that which is brought to expresse a similitude, I will shew how vntuly they reason. Paul saith, As one star differeth from an other starre in brightnes, so shall be the resurrection of the dead. Loe here is one Sacrament. Christ saith, The kingdome of heauen is like a graine of mustard seede. Loe here is another. Againe, The kingdome of heauen is like vnto leauen. Loe here is the third. Esay saith, Behold, the Lord shall feed his flocke as a shepherd. Lo here the fourth. In an other place, The Lord shall goe forth as a Giant. Lo here is the fifth. Finally what end or measure shall there be? There is nothing but by this meane it shall be a Sacrament. How many parables and similitudes are in the Scripture, so many Sacraments there shall be. Yea and these shall be a Sacrament because it is written, the day of the Lord is like a thief. Who can abide these sophisters prating so foolishly? I graunt in deede that so oft as we see a vine, it is very good to call to remembrance that which Christ saith, I am a vine, yee be branches, my Father is the vinedresser. So oft as a shepherd with his flock commeth toward vs, it is good also that this come to our minde, I am a good shepherde, my sheepe heare my voice. But if any man adde such similitudes to the number of Sacraments, hee is mette to be sent to Antycira.

Matrimonie not thereby proued a sacrament because it resembles our conioyning with Christ.

35 But they still lay forth the wordes of Paul, in which he giueth to matrimonie the name of a Sacrament: he that loueth his wife, loueth himselfe. No man euer hated his owne flesh, but nourisheth it and cherisheth it, euen as Christ doth the Church: because we are members of his body, of his flesh and of his bones. For this a man shall leaue his Father and mother, and shall cleaue to his wife, and they shall be two in one flesh. This is a great sacrament: but I say in Christ and in the Church. But so to handle the Scriptures, is to mingle heauen and earth together. Paul, to shew to married men what singular loue they ought to beare to their wiuces, setteth foorth Christ to them for an example. For as he poured forth the bowels of his kindnes vpon the Church which he had espoused to himselfe: so ought euery man to be affected toward his owne wife. It followeth after, he that loueth his wife loueth himselfe: as Christ loued the Church. Now to teach how Christ loued the church as himselfe, yea how he made himselfe one with his spouse the church, he applieth to him those things which Moses reporteth that Adam spake of himselfe. For when Eue was brought into his sight, whom he knew to haue been shapen out of his side: This woman (saith he) is a bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh. Paul testifieth that all this was spiritually fulfilled in Christ and vs, when he saith that we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones, yea and one flesh with him. At length he addeth a concluding sentence, This is a great mysterie. And least any man should be deceiued with the double signifying of the words, he expresseth that he speaketh not of the fleshly conioyning of man and woman, but of the spirituall marriage of Christ and the Church. And truely it is indeed a great mysterie, that Christ suffered a ribbe to be taken from himselfe, whereof we might be shapen: that is to say, when he was strong, he willed to be weake, that we might be strengthened with his strength: that now we may not our selues lue, but he may liue in vs.

*The church ofrome
aburd and repugnant to her selfe in

36 The name of Sacrament deceiued them. But was it rightfull that the whole Church should suffer the punishment of their ignorance? Paul said Mysterie: which word when the translator might haue left being not vsued with Latin eares, or might haue translated it a Secret: he chose rather to put in the word Sacrament, yet in no other sense than Paul had in Greeke called it mysterie. Now let them goe and with crying out raile against the skill of tooongs, by ignorance whereof they haue so long most sowlly been blinde in an easie matter, and such as offereth it selfe to be perceiued of euery man. But why do they in this one place so earnestly sticke vpon this little word Sacrament, and some other times do passe it ouer vnregarded? For also in the first Epistle to Timothie the Translator hath vsed it, and in the selfe same Epistle to the Ephesians: in cuerie place for mysterie. But let this slipping be pardoned them: at least the lyers ought to haue had a good remembrance. For, when they haue once set out Matrimonie with title of a Sacrament, afterwarde to call it vnclannesse, defiling, and fleshly filthinesse, how giddy lightnesse is this? how great an absurditie is it to debarre priestes from a Sacrament? If they deny that they debarre them from the Sacrament, but from the lust of copulation: they escape not so away from me. For they teach that the copulation it selfe is a part of the Sacrament, and that by it alone is figured the vnitng that we haue with Christ in conformitie of nature: because man and woman are not made one but by carnal copulation. Howbeit some of them haue heere found two Sacraments: the one of God and the soule, in the betrothed man and woman: the other of Christ and the Church, in the husband and the wife. Howsoeuer it be, yet copulation is a Sacrament, from which it is vnlawful that any Christian should be debarred: vnlesse peraduenture the Sacraments of Christians do so ill agree, that they cannot stand together. There is also another absurditie in their doctrines. They affirme that in the sacrament is giuen the grace of the holy Ghost: they teach that copulation is a sacrament: and they deny that at copulation the holy ghost is at any time present.

37 And, because they would not simply mocke the Church, how long a rowe of errours, lies, deceites, and wickednesses haue they knitte to one errour? so that a man may say, that they did nothing but seeke a Denne of abominations, when they made of Matrimony a Sacrament. For when they once obtained this, they drew to themselves the hearing of causes of Matrimony: for it was a spirituall matter, which prophane Iudges might not meddle with. Then they made lawes, whereby they stablished their tyranny, but those partly manifestly wicked against God, and partly most vniust toward men. As are these: That mariages made betweene yoong persons without consent of their parents, should remaine of force and stablished, that the mariages be not lawfull betweene the kinsfolkes to the seventh degree: and if any such be made, that they be diuorced. And the very degrees they faime against the lawes of all nations, and against the ciuill gouernement of Moses. That it be not lawfull for a man that hath put away an aduultresse, to marie an other. That spirituall kinsfolkes may not be coupled in marriage. That there be no mariages celebrate, from Septuagesime to the vtas of Easter, in three weekes before Midsonmer, nor from Aduent, to Twelfetide. And innumerable other like, which it were long to rehearse. At length we must creepe out of their mire, wherein our talke hath now tarried longer than I would. Yet I thinke I haue somewhat profited that I haue partly plucked the Lyons skines from these Asses.
man

Deut. 18.6.

The xx. Chapter.

Of Ciuill gouernement.

NOW whereas we haue aboue set two kinds of gouernement in man, and whereas we haue spoken enough of the one kinde which consisteth in the Soule or in the inward man, and hath respect to eternall life: this place requireth that we speake somewhat also of the other, which pertaineth onely to the ciuill & outward righteousness of manners. For the course of this matter seemeth to be secured from the spirituall doctrine of Faith, which I tooke in hand to entreat of: yet the proceeding shall shew that I doe rightfully ioyne them together, yea that I am of necessity compelled to doe it: specially sith on the one side, madde and barbarous men doe furiously goe about to ouerthrow this order stablished by GOD: and on the other side the flatterers of Princes, aduancing their power without measure, sticke not to set it against the Empire of God himselfe. Vnlesse both these mischiefs be met withall, the purenesse of Faith shall be lost. Beside that it is not small for our behoofe, to know how louing God hath in this behalfe prouided for mankind, that there may flourish in vs a greater desire of godlinesse to witnes our thankfulness. First, ere we enter into the thing it selfe, we must holde fast that distinction which we haue aboue set, least (as it commonly happeneth to many) we wisely mingle these two things together, which haue altogether diuerse consideration. For when they heare that libertie is promised by the Gospell, which acknowledgeth among men no King and no Magistrate, but hath regard to Christ alone: they thinke that they can take no suite of their libertie, so long as they see any power to haue preeminence ouer them. Therefore they thinke that nothing shall be safe, vnlesse the whole world be reformed into a newe fashion: where may neither be Iudgements, nor Lawes, nor Magistrates, nor any such thing which they thinke to withstande their libertie. But whosoever can put difference betweene the body and the Soule, betweene this present and transitorie life, and that life to come and eternall: he shall not hardly vnderstand that the spirituall kingdome of Christ, and the ciuill gouernement are things farre a sunder. Sith therefore that is a Jew with vanitie, to seeke & inclose the kingdome of Christ vnder the elements of the world: let vs rather thinking, as the Scripture plainly teacheth, that it is a spirituall fruite, which is gathered of the benefite of Christ, remember to keepe within the bonds thereof this whole libertie which is promised and offered vs in him. For what is the cause why the same Apostle which biddeth vs to stand, and not to be made subiect to the yoke of bondage, in an other place forbiddeth bond seruants to be carefull of their state: but because spirituall libertie may very well agree with ciuill bondage? In which sense also these his sayings are to be taken: In the kingdome of God there is no Iewe, nor Grecian, no male, nor female, no bondman, nor freeman. Againe, There is no Iew nor Grecian, Circumcision, Vncircumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, Bondman, Freeman: but Christ is all in all. Whereby he signifieth, that it maketh no matter in what estate thou be among men, nor vnder the lawes of what nation thou liuest: forasmuch as in these things consisteth not the kingdome of Christ.

Gal. 5. 1.

The vse of Ciuill gouernment amongst Christian men.

2 Yet doth not this distinction tende hereunto, that we should thinke that the whole order of policie is an vnclane thing, nor pertaining at all to Christian men. So indeede doe the phrencke men, that are delighted with vnbridled licentiousnes, crye out and boast. For sith we be dead by Christ to the elements of the world, and being remooued into the kingdome of God doe sit among the heauenly ones: they thinke that it is vnwoorthy for vs, and farre beneath our excellencie, to be occupied with these prophane and vnclane cares that are busied about affaires not pertaining to a Christian man. To what purpose (say they) are lawes without iudgements and iudgements feates? But what hath a Christian man to doe with iudgements themselves? yea if it be not lawfull to kill, whereto serue lawes and iudgements among vs? But as we haue euen now giuen warning, that this kinde of gouernment is seuerall from that spirituall and inward kingdome of Christ: so it is alio to be knowen that they nothing disagree together. For the Ciuill gouernment doth now beginne in vs vpon earth certaine beginnings of the heauenly kingdome, and in this mortall and vanishing life, doth as it were enter vpon an immortall and incorruptible blessednesse: but the intent of his spirituall gouernment is, so long as we shall liue among men, to cherish and maintaine the outward worshipping of God, to defend the sound doctrine of Godlinesse and the state of the Church, to frame our life to the fellowship of men, to fashion our manners to ciuill righteousnesse, to procure vs into friendship one with another, to nourish common peace and quietnes: all which I graunt to be superfluous, if the kingdome of God, such as it is now among vs doe destroy this present life. But if the will of God be so, that we while we long toward the heauenly countrey, should be wayfaring from home vpon the earth: and sith the vse of such wayfaring needeth such helpes: they which take them from man, doe take from him his very nature of man. For whereas they alleadge that there is so great perfection in the Church of God, that hir own moderate gouernment sufficeth it for a law: they themselves doe foolishly imagine that perfection which can neuer be found in the common fellowship of men. For sith of naughtie men the pride is so great, and the wickednesse so obstinate, as cannot be refused with great sharpnesse of lawes: what thinke we that they will doe, if they see vnpunished libertie lie open to their lewdnesse, which cannot euen with force be sufficiently compelled not to doe euill.

*Religion by ciuill
ned.*

3 But of the order of policie, there shall be an other fitter place to entreate. Now our meaning is to haue this onely vnderstanded, that to thinke to driue it away, is outrageous barbarousnesse, the vse whereof is no lesse among men, than of bread, water, the sunne, and aire, but the dignitie much more excellent. For it tendeth not onely hereunto (which is the onely commoditie of all those things) that men may breath, eate, drinke and be cherished (although in deece it comprehendeth all these things, while it maketh that they liue together) yet I say, it tendeth not hereunto onely: but also that idolatrie, sacrileges against the name of God, blasphemies against his truth, and other offences of religion may not rise vp and be scattered among the people, that common quiet be not troubled, that euery man may keepe

his owne safe and vnappaired, that men may vse their affaires together without hurt, that honestie and modestie be kept among them: finally that among Christians may be a common shew of religion, and among men may be manlike ciuilitie. Neither let any man be moued, for that I do now referre the care of stablishing of religion to the policie of men, which I seeme before to haue set without the iudgement of men. For I do no more here, than I did before, giue men leaue after their owne will to make lawes concerning religion and the worshipping of God, when I allowe the ordinance of policie, which endeuoureth hereunto, that the true religion which is contained in the lawe of GOD, be not openly and with publique sacrilegcs freely broken and defiled. But the readers being holden by the verie plainnesse of order, shal better vnderstand what is to be thought of the whole kinde of ciuill gouernment, if we feuerally entreate of the partes thereof. There be three partes of it: the magistrate which is the gouernour and keeper of the lawes, the lawes according to which he gouerneth: the people, which are gouerned by the lawes, and obey the Magistrate. Therefore let vs first consider of the office of the Magistrate, whether it be a lawfull vocation and allowed of God, what maner of office he hath, and howe great is his power, then with what lawes a Christian ciuill state is to be ordered: then last of all, what profit of the lawes commeth to the people, what reuerence is due to the Magistrate.

4 The Lord hath not onely testified that the office of Magistrates is allowed and acceptable to him, but also setting out the dignitie thereof with most honourable titles, he hath maruellously commended it vnto vs. That I may rehearse a fewe of them. Whereas whoeuer be in place of magistrates are named Gods, let no man thinke that in that naming is small importance. For thereby is signified that they haue commandement from God, that they are furnished with the authority of God do altogether beare the person of God, whose steed they do after a certaine manner supplie. This is not my caullation, but the exposition of Christ. If the scripture (saith he) called them Gods to whom the word of God was giuen: What is this else, but that God hath committed his businesse to them, that they should serue in his office, and (as Moses & Josaphat said to their iudges whom they appointed in euerie feueral citie of Iuda) that they should sit in iudgment, not for man but for God? To the same purpose maketh this that the wisdome of God affirmeth by the mouth of Salomon, that it is his worke, that Kings reigne, and counsellers decree righteous things, that princes beare principalltie, and all the iudges of the earth execute iudgement. For this is all one in effect as if it had bene saide, that it commeth not to passe by the pueruesenes of men, that the gouernment of all things in earth is in the hande of kings and other rulers, but by the prouidence and holy ordinance of God, to whom it so seemed good to order the matters of men: for as much as he is both present and resident among them in making of lawes & in executing vprightnes of iudgements. Which Paul also plainly teacheth, when he reckoneth gouernments among the giftes of God, which being diuersly distributed according to the diuersitie of grace, ought to be employed of the seruants of Christ to the edification of the church. For although he there properly speaketh of a councill of graue men, which in the primitiue Church were appointed that they should haue the rule of ordering the publike discipline (which office in the Epistle to the Corinthians he calleth gouernement) yet for as much as wee see that the ende of ciuill power commeth to the same pointe, it is no doubt but that hee commendeth vnto vs all kinde of iust gouernement. But he speaketh more plainly, where hee purposely maketh a full discourse of that matter. For he both sheweth that power is the ordinance of God, and that there are no powers, but they are ordained of God: and that the Princes themselves are the ministers of God, to the well doers vnto praise: to the euill, reuengers vnto wrath. Hereunto may be added also the examples of holy men: of which som haue possessed

5 They which couet to bring in a state without Rulers, take exception and say that although in old time there were kings and iudges ouer the rude people, yet at this day that seruile kind of governing agreeth not with the perfection which Christ hath brought with his Gospell. Wherein they bewray not onely their ignorance, but also their diuclish pride, while they take vpon themselves perfection, of which not so much as the hundreth parte is seene in them. But what manner of men souer they be, it is easie to confute it: because where Dauid exhorteth all kings and Rulers to kisse the sonne of God, he doth not bidde them, giuing ouer their authoritie, to take themselves to a priuate life, but to submit the power that they beare to Christ, that he alone may haue preeminence aboue all. Likewise Esay, when hee promisseth that kings shall be fosterfathers of the Church, and Queenes shall be nourises, he doth not depose them from their honour: but rather doth by an honourable title make them defenders of the godly worshippers of God. For, that propheticie pertaineth to the coming of Christ. I do wittingly passe ouer many testimonies which doe each where offer themselves, and specially in the Psalmes wherein all gouernours haue their right maintained. But most cleare of all is the place of Paul, where admonishing Timothie that in the common assembly prayers must be made for kings, he by and by addeth a reason, That we may vnder them lead a quiet life with all godlinesse and honestie: in which words he committeth the state of the Church to their defence and saueguarding.

6 Which consideration ought continually to busie the magistrates themselves, for as much as it may put a great spurre to them whereby they may be pricked forward to their dutie, and bring them a singular comfort whereby they may mitigate the hardnes of their office, which truly are both many & great. For with how great an endeavour of vprightnes, wisdom, mildnes, continency, & innocency, ought they to charge themselves, which knowe themselves to be appointed ministers of the righteousness of God? By what assiance shall they admit iniustice to their iudgement seate, which they heare to bee the throne of the liuing God? By what boldnes shall they pronounce a wrongfull sentence with that mouth, which they vnderstand to be appointed an instrument for the truth of God? With what conscience shall they subscribe to wicked decrees with the hande which they knowe to be ordained to write the actes of God? In a summe, if they remember that they be the vicegerents of God, they must watch with all care, earnestnes, and diligence, that they may represent in themselves vnto men a certaine image of the providence, preservation, goodness, good will, and righteousness of God. And they must continually set this before their eyes, that if all they be accursed, that do execute in deceite the worke of the vengeance of God, they are much more grieuouly accursed, that vse themselves deceitfully in a rightfull vocation. Therefore when Moses and Iosaphat minded to exhort their iudges to their dutie, they had nothing more effectfull to moue their minds withall, than that which we haue before rehearsed, Looke what ye do. For yee sit in iudgement not for man but for God: namely he which is neere to you in the cause of iudgement. Now therefore let the feare of the Lord be vpon you. Looke and be diligent: because there is no peruerfnes with the Lord our God. And in another place it is said, the God stood in the assembly of the Gods and sitteth iudge in the midst of the gods, that they may be encouraged to their ductie when they heare that they be the deputies of God, to whom they must one day yeelde account of the gouernement of their charge. And worthily this admonition ought to be of great force with them.

them. For if they make any default, they are not onely wrong dooers to men whom they wickedly vex, but also slanderers to God himselfe, whose holy iudgements they desile. Againe they haue also whereupon they may singularly comfort themselues, when they consider with themselues that they are not busied in prophane affaires and such as are not fit for the seruant of God, but in a most holy office, namely forasmuch as they are the deputies of God.

7 As for them that are not moued with so many testimonies of Scripture from being bold to raile at this holy ministerie, as a thing disagreeing with Christian religion and godlinesse: what doe they else but raile at God himselfe, the dishonour of whom cannot but be ioyned with the reproch of his minister? And verily they doe not refuse the magistrates, but do cast away god, that he should not reigne ouer them. For if the Lorde said this truly of the people of Israell: because they had refused the government of Samuel: why shall it be lesse truly saide at this day of them that giue themselues leaue to rage against all governmentes ordained of God? But sith the Lorde saide to the Disciples, that the kings of nations beare rule ouer them, but that among them it is not so, where he that is the first must be made the least: by this saying it is forbidden to all Christians that they should not take kingdomes or government vpon them. O handsome expositors! There rose a strife among the Disciples, which of them excelled other: the Lord, to suppress this vain ambition, taught them that their ministerie is not like vnto kingdomes, in which one man hath preeminence about the rest. I beseech you, what doth this comparison make to the dishonour of kingly dignitie? yea what doth it prooue at all, but that the ministerie of an Apostle is not the office of a king? Moreouer although among the magistrates themselues there be diuerse formes, yet there is no difference in this behalfe but that we ought to take them all for the ordinances of God. For Paul also doth comprehend them altogether, when hee saith that there is no power but of God: and that which best liked him of all, is commended with notable testimonie about the other, namely the power of one: which because it bringeth with it a common bondage of all (except that one man to whose will it maketh all things subiect) in old time could lesse be allowed of noble and the excellent sort of natures. But the Scripture to meeete with their vniust iudgements, expressly by name affirmeth, that it is the prouidence of Gods wisdom that kings do reigne, and peculiarly cominandeth the king to be honored.

8 And truly it were very vaine that it should be disputed of private men which shoulde bee the best state of policie in the place where they liue: for whom it is not lawfull to consult of the framing of any common weale. And also the same could not be simply determined without rashnesse, forasmuch as a great part of the order of this question consisteth in circumstances. And if thou compare also the states themselues together without circumstances, it shall not be easie to discern, which of them ouerweiech the other in profitableness, they match so equally together. There is an easie way to fall from kingdome into tyrannie: but not much harder is it to fall from the rule of the chiefest men to the faction of a fewe: but most easie of all from the peoples government, to sedition. Truly if those three formes of governmentes which the Philosophers set out, to be considered in themselues I will not deny that either the government of the chiefest men, or a state tempered of it and common government farre excelleth al other, not of it selfe, but because it most seldom changeth that kings so temper themselues that their will neuer swaruech from that which is iust and right: againe, that they be furnished with so great sharpnesse of iudgement and wisdom that euery one of them seeth so much as is sufficient. Therefore the fault or default of men maketh, that it is safer and more tolerable that many shoulde haue the government, that they may mutually one helpe another, one teach and admonish another, and if any aduance himselfe higher than is meeete, there may be ouerseers and masters to restrain his wilfulness. This both hath alway been ap-proued by experience, and the Lord also hath confirmed it with his authoritie, when he ordeined among the Israelites a government of the best men verie neere vnto common government, at such time as he minded to haue them in best estate, till hee brought forth an image of Christ in Dauid. And as I willingly grant that no kinde of government is more blessed than this, where libertie is framed to such moderation as it ought to be, and is orderly stablished to continuance: so I count them also most blessed, that may enjoy this estate: and if they stoutly and constantly trauell in perseruing and retaining it, I grant that they do nothing against their dutie. Yea and the magistrates ought with most great diligence to bend themselves heereunto, that they suffer not the libertie of the people, of which they are appointed gouernours, to be in any part minished, much lesse to be dissolued: if they be negligent and litle care-full therein, they are false Faithbreakers in their office, and betrayers of their country.

 But if they would bring this kinde to themselves, to whom the Lord hath appointed an other forme of government, so that thereby they be moued to desire a change, the very thinking thereof shall not onely be foolish and superfluous, but also hurtfull.
 But if thou bende not thine eyes onely to one citie, but looke about or beholde the whole world together, or at least spread abroad thy sight into farther distances of countries, without doubt thou shalt finde that this is not vnprofitable appointed by the prouidence of God, that diuerse countries should be ruled by diuerse kindes of government. For as the elements hang together but by an vnegall temperature, so countries also are with their certain inequalitye verie wel kept in order. Howbeit all these things also are spoken in vaine to them whom the will of the Lord shall satisfie. For if it bee his pleasure to set kinges ouer kingdomes, Senates, or officers ouer free cities, whomsoever hee maketh rulers in the places where we are conuersant, it is our dutie to shewe our selues yeelding and obedient vnto them.

9 Nowe the office of Magistrates is in this place to be declared by the way, of what sort it is described by the word of God, and in what things it consisteth. If the Scripture did not teach, that it extendeth to both the tables of the law, we might learn it out of the prophane writers. For none hath intreated of the dutie of Magistrates, of making of lawes and of publike weale, that hath not begon at religion and the worshipping of God. And so haue they all confessed, that no policie can be happily framed, vnlesse the first care be of godlines: and that those lawes be preposterous which neglecting the right of God, do prouide onely for men. Sith therefore with all the Philosophers religion hath the first place, and sith the same hath alway bin obserued by the vniuersall consent of all nations, let Christian princes and magistrates be ashamed of their slothfulness, if they endeour not themselves to this care. And wee haue already shewed, that this dutie is specially enioyned them of God: as it is meete, that they should employ their trauell to defend and maintaine his honour, whose vicege-rentes they be, and by whose benefite they gouerne. For this caule also chiefly are the holy kings praised in scripture, for that they restored the worship of God being corrupted or ouerthrowen, or tooke care of religion, that it might flourish pure and safe vnder them. But contrariwise the holy historic reckoneth states without gouer-nours, among faultes, saying that there was no king in Israel, and that therefore eue-rie man did what pleased himselfe. Whereby their follie is confuted, which would haue them, neglecting the care of God, onely to applie themselves to be iudges of law among men. As though God appointed gouernours in his name to decide contronerries, and omitted that which was of much weightier importancce, that he himselfe should be worshipped according to the prescribed rule of his lawe. But a desire to inuouate all things without punishment mooueth troublesome men to this point, that they with all reuengers of the breach of peace to be taken away. As for so much

much as pertaineth to the second table, Jeremie warneth kings, to doe iudgement and righteousnesse, to deliuer the forcibly oppressed from the hand of the false accuser, Ier. 23. 1. not to greeue the stranger and widow, not to doe wrong, and not to shed innocent blood. To the same purpose maketh the exhortation which is read in the 82. Psalme, that they should render right to the poore and needie, acquite the poore and needie, deliuer the poore and needie from the hande of the oppressor. And Moses giueth charge to the Princes whome he had sent in his steede: let them heare the cause of their brethren, and iudge betweene a man and his brother and a stranger, & not know faces in iudgement, let them heare as well the little as the great, and be not afraide of any man: because it is the iudgement of God. But I speake not of these things: that kings should not get to themselues multitudes of horses, not cast their mindes to couctoulnesse, not to be lifted vp above their brethren: that they may be continually busied in studying vpon the lawe of the Lorde all the daies of their life: that Iudges swaue not to the one side, nor receiue giftes: because in declaring here the office of magistrates, my purpose is not so much to instruct the Magistrates themselues, as to teach other what Magistrates bee, and to what ende they are set of God. Wee see therefore that they be ordained, defenders and reuengers of innocencie, honestie, and quietnesse, whose onely enduour should be to prouide for the common safetie and peace of all men. Of which vertues Dauid professeth that he will be an exemplar, Psal. 101. when he shall be aduanced to the royall seate: that is, that he wil not consent to any euill doings, but abhorre wicked men, slanderers, and proude men, and get to himselfe from each where honest and faithfull men. But sith they cannot performe this, vnlesse they defende good men from the wrongs of the euill, let them helpe the good with succour and defence, let them also be armed with power whereby they may seuerally suppress open euil doers and wicked men by whose lewdnesse the common quiet is troubled or vexed. For wee throughly finde this by experience which Solon said, that common weales consist of reward and punishment, and that when those be taken away, the whole discipline of cities faileth and is dissolved. For the care of equitie, and iustice waxeth cold in the mindes of many vnlesse there be due honour readie for vertue: neither can the wilfulnesse of wicked men be restrained but by seueritie and chastisement of paines. And these two partes the Prophet comprehendeth, when hee biddeth kings and other gouernours to doe iudgement and righteousness. Righteousnesse is, to take into charge of tuition, to imbrace, to defende, to reuenge, to deliuer the innocent. Iudgement is, to withstand the boldnesse of wicked men, to repress their violence, to punish their offences.

10 But here, as it seemeth, doth arise a high and hard question. If by the lawe of God all Christians are forbidden to kill, and the Prophet prophecieth of the holy mourer of God, that is, the Church, that in it they shall not afflict nor hurt: how many magistrates be to gether both godly and blood shedders? But if we vnderstand, that the Magistrate in executing of punishments, doth nothing of himselfe, but executeth the very selfe iudgements of God, we shall be nothing combred with this doubt. The lawe of the Lord forbiddeh to kill: least manslaughter should be vnpunished, the law-maker himselfe giueth to the ministers the sword in their hand, which they shoulde drawe forth against all manslaughterers. To afflict and to hurt, is not the doing of the godly: but this is not to hurt, not to afflict, by the Lords commandement to reuenge the afflictions of the godly. I would to God that this were alway present before our mindes, that nothing is here done by the rashnesse of man, but all things by the authoritie of God: that he commaundeth, which going before vs, we neuer swaue out of the right way. Vnlesse perhaps there be a bridle put vpon the righteousness of God, that it may not punish wicked doings. But if it be not lawfull to appoint any lawe to it, why shall we caull against the ministers of it? They beare not the sword in vaine, saith Paul: for they be the ministers of God to wrath, reuengers to euill doers. Rom. 13. 4.

Therefore if Princes and other rulers knowe that nothing shall be more acceptable to God than their obedience, let them applie this ministerie, if they desire to shewe their godlinesse, righteousnesse, and vncorruptnesse allowable to God. With this affection was Moses led, when knowing himselfe appointed by the power of the Lorde to be the deliuerer of his people, he laide his handes vpon the Ægyptian. Againe, when by slaying of three thousand men in one day, he tooke vengeance of the sacrilege of the people. Dauid also when nie to the ende of his life he gaue commaundement to Salomon his sonne to slay Joab and Semei. Whereupon he also rehearteth this among the vertues of a king, to slay the wicked of the lande, that all workers of wickednesse may be driuen out of the citie of God. To which purpose also pertaineth the praise that is giuen to Salomon. Thou hast loued righteousness and hast hated wickednesse. How doth that milde and gentle nature of Moses burst out into so great crueltie, that being sprinkled and embred with the blood of his brethren, he runneth through out the camp to new slaughters? How doth Dauid, a man of so great gentlenes in all his life, among his last breathings make that bloudie testament, that his sonne should not bring the hoare haire of Joab and Semei in peace to the graue? But they both when they executed the vengeance committed to them of God, so sanctified with cruell dealing their hands which they had defiled with sparing. It is an abomination with kings, saith Salomon, to doe iniquitie, because his throne is stablished in righteousness. Againe, The king which sitteth in the throne of iudgement spredeth his eies vpon euerie euill man. Againe, A wise king scattereth the wicked, and turneth them vpon the wheele. Againe, Take away the drosse from the siluer, and there shall come forth a vessell to the melter; take away the wicked man from the sight of the king, and his throne shall be fast set in righteousness. Againe, he that iustifieth the wicked, and he that condemneth the righteous, both are abomination to the Lord. Againe, A rebellious man purchaseth euill to himselfe, and a cruell messenger is sent vnto him. Againe, Who so saierth to the wicked man, thou art righteous, him peoples and nations doe curse. Now if their true righteousness bee, with drawn swordes to pursue guiltie and wicked men: let them put vp their swordes and holde their hands pure from blood, while in the meane time desperate men doe range with murders and slaughters: then they shall make themselues guiltie of most great wickednesse, so much lesse shall they get thereby the praise of goodnesse and righteousness. Onely let there bee no precise and cruell rigorousnesse, and that iudgement seate which may worthily be called the rocke of accused men. For I am not he that either fauour extreme crueltie, or doe thinke that righteous iudgement can bee pronounced, but while clemencie the best and surest counsellor of kings, as Salomon affirmeth, the preferer of the kings throne is assitant, which a certaine man in olde time truly saide to be the principall gift of Princes. Yet a magistrat must take heede to both, that he doe neither with rigorousnesse of minde, wound rather than heale, or by superstitious affectation of clemencie fall into a most cruell gentlenesse, if with soft and loose tendernes he be dissolute to the destruction of many men. For this was in olde time not without cause commonly spoken vnder the empire of Nerua, that it is in deece euill to liue vnder a prince vnder whom nothing is lawful, but much worse vnder whom all things are lawfull.

The lawfulnessse of warres iustly taken in hand.

II But sith sometime kings and peoples must of necessitie take swordes in hande to execute such publike vengeance, by this reason we may also iudge that the warres are lawfull which are so taken in hand. For if there be power deliuered them, whereby they may maintaine quiet to their dominion, whereby they may keepe downe the seditious stirres of vnquiet men, whereby they may helpe the forcibly oppressed, whereby they may punish euill doings: can they at fitter seasons vtter it, than to suppress his rage which troubleth both prinately the rest of euerie man, and the common quiet of all men, which seditiously maketh vprores, which committeth violent oppressions and haynous euill doings? If they ought to be preseruers and defenders of the lawes, they must also ouerthrow the enterptise of all them by whose wicked doing the discipline of lawes is corrupted. Yea if they woorthyly punish those theeuers whose iniuries haue extended onely to a few: shall they suffer a whole countrey to be without punishment vexed and wasted with robberies? For it maketh no difference whether he be a king or one of the basest of the commonaltie, that murther anothers countrey into which he hath no right, and spoileth it like an enemy: all are alike to be taken and punished for robbers. This therefore both naturall equitie, & the rule of dutie teacheth that Princes are armed not onely to restraine priuate duties with iudicall punishments, but also to defende with war the dominions committed to their charge, if at any time they be enimilike assailed. And such wars the holy Ghost by many testimonies of scripture declareth to be lawfull.

12 If it be obiected against me, that in the new Testament is neither witnes nor example which teacheth that warre is a thing lawfull for Christians: first I answer, that the same rule of making warre which was in old time remaineth also at this day, and that on the contrarie side there is no cause that may debar magistrates from defending of their subiectes. Secondly that an expresse declaration of these matters is not to be sought in the writings of the apostles, where their purpose is not to frame a ciuill state, but to stablish the spirituall kingome of Christ. Last of all I say that in them also is shewed by the way, that Christ hath by his comming changed nothing in this behalfe. For if Christian doctrine (that I may speake in Augustines own words) condemned all warres, this shoulde rather haue bene saide to souldiers when they asked counsell of saluation, that they shoulde cast away their weapons, and vterly withdraw themselues from the warre. But it was saide to them: strike no man, do no man wrong, let your wages suffice you. Whom he taught that their wages ought to suffice them, he did verily not forbid them to be wariers. But all magistrates ought heere to take great heed, that they nothing at all follow their owne desires: but rather, if they must punish, let them not be borne away with a headlong anger, let them not be violently carried with hatred, let them not broile with vnappeasable rigor, yea let them (as Augustine saith) pittie common nature in him in whom they punish his priuate fault. Or if they must put on armor against the enemy, that is, the armed robber, let them not lightly seeke occasion thereof, nor take it being offered vnlesse they be driuen to it by extreme necessitie. For if we ought to perourme much more than that heathen man required, which woulde haue warre to seeme a seeking of peace: truly we ought first to attempt all things ere we ought to trie the matter by warre. Finally in both kinds let them not suffer themselues to be carried with any priuate affection, but be led onely with common feeling. Otherwise they do very ill abuse their power, which is giuen them, not for their owne commoditie, but for others benefite and ministerie. Moreouer of the same rightfull rule of making warre hangeth the order both of garrisons, and leagues, and other ciuill fortifications. Garrisons I call those that are placed in townes to defende the borders of the countrey: Leagues, which are made with Princes adioyning for this couenant that if any trouble happen in their lands they may mutually helpe them, and ioyn their forces in common together to suppress the common enemies of mankind: Ciuill fortification, whose vse is in the arte of warre.

13 This also I will last of all adde, that tributes and taxes are the lawfull reuenues of Princes, which they may chiefly employ to sustaine the common charges of their office: which yet they may likewise vse to their priuate royaltie which is after a certaine maner conioyned with honor of the princely state that they beare. As we see that Dauid, Ezechias, Josias, Josaphat, and other holy kings, and Ioseph also and Daniel, according to the state of the person that they did beare, were without offence of godlinesse lumptuous of the common charge, and we read in Ezechiel that there was a very large portion of land assigned to the kings. Where although he paint out the spirituall kingdome of Christ, yet he setheth the examplar of his similitude from the lawfull kingdome of men. But yet so that Princes againe on their behalves should remember, that their treasure chambers are not so much their owne priuate cofers, as the treasuries of the whole people: (for so Paul testifieth) which they may not without manifest wrong prodigally waste or spoile: or rather that it is the very bloude of the people, which not to spare, is most cruell vnnaturalnesse: and let them thinke, that their impositions, and subsidies and other kindes of tributes, are nothing but the supportes of publike necessitie, wherewith to wearie the poore communalitie without cause, is tyrannicall extortion. These things doe not encourage Princes to wastfull expence and riot, (as verily there is no neede to adde a firebrande to their lustes that are of themselves too much already kindled) but sith it much behooueth that they should with pure conscience before God be bold to doe all that they are bould to do, lest with wicked bouldnesse they come into the despising of God, they must be taught how much is lawfull for them. Neither is this doctrine superfluous for priuate men, that they should not rashly and stubborneley giue themselves leaue to grudge at any expences of princes, although they exceede common and ciuill measure.

Rom. 13. 6.

A false and foolish opinion that a state cannot bee well ordred by the common lawes of nations except the ciuill lawes of Moses be obserued.

14 Next to the magistrate in ciuill states are lawes, the most strong sinewes of common wealthes, or (as Cicero calleth them according to Plato) the soules, without which the Magistrate can not stande, as they againe without the Magistrate haue no liuely force. Therefore nothing could be more truly saide, than that the lawe is a dumbe Magistrate, and that the Magistrate is a liuing law. But whereas I promised to speake, with what lawes a Christian ciuill state ought to be ordered, there is no cause why any man should looke for a long discourse of the best kinde of lawes, which both should be infinite, & pertained not to this present purpose and place: yet in a few words, and as it were by the way, I will touch what lawes it may vie godhly before God, and be rightly gouerned by them among men. Which selfe thing I had rather to haue vtterly passed ouer with silence, if I did not vnderstand that many doe herein perillously erre. For there be some that deny that a comon weale is wel ordered, which neglecting the ciuill lawes of Moses is gouerned by the common lawes of nations. How dangerous and troublefome this sentence is, let other men consider, it shall be enough for me to haue shewed that it is false and foolish. That common diuision is to be kept, which diuideth the whole lawe of God published into morall, ceremoniall, and iudiciall lawes: and all the partes are to be seuerally considered, that we may know what of them pertauneth to vs, and what not. Neither in the mean time let any man be combred with this doubt, that iudiciall and ceremoniall also pertaune to the morall lawes. For although the old writers which haue taught this diuision, were not ignorant that these two later partes had their vse about manners, yet because they might be changed and abrogate, the moralls remaining safe they did not call them moralls. They called that first part peculiarly by that name, without which cannot stande the true holines of manners, and the vchangeable rule of liuing rightlie.

Men of all ages bound to the morall law of Moses, the ceremoniall giuen for a time, iudiciall instituted of God for them not for all men to be gouerned by.
Gal. 4. 3.

15 Therefore the morall lawe (that I may first begin thereat) sith it is contained in two chiefe points, of which the one commandeth simple to worship God with pure faith and godlinesse, and the other to embrace men with vnfaigned loue, is the true and eternall rule of righteousnesse prescribed to the men of all ages and times that will be willing to frame their life to the will of God. For this is his eternall and vchangeable will, that he himselfe should be worshipped of vs all, & that we should mutually loue one another. The ceremoniall law was the schooling of the Iewes, wherewith it pleased the Lord to exercise the certaine childhood of that people, till that time of fuines came, wherein he would to the full manifestly shew his wisdom to the the earth, and deliuer the truth of those things which then were shadowed with figures. The iudiciall lawe giuen to them for an order of ciuill state, gaue certaine rules of equitie and righteousnesse, by which they might behaue themselves harmlesly and quietly together. And as that exercise of ceremonies properly pertained in deede to the doctrine of godlinesse (namely which kept the Church of the Iewes in the worship and religion of God) yet it might be distinguished from godlinesse it selfe: so this forme of iudiciall orders (although it tended to no other ende, but how the selfesame charitie might best be kept which is commaunded by the eernall lawe of God) yet had a certaine thing differing from the very commaundement of louing. As therefore the Ceremonies might be abogate, godlinesse remaining safe and vndestroyed: so these iudiciall ordinances also being taken away, the perpetuall duties and commaundements of charitie may continue. If this be true, verily there is libertie left to euerie nation to make such lawes as they shall foresee to be profitable for them: which yet must be framed after the perpetuall rule of charitie, that they may in deede varie in forme, but haue the same reason. For I thinke that those barbarous and sauage lawes, as were those that gaue honour to theeues, that allowed common copulations, and other both much more filthie and more against reason, are not to be taken for lawes: for as much as they are not onely against all righteousnesse, but also against naturall gentlesse and kindnesse of men.

16 This which I haue said shall be plaine, if in all lawes we beholde these two things as we ought, the making and the equitie of the lawe, vpon the reason whereof the making it selfe is founded and staith. Equitie, because it is naturall, can be but one of all lawes: and therefore one lawe, according to the kinde of matter, ought to be the propounded end to all lawes. As for making of lawes, because they haue certaine circumstances vpon which they partly hang, if so that they tend all together to one marke of equitie, though they be diuers it maketh no matter. Now sith it is certaine that the lawe of God which we call morall is nothing else but a testimonie of the naturall lawe, and of that conscience which is engrauen of God in the mindes of men, the whole rule of this equitie whereof we now speake is set forth therein. Therefore it alone also must be both the marke and rule and end of all lawes. Whatsoeuer lawes shall be framed after that rule, directed to that marke, and limited in that end, there is no cause why we should disallow them, howsoeuer they otherwise differ from the Iewish lawe or one from another. The lawe of God forbiddeth no steale. What paine was appointed for theis in the ciuill state of the Iewes, is to be seene in Exodus. The most ancient lawes of other nations punished theft with recompence of double: the lawes that followed afterward, made difference betwene manifest theft and not manifest. Some proceeded to banishment, some to whipping, some at last to the punishment of death. False witness was among the Iewes punished with recompence of egall paine, in some places onely with great shame, in some places with hanging, in other some with the Crosse. Manslaughter all lawes vniuersally doe reuenge with blood, yet with diuers kindes of death. Against adulterers in some places were ordained seuerer paines, in some places lighter. Yet we see how with such diuersitie all tende to the same ende. For with one mouth they altogether pronounce punishment against all the offences which haue beene commaunded by the eternall lawe of God, as mansloughers, thefts, adulterie, false witnessings: but in the manner of punishment they agree not. Neither is the same needefull, nor yet expedient. There is some countrie, which vnlesse it shew rigour with horrible examples against manslayers, shoulde immediately be destroyed with murders and robberies. There is sometime that requireth the sharpnesse of paines to be increased. If there arise any trouble in a common weale, the evils that are wont to growe thereof must be amended with new ordinances. In time of waire all humane wouldes in the noise of armour fall away, vnlesse there were cast into men an vswounded fear of punishments. In barrenesse, in pestilence, vnlesse greater seueritie be vsed, all things will come to ruine. Some nation is more bent to some certaine vice, vnlesse it be more sharply suppressed. How malicious and enuious shall he be against the publike profite, that shall bee offended with such diuersitie which is most fit to holde fast the obseruing of the lawe of God? For, that which some say, that the lawe of God giuen by Moses is dishonoured, when it being abrogate, newe are preferred about it, is most vaine. For neither are other preferred about it, when they are more allowed, nor in simple comparison, but in respect of the estate of the times, place, and nation: neither is that abrogate which was neuer made for vs. For the Lorde gaue not the lawe by the hand of Moses, which should be published into all nations, and flourish euerie where: but when he had received the nation of the Iewes into his faith, defence, and protection, hee willed to bee a lawemaker peculiarly to them, and like a wise lawemaker, he had in making of his lawes a certaine singular consideration of them.

What profite

Christians receive by lawes, iudiciall orders and magistrates.

Rom. 13. 4.

17 Now remaineth that wee consider that which we haue set in the last place, what profite of lawes, iudiciall orders, and magistrates, commeth to the common fellowship of Christians. Wherwith also is coupled another question, how much private men ought to yeelde to magistrates, and how far their obedience ought to proceede. Many thought the office of Magistrate to be superfluous among Christians, because forsooth they cannot godly craue their aide, namely sith they are forbidden to reuenge, to sue in the lawe, and to haue any controuersie. But whereas Paul contrariwise plainly testifieth, that he is the minister of God to vs for good: we thereby vnderstand, that he is so ordained of God, that we being defended by his hande and succours against the maliciousnesse and iniuries of mischieuous men, may liue a quiet and assured life. If he be in vaine giuen vs of the Lord for defence, vnlesse it be lawfull for vs to vse such benefite: it sufficiently appeereth that he may also without vngodlinesse be called vpon & sued vnto. But here I must haue to doe with two kinds of men. For there be many men that boile with so great rage of quarrelling at the lawe, that they neuer haue quiet with themselves vnlesse they haue strife with other. And their controuersies they exercise with deadly sharpnesse of hatred, and with mad greedinesse to reuenge and hurt, and doe pursue them with vnappealable stiffnesse euen to the very destruction of their aduersarie. In the meane time, that they may not be thought to doe any thing but rightfully, they defende such puercesse with colour of lawe. But though it be granted thee to go to law with thy brother, yet thou maist not by and by hate him, nor be caried against him with furious desire to hurt him, nor stubbornly to pursue him.

A rule according whereunto both pleintifes and defendantes may use the helpe of the magistrate in a question of their right: well and lawfully.

18 Let this therefore be saide to such men, that the vse of lawes is lawfull, if a man doe rightly vse it. And that the right vse both for the pleintife to sue, and for the defendante to defend, as if the defendante being summoned doe appeere at an appointed day, and doth with such exception as he can, defend his cause without bitterness, but onely with this affection to defende that which is his owne by lawe: and if the pleintife being vnwoorthly oppressed either in his person or his goods, doe resort to the defence of the magistrate, make his complaint, and require that which is equite and conscience, but farre from all greedy will to hurt or reuenge, farre from sharpnesse and hatred, farre from burning heate of contention, but rather readie to yeelde of his owne and to suffer any thing, than to be caried with an enimie like minde against his aduersarie. Contrariwise when being filled with malice of minde, corrupted with enuie, kindled with wrath, breathing out reuenge, or finally so enflamed with the heate of the contention, they giue ouer any part of charitie, the whole proceeding euen of a most iust cause cannot but be wicked. For this ought to bee a determined principle to all Christians, that a controuersie though it be neuer so righteous, can neuer be rightly pursued of any man, vnlesse he beare as good will and loue to his aduersarie, aduersarie, as if the matter which is in the controuersie were already concluded and ended by composition. Some man will here peradventure say, that such moderation is so neuer vsed in going to law, that it should be like a miracle, if any such were found Igraunt in deede, as the manners of these times bee, that there is seldome scene an example of a good contender in law, yet the thing it selfe being defiled with addition of no euill, ceaseth not to be good and pure. But when we heare that the helpe of the Magistrate is a holy gift of God: we must so much the more diligently take heede, that it be not defiled by our fault.

10 As for them that precisely condemne all contendings at law, let them withstand that they doe therewithall despise the holy ordinance of God, and a gut of that kinde of giftes which may be cleane to the cleane: vnlesse peradventure they will accuse Paul of wicked dooing, which did both put away from himselfe the slanders of his accusers with declaring also their deceite and maliciousnes, and in iudgement claimed for himselfe the prerogatiue of the Cittie of Rome, and when neede was he appealed from an vnrighteous gouernour to the Emperours iudgement seate. Neither withstandeth it, that all Christians are forbidden to desire reuenge, which we also doe driue farre away from Christian iudgement seates. For, if the contention be about a common case, he goeth not the right way that doth not with innocent simplicitie, commit his cause to the Iudge as to a common defender, thinking nothing lesse than to render mutuall recompence of euill, which is the affection of reuenge: or if any matter of life and death, or any great criminall action be commenced, we require that the accuser be such a one, as commeth in to the Court being taken with no boiling heate of reuenge, and touched with no displeasure of priuate iniurie, but onely hauing in minde to withstand the enterprises of a mischeuous man, that they may not hurt the common weale. But if thou take away a reuenging minde, there is no offence done against that commandement whereby reuenge is forbidden to Christians. But they are not onely forbidden to desire reueng, but they are also commanded to waite for the hand of the Lord, which promiseth that he will be a present reuenger for the oppressed and afflicted: but they doe prevent all reuenge of the heavenly defender, which require helpe at the Magistrates hand either for themselves or other. Not so. For we must thinke that the Magistrates reuenge is not the reuenge of man but of God, which (as Paul saith) he extendeth and exerciseth by the ministerie of man for our good.

20 And no more doe we disagree with the words of Christ, by which he forbidde to resist euill, and commandeth to turne the right cheeke to him that hath giuen a blowe on the left, and to suffer him to take away thy cloke that taketh away thy coate. He willeth in deede there that the mindes of his should so much abhorre from desire of recompensing like for like, that they should sooner suffer double iniurie to be done to themselves, than desire to reacquire it: from which patience neither doe we also leade them away. For Christians truly ought to be a kinde of men made to beare reproches and iniuries, open to the malice, deceites, and mockeages, of naughty men: and not that onely but also they must be bearers of all these euils, that is to say so framed with all their hearts, that hauing receiued one displeasure they make themselves ready for another, promising to themselves, nothing in their whole life but the bearing of a continuall crosse. In the meane time also they must doe good to them that doe them wrong, and wish well to those that curse them, and (which is their onely victorie) strue to ouercome euill with good. Being so minded they will not seeke eye for eye, tooth for tooth, as the Pharisees taught their Disciples to desire reuenge, but (as we are taught of Christ) they will so suffer their bodie to be mangled, and their goods to be maliciously taken from them, that they will forgieue, and of their owne accord pardon those euils so soone as they are done to them. Yet this euennesse and moderation of mindes shall not withstand, but that the friendship toward their enemies remaining safe, they may use the helpe of the Magistrate to the preserving of their goods, or for zeale of publike commoditie may use a guiltie and pestilent man to be punished, whom they know that he can not be amended but by death. For Augustine truly expoundeth that all these commandements tend to this ende, that a righteous and godly man should be ready to beare patientlie the malice of them whom he seeketh to haue made good men, that rather the number of the good may encrease, not that he should with like malice adde himselfe also to the number of the euill: then, that they more pertaine to the preparation of the hart, which is inwardly, than to the worke which is done openlie: that in secret may be kept patience of minde with good will, but openly that may be done which we see may be profitable to them to whom we ought to beare good will.

1. Cor. 6. 6.

21 But this which is wont to be objected, that contentings in law are altogether condemned of Paul, is also false: It may easily be perceived by his words, that there was an innumerable rage of struing at law in the Church of the Corinthians: so far forth that they did make the Gospell of Christ and the whole religion which they professed, open to the euill speaking of the wicked. This is the first thing that Paul blameth in them, that by their intemperance of contentious, they brought the Gospell in slander among the vnbeleeuers. And then this point also, that in such sort they strued among themselves brethren with brethren. For they were so farre from bearing of wrongs, that they greedily gap'd one for anothers goods, prouoked one another, and being vnprouoked did hurt. Therefore he inuiceth against that rage of contending, and not simply against all controuersies. But he pronounceth that it is a fault or a weakenesse, that they did not rather suffer losse of their goods than to trauell euen to contentions for the preserving of them: namely when they were so easilie moued with euery damage, and for most small causes did runne to the Court of Lawe and to controuersies, he saith that this is a prooffe that they were of a minde too ready to anger and not well framed to patience. Christians verily ought to doe this, that they had alway rather to yeeld of their owne right than to goe to law, from whence they can scarcely get out againe but with a minde too much moued and kindled to hatred of their brother. But when a man seeth that without losse of charitie he may defend his owne, the losse whereof should be a sore hinderance vnto him: if he doe so he offendeth nothing against this saying of Paul. Finally (as we haue taught in the beginning) charitie shall giue euery man best counsell, without which whatsoever controuersies are taken in hand, and beyond which whatsoever doe proceede, we hold it out of controuersie that they be vniust and wicked.

subiects ought to

1. Pet. 2. 17.
Prou. 24. 21.

Rom. 13. 5.

22 The first ductie of subiectes toward their Magistrates is, to thinke most honorable of their office, namely which they acknowledge to be a iurisdiction committed of God, and therefore to esteeme them and reuerence them as the ministers and deputies of God. For a man may finde some, which yeeld themselves very obedient to their magistrates, and would not that there were not some whom they should obey, because they so know it to be expedient for the common benefite: but the magistrates themselves they thinke no otherwise than of certaine necessarie euils. But Peter requireth somewhat more of vs, when he commaundeth that the King be honored, and Salomon, when he commaundeth God and the King to be feared: For Peter vnder the word of honoring containeth a sincere and well deeming estimation: and Salomon ioyning the King with God, sheweth that he is full of a certaine holy reuerence and dignitie. This is also a notable commendation in Paul, that we obey not onely for wrath but for conscience. Whereby he meaneth that subiectes ought to be led not onely with feare of Princes and Rulers to be holden in their iurisdiction (as they are wont to yeelde to their armed enemy, which see that vengeance shall readily

readily be taken vpon them if they resist) but because the obediences that are shewed to them are shewed to God himselfe, for as much as their power is of God. I speake not of the men, as if the viſor of dignitie did couer foolishnesse, or sluggishnes, or cruelties, or wicked maners and full of mischieuous doing: but I say that the decree it selfe is worthie of honour and reuerence: that whosoever be rulers may be esteemed with vs, and haue reuerence, in respect of their being rulers.

23 Of this then also followeth another thing: that with minds bent to the honouring of them, they declare their obedience in prooffe to them: whether it be to obey their proclamations, or to pay tribute, or to take in hande publike offices and charges that serue for common defence, or to do any other of their commandements. Let every soule (saith Paul) be subiect to the higher powers. For he that resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God. The same Paul writeth to Titus: Warne them that they be subiect to rulers and powers, that they obey the Magistrates, that they be ready to euerie good worke. And Peter saith, Be ye subiect to euerie humane creature (or rather as I translate it, Ordinance) for the Lords sake, either to the king as most excellent, or to the rulers that are sent by him, to the punishment in deede of euill doers, but to the praise of well doers. Moreover that they should testifie that they do not faine subiection, but are sincerely and heartily subiect, Paul addeth that they should commend to God the safetie and prosperitie of them vnder whom they live. I exhort (saith he) that there be made prayers, beseechings, intercessions, thanksgiuings for all men, for kings and for all that be set in superiouritie, that wee may live a peaceable and quiet life with all godlinesse and honestie. Neither let any man here deceiue himselfe. For sith the Magistrate cannot be resisted, but that God himselfe must also be resisted: although it may bee thought that an vnarmed magistrate may freely be despised, yet God is armed which will strongly take vengeance on the despising of himselfe. Moreover vnder this obedience I containe moderation, which priuate men ought to binde themselves to keepe in cases touching the publike state, that they do not of their owne head enternedle in publike businesse, or rashly breake into the office of the Magistrate, and enterprise nothing publicly. If any thing shall in a publike ordinance be behouuefull to be amended, let not themselves raise vprores, nor put their hands to the doing of it, which they all ought to haue fast bound in this behalfe: but let them commit it to the iudgement of the Magistrate, whose hande alone is herein at libertie. I meane, that they presume to doe nothing vncommanded. For when the commandement of the ruler is adioyned, then are they also furnished with publike authoritie. For as they are wont to call the counsellors of a king, his eares and eies: so not vnfitly a man may call them the hands of the Prince, whom by his commandement he setteth in authoritie for the doing of things.

24 Now for as much as we haue hitherto described a magistrate such as is in deed the same that he is called, namely the father of the counrey, and (as the Poet calleth him) the pastor of the people, the keeper of peace, the protector of righteousnesse, the reuenger of innocence: he is worthily to be iudged a mad man, that alloweth not such a government. But whereas this is in a manner the experience of all ages, that of princes some being carelesse of all things to the foreseeing whereof they ought to haue bene heedfully bent, do without all care slothfully wallow in debtes: other some addicted to their gaine, do set out to sale all lawes, priuileges, iudgements, and grauntes: other some spoile the poore communalitie of monie which they may after waste vpon madde prodigall expendinges: other some exercise meere robberies, in pilling of houses, defiling of virgins and matrones, murdering of innocents: many cannot be perswaded that such should be acknowledged for princes, whose authoritie they ought to obey so far as they may. For in so great hauious vnworthines among doings to much contrary to the duty not only for a magistrate, but also of a mā,

25 But if we looke to the word of God, it will lead vs further, that we be ſubiect not onely to the gouernment of thoſe princes which execute their office towards vs well and with ſuch faithfulneſſe as they ought, but alſo of all them, which by what meane ſocuer it be, haue the dominion in poſſeſſion although they performe nothing leſſe than that which pertaineth to the dutie of princes. For though the Lord teſtifieth that the magistrate is a ſpecial great gift of his liberalitie for preſeruing of the ſafety of men, and appointeth to magiſtrates themſelues their boundes: yet he doth therewithall declare, that of what ſort ſocuer they be, they haue not their authoritie but from him: that thoſe in deede, which rule for benefit of the common weale, are true examplars and paterns of his bountifullnes: that they that rule vniuſtly and wiſfully, are raiſed vp by him to puniſh the wickednes of the people: that all egally haue that maieſtie wherewith he hath furniſhed a lawfull power. I will proceede no further, till I haue added ſome certaine teſtimonies of that point. Yet wee neede not much to labour to proue that a wicked king is the wrath of God vpon the earth, for as much as I thinke that no man will ſay the contrary, and otherwiſe there ſhould be no more ſaid of a king than of a common robber that violently taketh away thy goods, and of an adulterer that deſileth thy bed, of a murderer that ſeeketh to kill thee, whereas the ſcripture reckoneth all ſuch calamities among the curſes of God. But let vs rather tariſe vpon prouing that which doth not ſo eaſily ſettle in the mindes of men: that in a moſt naughty man, and moſt vnworthie of all honour if ſo that he haue the publike power in poſſeſſion, remaineth that noble and diuine power which the Lord hath by his word giuen to the miniſters of his righteousnes and iudgement, and therefore that he ought of his ſubiects to be had in as great reuerence and eſtimation, ſo much as pertaineth to publike obedience, as they would haue the beſt King if he were giuen them.

26 Firſt I would haue the readers to perceiue and diligently marke that prouidence and ſingular doings of God, which is in the ſcripture not without cauſe ſo oft rehearſed vnto vs, in diſtributing of king domes and making kings whom it pleaſeth him. In Daniel, it is ſaide: The Lord chaungeth times and courſes of times, hee caſteth away and maketh kings. Again: That the liuing may know that the Higheſt is mightie in the kingdome of men, and he ſhall giue it to whom he will. With which manner of ſentences when eas the whole ſcripture aboundeth, yet that ſame prophetic of Daniel ſpecially ſwearmeth ſul. Now what maner of king was Nabuchadonezar, he that conquered Hieruſalem, it is ſufficiently knowen, namely a ſtrong inuader & deſtroier of other. Yet in Ezechiel the Lord affirmeth that he gaue him the land of Egypt for the ſeruice that he had done to him in waſting it. And Daniel ſaid to him. Thou king art king of kings, to whom the lang of heauens hath giuen a mightie, and ſtrong, and glorious kingdome: to thee, I ſay, he hath giuen it, and all the lands where dwell the children of men, the beaſts of the wood and ſoules of the aire: he hath deliuered them into thy hand, and hath made thee to beare rule ouer them. Again he ſaid to his ſonne Belſaſar: the higheſt God hath giuen to Nabuchadonezar thy Father kingdome and royaltie, honour and gloria: and by reaſon of the reyalitie that hee gaue him, all peoples, tribes, and languages were trembling and feareful at his fight. When we heare that a king is ordained of God, let vs thereof call to remembrance thoſe heavenly warnings concerning the honour and fearing of a king: then we ſhal not doubt to accompliſh, a moſt wicked tyraunt in the ſame place wher in the Lord hath vouchsafed to set him : Samuel when he gaue warning to the people of Israell, what manner of things they should suffer at the hands of their Kings, said : This shall be the right of the King that shall reigne ouer you : he shall take your sons and put them to his chariot, to make them his horsemen, and to plow his land, and reape his crop, and to make instruments of warre. He shall take your daughters, that they may be his dressers of oynments, his Cookes and Bakers. Your Lands, your Vineyardes, and your best Oliue plantes, he shall take away and giue to his bond seruantes. He shall take tithes of your Seedes and Vineyardes, and shall giue them to his eunuches and bond seruants. He shall take away your bonde men, your bonde women and your Asses, and set them to his worke. Yea and he shall take tithes of your flocks, and ye shall be his bond seruantes. Verily Kings should not haue done this of right, whom the law did very well instruct to all commence : but it was called aright ouer the people which it behooued them of necessity to obey, and they might not resist it : as if Samuel had said. The wisdomesse of Kings shall ruine to such licentiousnes, which it shall not be your part to resist, to whom this onely thing shall be left, to obey their commandements and hearken to their word.

27 But chiefly there is in Ieremie a notable place and worthy to be remembered, which although it be somewhat long, yet I will be content to rehearse, because it most plainly determineth this whole question. I haue made the earth and men, saith the Lord, and the liuing creatures that are on the ouerface of the earth in my great strength and stretched out arme, and I will deliuer it to him whom it pleaseth in mine eyes. And now therefore I haue giuen all these landes into the hands of Nabuchadnezar my seruant, and all nations and great Kings shall serue him, till the time shall come of that land. And it shall be as a nation and a kingdome that hath not serued the King of Babel. I will visite that nation in sword, famine, and pestilence. Wherefore serue ye the King of Babel and liue. We see with how great obedience the Lord willed that cruell and proud tyrant to be honored, for no other reason but because he possessed the kingdome. And the same was by the heauenly decree, that he was set in the throne of the kingdome, and taken vp into kingly maiestie, which it was vnlawfull to violate. If we haue this continually before our mindes and eyes, that euen the worst Kings are ordered by the same decree by which the authoritie of Kings is stablished, these seditious thoughtes shall neuer come into our minde, that a King is to be handled according to his destruyings, and that it is not meete that we should shew our selues subiects to him that doth not on his behalfe shew himselfe a King to vs.

28 In vaine shall any man obiect that this was a peculiar commandement to the Israelites. For it is to be noted with what reason the Lord confirmeth it. I haue giuen (saith he) the kingdome to Nabuchadnezar: Wherefore serue ye him and liue. To whomsoever therefore it shall be certain that the kingdome is giuen, let vs not doubt that he is to be obeyed. And so soone as the Lord seruanceth any man to the royall estate, he therein declareth his will to vs that he will haue him reigne. For thereof are generall testimonies of the Scripture. Salem in the xxviij. Chapter, Many Princes are because of the wickednesse of the people. Againe Iob in the xij. Chapter. He taketh away subiection from Kings, and girdeth them againe with the girdle. But this being confessed, there remaineth nothing but that we must serue and liue. There is also in Ieremie the Prophet an other commandement of the Lord wherein he commanded his people to seeke the peace of Babylon, whether they had bene led away captiue, and to pray to him for it, because in the peace of it should be their peace. Behold the Israelites being sjoyled of all their goods, plucked out of their houses, led away into exile, and cast into miserable bondage, are commanded to pray for the safetie of the Conqueror : not as in other places we are commanded to pray for our persecutors : but that the kingdome may be preserved to himselfe and quiet, that they themselves may also liue prosperously vnder him. So Dauid being alreadie appointed King by the ordinance of God, and annointed with his holy oyle, when he was without any his deseruing vnworthily persecuted of Saul, yet the head of him that layed waite for his life, he esteemed holy which the Lord hath hallowed with the honor of kingdome. Faire be it from me (said he) that I should before the Lord doe this thing to my Lord the annointed of the Lord, that I should lay my hand vpon him: because he is the annointed of the Lord. Againe, My Soule hath spared thee, and I haue said, I will not lay my hand vpon my Lord, because he is the annointed of the Lord. Againe, Who shall lay his hand vpon the annointed of the Lord and shall be innocent? So sure as the Lord liueth, vilesse the Lord strike him, or his day be come that he die, or hee goe downe into battell: farre bee it from me that I should lay my hand vpon the annointed of the Lord.

If Princes breake shew dutie, we may not therefore transgresse ours.

29 Finally we owe this affection of reuerence yea and deuotion to all our Rulers, of what sort soeuer they be, which I doe therefore the oftener repeat, that we may learne not to search what the men themselves bee, but take this for sufficient, that by the will of the Lord they beare that personage in which the Lord himselfe hath imprinted and ingraued an inuolable maiestie. But (thou wilt say) Rulers owe mutuall duties to their subiectes. That I haue alreadie confessed. But if thou thereupon conclude, that obediences are to be rendred to none but to iust Governours, thou art a foolish reasoner. For, husbands also are bound to their wiues and parents to their children with mutuall duties. Let Parentes and Husbandes depart from their dutie: let parents shew themselves so hard and vnpleasable to their children, whom they are forbidden to prouoke to anger, that with their peeuishnesse they doe vnmeasurably wearie them: let the husbands most despitefully vse their wiues, whom they are commaunded to loue, and to spare them as weake vessels: shall yer therefore either children be lesse obedient to their parentes, or wiues to their husbands? but they are subiect both to euill parents and husbands and such as doe not their dutie. Yea, where as all ought rather to enduor themselves not to looke behinde them to the bagge hanging at their backe, that is, not to enquire one of anothers duties, but euery man set before him that which is his owne dutie: this ought chiefly to haue place among those that are vnder the power of other. Wherefore if we be vnmercifully tormented of a cruell Prince, if we be rauenously spoyled of a couetous or riotous Prince, if we be neglected of a slothfull Prince, finally if we be vexed for godlinesse sake of a wicked and vngodly Prince: let vs first call to mind the remembrance of our sinnes, which vndoubtedly are chaistised with such scourges of the Lord. Thereby humilitie shall bridle our impatience. Let vs then also call to minde this thought, that it pertaineth not to vs to remedie such euils: but this onely is left for vs, that we craue the helpe of the Lord in whose hands are the hartes of Kings, and the bowings of kingdomes. He is the God that shall stand in the assemblie of Gods, and shall in the midst iudge the Gods, from whose face all Kings shall fall, and be broken, and all the Iudges of the earth that shall haue not kissed his annointed, that haue written vniust lawes to oppresse the poore in iudgement, and doe violence to the cause of the humble, to make widowes a pray, and rob the fatherlesse.

30 And here both his maruelious goodnes, and power, and prouidence sheweth it selfe: for sometime of his seruants he raiseth vp open reuengers, and furnishest them with his commaundement, to take vengeance of their vnjust gouernement, and to deliuer his people many waies oppressed out of miserable distresse: sometime he directeth to the same end the rage of men that intend and goe about an other thing. So he deliuered the people of Israell out of the tyranny of Pharao by Moses; and out of the violence of Chusim King of Syria, by Othoniel: and out of other thraldomes, by other Kings or Iudges. So he tamed the pride of Tyrus, by the Egyptians: the insolence of the Egyptians, by the Assyrians: the fiercenes of the Assyrians by the Chaldees:

Chaldees: the boldnes of Babylon, by the Medians, and by the Persians when Cyrus had subdued the Medians. And the vnthankfulness of the kings of Iuda and Irael, and their wicked obstinacie toward his so many benefites, he did beat down and bring to distresse sometime by the Assyrians, sometime by the Babylonians, albeit not all after one maner. For the first sort of men when they were by the lawfull calling of God sent to do such actes: in taking armour against kings, they did not violate that maiestie which is planted in kings by the ordinance of God: but being armed from heauen they subdued the lesser power with the greater: like as it is lawfull for kings to punish their Lords vnder them. But these latter sort, although they were directed by the hand of God whether it pleased him, and they vnwittingly did worke, yet purposed in their minde nothing but mischiefe.

31 But howsoever the verie doings of men be iudged, yet the Lord did as well execute his worke by them, when he did breake the bloodie scepters of proud kings, and overthrow their intolerable governments. Let Princes heare and be afraide. But we in the meane time must take great heed, that we do not despise or offende that authoritie of Magistrates full of reuerend maiestie, which God hath stablished with most weightie decrees, although it remaine with most vnworthy men, and which do with their wickednesse, so much as in them is, defile it. For though the correcting of vnbridled government be the reuengement of the Lord, let vs not by and by thinke that it is committed to vs, to whom there is giuen no other commandement but to obey and suffer. I speake alway of priuate men. For if there be at this time any Magistrates for the behalfe of the people, (such as in olde time were the Ephori, that were set against the kings of Lacedemonia, or the Tribunes of the people, against the Roman Consuls: or the Demarchi, against the Senate of Athens: and the same power also which peradventure, as things are now, the three estates haue in euerie Realme, when they hold their principall assemblies) I do so not forbid them according to their office to withstand the outraging licentiousnesse of kings: that I affirme that if they winke at kings wilfully raging ouer and treading downe the poore communalitie, their dissembling is not without wicked breach of faith, because they deceitfully betray the libertie of the people, whereof they know themselues to be appointed protectors by the ordinance of God.

32. But in that obedience which we haue determined to be due to the authorities of Governours, that is alway to be excepted, yea chiefly to be obserued, that it do not leade vs away from obeying of him, to whose will the desires of all kings ought to be subiect, to whose decrees all their commandements ought to yeelde, to whose maiestie their maces ought to be submitted. And truly how vnorderly were it, for the satisfying of men to runne into his displeasure for whom men themselues are obeyed? The Lord therefore is the king of kings, who when he hath opened his holy mouth, is to be heard alone for altogether and about all: next to him we bee subiect to those men that are set ouer vs: but no otherwise than in him. If they commaund any thing against him, let it haue no place and let no accompt be made of it: neither let vs herein any thing stay vpon all that dignitie wherewith the Magistrates excell, to which there is no wrong done, when it is brought into order of subiection in comparison of that singular and truly soueraigne power of God. After this reason Daniel denieth that he had any thing offended against the king, when he obeyed not his wicked proclamation: because the king had passed his bounds, and had not onely beene a wrong doer to men, but in lifting vp his hornes against God he had taken away power from himselfe. On the other side the Israelites are condemned because they were too much obedient to the wicked commandement of the king. For when Ierobeam had made golden calues, they forsaking the Temple of God, did for his pleasure turne to newe superstitions. With like lightnesse their posteritie inclined themselues to the ordinances of their kings. With this the Prophet sharply reproch them, that they embraced the commandements of the king: so farre is it off, that the pretence of humilitie may deserue praise wherwith the flatterers of the court do cover themselves and deceiue the simple; while they say that it is not lawfull for them to refuse any thing that is commaunded them of their princes: as though God resigned his right to mortall men, giuing them the rule of mankind: or as though the earthly power were minished, when it is made subiect to the author of it, before whom euen the heauenly powers do humbly tremble for feare. I know how great and how present perill hangeth ouer this constancie, because kings do most displeasantly suffer themselves to be despised, whose displeasure (saith Salomon) is the messenger of death. But sith this decree is proclaimed by the heauenly harald Peter: That we ought to obey God rather than men, let vs comfort our selues with this thought, that we then performe that obedience which the Lord requireth, when we suffer any thing rather whatsoeuer it be, than swaue from godlines. And that our courages should not faint, Paul putteth also another spurre to vs: That we were therefore redeemed of Christ with so great a price as our redemption cost him, that we should not yeeld our selues in thraldom to obey the peruerse desires of men, but much lesse should be bound to vngodlinesse.

A Coluthes in the old Church. Booke. 4. Chapter. 4. Section. 1. 9. and Chap. 19. Sect. 22, 23.

Adams fall.

The fall of Adam proceeded not of intemperance of gluttonie, but of infidelitie: for he despising the word and truth of God, turned out of the way to the lies of Satan: which infidelity opened the gate to ambition and pride, wherunto was adioyned vnthankfulnesse: and ambition was the mother of disobedience. 2. 1. 4.

By the fall of Adam sith other creatures haue bene after a sort deformed, it is no maruell, that all mankind was corrupted, that is to say. swarued out of hand fro his first originall, and made subiect to curse. This the old doctors called Original sin, but yet did not so plainly set forth this point of doctrine as was conuenient. In the meane time it is prooued by reasons and testimonies of scripture, that Pelagius sowlly erred whē he said that by imitation only, not by propagation, sin passed from the first man into al his posterity. 2. 1. 5, 6.

And though the pestilence of sinne do principally abide in the soule, yet it doth not therefore pertaine to the discussing of this Doctrine, to dispute whether the soule of the childe cometh of the engendring substance of the father: for as much as the cause of the infection is not in the substance of the flesh or of the soule, but because it was ordeined of God, that those gifts which he at the first had giuen to man, man should haue and loofe them for him and his. Finally it maketh not against this doctrine, that the children of the faithfull are sanctified. 2. 1. 7.

That by the fall of Adam the naturall gifts in man were corrupted and the supernaturall were taken away, is a saying that many haue vsed, but few haue vnderstood. 2. 2. 4, 16. which saying is expounded. 2. 2. 12. that is to say, that the supernaturall gifts, faith, the loue of God, charity toward our neighbours, desirous endeavour of holines and righteousnes were taken away, but are restored by Christ: & that the naturall gifts, namely the vnderstanding mind, & the hart are corrupted, because the foundnesse of vnderstanding and the vprightness of hart were both taken away: Also that reason in man was not vtterly blotted out, but partly weakened and partly corrupted: and so wil, because it cannot be seuered from the nature of man, was not vtterly destroyed, but made thrall to corrupt desires. 2. 2. 12.

It is proued by the testimonies of Augustine and of the scripture, that God not onely foresawe or suffered, but also by his will disposed the fall of the first man, & in him the vaine of his posteritie. 3. 23, 7, 8.

Angels.

Angels are creatures of God although Moses doe not expresse them in the historie of the creation. 1. 14, 3.

Of the time or order wherin they were created, it is not expedient to inquire, for as much as the scripture (which we ought to follow for our rule) declareth nothing thereof.

The Table.

thereof. 1. 14. 4.

Why the heavenly spirites are called Angels, Armies, Vertues, Principalities, powers, dominions, thrones, gods. 1. 14. 5

Concerning Angels the scripture teacheth so much as is available for our comfort and for the confirming of our faith, namely that they are distributors & ministers of Gods bountifulnes toward vs, and the same by diuers waies. 1. 14. 6, 9.

Not only one Angel hath severall care of euery one of vs, but they all with one consent doe watch for our safetie: and therefore it is superfluous to inquire whether euery man haue his severall Angell assigned to be his keeper. 1. 14. 7.

Of the number & degrees of Angels, it is curiosnes to inquire, and rashnes to determine: And why, whereas they be spirits, the Scripture painteth them with wings vnder Cherubin and Seraphin. 1. 14. 8.

Against the Sadduces and such other fantastical men, it is proued by sundry testimonies of the scripture, that angels are not qualities or inspirations without substance, but very spirits in decde. 1. 14. 9.

That superstition is herein to be auoyded, and that wee giue not to Angels those things that belong onely to God and Christ. 1. 14. 10.

For auoiding of this peril, we must consider that whereas God vseth their seruice, he doth it not of neede, as though he could not be without the, but for the comfort of our weaknesse. 1. 14. 11. And therefore whatsoever is said of the ministerie of Angels, ought to be referred to this end, that ouercomming all distrust, our trust in God shoulde be thereby the more strongly stablished, & not that they should leade vs away from God. 1. 14. 12.

That the Angels also were created after the likeness of God. 1. 15. 3.

Of the ascending of Christ into heauen.

Although Christ in his rising againe began more fully to shew forth his glorie and power: yet in his ascending into heauen he first truly began his kingdom, because he then powred out greater abundance of his spirit, more royally aduanced his reigne, & shewed greater power both in helping them that are his, & in overthrowing his enemies. And yet that he is so absent according to the presence of his flesh, that hee is alway euery where according to the presence of his maiesty, & with the faithfull according to his vspeakable and inuisible grace. 2. 16. 14.

B.

Baptisme.

THe definition of Baptisme. The first end thereof is to serue our faith before God, the other end, to serue our confession before men. It bringeth to our faith three things, first that it is a signe of our cleansing, assuring vs that al our sinnes are done away. 4. 15. 1. which is prooued by testimonies of the scripture, and that it is not the water that cleanseth vs, but the blood of Christ. Sect. 2.

The force of Baptisme is not restrained to the time past: but we are by it washed and cleansed once for al our life: and yet that we may not hereof take a libertie to sinne from thence forward. 4. 15. 3.

The power of the keyes (as they call it) that is to say, the ministerie of the Church, by which the forgiveness of sinnes is daily preached vnto vs, is not to be severed from Baptisme. 4. 15. 4.

The second fruit of faith by Baptisme, is that it sheweth to vs our mortifying in Christ, and a new life in him. 4. 15. 5.

The third fruit is, that it retestifieth that we are so vnited to christ, that we are partakers of all his good things. For which cause Christ is called the proper obiekt of Baptisme, and the Apostles baptesed into the name of Christ, in whom we do so obtaine the matter both of our cleansing and of our regeneration, as we obtaine the cause thereof in the father, and the effect in the holy Ghost. 4. 15. 6.

It is prooued that the Baptisme was al one which was ministred of Iohn and of the

the Apostles, although some of the olde Doctors thought otherwise. 4.15.7. and that it maketh not to the contrary, that more abundant graces of the Spirit are poured out, since the resurrection of Christ. But yet there is in baptism a difference to bee made of the person of Christ from Iohn, and from the Apostles and other ministers. 4.15.8.

Both our mortifying and our cleansing were as by shadowe signified among the people of Israel, by the passage through the sea, and the comfortable calling of the cloud. 4.15.9.

It is false which some haue taught, that by baptism we are restored to the same righteousness and purenes of nature which Adam had at the beginning. And there is shewed that in the children of God doe remaine yet some leauinges of sinne, although the same reigne not in them: which doth whet their endeouours, & doth not giue them occasion to flatter themselves. 4.15.10,11. the same is proued by Paul. Sect. 12.

Ho. baptism serueth our confession before men. 4.15.13.

What is the order to vse baptism, both for confirmation of our faith, and for a confession before me. Where it is shewed that the graces of God are not enclosed in the Sacrament, so as they be giuen to vs by the vertue thereof. 4.15.14,15.

Baptisme is nothing encreased by the worthines of him that doth minister it, nor diminished by his unworthines: against the Donatistes, & our Catabaptistes which require a rebaptising, because we haue bin baptized in the kingdome of the Pope. 4.15.16. their argumentes are confuted Sect. 17,18.

Baptisme is a continuall Sacrament of repenace for all our life, so that we need no other sacrament of penace. 4.19.17.

Of the coniuring of the water, the wake candell, the chimes, the blowing, the spittle, and such other trassles added to the simple ceremonie of Christ: and the order of purely ministering it in the church is shewed. 4.15.19.

It is shewed that to minister Baptisme pertaineth to the ministers of the church and not to priuate men, much lesse to women: and the contrary obiections are confuted. 4.15.20,21,22.

Baptisme of infants.

The baptizing of infants doth very well agree with Christs institution, and with the nature of the signe. 4.16.&c.

Baptisme succeeded in the place of Circumcision, wherein they be like, and wherein they be unlike. 4.16.3,4.

Infants are not to bee debarred from baptism, sith the Lorde doth make them partakers of the thing signified in baptism. 4.16.5. & that the Lorde doth regenerate infants. Sect. 17,18,19.

Sith it is certaine that the same covenant, which it pleased God to make with Abraham, is sealed in infants with the outward Sacrament, therefore ought baptism also to haue place among them. 4.16.6.

Baptizing of infants is well proued by this that Christ embraced children and laid his hands vpon them. 4.16.7.

There commeth great fruite by the baptizing of infants, both to the faithfull parents & to the children. 4.16.9. Which fruite Satan trauaileth by the Anabaptistes to take from vs. 4.16.32.

A confutation of the aduersaries argumentes, saying, that there be other things signified in baptism than there are in Circumcision: that our covenant differeth from the olde covenant: that other are called children at this day than were at that time. 4.16.10,11,12,13,14,15.

A confutation of their other fained differences betweene Circumcision and baptism. Sect. 16. Also of this obiection, that baptism is a Sacrament of repentance and of faith: neither of which can be in tender infancie. 4.16.20,21.

In them of ripe age, faith and vnderstanding ought to go before baptism: but in infants, the baptism of the faithfull goeth before vnderstanding. 4.16.24.

A confutation of their error, which condemne to eternall death all that are not baptized. 4.16.26.

This, that Christ was not baptised till his age of 30. yeres, was for a good cause, and maketh nothing for the enemies of infantes baptisme. 4.16.29.

Why the supper is not to be ministred to the infantes of the faithfull, and baptisme not to be denied them. 4.16.30.

A long rehearfall of the argumentes wherewith wicked Seuettus did fight against the baptisme of infantes, & a confutation of the same argumentes. 4.16.31.

Of baptising of infantes. 4.8.16.

Bearing of the Crosse.

It behooueth that we deny our selues, that we may beare the crosse, because it is Gods will to exercise all his vnder the crosse, beginning at Christ his first begotten sonne. Which fellowship with Christ doth alreadie giue vs great ground of patience and comfort. 3.8.1.

It is for many causes necessarie for vs to lead our life vnder a continuall crosse: first to beate downe our arrogancie and trust of our own strength. And this remedie euen the most holy do need, as is proued by the example of Dauid. 3.8.2. Hereby our trust in God is confirmed, and our hope encreased. Sect. 3.

Secondly, that our patience may be tried, & we may be framed to obedience. 3.8.4. Which is most needfull for vs, sith the wantonnes of our flesh is so great to make vs shake off the yoke of God when he doth once handle vs gently. Sect. 5.

Sometime also to punish our offences committed: wherein wee acknowledge that hee doth the office of a good father towards vs, but contrariwise the vnfaithfull are oftentimes made more obstinate. 3.8.6.

A singular comfort when we suffer either thame or losse, or any other calamitie for righteousnes: which crosse most properly belongeth to the faithfull. 3.8.7.

How necessarie it is for the faithful, in the bitternes of afflictions, to be furnished with this thought, that God loueth them, but is angrie with their faults. 3.4.34.

Bishops.

The name of Bishop in the old church was giuen to some one in euery seuerall company of ministers, for politike order, and not that they should beare a Lordlie rule ouer other. 4.4.2.

It was the office as well of the Bishop as of other priestes, to preach and minister the Sacraments. 4.4.3.

The old Church did commonly obserue the order appointed by the apostles in calling of ministers. 4.4.10.11,12,13.

With what forme the ministers of the old Church were consecrate after their election. 4.4.14,15.

Of the ceremonie of ordering of true priestes. 4.19.28.

Oftentimes the order of priestes: prophets, and pastors, hath bin most corrupt in the church. 4.9.3,4,5.

Men are not bounde without exception to obey the pastors of churches, but in the Lord and his word. 4.9.12.

What Bishops, and of what qualities, be made in the papacie. 4.5.1.

The right of the people in election is taken away, and the old canons broken. 4.5.2,3.

What priestes are made in the papacie, and to what end. 4.5.4,5.

Of the giftes of benefices in the papacie. 4.5.6,7.

How faithfully all priestes in the papacie do execute their office, whether they be Monkes, or secular, as canons, deanes, parsons of paroches, bishops, &c. 4.5.8,9,10,11.

The negligence of them that gouerned Churches in the time of Gregorie and Bernard. 4.5.12.

The whole maner of ecclesiastical gouernance as it is at this day in the papacie, is nothing else but a place of spoyle, wherein the eues do rob without law and meature. 4.5.13.

Of the dissolute licentiousnesse in all parts of their life, which priestes and bishops, &c. vse in the papacie. 4.5.14.

doe make man a worker with God. Also against them that hang election vpon that which followeth election. 3. 24. 3.

The certaintie of our election is to be known by the word and calling of God, and we ought not to prease into the eternall counsell of God. 3. 24. 4.

The father hath chosen vs onely in Christ, in him therefore let vs behold the stedfast ground of our election. 3. 24. 5. and so, that thereof also we may conceiue a sure confidence of perleurance to the end. 3. 24. 6, 7, 8, 9.

Two kinds of calling yniuersall, and specifall. 3. 24. 8.

It is proued by diuers examples and testimonies of scripture, that the elect before their calling doe differ nothing from other men, and that it is false which some men doe dreame, that there is a certaine seede of election planted in their hearts euen from their natiuitie. 3. 24. 10, 11.

It is shewed at large that as God doth by the effectualnesse of his Calling toward the elect, make perfect the saluation to which he had by his eternall counsell appointed them: so hee hath his iudgements against the reprobates, whereby he putteth his purpose concerning them in execution, and maketh a way for his predestination. 3. 24. 12, 13, 14, &c.

Cardinals.

When the name of Cardinals first began, and how they haue so suddenly started vp to so great honour. 4. 7. 30.

Ceremonies.

The old Ceremonies are taken away, as touching their vse only, but not as touching their effect, for we haue the same effect at this day most evidently & effectually in Christ. And this doth nothing diminish their holmes, as it is proued. 2. 7. 16. & being weighed by themselves & without Christ, they are worthily called off Paul handwritings against vs. 2. 7. 17.

The ordinances concerning Ceremonies in the Popes law, doe command obseruation for the most part vnprofitable, and sometime also foolish although they haue a great seeming of wisdom: moreouer they oppresse consciences with their infinite multitude. 4. 10. 11, 12, 13.

The Popish Ceremonies can not be executed by this colour, that they be ordained for the instruction of the ignorant, as the ceremonies of the law were: because there appereth in this point a manifest difference betweene vs and the people before Christ. 4. 10. 14.

The popish ceremonies are beleued to be sacrifices cleansing sins, & deserving eternall life: they are without doctrine, and are snares to catch monie. 4. 10. 15.

Charitie toward our neighbour.

It is proued, against the Sorbonists that Charitie is the loue of our neighbor and not of our selues. 2. 8. 54.

Vnder the name of neighbour is contained euery man, be he neuer so much a stranger to vs, and our enemie, 2. 8. 55. & therefore the Schoolemen are condemned of ignorance, which of the commandments of God, not to desire riuenge, & to loue our enemies, haue made counsels, to the necessarie keeping wherof Monkes alone doe binde themselves: & it is proued that the olde doctors of the Church, yea & Gregorie himselfe, thought otherwise. 2. 8. 56, 57.

We haue need of patience, that we be not wearie of doing good to other. And we ought not to haue respect to the vnworthinesse or other qualities of men which might withdraw vs, but to God which so commaundeth vs. 3. 7. 6.

To the fulfilling of all the parts of charitie, it is not enough if we performe all the dutifull decedes of Charitie, but we must doe it with a sincere affection of hart. Wherein the chiefe point is, that we take vpon our selues the person of him whom we see to neede our helpe. So that wee auide disdainfull pride and other corruptings of Charitie. 3. 7. 7.

Christ and the Apostles in rehearsing the summe of the lawe doe sometime leaue out the first table: not for that it more availeth to the summe of righteousness to liue innocently with men, than to honour God with godlinesse: but because vnfaimed Charitie is the proofe of true godlinesse. 2. 8. 52, 53.

Church.

The Church the mother of the faithfull. 4.1.1, 4, 5.

An exposition of this article of the Creed, I beleue the holy Church. 4.1.2, 3

The holinesse of the Church is not yet perfected. 4.8.12.

Of the inuisible Church: and of the visible Church, the signes whereof are the pure preaching of the worde and ministration of Sacraments. 4.8.7, 8, 9, 10, 11.

Wherefoeuer those signes are, we ought not to depart from that fellowship. 4.8.12.

There may some fault creepe in, either in doctrine or in ministration of Sacraments, for the which yet wee ought not to cast off the communion of that Church, and much lesse for the imperfection of life and corruptnesse of maners. And herein the Anabaptists are reprooued. 4.1.12, 13, 14, 15, 16.

The Church is none otherwise holy, but that it alway hath many faults, & yet it ceaseth not to bee the Church, as is proued by testimonies of Scripture and the experience of al ages. 4.1.17, 18, 19.

See Ministerie of the Church.

Churches power as touching Articles of faith.

It is proued by the exāple of the Apostles and Prophets, & of Christ himselfe, that whatsoeuer authoritie the Church hath, is properly not giuen to men, but to the worde, the ministration whereof is committed to them: And therefore it was neuer lawfull for the Church, to teach any other thing, than that which she receiued of the Lord. 4.8.1, 2, 3, 4, 8, 9.

Christ hath euer taught his Church: and yet he hath vsed diuers manners of teaching according to the diuersitie of times, ere the law was written, in the time of the law & the Prophets, and last of all since that he himselfe was openly shewed in the flesh. 4.8.5, 6, 7.

False Church.

Where lying and falshood hath gotten the vpper hand and reigneth, there is not the Church. And this is proued to be in the papacie, although they there boast of a perpetual successiō of bishops. 4.2.1, 2, 3, 4

They are not heretikes or schismatikes that depart from the papacie. 4.2.5, 6.

How much soeuer a man make the best of the faultes of the popish Church, yet the state thereof is no better than was in the kingdome of Israell vnder Jeroboam. 4.2.7, 8, 9, 10.

Yet by the goodnesse of God there remain in the papacie certaine footsteps of the Church: and so is that fulfilled which hath been written, that Antichrist should sit in the temple of God. 4.2.11, 12.

A comparison of the power which the true Church hath in teaching, with the tyrannie of the pope and his ministers in forging new articles of faith. 4.8.10. Of the Papists principle, that the Church cannot erre. 4.8.13.

It is false to say that it behooued that the Church should adde to the writings of the Apostles. 4.1.14, 15, 16.

That all the concupiscences of men are euill and guiltie of sinne, not inso much as they are naturall, but because they are all inordinate by reason of the corruption of nature. And so did Augustine thinke, if he be diligently weighed. 3. 3. 12. and this is prooued by many places of his writings. 3. 3. 13.

Confession Auricular.

Concerning Confession, the schoole Diuines doe fight against the Canonists, affirming that it is not by the commaundement of God. A confutation of the arguments whereupon the first sort doe stand, first because the Lord in the Gospell did send the Leprous whom hee had cleansed to the Priestes: and there is shewed the true meaning of the dooing. 3. 4. 4.

A confutation of their second argument, for that the Lord commaunded his Disciples to loose and vwinde Lazarus when he was raised from death. 3. 4. 5.

The vse of confessing to a Priest was very ancient, but yet free as a poltike order, not as a law set by Christ or his Apostles: and afterwarde the same was abrogate by Nectarius Bishop of the Church of Constantinople, because of a Deacon which had vnder that pretence abused a woman. This tyrannous law was not laid vpon Churches before the time of Innocent the third, about three hundred yeeres past, and the foolishnesse and barbarousnesse of that ordinance is declared. 3. 4. 7.

4. 17.

By a similitude is described how a great part of the world hath hitherto obeyed such illusions. That it is an impossible lawe, and maketh men hypocrites. And then is shewed a most certaine rule of confession according to the example of the publicane. 3. 4. 18.

A confutation of this article, that sinnes are not forgiven, and that the gate of Paradise is shut, &c. vnlesse there be first firmly conceiued a vow of confessing, where also their obiection is confuted that judgement cannot be pronounced till the cause be heard, that is to say, that absolution cannot be giuen till all the sinnes be rehearsed. 3. 4. 18.

It is no maruell that we condemne and abolish auricular confession, and our aduersaries doe falsly assigne so great profite vnto it, for so much as on the other side it armeth men to boldnes of sinning. 3. 4. 19.

They doe falsly pretende that they haue the power of the keyes, sith they are not the successors of the Apostles, nor haue the holy Ghost, forasmuch as they doe daily without consideration loose those things which the Lord hath commanded to be bound, and binde what he hath commanded to be loosed. 3. 4. 20.

It is prouoed false that they say that the power of the keyes may sometime be vsed without knowledge, forasmuch as by that meane the absolution should be vncertaine. Where also is spoken of the absolution or condemnation which the ministers of the Gospell or the Church doe pronounce according to the word, and of the certainty thereof. 3. 4. 21.

The absolution of the Priests in the Papacie is vncertaine, as well on the behalfe of him that absolueth as of him that confesseth: but contrariwise it is in the absolution of the Gospell, which hangeth vpon this onely condition, if the sinner seeke his purging in the onely sacrifice of Christ, and to yeelde to the grace offered vnto him. 3. 4. 22.

The Popish Doctors, when they alleadge for themselues the power of loosing giuen to the Apostles, doe wrongfully wrest to auricular confessiō those sayings which Christ spake partly of preaching of the Gospell, and partly of Excommunication. True Confession.

What kinde of confession is taught vs by the word of God, namely to confesse to God the knower of our harts and of all our thoughts. 3. 4. 9.

Out of this secret confession made to God, followeth a voluntarie confession before men, so oft as it is behoouefull for the glorie of God or the humbling of our selues. And of this second kinde there was an ordinarie vse in the olde Church, and is also in the Church at this day. But yet extraordinarily it ought after a speciall manner to be vsed, whensoever it shall happen that the people be guiltie in any generall offence, or to be plagued with any calamity. Of the profite of such confession. 3. 4. 10, 11.

Of two other sorts of priuate confession: of which the first is vsed for our own cause, when we require comfort of our brethren, because the feeling of sinnes doth vex and trouble vs: in which case we must chiefly resort to our Pastors: and this remedie is wantlie and moderately to be vsed, that no bondage be brought in. The other sort is to appease and reconcile our neighbour, if he be in any thing offended by our fault, vnder which kinde is contained their Confession which haue sinned so far as to the offence of the whole Church. 3. 4. 12, 13.

The power of the keyes hath place in the three kinds of Confession. Of the fruit which they that confesse doe receiue thereby, because they know that forgiveness of sinnes is declared to them by the messenger of Christ. 3. 4. 14.

Of confession of sinnes one sort is general, another speciall. 3. 20. 9.

It is to be wished, that the manner of the olde Church were brought in vse againe, to call children to giue account of their faith. 4. 19. 13.

Conscience.

Consciences, when they seeke affiance of their iustification before God ought to forget all the righteousnes of the lawe 3. 19. 23.

Of Councils.

We must keepe a meane in honouring of Councils, that we take nothing away from Christ, and our doctrine for the most part is confirmed by ancient Councils 4. 9. 1.

By the Scripture the Councils haue no authoritie, vnlesse they be assembled in the name of Christ: and what that is. 4. 9. 2.

It is false which the Papiests affirme: that truth remaineth not in the church vnles it be among the Pastors, & that the church it self is not vnles it remaine to bee seene in general counells. 4. 9. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7.

Creation of the world.

Although God ought to bee known by the Creation of things, yet least the faithfull should fall away to the fained inuentions of the heathen, his will was that the historie of the creation should remaine written, and the time thereof expressed in the Scripture. 1. 14. 1. where their vngodly scoffing is confuted, which aske why it came not sooner in Gods minde to create heauen and earth 1. 14. 1.

For the same purpose it is rehearsed that God ended his worke, not in a moment, but in fixe daies: and likewise the order is set fourth, namely that Adam was not created til God had first furnished the world with all plenuie of good things 1. 14. 2, 22.

A confutation of the error of Manichens concerning two originall beginnings 1. 14. 3.

It is prooued by the Scriptures that the knowledge of God which appeareth in the workmanship of the world can not by it selfe alone bring vs into the right way. 1. 5. 13. & yet are we rightfully without all excuse. Sec. 14.

Although the beholding of heauen and earth and the consideration of the ordering of things pertaining to men, do moue vs to worship God, yet al these things passed away without profit, euen from the wisest philosophers 1. 5. 10.

a certaine maner presented himselfe to be seene. 1.5.1.

The wisdome of God is testified, not only by those things which philosophers and learned men do finde by speculation in heauen and earth, but also which common men do perceiue by the onely helpe of their eyes. 1.5.2.

That we may with true faith conceiue so much as behooueth vs to know concerning God, it is good to learne the historie of the Creation of the world, in such sort as Moses hath set it forth, the chiefe points whereof are briefly rehearsed. 1.14.20.

The consideration of the works of God, that is to say, of the Creation of all things, ought to be applied to two principall ends: first that we do not with vnthankfull neglecting or forgetfulnesse passe ouer his vertues which he presenteth apparantly to be seene in his creatures. 1.14.21. Secondly, that wee may learne to apply them to our selues whereby we may stirre vp our selues to the trust, inuocation, praise, and loue of him. 2.14.22.

A cōtutation of the shamelesnes of certain Papistes, which say that the riotous excessse of priests and of all the Popish church, is the gloriousnes of the kingdom of Christ which the holy prophets spake of before. 4.5.17.

Death of Christ.

Although Christ hath by the whole course of his obedience, that is to say, by his whole life and all the partes thereof, redeemed vs, yet the Scripture to set fourth more plainly the manner of our saluation, doth ascribe the same as peculiar and proper to the death of Christ. In the which the voluntarie yeelding of Christ hath the first place, which yet was so voluntarie as hee gaue ouer his owne affection not without strife. Also his condemnation is to be considered: Wherein two things are to be noted, namely that christ was reputed among the wicked, and yet that his innocencie was oftentimes testified euen by the iudges owne mouth. 2.1.5.

The manner of his Death is to be marked, that is to say, the accursed crosse. And it is declared by many testimonies of *Esai*e and the Apostles, that this behooued us to be, that the curse which was due to vs being cast vpon him and so ouercome and taken away, we should be deliuered. And this was figuratiuely represented in the sacrifices of Moses lawe, which at the last was performed in Christ the Originall truth of all figures. 2.1.6.

Both in the Death and buriall of Christ a double benefit is set before vs, that is to say, deliuerance from Death whereunto we were in bondage and the mortifying of our flesh. 2.1.6.

Descending of Christ to hell.

The Descending of Christ to Hell containeth the mysterie of a great thing, and is of no small importance to the effect of our redemption. Diuers expositions of this article are rehearsed and confuted. 2.16.8.9.

A true, godlie, holie and comfortable exposition thereof out of the word of God, which is also consumed by the testimonie of the old doctors, that Christ did not only suffer a bodily death, but also did feele the rigour of Gods vengeance, whereby hee might both appease his wrath and satisfie his iust iudgement: and therefore it behooued that he should, as it were hand to hand wrastle wrastle with the power of hell and with the horror of cuerlasting death, yet was God not at any time either his enemie, or angrie with him. But he did suffer the greuousnes of Gods seueritie, in respect that he being stricken and beaten with the hand of God, did feele all the tokens of Gods wrath, and punishment. 2. 16. 10, 11.

A confutation of certaine wicked and vnlearned men, which at this day doe finde fault with this exposition crying out that the Sonne of God hath wrong done to him, & that he is charged with desperatiō, which is contrarie to Faith. Therefore it is prooued against them with manifest testimonies, that these two things doe very well stand together, that Christ feared, was troubled in Spirite, was afraide, was tempted in euery point as we are, and yet that he is without sinne. 2. 16. 12.

Diuels.

Those things that the Scripture teacheth concerning Diuels, tend commonly to this end, that we should be carefull to beware of their deceits, and furnish our selues with those weapons which may be able to beate backe the most mightie enemies. 1. 14. 13.

That we should be the more stirred vp to doe so, it sheweth vs that there is not one or two Diuels, but great armies of euill spirits that make warre against vs: and in what sense it sometime speaketh of the Diuell in the singular number. 1. 14. 14.

This ought to enflame vs to a continuall warre with the Diuell, for that he is euerie where called enemie to God & vs. 1. 14. 15.

The Diuell is naturally wicked, a murderer, a lyer, and forger of all maliciousnes. 1. 14. 15. But this euilnesse of nature is not by creation, but by corruption. 1. 14. 16.

It is curiositie to enquire of the cause, maner, time and fashion of the fall of the euill Angels, forasmuch as the Scripture leaueth it vspoken. 1. 14. 16.

This the Diuell hath of himselfe and of his owne naughtinesse, desperately and purposely to strue against God, but he can doe and perforce nothing vnlesse God be willing and graunt it. 1. 14. 17.

God so tempereth this gouernment, that he giueth Satan no reigne ouer the Soules of the faithfull, forasmuch as in the ende they cuer obtaine the victorie, although in some particular dooings they be wounded and beaten downe: but he onely giueth the wicked to him to gouerne, and to vse his power vpon their Soules and bodies. 1. 14. 18.

A confutation of them which say that Diuels are nothing else but euill affectiōs or perturbations: and it is prooued by testimonies of Scripture, that they are mindes or Spirites endued with sence and vnderstanding. 1. 14. 19.

Every priuate man ought to esteem them that be Excommunicate as strangers from the Church, but not to accompt them past hope, but to endeavour to the vtermost of their power to bring them into the way againe, 4.12.9,10.

If the bench of Elders doe not so diligently correct faults as they ought, or if the Pastors cannot amende all thinges as they would, yet priuate men ought not to depart from the Church, neither ought the Pastors to shake off their ministerie, 4.12.11.

F.

Faith.

THe name of Faith otherwise taken among holy writers than it is among the prophane, 4.22.13.

How it is to be vnderstoode that God is the obiect of Faith, 2.6.4.

Of Faith. And here the Sophisters are reprooued, which vnderstand nothing else by this word Faith, but a common assent to the historie of the Gospell, and doe simplic call God the obiect of Faith, in the meane time leauing out Christ, without whome there is no Faith, nor any accessē to God, 3.2.11.

A confutation of the Schoole mens doctrine concerning vnexpressed Faith, whereas Faith requireth an expresse reknowledging of the goodnesse of God, in which standeth our righteoufnesse, 3.2.2.

Our Faith, so long as we are wauering in the world, is enwrapped with many remnants of ignorance, and in all things indefinitie is euer mingled with Faith, wherof many examples are seene in the Disciples of Christ before that they came to perfecte light, yet this is still most true, that vnderstanding is euer ioyned with Faith, 3.2.3,4.

There is a certaine obedience to Christ, and aptnesse to learne, with a desire to profite, which is called by the name of Faith, whereas it is but a preparation to Faith, and that same may be called an vnexpressed Faith: yet it farre differeth from the Papists inuention, 3.2.5.

The true Faith or knowledge of Christ, is when we conceiue him in such sort as he is offered of the Father, that is to say, clothed with his Gospell. And Faith hath a mutuall relation to the word and the word to Faith, because the word is the fountaine of Faith, the ground of Faith, and the mirror in which Faith beholdeth God, 3.2.6.

Faith, although it assent to all the parts of the word of God, yet most properly it hath regard therein to the good will and mercie of God, that is to say, the promises of grace grounded vpon Christ, for the vnderstanding & certaintie whercof, the holy Ghost lighteneth our minds and strengtheneth our hearts: Hereupon is gathered the definition of Faith, 3.2.7.

A confutation of the Sophisters distinction of Faith, formed and formeckesse: whereby it appeareth that they neuer thought of the singular giste of the holy Ghost, for as much as Faith can in no wise be seuered from a godly affection, 3.2.8.

This word Faith hath diuerse significations, and is sometime taken for the power to doe miracles, with which giste of God, sometime the wicked are endued: Sometime it is figuratiuelie taken for that knowledge of God which is in some wicked men, which is rather a shadow & image of Faith,

The Table.

of which faith there are diuers sorts in them 3.2.9,10.

The reprobate haue also sometime such a like feeling as the elect haue, yet they doe not fully conceiue the force of spirituall grace, but only confusedly. Neuertheles the same is a certaine inferiour working of the holy ghost. But this feeling differeth far from the peculiar testimonie which hee giueth to the elect. 3.2.11.

Yet is not the Spirit deceitfull, which lightly sprinkeleth the reprobate sometime with such a knowledge of the Gospell, and feeling of the loue of God as afterward doth vanish away. Sometime also there is stirred vp in their hearts a certaine desire of mutuall loue towards God, but such a loue as is a hyred and not a hartie loue. At length it is concluded that there be some which do not faime a faith, and yet do lacke the true faith. Which is also proued by testimonies. 3.2.12. and such a feeling is in the Scripture called faith, although it be vnproperly so called. 3.2.13.

Faith is sometime taken for the sound doctrine of religion, & the whole summe thereof: contrariwise sometime it is restrained to some particular obiekt, and sometime it signifieth the ministerie of the Church. 3.2.13.

Faith is most rightfully called knowledge and science, and yet is such a knowledge as rather consisteth of certaine persuasion than of vnderstanding, for as much as that which our minde conceiueth by faith is most infinite. 3.2.14.

Faith is not content with a doubtfull opinion or a darke conceiuing, but requireth a full and settled assurednesse: and hereunto are to bee referred all those titles of commendation wherewith the holy Ghost setteth forth the authority of the word of God. 3.2.15.

Many doe so conceiue the mercie of God, that they receiue verie little comfort thereof, bicause they doubt whether he will be mercifull to themselves or no: but there is a farre other feeling of the abundant store of Faith, the chiefe ground whereof is that we do not thinke the promises to bee true without our selues only, but rather that by inwardly embracing them we may make them our owne. Hereupon is gathered, who may truly be called faithfull. 3.2.15.16.

Though the faithfull in reknowledging the goodnesse of God toward them are not onely oftentimes tempted with iniquitnesse, but also are sometime shaken with most grieuous terrors: yet this withstandeth not but that faith bringeth assurednesse with it, because howsoeuer they be troubled, yet they neuer fall and departe from that sure affiance which they haue conceiued of the mercie of God, but struing with their owne weakenesse they alway get the vpper hand at last: which is proued by many examples in Dauid. 3.2.17.

A description of the battell of the flesh & the spirit within a faithfull soule. 3.2.18.

The assurednes of Gods good wil. 3.2.18.

A confutation of the most pestilent subtle reasoning of certaine halfe Papistes, which although they confesse that so oft as wee looke vpon Christ, we finde plentifull matter to hope well, yet will needes haue vs to wauer and doubt in consideration of our owne vnworthinesse. And it is proued that we ought neuertheresse to looke for assured saluation, forasmuch as Christ by a certaine maruellous communion doth dayly grow together more and more into one bodie with vs. 3.2.24.

So soone as we haue any one drop of faith we begin to beholde God mercifull vnto vs, although a far off in deed, yet with so assured sight, as we know we are not deceiued: Both these pointes are proued by testimonies of Paul. 3.2.19.20.

It is shewed by examples, how Faith armeth and fortifieth it selfe with the worde of God to beare the violent assaults of tentations, and how the godly minde neuer suffereth the affiance of Gods mercie to be plucked away from it, although it be assailed with many remnants of vnbeleefe and distrust. 3.2.21.

In the good will of God: which faith is saide to haue respect vnto, although faith do chiefly looke vnto the assured expectation of eternall life, yet there are also contained promises of this present life and a perfect suretie of all good things, but the same such as may be gathered of the word: both these points are confirmed by testimonies of Scripture. 3.2.28.

Faith although it embrace the worde of God in euerie pointe, that is to saie, in the commaundementes also and in the prohibitions and threatnings, yet hath her foundation and proper marke whereunto it is directed, in the free promise of mercy: and for this reason the Gospell is called the word of faith, and is set as contrarie to the law. 3.2.29.

Yet doe we not by this distinction reare faith in sunder as Pighius shamefully cauleth 3.2.30.

Faith doeth no lesse neede the worde of God, than the fruit doth neede the liuely roote of the tree, and with the worde must be ioyned a consideration of the power of God, without the which mens eares will either not willingly, heare the worde, or not esteeme it worthily. His power is to be considered: in that that it is effectually, that is to say, by the workes of God, and by his benefites either particular or auncient, & such as he hath bestowed vpon the whole Church. 3.2.31.

The faithfull oftentimes so behaue themselves, that some errors are mingled with their faith, & they seeme to passe the bounds of the word, but yet so that faith hath alway the vpper hand: This is proued by the examples of Sara and Rebecca, whom in the crooked turnings of their mind, God did by a secret bridle hold fast in the obedience of his word. 3.2.31.

By reason of our blindnes and stiffneckednes, the worde sufficeth not to make vs haue faith, vnlesse the spirit of God do enlighten our minde, and strengthen our hart with his power: and the same spirite is not onely the begunner of our faith, but also doth encrease it by degrees 3.2.33.

Although it seeme to the most parte of men a most strange doctrine, that no man can beleue in Christ, but he to whom it is giuen, yet it is proued to be most true by reasons, testimonies of Scripture, and examples 3.2.34.

Therefore faith is called the Spirit of Faith, the worke and good pleasure of God: and it is a singular gifte, which he giueth by singular priuiledge to whom he will, as it is proued by notable sentences taken out of Augustine. 3.2.35.

It is not enough that the mind be enlightened with vnderstanding of the word, vnlesse also the assurdednes of the word be poured into the verie heart, both which things the Spirit worketh, which is therefore called the seale, the pledge, and the spirit of promise 3.2.36.

Although faith be tossed with diuers doubtings, yet it alway at the last, escapeth out of the gulfe of ostentations, & receiueh most sweete quietnes. 3.2.37.

A confutation of the damnable doctrine of the Schoolemen, which say that we can none otherwise determine of the grace of God toward vs, than by moral coniecture. 3.2.38.

They are proued to be miserably blinde, in saying that it is rashnes for vs to conceiue an vndoubted knowledge of the wil of God: A good comparision of them & Paul in this point of doctrine 3.1.39.

A confutation of their trifling shift that although wee may take vpon vs to iudge of the grace of God according to the present state of rightcousnes, yet the knowledge of persevering to the end abideth in suspense, 3.2.40.

It is proued that the definition of faith taught in this chapter, Sect. 7. agreeth with the Apostles definition: Heb. cap. 11. And the error of the schoolemen, that charitie is before faith and hope, is confuted by the testimonie of Bernard. 3.2.41.

Hope is alway engendered of faith, and is the vndiuided companion of faith, so that whosoeuer lacketh hope, is proued also to haue no faith. Also faith is nourished and strengthened by hope, and how necessarie are the helpes of hope to stablish faith, which is assailed with so many sorts of tentations. 3.2.42.

By reason of this conioyning and alliance of faith and hope, the scripture doth many times vse those two wordes without difference, and sometime ioyneth them together. A confutation of the error of Peter Lombarde, which maketh two foundations of faith, that is to say, the grace of God, & the merit of works. 3.2.43.

Of the imperfection of faith, and the confirming and encrease thereof. 4.14.738.

Fear.

The faithfull are oftentimes troubled with Feare and distrust by reason of the feeling of their owne weakenes. 3. 2. 17.

Another kinde of Feare conceiued in a godly hart, either by examples of gods vengeance against the wicked, or by consideration of his owne miserie: Such feare is so much not contrarie to faith, that the faithfull are much exhorted to haue it. Neither is it any maruell, if there be in a faithfull soule both feare and faith, sith on the other side in the wicked there are both dull negligence and carefulesnes. 3. 2. 22, 23.

The feare of God proceedeth out of a double feeling, namely when we honor god as our father, and feare him as our Lorde: Neither is it any maruell if one minde haue both those affectiones.

This feare differeth from the feare of the vnfaithfull, which they commonlie call a seruile feare. 3. 2. 27.

Of forsaking of our selues.

The first beginning of framing our life after the rule set forth in the law, is to consider that we are not at our owne libertie, but hallowed and dedicate to God. And therefore we ought to forsake our selues, and our owne reason (which as the Philosophers thinke, ought alone to be obeyed) to the end that we may be gouerned by the worde and Spirit of the Lord. 3. 7. 1.

Also that wee ought not to seeke those things that are our owne, but those things that are according to the will of the Lorde, and do serue to aduance his glorie. And that this is the forsaking of our selues, without the which there is a world of vices enclosed in the soule of man, and if there be any seeming of vertue at all, the same is corrupted with wicked desire of glorie. 3. 7. 2.

The forsaking or mortifying of our selues, is partly in respect of men, and partly, yea, and chiefly in respect of God. Towarde other men, the scripture commandeth vs to do two things: namely to preferre them in honour before our selues, and with vnfaigned truth to employ our selues wholly to procure their commodities. How the first of these points is to bee performed is taught in the 3. 4. 7. and also how the scripture leadeth vs by the hand to the second point is shewed in the 3. 7. 5.

See certaine things pertaining to this purpose. 3. 20. 43.

Freewill.

Man was endued with Freewill in the first estate of his creation. 1. 15. 8. which hee lost by his fall. Of this the Philosophers were ignorant, and so all such as follow them, giuing freewill to man, are vtterly deceiued. 1. 15. 8.

The pliability or weake power of freewill, which was in the first man, doth not excuse his fall. 1. 15. 8.

It is as well for our profit, as for the glorie of God, to acknowledge all our strength to be but a staffe made of a reede, yea, but a smocke. In the meane time we must beware, that while we take all vprightnes from man, wee doe not thereof take occasion of slothfulesnes. But rather wee ought thereby to be stirred vp to seeke in God all the goodnesse whereof we our selues are void: The defenders of freewill doe rather throw it downe headlong than stablish it. 2. 2. 1.

The Philosophers determine three powers of the soule, Vnderstanding, Sense, and Will or Appetite: and they thinke that the reason of mans vnderstanding sufficeth for his good gouernance: that will is by sense

fenſe moued to euill, ſo that it doth hardly yeeld it ſelfe to reaſon, and ſometime is diuerſly drawn from the one to the other, but yet that it hath a free election and can not be ſtopped, that it may followe reaſon her guide in all things: finally that vertues and vices are in our powers. 2.2.2,3.

The Eccleſiaſtical writers, although they acknowledged the ſoundneſſe of vnderſtanding, and the freedom of will to haue been ſore wounded by ſinne, yet haue ſpoken too much Philoſophically of this matter. The olde writers did it for this purpoſe, firſt becauſe they were loth to teach a thing that ſhoulde bee an abſurditie in the common iudgement of men, and alſo ſpecially leaſt they ſhould giue a newe occaſion of ſlothfulneſſe to the fleſh being alreadie too much dull to goodneſſe, as appeereth by manie ſayings of Chryſoſtome and Hierome. The Greeke doctours aboute al other, and ſpecially Chryſoſtome, doe exceede meaſure in aduancing freewill. But all the olde writers generally, except Auguſtine, do ſo varie and wauer in this point of doctrine, that there can almoſt no certaintie bee gathered of their writings. They which came after theſe, fell one after another to woorſe and woorſe. The definitions of freewill out of Oriegen, Auguſtine, Bernard, Anſelme, Peter Lombard, and Thomas. 2.2.4.

Alſo of the common diſtinction of the three ſorts of libertie. 2.2.5.

Whether man bee wholly deprived of power to doe good, or whether hee haue yet ſome power though it be weake: where it is ſpoken of the common diſtinction of grace working and grace working together, and what is amiſſe in the ſame diſtinction. 2.2.6.

For aſmuch as it can not otherwiſe bee ſaid that man hath free will, but becauſe he doth euill of his owne will, and not by compulſion, it had bin very good for the church that this worde freewill had neuer bin vſed, which had raiſed vp men to a damnable truſt of themſelues. The old writers alſo do oft declare what they meane by that word, ſpeciallie Auguſtine, out of whome there are many places alleaged, where he weakeneth and mocketh the ſtrength thereof, both when he calleth it Bondwill, and when he expoundeth the thing it ſelfe as it is at large. 2.2.7,8.

Although the old Eccleſiaſtical writers do ſometime too much aduance freewill, and haue ſpoken doubtfully and diuerſly in that matter: yet it appeereth by very manie of their ſayings, that they litle or nothing eſteeming mans power, gaue the whole praiſe of all goodneſſe to the holy Ghoſt. Many ſuch ſentences are rehearſed out of Cypryan, Auguſtine, Eucherius, Chryſoſtome. 2.2.9.

The power of mans will is not to bee weyghed by the ſucceſſe of things, but by the choiſe of iudgement and the affection of will. 2.4.8.

It is proued againſt the defenders of free-will that ſinne is of neceſſitie, and yet neuertheleſſe ought to be impured: alſo that it is voluntarie, and yet cannot be auoided. 2.5.1.

A ſolution of another obiection of theirs, where they ſay that vnleſſe both vertues and vices proceed of free election of wil, it were no reaſon that man ſhoulde either be puniſhed or rewarded. 2.5.2.

Alſo another obiection, where they ſaie that if this were not the power of our will, to chooſe good or euill, then of neceſſitie either all men ſhould be good, or all men euill. 2.5.3.

Againſt the ſame men alſo it is proued that exhortations, admonitions, and rebukings are not in vaine, although it be not in the power of the ſinner to obey: and there is ſhewed what effect the ſame do worke both in the wicked and in the faithfull. 2.5.4,5.

It is not to be gathered by the commandments and law of God, that man hath free will and ſtrength to performe them, for God doth not onely command what ought to be done, but alſo promiſeth grace to obeie. 2.5.6,7,9.

This is proued as well in the commandments which require the firſt conuerſion to God, as alſo in thoſe which ſpeake ſimply of the obſeruing of the lawe, and thoſe which command men to continue in the receiued grace of God. For the ſame same God which requireth those things, doth testifie that the conuersion of a sinner, holinesse of life, stedfastnesse of continuance, are his free giftes, and the praise thereof is not to be parted betweene God and man. 2. 5. 8, 9, 11.

The conditionall promises, as, if ye will, if yee heare, and such like, doe not prooue that there is in man a free power of willing or hearing: yet it is prooued that God doth not mocke men in so bargaining with them, Also what is the vse of such protestations, both toward the godly and towarde the vn-godly. 2. 5. 10.

The reprochings, wherein God saith to his people that they were the cause that they receiued not all kinde of good things at his hande, doe not prooue that it was mans power to escape the euils where-with they were afflicted. And there is spoken of the vse of such reprochings as well toward them that obstinately goe forwarde in their faultes, as toward the conformable that are conuerted to repentance. Also whereas the Scripture doth sometime giue to vs the office of doing, it doth so for no other reason but to awaken the slothfulnesse of the flesh. 2. 5. 11.

The saying of Moses, The commaundement is nere to thee, in thy mouth, and in thy hart &c. maketh nothing for the defenders of free will, for as much as hee there speaketh not of the bare commaundements, but of the Euangelicall promises of the Law. 1. 5. 12.

No more do those places make for them, where it is saide that the Lorde looketh and watcheth to see what men wil doe. 2. 5. 13.

Also those places where good works are called ours: and wee are saide to doe that which is holy and pleasing to the Lord. And here is shewed that the onely Spirit of God worketh all good motions in vs, but yet not as in stocks. 2. 5. 14, 15.

Gospell.

Christ, although hee were knowne to the Iewes in time of the lawe, was yet shewed in deede onely by the Gospell: and the holy Fathers tasted of that grace, which is now offered to vs with full abundance: they sawe the day of Christ albeit with a dim sight, the glorie where of now shineth in the Gospell, without any veile betwene vs and it. 2. 9. 1, 2.

In the same place also is shewed, that the Gospell is properly and specially called the publishing of the grace giuen in Christ, and not the promises that are written by the Prophets concerning the remission of sins. Against the doctrine of Sernettus, which taketh away the promises vnder this pretence, that by the faith of the Gospell we haue the fulfilling of all the promises, it is prooued that though Christ offer to vs in the Gospell a present fulnesse of spirituall good things, yet the enioying thereof lieth hidden vnder the custodie of hope so long as wee liue in this worlde, and therefore we must yet rest vpon the promises. 2. 9. 3.

Holy Ghost.

Testimonies whereby the Godhead of the holy Ghost is prooued. 1. 13. 14, 15.

The holy Ghost is the bond wherewith Christ doth effectually binde vs to him, and without it, all that Christ hath suffered and done for the saluation of mankind doth nothing profit vs. 3. 1. 1, 3.

Christ came after a singular maner furnished with the holy Ghost, to seuer vs from the world, and therefore he is called the Spirite of sanctification. Why he is sometime called the Spirite of the Father, and sometime the Spirite of the Sonne. He is called the Spirite of Christ, not onely in respect that Christ is the eternall word, but also according to his person of Mediator. 3. 1. 2.

An exposition of the titles wherewith the Scripture setteth forth the holy Ghost : and there is entreated of the beginning and whole restoring of our saluation : The titles be these, the Spirite of adoption, the earnest and seale of our inheritance, life, water, oile, ointment, fire, a fountaine, the hand of God, &c. 3. 1. 3.

Faith is the cheefe worke of the holy Ghost, and therefore to it for the most part are al those things referred which are commonly founde in the Scripture to expresse the force and effectual power of the holy Ghost. 3. 1. 4.

Humilitie.

It is not the true Humilitie which God requireth of vs vnlesse we acknowledge our selues vtterly voide of all goodnesse and righteousnesse. 3. 12. 6.

Of this Humilitie there is an example shewed in the Publicane. 3. 12. 7.

That we may gve place to the calling of Christ, both presumption and carelesnesse must be far away from vs. 3. 12. 8.

There is no danger least man should take too much from himselfe, so that he learne that which wanteth in himselfe is to be recovered in God. It is a deuillish worde, although it be sweete to vs, that listeth vp man in himselfe : for repulging whereof, there are recited out of the Scripture many weightie sentences, which doe rigorously throwe downe man : and also there are recited certaine promises, which doe promise grace to none but to them that doe pine away with feeling of their owne pouertie. 2. 2. 10.

After such an inuention by and by foloweth the worshipping of the Image, like as of god or of any other creature in the image: both which the law of God forbiddeth. 1. 11. 8, 9.

Against them, which for defence of abominable idolatry, do pretend that they doe not take the Images for Gods, it is prooued that neither the Lewes did thinke their calfe to be God, nor the heathen when they made to themselves images did euer thinke the same to be God, whom yet no man excuse. 1. 11. 9.

The Papists are so perswaded as the heathen and the Idolatrous Lewes were, that they worship God himselfe vnder Images. 1. 11. 10. Neither can they escape away with their distinction of seruice and worship. 1. 11. 11, 16. and 1. 12. 2.

Of Images in the temples of Christians, 4. 9.

Euen the Idolaters themselves in all ages, naturally vnderstood that there is one onely God: but this vnderstanding auailed no further than to make them to be vnexcusable. 1. 10. 3.

Idolatrye is an euident prooffe that the knowledge of God is naturally planted in the minds of all men. 1. 3. 1.

Image of God in man.

What it is, that man was create after the Image of God: And heere are confuted the fonde expositions of Oslander and of other: and here is declared that though the Image of God do appeere also in the outward man & do extend to the whole excellencie wherewith the nature of man passeth all kinde of liuing creatures, yet the principall seat thereof is in the minde and in the hart, or in the soule and the powers thereof. 1. 15. 3. and 2. 2. 1.

The Image of God at the beginning appeared in Adam, in light of minde, vprightnes of hart, and the soundnes of all his parts: which is prooued by the repairing of corrupted nature, wherem Christ newly fashioned vs after the image of god, and by other arguments. 1. 15. 4.

Paul doth not vtterly condemne sutes, but reprobeth the vnmeasurable rage of suing at law among the Corinthians. 4. 20. 21.

Iustification of faith.

Of the Iustification of faith, and first of the definition of the name, and of the thing it selfe. 3. 11.

The article of doctrine concerning the Iustification of faith is of great importance. 3. 11. 1.

It is shewed by the scripture what it is to be iustified by works, and what it is to be iustified by faith. 3. 11. 2, 3, 4.

A confutation of the error of Oslander, concerning essentiall righteousness, which taketh from men, the earnest feeling of the true grace of Christ. 3. 11. 5, 6, 7. &c. to the 13.

A confutation of Oslanders inuention, that whereas Christ is both God and Man, hee was made righteous onely to vs in respect of his nature of Godhead and not of his Manhood. 3. 11. 8, 9.

Against them which imagine a righteousness compounded of faith and workes, it is prooued that when the one is established, the other must needs be ouerthrowen. 3. 11. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18.

It is prooued by the scripture against the Sophisters, that this is a sure principle, that we are iustified by faith onely. 3. 11. 19, 20.

It is prooued by testimonies of scripture, that the righteousness of faith is reconciliation with God, which consisteth onely vpon the remission of sins. 3. 11. 21, 22.

By the onely intercession or meane of the righteousness of Christ, we obtaine to be Iustified before God. 3. 11. 23.

That we may be throughly perswaded of the free Iustification, wee must lift vp our mindes to the iudgement seate of God: before which, nothing is acceptable but that which is whole and perfect in euery behalfe, the dreadfull maiestie whereof is described by many places of scripture. 3. 12. 1, 2.

All godly writers do shew that when men haue to do with God, the onely place of refuge for conscience is in the free mercie of God, excluding all trust of workes: And this is prooued by testimonies of Augustine and Bernard. 3. 12. 3.

Two things are to be obserued in free Iustification: the first, that the Lord keepe fast his glorie vnminished: which is done when he alone is acknowledged to be righteous, for they glory against God, which glorie in themselves. 3. 13. 1, 2. the seconde, that our consciences may haue quietnes in the sight of his iudgement. 3. 13. 3, 4, 5.

What manner of beginning is of Iustification, and what continuall proceedings. 3. 14.

A briefe sum of the foundation of Christian doctrine, taken out of Paul. 3. 15. 5.

This foundation being laide, wise builders do well and orderly builde vpon, whether it be to set forth doctrine and exhortation, or to giue comfort. 3. 15. 8.

Good workes are not destroyed by the doctrine of Iustification of faith. 3. 16. 1.

It is most false that mens mindes are drawn away from affection of well doing, when we take from them the opinion of deseruing. 3. 16. 2, 3.

It is a most vaine slander, that men are prouoked to sin, when we affirme a free forgiveness of sins, in which we say that righteousness consisteth. 3. 16. 4.

Knowledge of God.

To knowe God, is not onely to conceiue that there is some God, but to vnderstande so much as behooueth vs to knowe of him, and so much as auaileth for his glorie, and is expedient. 1. 2. 1.

The Knowledge of God ought to tende to this ende, first to frame vs to feare and reuerence: and then that by it guiding and teaching vs we may learne to aske all good things of him, and to account the same receiued at his hand. 1. 2. 2. & 1. 5. 8.

The Philosophers had no other Knowledge of God than that which made them vnexcusable, but did not bring them to the truth. 2. 2. 18.

This perswasion is naturally planted in all men, that there is some God. 1. 2. 3. and that to this ende, that they which doe not worship him, may be condemned by their owne iudgement. 1. 3. 1.

Though all men knowe by nature that there is a God, yet some become vaine in their superstitions, and other some of set purpose doe maliciously depart from God. 1. 4. 1.

Law.

The Lawe, that is to say, the forme of religion set foorth by Moses, was not giuen to holde the olde people still in it, but to nourish in their hearts the hope of saluation in Christ vntill his coming: which is prooued by this that Moses repeateth the mention of the couenant: and by the order of the ceremonies appointed as well in sacrifices as in washings, also by the office of priesthood of the tribe of Leui and the honor of kingdome in Dauid and his posterity.

The lawe also of the ten commaundements was giuen to prepare men to seeke Christ. 2. 7. 1, 2. and that is done, when it maketh vs vnexcusable being on euery side conuicted of our sinnes, to moue vs to seeke for pardon of our guiltinesse. 2. 7. 3, 4.

It is prooued by the Scripture and declared that the obseruing of the lawe is impossible. 2. 7. 5.

There are three vses and offices of the morall Lawe: The first is, that shewing vnto vs the righteousnesse which onely is acceptable vnto God, it may be as a glasse for vs, wherein we may behold our weaknesse, and by it our wickednesse, and finally by them both our accursednes: Neither turneth this to any dishonour of the Law, but maketh for the glory of the bountifullnes of God, which both with helpe of grace aideth vs to doe that which wee are commaunded, and by mercie putteth away our offences. Neither yet doth this office altogether cease in the reprobate. 2. 7. 6, 7, 8, 9.

The second office, is to restrain the reprobate with feare of punishment, least they vnbrededly commit the wickednesse which inwardly they alway nourish and loue: and also to draw backe the children of God before their regeneration from outwarde licentiousnesse. 2. 7. 10, 11.

The thirde office, concerneth the faithfull: for the Lawe although it bee alreadie written with the finger of God in their hearts, yet profiteth them two waies: For by studying vpon it they are more confirmed in the vnderstanding of the will of the Lorde, and are stured vp and strengthened to obedience, that they goe not out of kinde by the sluggishnesse of the flesh. 2. 7. 12, 13. For as touching the curse of the Lawe, it is taken away from the faithfull, that it can no more extend it selfe against them in damning and destroying them. 2. 7. 14.

By the ten commaundments of the Lawe wee learne the same things which wee but slenderly taste by instruction of the lawe of nature: First that we owe to God reuerence, loue, and feare, that righteousnesse pleaseth him, and wickednesse displeaseth him: finally, that examining our life by the rule of the Lawe, we are vnwoorthie to be accounted among the creatures of God, and

and that our power is vnſufficient, yea no power at all to performe the lawe. Both theſe points engender in vs humilitie and abaſing of our ſelues, which teacheth vs to flee to the mercie of God, and to craue the helpe of his grace. 2.8.1,2,3.

For as much as God the Lawe-maker is ſpiritually, that is to ſay, ſpeaketh as well to the ſoule as to the body, therefore the lawe likewiſe requireth not onely an outwarde honeſtie, but alſo an inwarde and ſpiritually righteouſneſſe and a very angelike pureneſſe. 2.8.6. which is prooued by Chriſtes owne expoſition, when hee confuted the Phariſees wrong interpretation, which required onely a certaine outward obſeruation of the lawe. 2.8.7.

There is alway more in the commandments and prohibitions of the lawe, than is expreſſed. Therefore for the right and true expoſition of them, it behooueth to wounding what is the intent or end of euey of them: Then from that which is commaunded or forbidden, we muſt drawe an argument to the contrarie, that we may vnderſtand, that not onely an euill is forbidden, but alſo the good is commaunded which is contrarie to that euill. 2.8.8,9.

Why God ſpake by way of emplied comprehending, in ſetting forth the forme of his commaundements. 2.8.10:

Of the diuiding of the Lawe into two Tables: and howe therein wee are taught that the firſt foundation and the very ſoule of righteouſneſſe is the worſhipping of God. 2.8.11.

Of the diuiſion of the ten commaundements, and how many commaundements are to be appointed to the firſt table, and how many to the ſecond. 2.8.12,50.

An expoſition of the commaundements of God: Where is declared that the Lord is the beginning of the Lawe, to ſtabliſh his owne maieſtie, vſeth three arguments: Firſt by challenging to himſelfe the ſoueraigne power and right of dominion ouer vs, he doth as it were by neceſſitie drawe vs to obey him: ſecondly hee allureth vs with the ſweetneſſe of the promiſe of grace: thirdly hee mooueth vs to obedience with rehearſall of the benefit that we haue receiued. 2.8.13,14,15.

The Lawe teacheth not onely certaine introductions and principles of righteouſneſſe, but the very accompliſhment thereof, the expreſſing of the image of God, and the perfection of holineſſe: which Lawe is all contained in two points, that is to ſay, the loue of God and of our neighbour. 2.8.51.

The Lawe of Nature. 2.2.22.

Lawes Politike.

Neither can Lawes be without the Magiſtrate, nor the Magiſtrate without Lawes. A conſutation of them which ſay that a commonweale is not well ordered, vnleſſe it be governed by the politike Lawes of Mofes. For this purpoſe is rehearſed a diuiſion of the Lawes of Mofes into morall Lawes, ceremonies, and iudiciall Lawes, and the end of euey one of them being diſcuſſed, it is prooued that it is lawfull for euey feuerall nation to make politike Lawes, 4.20.14,15. ſo that they agree with that naturall equitie, the reaſon whereof is ſet forth in the morall Lawe of Mofes. Therefore it is ſhewed by examples that they may alter the ordinances of penalties according to the diuerſitie of the country, time, and other circumſtances. 4.20.16.

Lying.

An expoſition of the ninth commaundement, wherein the Lorde forbiddeth falſehood, wherewith we by Lying or backbiting, doe hurt any mans good name, or hinder his commoditie. 2.8.47.

We many times ſinne againſt this commaundement, although we doe not Lie. But in this point there muſt be a difference wiſely made betweene the ſlaundering which is here condemned, and iudiciall accusation or rebuking, which is vſed vpon deſire to bring to amendment. 2.8.48.

Life of a Chriſtian man.

The Law containeth a rule how to frame a mans Life, and diuers places alſo of the Scripture doe here and there declare it, and not without an orderly maner of teaching, although not ſo exquisite and curious as the Philoſophers doe. 3.6.1.

Herein the Scripture doth two things: it ſtirreth vs vp to the loue of righteouſneſſe and teacheth a rule how to follow the ſame.

The

The Table.

The first pointe it worketh by diuers arguments and reasons. 3. 6. 2. and herein the Scripture layeth much better foundations, than can be found in all the bookes of the Philosophers. 3. 6. 5.

Against them that pretend a knowledge of Christ, when their life and manners resemble not the doctrine of Christ. 3. 6. 4.

Though perfection were to be wished in all men, yet we must also acknowledge for Christians the most part of men which haue not yet proceeded so farre. We must alway endeouour forward, and not despaire for the smalnesse of our profiting. 3. 6. 5.

Out of a place of Paul these are gathered to be the parts of a well framed Life: consideration of the grace of God, forsaking of wickednesse and of worldly lustes, sobernes, righteousnesse, godlinesse, (which signifieth true holinesse) and the blessed hope of immortallitie. 3. 7. 3.

Life present, and the helps thereof.

The Scripture teacheth the best way how to vse the goods of this Life. 3. 10. 4, 5.

Two faultes must be auoyded: that we doe neither bind our consciences with too much rigorousnesse nor giue loose reines to the intemperance of men. 3. 10. 1, 3.

God both in clothing and in foode provided not onely for our necessitie, but also for our delight. 3. 10. 2.

It is most necessarie, that euery one of vs in all the dooings of his Life doe looke vpon his vocation, that we attempt nothing rashly or with doubtfull conscience. 3. 10. 6.

God disdaineth not to prouide also for the necessities of our earthly body, and in what sense we aske of him our dayly bread. 3. 20. 44.

Life to come.

God doth by diuers mysteries teach vs the contempt of this present Life, that we may earnestly desire Life to come. 3. 9. 1, 2, 4.

Such a contempt of this Life is required of vs, that we neither hate it nor be vnthankfull to God, of whose clemencie it is a testimonie to the faithfull. 3. 9. 3.

An admonition to them which are holden with too much feare of death, that Christians ought rather to desire that daie which shall make an end of their continuall miseries, and fill them with true ioy. 3. 9. 5, 6.

Of the incomprehensible excellencie of the eternall felicitie (which is the end of the Resurrection) the taste of the sweetenesse whereof we ought here continually to take, but yet to auoide curiositie whereupon doe arise trifling & noysome questions, yea and hurtfull speculations. And there shall be an equall measure of glorie to all the children of God in heauen. 3. 25. 10, 11. In which place also is an answer to the questions which some men do mooue concerning the state of the children of God after the resurrection.

In what sense eternall Life is sometime called the reward of workes. 3. 18. 2, 4.

M.

Magistrates.

THe office of Magistrates is not onely holy and lawfull before God, but also the most holy and honorable degree in all the life of men, and this is prooued by diuerse titles wherewith the Scripture doth set it forth, and by the examples of holy men, which haue borne ciuill power. 4. 20. 4.

This consideration is a pricke to godly Magistrates to mooue them to the dooing of their duetic, & also it is a comfort to ease the hard traouellers of their office. 4. 20. 6.

A consutation of them, which say that though in the old time vnder the law Kings and Iudges ruled ouer Gods people, yet this seruile kind of gouernement doth not agree with the perfection which Christ hath brought with his Gospell. 4. 20. 5, 7.

They erre which exclude the Magistrates from the charge of religion, forasmuch as their office extendeth to both the tables of the law. It is proued by Scripture, that they are ordeined Protectors and defenders as well of the worshipping of God as of common peace and honestie, which they can not thorowly performe without the power of the sword. 4. 20. 9.

A declaration of this question by Scripture, how the Magistrates may be godlie, and also draw their sworde, and shed the blood of men, and it is prooued, that they are so farre from sinning in punishing offenders, that this is one of the vertues of a King, and a proofe of their godlines. Herein the Magistrates must beware of two faultes namely extreme rigorouſnes, and ſuperſtitious deſire of pittie. 4. 20. 10.

It is the ductie of ſubiectes towards Magiſtrates, to thinke honorable of them as of the Miniſters and Deputies of God, for- aſmuch as concerneth their degree, but not that they ſhould eſteeme the vices of men for vertues. 4. 20. 22.

It is alſo their dutie with mindes hartily bent to the honouring of them to declare their obedience towards them, whether it be in following their decrees or in paying of tributes, &c. to pray to God for their ſafetie and proſperitie, to raiſe no tumults and not to thruſt themſelves into the office of the Magiſtrate. 4. 20. 23.

Euen wicked Princes of euill life, and which rule tyrannouſly (for ſomuch as perta- neth to publike obedience) ought to be had in as great reuerence and honor as we would giue to the beſt King that might be, 4. 20. 24, 25. becauſe euen they alſo haue the publike power not without the prouidence and ſingular power of God. Which is proued by diuerſe testimonies and ex- amples of Scripture: and there is ſhewed with what conſideratio is thoſe ſubiectes ought to bridle their owne impatience which lue vnder ſuch vngodly and wicked tyrantes. 4. 20. 26, 27. 28, 29, 31.

It is not lawfull for priuate men to riſe vp againſt tyrants, but onely for them which by the lawes of the Kingdome or of the countrie, are the defenders of the liberty of the people. 4. 20. 31.

The Lorde by his maruellous good- neſſe and prouidence, doth ſometime raiſe vp ſome of his ſeruantes to puniſh tyrantes, and ſometime alſo hee directeth thereunto the rage of wicked men while they intende an other thing. 4. 20. 30.

In the obedience which is due to the commaundementes of Kinges and Rulers this is alway to be excepted, that it draw vs not away from the obedience of God: Neither is any wrong done to them when we reſuſe to obey them in ſuch things as they commaund againſt God: And this is our ductie, how great and preſent perill ſoeuer doe hang vpon ſuch conſtan- cie. 4. 20. 32.

Man.

Man is by knowledge of himſelfe not on- ly moued to ſeeke God, but alſo led as it were by the hand to finde him. 1. 1. 1.

The creation of Man is a notable ſhew of the power, wiſedome, and goodneſſe of God: Wherefore Man is by ſome of the Philoſophers called a little world. 1. 5. 3.

The vnthankefulneſſe of men which ſee- ling tokens of the prouidence of God both in their Soule and body, yet doe not giue God praife. 1. 5. 4.

Two ſorts of knowledge of our ſelues, the one in our firſt Original eſtate, the other after Adams fall, and the latter is not to be receiued without conſidering the liſt, leaſt we ſhould ſeeme to impute corruption to God the Author of nature. 1. 1. 5. 1.

The knowledge of himſelfe is moſt ne- ceſſarie for Man, which conſiſteth in this (as the truth of God preſenteth) that firſt conſidering to what ende he is created and endued with excellent gifts, he ſhould hang altogether vpon God, of whom he hath all things by gift: then, that weying his owne miſerable eſtate after the fall of Adam, he ſhould truly loth himſelfe and conceiue a new deſire to ſeeke God, that in him hee may recouer theſe good things, of which he himſelfe is found vtterly void and emp- tie. Wherefore we muſt beware that in this point we hearken not to the iudgement of the fleſh and to the bookes of Philoſophers, which while they withhold vs in conſide- ring onely our good things, would carry vs away into a moſt wicked ignorance of our ſelues. 2. 1. 1, 2, 3.

Man can neuer come to the true know- ledge of himſelfe, unleſſe he haue firſt be- holden the face of God, that is to ſay, till he haue begun to know and weigh by the word of God what and how exact is the perfec- tion of his righteouſneſſe, wiſedome, and power, to the which we ought to be made of like forme. 1. 1. 2.

Euen the moſt holy men were ſtricken with feare and aſtoniſhment, when God did extraordinarily ſhew his preſence and glory vnto them. 1. 1. 3.

That whole Man is corrupted in both partes of him (that is to ſay both in vnder- ſtanding, minde, and in heart or will) is proued

The Table.

prooued by diuers titles wherwith the scripture describeth him, specially when it saith that he is flesh: And there is declared that this worde flesh is not referred onely to the sensuall part, but also to the superiour part of the soule.2.3.1.

That men do in vaine seeke for any good thing in their owne nature, is prooued by Paul, which intreating of the vniuersall kindred of the childre of Adam, & not rebuking the corrupted maners of some one age alone but accusing the perpetual corruption of nature, taketh from men righteousnes, that is to say, vprightnes & purenes, and then vnderstanding, and last of al the fear of God.2.3.2.

A confutation of the obiection concerning certain heathen men, which forasmuch as they were al their life long by the guiding of nature bent to the endeour of vertue and honestie, do seem to warne vs, that we should not esteeme the nature of Man, altogether corrupt. Therefore it is declared that in the vnbelleeuers God doth not inwardly cleanse the corruption of nature wherewith Man is in eche part defiled, (as he doth in the elect) but by this prouidence sometime he bridleth it in them, that it breake not forth into deedes; and restraineth it by diuers waies, so much as he knoweth to be expedient for preserving of the vniuersall state of things.2.3.3.

Those vertues which wee reade to haue beene in heathen Men, are not sufficient prooues of the purenesse of nature, for as much as their minde was inwardly not vpright, being corrupted with ambition or some other poison, and not directed with desire to set forth the glorie of God: and also forasmuch as those vertues are not the common giftes of nature, but the speciall graces of God, which he diuersly and by a certaine measure giueth to prophane Men, as oftentimes to kings, and sometime to priuate Men.2.3.4.

See Image of God in Man, Marriage.

An exposition of the seuenth commandment, wherein the Lord forbiddeth fornication and requireth chastitie and cleanness, which we ought to keepe and preserue both in our mind, and in our eies, and in the apparell of our bodie, and in our toong, and in the moderate vse of meate and drinke. 2.8.41,41.

Continence is a singular gifte of God, which he giueth not to all men, but to some, yea and that sometime for a season: As for them to whom it is not granted, let them alway flee to Marriage, which is ordained of the Lord for the remedie of mans necessitie.2.8.41,42,43.

Maried persons must beware that they commit nothing vnbecoming the honestie and temperance of Marriage: Otherwise they seeme to bee adulterers of their owne wiues, and not husbands.2.8.44.

The Papists do wrongfully call mariage a Sacrament: And their reasons are confuted.4.19.34. It is prooued that the place of Paul, wherewith they seeke to cloke themselves, maketh nothing for them.4.19.35.

In the meane they disagree with themselves when they exclude priestes from this sacrament, and do say that it is vnclannes and defiling of the flesh 4.19.36.

By this false colour of Sacrament, the Pope with his clergie haue drawn to themselves the hearing of causes of Matrimonte, & haue made lawes of mariage, which partly are manifestly wicked against God, and partly most vniust toward men, which lawes are rehearsed.4.19.37.

Mediator Christ.

It behoued that Christ, to the ende that he might performe the office of Mediatour, should bee made man, for as much as God had so ordained, because it was best for vs, sith none other could be the meane for restoring of peace betweene God and vs, none other could make vs the children of God, none other could assure vnto vs the inheritance of the heauenly kingdome, none other coulede for remedie set mans obedience against mans disobedience. 2.12.1.2.3.

A confutation of their fantastickall conceits, which affirme that Christ shoulde haue become man, although there had needed no remedie for the redeeming of mankinde. And it is prooued by many reasons and textes, that for as much as the whole

The Table.

Scripture crieth out that hee was clothed with flesh, to the ende that he might be the redeemer, therefore it is too great rashnes to imagine any other cause or purpose. 2. 12.

4. Neither is it lawful to search further concerning Christ: and those that doe search further, do with wicked boldnes runne forward to the faining of a new Christ: And herein Oflander is reprooved, which hath at this time renewed this question, and affirmeth that this error is confuted by no testimony of Scripture. 2. 12. 5.

And the principle is overthrowen which hee buildeth on, that man was create after the image of God, because he was formed after the likeness of Christ to come, that hee might resemble him whom the father had already decreed to cloath with flesh: And there is shewed that the image of God in Adam, was the markes of excellencie wherewith God had garnished him, which doeth also shine in the Angels. 2. 12. 6, 7.

A solution of other objections or absurdities which the same Oflander feareth: namely, that then Christ was borne and create after the image of Adam but as it were by chance: and that the Angels should have lacked their head, and men should have lacked Christ their king. 2. 12. 6, 7.

How the two natures do make one person of the Mediatour in Christ: Which is shewed by a similitude taken of the joyning of the soule and bodie in one man: And then it is prooved by diuers places that the scripture doeth many times giue vnto Christ those things which properly belongeth to the Godhead, and sometime those things which must be referred onely to the man-hood, and somenme giueth to the one nature that which is proper to the other: which figuratiue manner of speech is called Communicating of properties. 2. 14. 1, 2. and sometime also giueth to Christ those things which doe comprehend both natures together, but doe severally well agree with neither of them. Which last point the most parte of the olde writers haue not sufficiently marked: Yet it is good to be noted, for the dissolving of manie doubts, and for auoiding of the errors of Nestorius and Eutiches. 2. 14. 3, 4.

A confutation of the error of Seruentius, which had put in the steede of the sonne of God, an imagined thing made of the substance of Gods spirit, flesh, & three elements vncreat: His subtletie is disclosed, and there is prooued (which thing he denieth) that Christ was the sonne of God, euen before that he was borne in the flesh, because he is that word begotten of the father before all worlds. 2. 14. 5.

Also it is prooued that he is truly & properly the sonne of God in the flesh, that is to say in the nature of Man, but yet in respect of his Godhead, and not of his flesh, as Seruentius babbleth. 2. 14. 6.

An exposition of certaine places which Seruentius and his disciples do enforce for defence of their error: There is also another causation of his disclosed, that Christ before that he appeared in the flesh, is in no place called the sonne of God but vnder a figure. 2. 14. 7.

Also there is opened the error of all them which do not acknowledge Christ the Sonne of God but in the flesh: and there are briefly rehearsed the grosse subtleties of Seruentius, wherewith he hath bewitched himselfe and other, ouerthrowing that which pure faith beleueeth concerning the person of the sonne of God: And thereupon is gathered that with the craftie subtleties of that filthy dog, the hope of saluation is vtterly extinguished. 2. 14. 8.

Merite of Christ.

It is truly and properly saide that Christ merited for vs the grace of God and saluation. Where it is prooued that Christ was not onely the instrument or minister of saluation, but also the author & principal doer thereof: And in so saying, the grace of God is not defaced, because the merit of Christ is not set against mercy, but hangeth vpon it. And those things which are Subalterna, fight not as contraries. 2. 17. 1.

The distinction of the Merit of Christ and of the grace of God is proued by many places of scripture. 2. 17. 2.

There are alleaged many testimonies of Scripture, out of which it is certainly and soundly gathered, that Christ by his obedience hath truly purchased and defensed fauour

The Table.

faour for vs with his Father. 2. 17. 3. 4. 5.

It is a foolish curiositie to enquire whether Christ hath deserued any thing for himselfe: and it is rashnesse to affirme it. 2. 17. 6.

Merites of workes.

The boasting that are made of the Merites of workes, doe ouerthrow as well the praise of God in giuing righteousnes, as also the certaintie of saluation. 3. 15. 1.

Whosoeuer first applied the name of Merite to good workes in the sight of Gods iudgement, he did against the purenesse of Faith. And though the olde Fathers vsed that name, yet they so vsed it that they haue in many places shewed that they attribute nothing to workes. 3. 15. 2.

An exposition of certaine places, where-with the Sophisters go about to prouoe that the name of Merite toward God is found in the Scripture 3. 15. 4.

It is prouoed by authoritie of the Apostles and Augustine, that the rewardes of righteousnesse doe hang vpon the meere liberallitie of God. 2. 5. 2.

It is proued that this is a false saying, that Christ Merited for vs onely the first grace, and that afterward we doe Merite by our owne workes. 3. 15. 6. 7.

There be certaine things touching Merites in the title of Iustification by Faith.

Ministerie of the Church.

Of the Ministerie of the Church, and of them which despise this maner of learning. 4. 1. 5.

Of the efficacie of the Ministerie. 4. 5. 6.

God, which might teach the Church either himselfe alone or by Angels, yet doth it by the Ministerie of men for three causes. 4. 3. 1.

The Ministerie of the Church is garnished with many notable titles of commendation in the Scripture 4. 3. 2, 3.

Of Apostles, Prophetes, Euangelistes, Pastors, and Teachers: and what is the feuerall office of euery of them. 4. 3. 4. 5.

The chiefe partes of the office of Apostles and Pastors are to preach the Gospell, and Minister the Sacraments 4. 3. 6.

Pastors are so bound to their Churches, that they may not remouoe to any other place without publike authoritie. 4. 3. 7.

They are called in the Scripture, Bishops, Priestes, Pastors and Ministers which gouerne Churches. 4. 3. 8.

No man ought to thrust in himselfe in the Church to teach or gouerne: But there is a calling required. 4. 3. 10.

The preaching of the worde of God is compared to seede which is scattered in the ground: Whereby we vnderstand that the whole encrease proceedeth of the blessing of God and the effectuall working of the holy Ghost 4. 14. 11.

What manner of men ought to be chosen Bishops, and in what sort and of whom they are to be chosen, and with what forme or ceremony they are to be ordered. 4. 3. 1. 1. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16.

The olde Church before the Papacie, diuided all their Ministers into three degrees, Pastors, Elders, and Deacons 4. 4. 1.

Of the commission to remit and retaine finnes, or to binde and loose, which is a part of the power of the keyes, and pertaineth to the Ministerie of the word 4. 11. 1.

Monkerie.

Monasteries in olde time were the seede plottes of Ecclesiasticall orders: And there is described out of Augustine the forme of the olde Monkerie, and how they were wont at that time to get their liuing with the labor of their handes. Whereby appeareth that at this day the maner of Popish Monkerie is farre otherwise. 4. 13. 8, 9, 10.

Of the proude title of perfection where-with the Monkes doe set out their kinde of life. 4. 13. 1. 1. because they binde themselves to keepe the counsels of the Gospell (as they call them) whereunto other Christian men are not bound. Sect. 12. and because they haue forsaken all their possessions. Sect. 13.

As many as goe into Monasteries, doe depart from the Church, sith they openly affirme that their Monkerie is a forme of second Baptisme. 4. 13. 14.

The Popish Monkes do in maners much differ from the olde Monkes. 4. 13. 15.

Some things are to be nulked euen in the profission of the olde Monkerie, and they that were the Authors thereof brought a perillous example into the Church. 4. 13. 16.

Monkes with their vowes doe consecrate themselves themselves not to God but to the Diuell. 4. 13. 17.

As all vowes vnlawfull and not rightly made, are of no value before God, so they ought to be void to vs. 4. 13. 20.

Therefore they which depart from Monckery to some honest trade of life, are wrongfully accused of Faith breaking and periury. 4. 13. 21.

Obedience of Children to Parents.

An exposition of the fifth Commandment: The end and sum thereof. 2. 8. 35.

How farre this word honoring extendeth, and there be three partes thereof, Reuerence, Obedience, and Thankesgiving. 2. 8. 36.

Of the promise adioyned to the fifth Commandment, concerning long continuance of life, and how farre the same pertaineth to vs at this day. 2. 8. 37.

How and by how diuerse meanes, God sheweth his vengeance vpon the disobedient: Yet obedience is not due to parentes and other, but sauing the law of God. 2. 8. 38.

Offences.

What offences are to be avoided, & what to be neglected: what is an Offence giuen, and what an Offence taken. 3. 19. 11.

It is declared by the doctrine and example of Paul who be weake, to who we must beware that we giue no Offence. 3. 19. 12.

Whereas we are commanded to beware that we Offend not the weake, the same is meant onely in things indifferent: Therefore they doe wrongfully abuse this doctrine which say that they heare Masse for the weakes sake. 3. 19. 13

Officials.

Of Popish Bishops Officials, as they call them. 4. 11. 7, 8.

Orders Papisticall.

The Sacrament of Order breedeth to the Papistes seuen other petie Sacraments, of whose names and differences they themselves be not yet agreed. 4. 19. 22.

Their fond and vngodly foolishnes, forasmuch as they make Christ fellow Officer with them in euery one of them. 4. 19. 23.

Of Acoluthes, Doorekeepers and Readers, whom the Papistes doe make Orders of the Church and Sacraments, 3. 19. 24. and with what ceremonies they consecrate them. Sect. 27.

Of Exorcistes or Coniurers an order of the Popish Church. 4. 19. 24.

The orders of Psalnuistes, Doorekeepers and Acoluthes, are vaine names among the Papistes, forasmuch as they themselves doe not execute the Offices, but some boy, or any layman. 4. 19. 24.

Of the shauing of the Clergie, and the signification thereof by the doctrine of the Papistes. 4. 19. 25.

They doe wrongfully applie it to Pauls example, which shaued his heade when he tooke a vowe, or to the olde Nazarites. 4. 19. 26.

It is shewed out of Augustine whence it first began. 4. 19. 27.

Of the three higher Orders: and first of Priesthood or sacrificership: where is shewed that the Papistes haue most wickedlie peruered the order appointed by God, and doe wrong to Christ the onely and eternall sacrificing Priest. 4. 19. 28.

Of their blowing at the making of the Popish Priests, and how in that ceremony they doe wrongfully counterfaite Christ: Where is declared that the Lord did many things which he would not haue to be examples for vs to follow. 4. 19. 29.

Of the vndeble character or vndefaceable marke of the oyle wherewith Popish Priestes are annointed at their creation. And how the same is wrongfully applied to the children of Aaron. But these Priestes in coueting to be like the Leutes, are Apostataes from Christ. 4. 19. 30, 31.

Originall Sinne.

A definition and expounding of Originall sinne. 4. 15. 10, 11, 12.

A true definition of Originall and a declaration of the same definition: Wherein is shewed, that not onely punishment came from Ad. m vpon vs, but also that the infection distilled from him remayneth in vs, and how it is the sinne of another and also our owne sinne: Finally, that such infection pearced not onely into the inferiour desire, but also into the verie vnderstanding minde.

mind and bottome of the heart, so that there is no part of the soule free from corruption.

2. 1. 8, 9.

A confutation of them that dare charge God with their faults, because wee say that men are naturally faultie: And there is prooued, that man is corrupt by naturall viciousnesse: (to the ende that no man should thinke it to be gotten by euill custome) but yet such as proceeded not from nature, but is an accidentall qualitie, and not a substantiall propertie from the beginning. 2. 1. 10, 11.

Patience.

A Part of the forsaking of our selues, in respect of God, is contentation of mind and sufferance: Which we shall performe, if in teeking the commoditie or quietnes of this present life wee yeelde our selues wholly to the Lord, and do not desire, hope for, or thinke vpon any other meane of prospering than by his blessing. 3. 7. 8.

So shall it come to passe that we shall neuer seeke our owne commodities by vnlawfull meanes or with wronging of our neighbours: also that we shall not burne with vnmeasurable desire of riches or of honors: finally if things prosper well with vs, we shall yet beholden from pride, and if they happen ill, we shall yet bee restrained from impatience. 3. 7. 9. Which extendeth to all chaunces whereunto our present life is subiect, whereof the faithfull doe alwaies acknowledge the hand of God their father, and not fortune, to be the gouernor. 3. 7. 10.

The Patience of the faithfull is not such as is without all feeling of sorrow, but such as being vpholden by godly comfort, fighteth against the naturall feeling of sorrow. Therefore the Patience of the Stoikes is to reiected: neither is it in it selfe any fault to weepe or feare. 3. 8. 8, 9.

A description of that struing which is ingendred in the hearts of the faithfull by the feeling of nature, which feeling cannot bee clean done away, & by the affection of godlines wherewith that same feeling must bee subdued and tamed. 3. 8. 10.

There is a great difference between Philosophical & Christian patience: Forasmuch as the philosophers doe teach vs to obey because we so must of necessitie: but Christ teacheth it, because it is righteous, and also because it is profitable for vs. 3. 8. 11.

Pardons.

The so long continuing of pardons declareth in how deepe darkenes of errors men haue been drowned these certaine ages past. 3. 5. 1.

What pardons are by the Papistes doctrine: Whereby is prooued that they are a dishonoring of the blood of Christ: A comparison of Christ and popish pardons. 3. 5. 1.

A confutation of the wicked doctrine of pardons, by the notable saying of Leo Bishop of Rome, and of Augustine. And there is shewed that the blood of martyres is not vnlawfull, although it haue no place in forgiveness of sins. 3. 5. 3, 4.

Either the Gospel of God must lie, or pardons must beelying deceits. And there is shewed what seemeth to haue been the beginning of them. 3. 5. 5.

Penance, the Popish Sacrament.

Of the vsage of the olde Church in publicke penance: and of the laying on of hands at reconciliation, Also how in proccesse of time the laying on of handes was vsed in private absolutions. 4. 19. 14.

The diuers opinions of the schoolmen how penance is a Sacrament: And there is shewed that the definition of a Sacrament doth not agree with it. 4. 19. 15, 16.

It is a lie, & a deceitfull error which they haue inuented concerning the Sacrament of Penance: and it is a wicked and blaphemous title wherwith they haue garnished it, a second boord after shipwracke from Baptisme. 4. 19. 17.

Persuerance.

See booke 2. Chap. 5. Sect. 3.

A confutation of the most wicked error, that Persuerance is giuen of God according to the Merite of men, so as every man hath shewed himselfe not vnthankful for the first grace: and in this opinion is shewed a double error. Of the common distinction of grace working, and working together: and how Augustine vsed it, qualifying it with an apt definition. 2. 3. 11.

Politike government.

There is a difference to be made between policie, and the inward government of the soule. Their doctrine is to be reiected which goe about to ouerthrowe policie as a thing not necessarie for Christians, or as a thing that ouerthroweth the spirituall libertie of the soule. Also those flatterers are to be reiected, which do giue too much vnto it, and do see it in comparison against the authoritie of God. 4. 20. 1, 2, 3.

Policie is the giſte of God, which bringeth great commodities to mankind and no ſmall helpe to the defence of the ſtate of religion. Politike government hath three parts, the magiſtrate, the lawes and the people. 4. 20. 3.

Of the three formes of Ciuill government, Aristocracie the government of the beſt choſt men, Democracie the government of the people, Monarchy the government of one: it can not ſimply bee determined which of theſe is the beſt: yet it cometh to paſſe by the faulte of men, that it is ſafer and more tolerable to haue many to govern than one to reigne. But all theſe formes are of God, and diuerſly diſpoſed by him, therefore it is the duty of priuate men to obey, & not to make inuouation of ſtates after their owne will. 4. 20. 8.

Of the immunitie that the Romiſh clergie take to themſelues, which was altogether vnknewen to the Biſhops of the old Church. 4. 11. 15.

In matters of Faith, the iudgement in the olde time pertained to the Church and not to Princes, although ſometime princes entremedled their authoritie in eccleſiaſtical matters, but the ſame was done to preſerue and not to trouble the order of the church. 4. 11. 15, 16.

Neither is it profitable nor may bee, that one man ſhould beare rule ouer the whole Church. 4. 6. 8, 9, 10.

Although Peter had had a ſupremacie in the Church, yet it followeth not that the ſeat of that ſupremacie ought to be at Rome. 4. 6. 11, 12, 13.

It is proued by many arguments that Peter was not biſhop of Rome. 4. 6. 14, 15.

The ſupremacy of the ſea of Rome is not according to the uſe olde Church. 4. 6. 16, 17.

Of the beginning and encrease of the Romiſh papacie, vntill it aduanced it ſelfe to that height, whereby both the libertie of the Church is oppreſſed and all moderate government hath bene ouerthrowen. 4. 7.

Of the title of ſupremacie and other titles of pride wherewith the Pope boſteth himſelfe, and when and how they crept in. 4. 7. 3.

Gregorie pronounceth that the title of vniuerſall biſhop was deuſed by the deuil, and publiſhed by the crier of Antichriſt. 4. 7. 4.

It is proued by the uſe of the old church, that it is falſe which the biſhoppe of Rome boaſteth, that hee hath iuriſdiction ouer all Churches. 4. 7. 5. Whether ye conſider the ordering of biſhops, Sect. 6. or eccleſiaſtical admonitions and cenſures, Sect. 7. or ſummoning of Councilſ, Sect. 8. or authoritie of higher appeales. Sect. 9. 10.

The olde Biſhoppes of Rome in the moſt part of their Epistles did ambitiouſly ſet forth the glorie of their ſea, but thoſe Epistles at time had no credite. Also they did thruſt in certaine forged things as though they had been written in the old time by holly men. 4. 7. 11, 20.

Although in the time of Gregorie, the authoritie of the Biſhop of Rome was greatly encreaſed, yet it is proued by his writings that it was then far from vniuerſal dominion and tyranny. 4. 7. 12, 13, 22.

There was ſtriſe for the ſupremacie betwene the biſhop of Conſtantinople and the biſhop of Rome. 4. 7. 14, 15, 16. vntill Theocas giued to Donſace the third, that Rome ſhould

From thenceforth the tyrannic of the sea of Rome encreased more and more, partly by ignorance and partly by negligence of Bishops: which destruction of the whole order of the Church Bernard lamenteth and layeth to the Popes charge. 4.7.18.22.

The insolencie and shamelesnesse of the Bishops of Rome in setting forth their owne supreme authoritie. 4.7.19.20. which is reprooued by sayings of Cyprian and Gregorie. Sect.21.

Rome can not be the mother of all Churches, forasmuch as it is no Church, Neither can the bishop of Rome be head of bishops, sith he is no bishop. 4.7.23,24.

It is prooued by Paul, that the Pope is Antichrist. 4.7.25.

Although the Church of Rome in olde time had had the honor of supremacie, yet the same is not to bee bouade to a place. 4.7.26, 29.

Of the maners of the cite of Rome, of the Pope, and of the Cardinals and their diuinitie. 4.7.27,28.

The Bishop of Rome first laide hand vpon kingdomes, and then vpon the Empire: Which is proued by most sharpe reprehensions of Bernard. to be vnmeet for him that boasteth himselfe the successor of the Apostles. 4.7.11.11.

Prayer.

True faith can not bee idle from calling vpon God. 3.20.

How necessaie & how many waies profitable is the exort of praying, 3.20.2. although the Lorde will not cease while we craue not, nor needeth any to put him in minde. Sect.3.

The first rule of well framing our payer, is that we be no otherwile disposed in hart and minde than becommeth them that enter into talke with God. 3.20.4,5.

The second rule is, that in praying we alway feele our owne needines, & that earnestly considering that we want all these things that wee aske, wee ioine with our prayer an earnest and feruent desire to obtaine, 3.20.6.

Wee ought to praie at all times, and in the greatest quietnes of our estates, the onely remembrance of our sinne ought to be no small prouocation to moue vs to that exercise. 3.20.7.

The third rule of praying well, is that we forsake all confidence of our owne glorie, least if wee presumptuously take any thing, be it neuer so little, vnto our selues, we with our vaine pride, fall downe from his face. 3.20.8.

The beginning of praying well, is the obtaining of pardon, with an humble & plaine confession of offence. 3.20.9.

In what sense the Praiers of certaine holymen are to bee taken, in which to intreate God, they seeme to alleage their owne righteousness. 3.20.10.

The fourth rule of praying well, is that being so ouerthrowen and beaten downe with true humilitie, we neuertheless encouraged to praie with an assured hope to obtaine: So in our prayers, faith and repentance do meete together. 3.20.11.

Of the certaintie of faith, whereby the faithfull do determine that God is fauorable vnto them. And how necessaie the same is in Praier: Neither is that certaintie weakened, when it is ioyned with acknowledging of our owne miserie. 3.20.12.

God cometh in leth vs to call vpon him: he promisseth, that wee shall be heard: both these things are necessaie, that we may pray in faith. 3.20.13.

There are rehearsed diuerse promises of God, with the sweetnes wherof they that are not stured vp to praier, are altogether vnexcusable. 3.20.14.

Against them, which make dead Saints intercessors to God for them, or doe mingle the intercession of Christ with the Prayers and merites of dead men. 3. 20. 21.

This foolishness hath proceeded in the papacie to grosse monstrousnes of vngodlines, and to horrible sacriledges. 3. 20. 22.

A confutation of the arguments wherwith the papastes labour to confirme the intercession of dead Samts. 3. 20. 23, 24, 25, 26.

It is vnlawfull to direct our praiers to dead Saints, forasmuch as this kind of worshipping doth most properly belong to God alone. 3. 20. 27.

Of the sortes of Prayer, and chiefly of thanksgiuing: Also of the continuall exercise of the faithfull in prayer and thanksgiuing. 3. 20. 28, 29.

Of the babbling of the Papistes, and of auoiding all boasting in prayers, of departing into secret places, and of publike Prayers. 3. 20. 29.

Publike Prayers must be made in the common and natie speech of the land. And there is entreated of kneeling and vncovering of the head at Prayer. 3. 20. 33.

Of the confidence which the name of the childer of God doth bring vnto vs, which euen the confidence of our finnes ought not to ouerthrow. 3. 20. 36, 37.

Although wee ought to pray for all men, and specially for them of the householde of faith, yet this withstandeth not, but that wee may pray specially, both for our selues and certaine other. 3. 20. 38, 39, 47.

Of the boldnes of asking which the Lord granteth to his, and the trust of obtayning. 3. 20. 47.

It is good that euery one of vs for exercise, appoint to himselfe certaine peculiar houres to pray, so that it be done without superstitious obseruation. 3. 20. 50.

In all our prayer wee ought diligentlie to beware that we go not about to binde God to certaine circumstances. 3. 20. 50.

Of perseverance and pacience in the exercise of prayer. 3. 20. 51, 52.

Predestination.

It is prooued that the doctrine of predestination is a doctrine of most sweete fruite. There are rehearsed three principall profits thereof: and they are admonished which being moued with a certaine curiositie doe beyond the bounds of Scripture breake into the secrets of the wisdom of God. 3. 1. 1, 2. and also they which would haue all mention of Predestination to be buried. Sect. 3. 4.

What is Predestination, and what is the forknowledge of God, and how the one of them is wrongfully set after the other. The example of Predestination in al the offspring of Abraham in respect of other nations, is confirmed by many testimonies of Scripture. 3. 2. 1. 5.

Also there is shewed a speciall Predestination, whereby euen among the children themselves hee hath made difference betwene some and other some. Sect. 6. 7.

A confirmation of the doctrine of Predestination taken out of testimonies of scripture. 3. 22.

A definition of Predestination. 3. 23. 8.

A confutation of them which gather of the doctrine of Predestination, that God hath respect of persons. 3. 23. 10, 11.

Against those hogs which vnder colour of Predestination doe goe carelesly forward in their sinnes: and against all them which say that if this doctrine take place, all endeavour of well working decayeth. 3. 23. 12.

Against them which say that this doctrine ouerthroweth all exhortations to godly life, it is prooued by Augustine that preaching hath his course, & yet the knowledge of Predestination is not hindered thereby. 3. 23. 13.

In this point of doctrine we must so temper our manner of teaching the truth, that so far as we may, we wisely beware of offence. 3. 23. 14.

Whereas some obey the preaching of the word of God, and other some despise it, or be more blinded and hardened thereby, although this come to passe by their owne malice and vnthankfulnesse, yet wee must the rewith also know, that this diuersity hangeth vpon the secret counsell of God, than which it is vnl. wfull for to search for any further cause. 3. 24. 1, 2, 13, 14.

An exposition of certaine places, wherein God seemeth to denie that it cometh to passe by his ordinance that the wicked perish, but in as much as against his wil they wilfully bring destruction vpon themselves. And there is thewed that those places make nothing against the doctrine of Predestination. 3. 24. 15, 16.

The vniuersalnesse of the promises of saluation, maketh nothing against the doctrine of the Predestination of the reprobate: and yet not without cause are they framed vniuersally. 3. 24. 16.

Here also are confuted certaine obiections of them which denie this point of doctrine.

Priesthood, Kingdome, and Prophetical office of Christ.

That we may know to what ende Christ was sent of his father, and what he brought vnto vs, three things are cheefely to bee considered in him, his Prophetical office, his Kingdome, and his Priesthood: and therefore is giuen to him the title of Christ (or Messias which signifieth annointed) although hee be specially so called in respect of his kingdome. Albeit that God alway gaue prophets and teachers to his Church, yet it is prooued that all the Godly looked for full light of vnderstanding, onely at the coming of Messias: and that he when he appeared was annointed a Prophet, not onely for himselfe, but also for all his body. 2. 15. 1, 2.

As touching his Kingdome, first wee must note the spiritual nature thereof, whereupon also is gathered the eternall continuance of it, which is of two sortes: the one pertaineth to the whole bodie of the Church, the other is proper to euery member: both sortes are declared and plainly set forth by testimonies of scripture. 3. 15. 3.

It is declared that the profite of the kingdome of Christ cannot otherwise bee perceived of vs, but when wee knowledge it to be spiritual: and the same profite consisteth in two things, namely that it enricheth vs with all good things necessarie to eternall eternall saluation, secondly, that it fortifieth vs with strength and vertue against the diuell and all his assaults. And so Christ reigneth for vs rather than for himselfe, whereupon wee are rightfully called Christians: Where it is saide that at the last day he shall yeeld vp his kingdome to God and his father, and such like sayings, the same maketh nothing against the eternitie of his kingdome. 4. 15. 4. 5.

As touching his Priesthood, that the efficacy and profite thereof may come to vs, it is shewed that wee must beginne at the death of Christ. Hereupon it followeth that hee is an euerlasting intercessour, by whose mediation we obtaine fauour, whereby ariseth to godly consciences both boldnesse to pray, and quietnesse: finally that he is so a Priest, that hee ioyneth vs in the fellowship of so great an honour, to the end that the Sacrifices of prayers and praise which come from vs, may be acceptable to God. 2. 15. 6.

Promises.

Not without cause all the Promises are concluded in Christ: for as much as euery promise is a testifying of the lawe of God toward vs, and none of vs is beloued of God without Christ. Neither was Naaman the Syrian, Cornelius the Captaine, nor the Eunuche to whome Philip was caried, without knowledge of Christ, although they had but a very sm all taste to him, and a faith in some part vnexpressed. 3. 2. 32.

The Lord, to the end to fill our harts with love of righteousnes and hatred of wickednesse, was not content to see fourth bare commandements only, but addeth Promises of blessings both of this present life and of eternall blessednes, and also threatenings both of present miseries, and of eternall death: The threatenings declare the great purenesse of God: the Promises doe shewe his great loue to righteousnesse, & his wonderfull goodnesse toward men. 2. 8. 4.

Of the Promise of Gods mercie to be extended to a thousand generations. 2. 8. 21.

Although the Promises of the lawe bee conditionall, yet they are not giuen in vaiue. 2. 7. 4.

Prouidence of God.

Prophane men, by fleshly vnderstanding doe confesse God the Creator, otherwise than wee doe by faith: for as much as faith doth teach that hee is also the gouernor of all things not by a certaine vniuersall motion, but by a singular prouidence which extendeth euen to the least sparowe. 1. 16. 1.

They which giue any thing to fortune, doe burie the Prouidence of God, by whose secreete counsell all successes are gouerned. 1. 16. 2.

Things without life, although each of them haue their propertie naturally planted in them, yet doe not put forth their force, but so farre as they be directed by the present hand of God: which is proued by the sunne, before which he would both light to be, and the earth to abound with all kinde of good things: which also wee reade to haue stand still by the space of two daies, and gone backe two degrees at the commaundement of God. 1. 16. 2. also by the starres and signes of the heauen, which the vnbelieuers doe feare. Sect 3.

The almightinesse of God is busied in continuall doing, so that it extendeth to euery particular act, and nothing happeneth but by his counsell: Which who so doe not acknowledge they defraude God of his glorie and doe extenuare his goodnesse: But we on the other side doe receiue double fruite thereof. 1. 16. 3.

It is proued that the Prouidence of God doth not onely beholde things that are done, but gouerneth all successes: Whereby is ouerthrowen the fained inuention of bare foreknowledge and of vniuersall Prouidence onely: also the error of the Epicures is confuted, and of them which giue to God a gouernaunce onely about the middle region of the aire. Yet there may a certaine vniuersall Prouidence bee graunted, but so, that the speciall Prouidence be not darked, which doth gouerne not only certaine but all particular doings. 1. 16. 4. 5.

That not onely the beginning of motion is in the disposing of God, is proued by the plentifulnesse of one yeere and the barrennesse of another, for whereas God calleth callesh the one his blessing, and the other his curse and vengeance. 1. 16. 5.

The prouidence of God in gouerning the worlde, is cheefely to be considered in mankinde, and in the diuerse estate of all men, and diuerse disposing of successes. 1. 16. 6, 7.

Against them which cauil, that this doctrine of the Prouidence of God, is the Stoickes doctrine of fate or destiny. 1. 16. 8.

Whether any thing happen by fortune or chance : Where is rehearsed the saying of Basilus Magnus, that Chance and Fortune are wordes of heathen men : also the saying of Augustine, that he repented that hee had vsed the name of Fortune. Yet those things may be saide to happen by fortune in respect of vs, which being considered in their nature, or weighed according to our knowledge doe seeme so, although in the secreete counsell of God they be necessarie : Also all things that are to come, may bee saide to bee happening, inasmuch as they be vncertaine to vs. 1. 16. 8, 9.

What things are to be considered, that the doctrine of the Prouidence of God, may be referred to a right hand, that we haue the profit thereof : and where the causes of those things that happen, appeere not vnto vs, we must beware that wee doe not thinke, that things are rolled by the sway of fortune : but we must so reuerence his secreet iudgements, that wee esteeme his will the most iust cause of all things. 1. 17. 1.

Against certaine dogges which at this daie doe barke against the Prouidence of God, it is prooued by the Scripture that whereas God hath so reuealed his will in the Lawe and the Gospell that hee illuminateth the mindes of them that bee his with the spirit of vnderstanding, to perceiue the mysteries therein contained, which otherwise are incomprehensible, yet the order of gouerning the world is called a bottomlesse depth, because when we knowe not the causes thereof, yet we ought reuerently to honor it. 1. 17. 2.

Such prophane men do foolishly comber themselves, when they alleage that if the doctrine of the Prouidence of God be true, then the prayers of the faithfull in which they aske anie thug for time to come are vaine, no counsell is to be taken for things to come, and then men which do any thing against the Lawe of God, doe not sinne : These dangerous errours they shall auoid, which in considering the Prouidence of God, shall frame themselves to true modestie. 1. 17. 3.

As concerning things to come, it is prooued that the Scripture doth well ioyne the aduisements of men with the Prouidence of God : because wee are not hindered by his eternall decrees, but that vnder his will, we may both foresee for our selues, and order our owne things : For the knowledge of consulting and taking heede, are inspired into men by the Lord, whereby we may serue his Prouidence, in the preferring of our own life. 1. 17. 4.

In all successes of time past the will of God doth gouerne : and yet the doers of wicked deedes are not excused, because they are accused by their owne conscience, and doe not obey the will of God, but their owne lust. They are indeed the instruments of Gods prouidence, but so, that they finde the whole euill in themselves, and in God is founde nothing but a lawfull vse of their euilnesse. 1. 17. 5. and 1. 18. 4. Where also the tanc thing is shewed in the election of king Ieroboam, the tenne tribes forsaking the house of Dauid, the slaughter of the sonnes of Ahab, and in the betraying of the sonne of God.

A godlie and holie meditation of the Prouidence of God, which is taught by the rule of godlinesse : first that being certainly perswaded that nothing happeneth by fortune, wee alway cast our eyes to God the chiefe cause of all things : then that wee doubt not that his singular Prouidence watcheth for vs, whether we haue to do with men as well euill as good, or with his other creatures : To which vse we must applie the promises of God in the scripture which testifye the same, the examples whereof are rehearsed. 1. 17. 5.

We must also adioyne those testimonies of Scripture which teach that all men are vnder the power of God, whether we neede to get their good wils or restrain the mallice of our enemies : which last pointe God worketh diuetsé waies, sometime by taking taking away their wit, sometime when hee granteth them wit, he fraieth them that they dare not go about that which they haue conceiued: and sometime also when he suffreth them to go about it, he breaketh their enterprises: Vpon which knowledge necessarilie followeth a thankfulness of minde in so prosperous successe of things. 1.17.7.

In aduersitie when wee are hurt by men, is required patience and quiet moderation of minde: Which is shewed in the examples of Ioseph being afflicted of his brethren, Iob persecuted of the Chaldees, and Dauid railed vpon of Semei. If we happen to be distressed with any miserie without the worke of men, this selfesame doctrine is the best remedie against impatience because the scripture testifieth, that euen aduersities also doe come from God. 1.17.8.

A Godly man principally regarding the prouidence of God, yet will not leaue inferior causes vnmarked. Therefore if hee haue receiued a benefite of any man, he will hartily know and confesse himselfe to be bound vnto him. If hee haue taken harme or done harme to any other by his negligence or want of heede, he will impute it vnto himselfe, much lesse will he excuse his owne offences. In things to come chiefly hee will haue consideration of inferior causes, but yet so that in determining he wil not be carried away with his own wit, but comit himselfe to the wisdom of God: neither shall his trust so stay vpon outward helpes, that he will carelesly rest vpon them if hee haue them, nor be dismayed for feare if hee want them. 1.17.9.

A large description of the inestimable felicitie of a godly minde which resteth vpon the prouidence of God: and on the other side the miserable carefulness wherewith we must needs be distressed when the weaknes of this earthly cottage maketh vs subiect to so many diseases, sith our life and safetie is besieged with infinite dangers at home, abroad, vpon the land, in the water, by men, and by duels. 1.17.10, 11.

Those places of Scripture, where it is saide that God repented him: make nothing against the doctrine of Prouidence, forasmuch as therein (like as also when hee is saide to be angrie) the scripture applying it selfe to our capacitie describeth him, not such as he is, but such as we feele him to be. Likewise, where he spared the Niniuites, to whom hee had threatened destruction within fortie daies: whereas he prolonged the life of Ezechias for many yerres, to whom he had declared present death: because such threatenings containe an vnexpressed condition. Which is well prooued by a like example in king Abimelech, which was rebuked for Abrahams wife. 1.17.12, 13, 14.

A confutation of them which coueting to get a praise of modestie, goe about to maintaine the righteoufnesse of God with a lying defence, when they say: that those things which Satan and all the reprobate do naughtily, are done by the sufferance of God, and not by his prouidence and will. And it is prooued by the affliction of Iob, the deceiuing of Achab, the killing of Christ, the incestuous adulterie of Abolon, and manie oother examples, that men doe worke nothing but that which hee hath alreadie decreed with himselfe, and doth appoint so to be by his secret direction. 1.18.1.

And this hath place, not onely in outward doings, but also in secret motions. For it is prooued by the hardning of Pharao, and other testimonies, that God worketh euen in the mindes also and harts of the wicked. Neither maketh it any thing to the contrary, that oftentimes the worke of Satan is vsed therein: for God worketh neuertheles, but after his own manner, vsing a iust reuenge 1.18.2. therefore God is not the author of sins. Sect 4.

They are prooued guiltie of intollerable pride, which refuse this doctrine vnder pretence of modestie. A confutation of their obiection when they say, that if nothing happen but with the will of God, then hath hee in himselfe two contrary wils, forasmuch as he doth appoint those things to be done by his secret counsell, which he hath openlie forbidden by his lawes. And there is shewed, that God doth not disagree with himselfe, that the will of God is not changed, that hee doth not faime himselfe to nill that which hee willeth: but whereas there is in God, but one simple will, the same to vs appeereth diuers, because for the weaknes of our vnderstanding, we conceiue not how he diuersly diuersly both willesh not, and willesh one selfe thing to be done. Finally it is prooued by Augustine, that man sometime with good will willesh some thing which God willesh not: and sometime willesh that thing with euill will, which God willesh with good will. 1. 18. 3.

The consideration of Gods power in gouerning this frame of heauen and earth, and all the partes that are in them. 1. 5. 5.

The fellowship of men is so gouerned by the providence of God, that hee sheweth him selfe liberall, mercifull, righteous, and seuer. 1. 5. 6.

Those things which in the life of men are counted chaunces, as well of prosperitie as aduersitie are so many tokens of the heauenly providence, 1. 5. 7. and ought to awaken vs to the hope of the life to come. Sect 9.

How God worketh in the harts of them that be his, and Sathan in them that be his, but yet so, that they are not excused. 2. 4. 1.

God worketh also in the wicked, and euen in the same worke wherein Sathan worketh, and yet is not God so said to be the author of sinne, neither is Sathan or the wicked excused, but there is difference between the one and the other, both in the end and manner of doing. 2. 4. 2, 5.

The olde writers oftentimes referred these things, not to the working of God, but to his foreknowledge or sustenance, least the wicked shoulde thereby take occasion to speake irreuerently of the workes of God. But the Scripture when it saith that God blindeth, hardeneth, and such like, declareth somewhat more than a sustenance: although God doe worke two waies in the reprobate, namely by forsaking them, and taking his Spirit from them, and also by deliuering them to Sathan the minister of his wrath. 2. 4. 3, 4.

The ministerie of Sathan is vsed to stirre forward the reprobate, when foucer the Lord by his providence directeth them hither or thither. 2. 4. 5.

Purgatorie.

Wee ought not to winke at the doctrine of Purgatorie, for as much as it is a damnable inuention of Sathan which maketh voide the crosse of Christ, &c. 3. 5. 6.

An exposition of certaine places of scripture which the Papistes doe wrongfully wrest to the confirmation of their Purgatorie. 3. 5. 7, 8, 9.

An answer to the obiection of the Papists, that it hath bene an ancient vsage of the Church that prayers should be made for the dead. Where is shewed that this was done by them in the olde time, without the word of God, by a certaine wrongfull imitation, least Christians if they were slowe in hauing care of funerals and the dead, should seeme worse than heathen men. Yet herein was a great difference between this slipping of the old men, and the obstinate error of the Papists. 3. 5. 10.

R.

Redeemer Christ.

The knowledge of God the Creator is vnprofitable vnto vs, vnlesse faith doe also follow, setting him forth in Christ a Father and Redeemer to vs, and this doctrine from the beginning of the world in all ages hath bene holden among the children of God 2. 6. 1.

It is prooued by diuers arguments and testimonies of scripture, that the happy state of the Church hath alway bene grounded vpon the person of Christ. For both the first adoption of the chosen people, and the preserving of the Church, the deliuerance of them in perils, and the restoring after their dissipation, did alway hang vpon the grace of the Mediator. And the hope of all the godlie was neuer reposed any other where than in Christ. 2. 6. 2, 3, 4.

It is to be diligently considered how Christ hath fulfilled the office of redeemer, that we may finde in him all things necessarie for vs, such (as Bernard saith) he is to vs light, meate, oyle, salt, &c. 2. 16. 1.

An exposition how we shoulde say that God was our enemy vnill he was reconciled to vs by Christ, whereas to greeue Christ to vs, and to pteuent vs with mercie, were signes of the loue wherewith he before embraced vs. And there is shewed that the Scripture vseth this speech and such other, to apply it selfe to our capacitie: and yet it doth not the same falsly. And all this is prooued by the authoritie of Scripture, and the testimonie of Augustine. 2. 16. 2, 3.

Regeneration.

The Table.

Regeneration.

Against certaine Anabaptists, which inuent a phrentike intemperance in steede of spirituall Regeneration, namely that the children of God being now rettored into the stature of innocencie, ought no more to be carefull to bridle the lust of the flesh, but onely to followe the spirite for their guide. 3.3.14.

The rest pertaining to this matter, see in the title of Repentance.

Religion.

Necessitie enforceth the reprobate to confesse that there is some God. 1.4.4.

They are deuced which say that Religion was deused by the subtletie of certaine men to holde the simple people in order. 1.3.2.

The very wicked and godlesse men are compelled whether they will or no to feele that there is a God. 1.3.2. and in what sense Dauid saith, that they thinke that there is no God. 1.4.2.

Remission of sinnes.

Against them which dreame a perfection in this life, which taketh away neede of asking pardon. 3.20.45.

Of Remission of sinnes: and in what sense sinnes are called debtes, and howe wee are saide to forgiue other that haue offended against vs 3.20.45.

Of the distinction of fault and paine: where with most strong testimonies of scripture the doting error of the Papists is confuted, namely that when the fault is forgiuen, yet God retaineth the paine, which remaineth to bee redeemed with satisfactions. 3.4.29,30. and there also is shewed that they cannot scape away with their distinction betwene euerlasting paine and temporall paines.

Of certaine places of Scripture wherewith they goe about to confirme their error: where is declared that there are two kindes of the iudgement of God: the one of Vengeance, the other of chastisement, which are wisely to be distinguished asunder. 4.4.31.

The first of these, that is to say, vengeance, the faithfull haue alway earnestly praied to escape: the other that is to say, chastisement, they haue received with quiet minde, because it hath a testimonie of loue. And where it is saide that God is angrie with his Saints, the same is not meant of his purpose or affection to punish them, but is spoken of the vehement feeling of sorrow wherewith they are stricken so soone as they beare any part of his seueritie: and this is profitable for them. On the other side the reprobate, when they are stricken with the scourges of God doe alreadie after a certaine manner begin to feele the paines of his iudgement. Al which things are prooued by testimonies of the Scripture, and also by the expositions of Chrysofome and Augustine. 3.4.32,33.

God when hee had forgiuen the adulterie of Dauid, chastised him both for common example, and also to humble him: and for this reason hee daily maketh the faithfull (to whome hee is mercifull) subiect to the common miseries of this life. 3.4.35.

An exposition of the article of the Creed concerning Remission of sinnes. 4.1.20,21.

The keyes were giuen to the Church, to forgiue sinnes, not onely to men at their first conuersion to Christ, but to the faithful all their life long. 4.1.22.

This doctrine is prooued by testimonies of Scripture against the Nouatians, and certaine of the Anabaptists which saine that the people of God are by baptisme regenerate into an angelike life, & afterwarde there remaineth no pardon for them that fall. 4.1.23,24,25,26,27.

A consultation of them which make a voluntarie transgression of the lawe a sinne vnardonable. 4.1.28.

Repentance.

Repentance cometh of faith, and goeth not before it. 3.3.1.

A consultation of their reasons, which thinke otherwise, but hereby is not signified any space of time wherin faith breedeth repentance: but onely is shewed that no man can earnestly endeavour himselfe to Repentance vnlesse he know himselfe to be Gods. Of the error of certaine Anabaptists, Ietuns, and such other, which appoint to their nouices certaine daies for repentance. 3.3.2.

Certaine learned men long before this time, made two partes of Repentance, namely namely Mortification, which they commonly call contrition, Viuification which they wrongfully expound to be comfort by the feeling of the mercy of God: whereas it rather signifieth a desire to liue well. 3.3.3.

They doe also make two other sortes of Repentance, the one of the Law, the other of the Gospell: where also are shewed examples of either sort out of the Scripture. 3.3.4.

A true definition of repentance taken out of the Scripture, & here Repentance though it cannot be seuered, yet ought to be distinguished from Faith. 3.3.5.

A plainer declaration of the definition of Repentance: where first is shewed, that there is required a turning to God, that is to say, an alteration, not onely in outward works, but also in the soule it selfe. 3.3.6. then that it proceedeth of an earnest feare of God: where also is entreated of the sorrowfulnesse that is according to God. 3.3.7.

Thirdly, that saying is declared that Repentance consisteth of two partes, the Mortification of the flesh, and the quickening of the Spirit. 3.3.8.

Both those things doe we obtaine by partaking of Christ, the first by communicating of his death, the second of his Resurrection. Therefore Repentance is a new forming of the Image of God in vs, and a restoring into the righteoulnesse of God by the benefite of Christ: and this restoring is not fulfilled in vs in one moment. 3.3.9.

But there remaineth in all the Saintes, while they liue in mortall body, matter of strife with their flesh, and so thought all the Ecclesiasticall writers that haue beene of sound iudgement: and specially Augustine, which calleth this nourishment of euil and disease of lusting in the elect, weaknesse, and sometime sinne: and indeede it is sinne. 3.3.10.

This is confirmed by the testimonie of Paul, and by the summe of the commaundementes. Whereas it is saide that God cleanseth his Church from all sinne, the same is spoken rather of the guiltines of sin, then of the matter of sinne it selfe, which ceaseth not to dwell in the regenerate (but ceaseth to reigne in them) though it be not imputed. 3.3.11.

A declaration of the seuen causes or effectes, or partes or affections of Repentance, which Paul rehearseth: Those be studie or carefulnesse, excusing, displeasure, feare, desire, zeale, reuenge. Whereunto also is added out of Paul, and declared by an excellent admonition of Bernard, that in such renewing we must keepe a measure. 3.3.15.

The fruites of Repentance are deuotion toward God, charitie toward men, holines and purenesse in all our life: but all these ought to begin at the inward affection of the hart, from whence outward testimonies may afterward spring foorth: where also is spoken of certaine outward exercises of Repentance, which the olde Writers seeme to enforce somewhat too much. 3.3.16.

Turning of the hart to God is the chiefe point of Repentance: Sackcloth and Athes, weeping and fasting, were vsed of them in the olde time before Christ, as tokens of publike repentance: of which the two last may yet be vsed to appease the wrath of God in the miserable times of the Church. 3.3.17.

The name of Repentance or penance is ynproperly drawne from his naturall sense to this outward profession. Publike confession is not alway necessarie in sinnes: but priuate confession to God may neuer be omitted, wherein we ought to confesse not onely those things that we haue lately committed, but the displeasure of our greuous fall ought also to call vs backe to remembrance of our passed offences. Of speciall penance which is required of hainous offenders and certaine other: and of the ordinances which the children of God, euen the most perfect, ought to vse all their life long. 3.3.18.

God doth therefore freely iustifie them that be his, that he may also with the sanctification of his Spirit restore them into true righteoulnesse: therefore John, Christ, and the Apostles preached Repentance and remission of sinnes. The effect of which saying is declared. 3.3.19.

The Table.

Christians ought to exercise themselves in a continuall Repentance, & he hath most profited, that hath learned most to mislike himselfe. 3. 3. 20.

Repentance is a singular gift of God, vnto which he calleth all men, which he giueth to all them whom hee purposeth to saue, and which the Apostle pronounceth, that it shall neuer be giuen to wilfull Apostataes whose wickednes is vnpardonable, that is to say, such as haue sinned against the holy Ghost. 3. 3. 8.

Although fained Repentance doth not please God, yet hee sometime for a season spareth hypocrites which make a shewe of some conuersion, which hee doth not for their sakes, but for common example, that we may learne more chearefully to giue our mindes to vnfayned Repentance: and this is prooued by the examples of Ahab, Esau, and the Israelites. 3. 3. 25.

The Schoole Sophisters doe fowlie erre in those definitions which they make of repentance, and no better doe they deuise it, when they parte it into contrition of hart, confession of mouth, and satisfaction of worke: where is entred of certaiue questions which they moue: whereupon is easlie gathered, that they babble of things which they know not, when they speake of Repentance. 3. 4. 1.

When they require those three things in Repentance they must needs binde thereunto forgiuencie of sinnes: And if it be so, then are we most miserable, forasmuch as we can neuer haue quietnes of conscience: which is prooued first in that contrition of hart such as they require. 3. 4. 2.

There is a great difference betwene the doctrine of such contrition, and that contrition which the Scripture requireth of sinners, that they truly hunger and thirst for the mercy of God. 3. 4. 3.

In what sense the olde writers thought that solemne penance, which was then required for humous offences, might no more be effrones done then Baptisme. 4. 1. 29.

Reason of Man.

Mans vnderstanding is not so to be demanded of perpetuall blindnesse, that we leaue it no white of vnderstanding in any kinde of thing: but it hath some knowledge in as much as he is naturally caried with desire to search out truth: And yet this desire by and by falleth into vanitie, because the minde of Man cannot for dulnes keepe the right way to search out truth, and for the most parte he discerneth not of what things it is behoouefull for him to seeke the true knowledge. 2. 2. 12.

As touching earthly things it is prooued by examples that the minde of Man hath a sharpe vnderstanding, as first of households, sixth euery Man vnderstandeth that the fellowship of men must be holden together by lawes, and comprehendeth in minde the principles of those lawes. 2. 2. 13.

Also in liberal Artes and handy crafts for learning whereof, yea for amplifying and garnishing of the same, there is in man a certaine aptnesse, although some be more apt then other. But the light of reason and vnderstanding of men, is so a generall good qualitie in all men, that yet it is a free gift of Gods liberalitie towards euery man: which thing God sheweth when he createth some Idiots and dull witted: also when he maketh one man to excell in sharp invention, an other in iudgement, an other in quicknesse of minde, againe when he powreth into men singular motions according to euerie mans calling, and according to the time and matter that is to be done. 2. 2. 14. 17.

The inuention of Artes, the orderlie teaching of deepe and excellent knowledge thereof, which appeare to haue bene in the olde Lawyers, Philosophers, Physicians, being prophane men, doe declare vnto vs, that the minde of men how much soeuer it be fallen from his first vprightnes, is yet still garnished with excellent giftes of God. 2. 2. 15.

They are the giftes of the holy Ghost which the Lord giueth to whom hee will, euen to the vngodly for the publike benefite of mankind: therefore we ought to vie them although they be communicate vnto vs by the ministere of the wicked, to whom they are but transitorie and fleeting, because they are without the sound foundation of truth. 2. 2. 16.

It is shewed in the first two pointes that mans

The Table.

mans reason seeth nothing that concerneth the kingdom of God and heavenly matters, which are contained in three things, that is to say, to know God, his fatherly fauour toward vs, and the way to frame our life according to the rule of his law. 2.2.18. and to thit purpose are alleaged diuers testimonies of scripture. Sect. 19. 20. 21. In the thirde it seemeth that hee hath some more vnderstanding than in the other, for as much as man is instructed by the lawe of nature to a right rule of life. But such knowledge is vnperfect in the vnbeleeuers, and auaieth to no other ende, but to make them vnexcusable: neither doe they by that naturall light, see the truth in euery thing. And here is expounded the saying of Themistius, that vnderstanding in the vniuersall definition is feldome deceiued, but the error is when it descendeth to particular causes, & there is shewed, that mans vniuersall iudgement in the difference of good and euill, is not alway sound and vpright. For it attayneth not those which are the chiefe things in the first table of the law, namely of confidence in God, &c. In the second table, although it haue some more vnderstanding, yet it appeareth that it sometime erreth: as when it iudgeth that it is an absurditie to suffer too imperious gouernment, and not to reuenge wrongs: also it knoweth not the disease of desire in the whole obseruation of the law. 2.2.22, 23, 24.

It is prooued by the Scripture, that the sharpenes of our reason in all the parts of our life, is nothing before the Lord, and our mindes do reape the grace of enlightening, not onely at the beginning, or for one day, but at euery moment. 2.2.25.

See vnder the title of freewill, certaine things pertaining to this matter.

Resurrection of Christ.

Without the resurrection of Christ all is vnperfect that we beleue concerning his crosse, death, & burial, therof we receiue three profites: for in much as it hath both purchased vs righteousness before God, and is to vs a pledge of the Resurrection to come, and by his life, we are now regenerate into our newnes of life. 2.16.13.

A declaration of the historie of the Resurrection of Christ. 3.25.3.

Last Resurrection.

For as much as the faithfull, doe chiefly neede hope and patience, least they should faint in the course of their calling, hee hath soundly profited in the Gospell which is accustomed to a continuall meditation of the blessed Resurrection. 3.25.1, 2.

The article concerning the last Resurrection, containeth a doctrine of great weight, graue and hard to beleue: for the overcoming of which hardnes by faith, the Scripture giueth two helps, the example of christ, and the almightines of God. 3.25.3, 4.

A confutation of the Sadduces, which denie the Resurrection: and of the Millenaries which appointe the kingdome of Christ to endure but a thousand yeeres. 3.25.5.

A confutation of their error, which imagine that soules at the last day shall not receiue againe the bodies wherewith they are now cloathed, but shall haue new and other bodies. 3.25.7, 8.

Of the manner of the last Resurrection. 3.25.8.

By what reason, the last Resurrection, which is a singular benefit of Christ, is common also to the wicked and the accursed of God. 3.25.9.

S.

Sabbath.

AN exposition of the fourth commandment, the end therof, and the three causes whereupon wee must note that it consisteth. 2.8.28.

The first cause is a shadowing of spiritual rest, that is to say, of our sanctification: this is prooued by diuers places to haue bene the chiefe thing in the Sabbath 2.8.29.

Why the Lord appointeth the seventh day. 2.8.30, 31.

This part, for as much as it was Ceremonial, is taken away by the death of Christ. 2.8.31.

The two later causes, that is to say, that there should be certaine daies appointed for assemblies in the church, & that there should be giuen to seruants, a rest from their labor, do serue for all ages. 3.8.32.

The Table.

Of daies of meeting in the church to hear the worde of God and common prayers: where is spoken of obseruing of the sunday. 2.8.32, 33. and of superstition to be avoided in this behalfe. 2.8.34.

Sacraments.

What is a Sacrament. 4.14.1.

For what reason the old writers vsed this word in that sense. 4.14.2, 13.

A Sacrament is neuer without a promise going before, which the Lord sealeth by that meane, wherein he prouideth helpe for our ignorance and dulnesse, and also for our weakenes. 4.14.3, 5, 6, 12.

A sacrament consisteth of the worde and the outward signe: but the sacramental word is to betaken otherwise than the papists think 4.14.4.

Sacraments cease not to be testimonies of the grace of God, although they be giuen also to the wicked, which do gather to themselves more grievous damnation thereby. 4.14.7.

Our faith is so confirmed by sacraments, that yet it hengeth vpon the inward effectuall working of the spirit. 4.14.9, 10, 11. and no vertue is to be put in the creatures. Sect. 12.

A confutation of the diuclish doctrine of the sophistical schooles, that the sacraments of the new law do iustifie and do giue grace, so that we do not stop it with deadly sinne. 4.14.14.

Augustines good distinction betweene a sacrament and thing of the sacrament, whereby is proueed that though God in Sacraments do truly offer Christ, yet the wicked receiue nothing but the sacrament, that is to say, the outward signe. 4.14.15, 16.

We must not thinke that there is ioyned or fastened to the sacraments any secreete vertue, whereby they by themselves do giue vs the graces of the holy Ghost. 4.14.17.

In the old time God gaue vnto his people some sacramentes in miracles and some in naturall things. And there is spoken of the tree of life and of the rainebowe. 4.14.18.

Sacramentes are on the Lordes behalfe testimonies of grace and saluation, and on our behalfe tokens of our profession. 4.14.19.

The sacramentes of the olde Church vnder the lawe, tended to the same ende that our sacramentes doe, that is to say, Christ: whom yet our sacraments do more plainly represent, wherefore the schoolemens doctrine is to reiected, which say, that the old sacraments did shew a shadow of the grace of God, and ours do giue it presently. 4.14.20, 21, 22, 23, &c.

The five falslie called Sacraments.

When we denie those five to bee Sacraments, which are inuented by men, we strue not about the name but the thing: because the papists will haue them to be vible forms of inuisible grace. 4.19.1.

Many reasons are brought, why it is not lawfull for men to make sacraments. Also there is a difference to be put betweene sacraments, and other ceremonies. 4.19.2.

The number of seauen sacraments cannot be proueed by the authoritie of the olde church. 4.19.3.

Although the old church vnder the lawe, had no sacraments, yet at this day, the christian Church ought to be content with those two, which Christ hath ordained: and it is not lawfull for men to make other, nor to ad vnto those any thing of their owne. 4.18.20.

Sacrifices.

A difference betweene the sacrifices of Moses his law, and the supper of the Lord in the christian church. 4.18.12.

What the name of a sacrifice properly signifieth: and of the diuers kinds of sacrifices vnder the lawe: which may be deuided into two sorts, whereof some may be called of thanksgiuing, and other some propitiatorie or of cleansing. 4.18.13.

Our onely propitiatorie sacrifice, is the death of Christ. Sacrifices of thanksgiuing we haue many, as all the duties of charitie, prayers, praises, giuing of thanks, and all that we do to the worshipping of God. 4.18.13, 16, 17.

This maner of sacrificing is daily vsed in the church, and in the supper of the Lord: And thereupon all Christians are sacrificing priests.

Satisfactions Papiisticall.

Of satisfaction, which they make the thurde thing in penance, of retaining the paine, paine, the fault being forgiven, and such like lies, which all are overthrown, by setting against the free forgiveness of sinnes, by the name of Christ. 3. 4. 25.

A confutation of the blasphemous error of the schoolemen, that forgiveness of sins, and reconciliation is once done in baptism, but after Baptisme we must rise againe by satisfactions. 3. 4. 26.

By such error, Christ is spoiled of his honor, & the peace of conscience is troubled, forasmuch as they can never certainly determine, that their sins are forgiven them. 3. 4. 27.

In Daniel, when Nabuchadnezzar is commanded to redeeme his sinnes with righteousness: that same redeeming is referred to God, rather than to men, and the cause of pardon is not there set forth, but rather the manner of true conversion. The same is to be saide of certaine other places of Scripture. 3. 4. 36.

An exposition of that place in the Gospell, Many sinnes are forgiven her, because she hath loved much: Meaning that love is not the cause, but the proove of forgiveness. 3. 4. 37.

The olde writers of the Church did not speake of satisfactions in such sense as the Papistes doe: for they vnderstand that the penitent doe make satisfaction to the Church, and not to God. 3. 4. 38, 39.

*Scripture, the Word of God, and the authoritie

Men doe not sufficiently know God the creator, and discern him from fained gods, by consideration of his creatures, vnles they be also holpen by the light of the word. And God hath kept this order in teaching them that be his, not onely since that he chose the Iewes for his peculiar people, but also from the beginning, euen toward Adam, Noe, and the other Fathers. 1. 6. 1.

Either by oracles, or by visions, or by the ministerie of other, the Fathers had the word which they were certainly perswaded to be the word of God, whereby they knew the true GOD the creator and gouernor of all things: which word afterward, that he might prouide for men in all ages, he caused to be written in the Law and the Prophetes, as it were in publike registers. 1. 6. 2, 3. in which place also is prooued by testimonies of Scripture, that the doctrine of the word, must be ioyned to the consideration of creatures, least we conceiue a sicke knowledge of God.

Of them which say that the authoritie of Scripture hangeth vpon the iudgement of the Church, and in how ill case we should be, if it were so. 1. 7. 1.

This error is well confuted by the place of Paul in the second chapter to the Ephesians, where he saith that the faithfull are builded vpon the foundation of the Apostles and Prophetes. 1. 7. 2.

In what sense Augustine sayeth, that hee would not haue beleued the Gospell, vnles the authoritie of the Church did moue him: which place they doe cauilously wretch to the confirmation of their error. 1. 7. 3.

Although there be many other argumentes, which do prooue, yea, doe enforce the wicked to confesse, that the Scripture came from God, yet by none other meane than by the secret testimonie of the Holy Ghost, our hartes are truly perswaded that it is GOD, which speaketh in the Law, in the Prophetes, and in the Gospell. And this is prooued by many places of Esai. 1. 7. 4, 5.

The orderly disposition of the wisdom of God, the doctrine fauoring nothing of earthliness, the goodly agreement of all the partes among themselves, and specially that baseness of contemptible wordes, vntering the high mysteries of the heauenly kingdom, are second helpe to stablish the credit of Scripture. 1. 8. 1, 2, 11.

Also the antiquity of the Scripture, whereas the bookes of other religions, are later than the bookes of Moses, which yet doth not himselfe inuent a new God, but setteth forth to the Israelites, the God of their fathers. 1. 8. 3, 4.

Whereas Moses doth not hide the shame of Leui his Father, nor the murmuring of Aaron his brother, & of Mary his sister, nor doth aduance his owne children: the same are arguments, that in his bookes is nothing fained by man. 1. 8. 4.

Also the miracles which happened, as well at the publishing of the law, as in all the rest of time. 1. 8. 5.

The Table.

Which miracles, when the prophane writers could not deny, they cauled, that Moses did then by Magicall Artes. Which sclander is confuted by most strong reasons. 1.8.6.

Also whereas Moses speaking in the person of Israhel, assigneth the government to the Tribe of Juda, and where he telleth before of the calling of the Gentiles, whereof the one came to passe foure hundred yeeres after, and the other almost two thousand yeeres: these are arguments, that it is God himselfe which speaketh in the Bookes of Moses. 1.8.7.

Whereas Esay telleth before of the captiuitie of the Jewes, and their restoring by Cyrus (which was borne a hundred yeeres after the death of Esa) and where Ieremie before that the people was ledde away appointeth their exile to continue three score and tenne yeeres, whereas Ieremy and Ezechiel, being farre distant in places the one from the other, doe agree in all their sayings, where Daniel telleth before of things to come, for sixe hundred yeeres after: these are most certaine prooues, to stablish the authoritie of the Bookes of the Prophetes. 2.8.3.

Against certaine vngodly scoffers which aske how we know that those are the writings of Moses and the Prophetes, which are read in their names: and how we know that there was euer any such Moses. 1.8.9

Also of them that aske, from whence the copies of the Bookes of the Scripture came to vs, forasmuch as Antiochus commanded them all to be burned. And there is spoken of the wonderfull prouidence of God in preferuing them so many ages, among so many enemies, and so cruell persecutions. 1.8.10.

The simplicity of speech of the first three Euangelists, containng heavenly mysteries, the phrase of John thundering from on high with weightie sentences, the heauenly maiestie shining in the writings of Peter and Paul, the sudden calling of Matthew from the boorde, the calling of Peter and Iohn from their fisherbootes to the preaching of the Gospell, the conuersion and calling of Paul being an enemy to Apostleship, are signes of the holy Ghost speaking in them. 1.8.11.

The consent of so many ages, of so sundrie nations, and of so diuersē munes in embracing the Scripture, and the rare godlinesse of some, ought to stablish the authoritie thereof among vs. 1.8.12.

Also the blood of so many Martyrs which for the confession thereof, haue suffered death with a constant and sober zeale of God. 1.8.13.

Against certaine phrentike men, which forsaking the reading of Scripture and learning, doe boast of the Spirit and doe flie to reuelations. 1.9.1, 2.

A confutation of their obiection, that it is not meete that the Spirit of God, to whom all things ought to be subiect, should be subiect to the Scripture. 1.9.2.

Also where they say that we rest vpon the letter which slayeth 1.9.3.

The Lord hath ioyned with a mutuall knot the certaintie of his doctrine and of his Spirit. 1.9.3.

Such as the beholding of the heauen and earth and other creatures doth depaint out God vnto vs, such doth the Scripture set him forth, that is to say, eternall, full of goodnesse, clemencie, mercie, righteoulnesse, iudgement and truth: and also to the same end. 1.10.1, 2.

What is to be thought of the power of the church in exposition of scripture. 4.9.13

The Romish Doctors doe wrongfully abuse this colour to the confirmation of their errors and blasphemies 4.9.14.

Of singing in the Church.

Voyce and singing auale nothing in prayer, without affection of the harte 3.20.31.33.

Of the vsage of Singing in Churches. 3.20.32.

Single life.

Their shamelesnes which doe set forth the comelinesse of Single life for a thing necessarie, to the great reproch of the olde Church. By what degrees this tyranny crept into the Church: and how it cannot be defended by the pretence of certaine old Canons. 4.12.26, 27, 28.

Priestes were forbidden to marry by wicked tyranny, and against the word of God, and against all equitie. 4.12.23.

An answer to the aduerfaries obiection, that the priest must by fome marke differre from the lay people. 4. 12. 24.

The blasphemie of the Pope, saying that marriage is defiling and vncleannes of the flesh. 4. 12. 24.

It is fond to defend the forbidding of marriage with the examples of the Leuiticall priests, which when they should go into the sanctuary lay asunder from their wiues. 4. 12. 25.

Sinne.

A confutation of Platoes saying, that men Sinne not but by ignorance: also of their opinion which say that in all Sinnes there is an aduised malice and frowardnes. 2. 2. 22, 23, 25.

Against the false imagination of the Sophisters concerning venial finnes, which they cal desires without a determined assent, which do not long rest in the hart: it is proued that every sinne, even the lightest desire deserueth death, and is deadly, except in the saints which obtaine pardon by the mercie of God. 2. 8. 58, 59.

A confutation of their fonde distinction between deadly and venial sins, and of their scander when they say that we make all sins equall. 3. 4. 28.

How it is to be expounded, that God visiteth the iniquitie of the Fathers vpon the children vnto the third and fourth generation: and whether such reuengement be vnseemely for the righteousness of God. 2. 8. 19. 20.

Sinne against the holy Ghost.

The true definition of Sin against the holy Ghost, & examples thereof out of the scripture. 3. 3. 22.

It is not one or another particular falling, but a generall forsaking, the description whereof is declared by the Apostle. Neither is it any maruell if God wil be alwaies vnapeasable to them that haue so fallen. 3. 3. 23. forasmuch as he promiseth pardon onely to them that repent, which they shall neuer do. And though the scripture do say that some such haue groaned and cried, yet that was not repentance or conuersion, but rather a blind torment by desperation. 3. 3. 24.

Of the Soule.

That the Soule or Spirit of man is not onely a breath, but an immortall substance, although it were created, is proued by conscience, by the knowledge of God, & by so many excellent gifts wherewith the minde of man is endued, yea, and by those things which it conceueth in sleepe, and also by many arguments taken out of the scripture 1. 15. 2. Finally by this that it is said, that man was created after the image of God. Sect. 5.

Against them that vnder the colour of Nature do denie the prouidence and gouernance of God vterring it selfe in the maruelous and in a manner innumerable powers of the soule. 1. 5. 4, 5.

A confutation of the error of the Manichees and of Seruetus, that the soule is a deriuation of the substance of God: also of the error of Osander, which acknowledgeth no image of God in man without an essentiall righteousness. 1. 15. 5.

Concerning the immortality of the soule, in a manner none of the Philosophers hath certainly spoken: but they doe binde the powers thereof to this present life, whereas the scripture doth so giue to it the chiefe rule in gouernance of life, that it also stirreth vp man to the worshipping of God. Also of the diuersitie of soules, and of the diuision of the powers of the soule according to the Philosophers. 1. 15. 6.

Another diuision more agreeable with Christian doctrine, that is to say, that the powers of the soule are vnderstanding and will: and the office and force of either of them in mans first estate. 1. 15. 7, 8.

That there yet remaineth somewhat of the seede of religion yet imprinted euen in the corruption of the soule. 1. 15. 6.

Of their error which thought that whole man perisheth by death, and that the soules at the last shall riae againe with the bodies. 3. 25. 6.

Of the state of soules from death to the last day. 3. 25. 6.

A description taken out of Bernarde, of the miseries of a faithfull soule, being considered as it is in it selfe and of it selfe: and on the other side, of the assured glorying of a faithfull soule in Christ, which blotteth out all her vnworthinesse. 3. 2. 25.

Superstition.

The simplicitie of the superstitious doth not excuse them, because their blindnes is found to be mingled with vanitie, pride, and obstinacie. 1. 4. 1. 3.

When superstition goeth about to please God, it mocketh him with lying colours. 1. 4. 3.

The superstitious do not approche vnto God but against their will and with seruile feare. 1. 4. 4.

Whofocuer do corrupt the true religion, although they follow the consent of antiquitie or the custome of any citie, yet they depart from the one and true God. 1. 5. 12.

It is prooued by the etymologie of the words Superstition, Religion, Eusebeia or godlines, what difference is betweene Religion and superstition. 1. 12. 1.

The craft of superstition, when graunting the chiefe place to the one God, it be-fettereth him with a rout of smaller Gods. 1. 12. 1, 3.

Supper of the Lord.

Of the bread and wine the signes in the holy supper: and it is declared by his own words at his Supper, why the Lord willed that we should vse them. 4. 17. 1.

Wee gather a great fruit of confidence and sweetnesse out of this sacrament, which testifieth that wee are so growen together into one bodie with Christ, that whatsoever is his, wee may lawfully call it ours. 4. 17. 2.

This is declared by the words of the supper. 4. 17. 3.

The chiefe office of the sacraments is not to giue vnto vs the body of Christ without any higher consideration, but rather to seale that promise wherein hee testifieth that his flesh is verily meat. 4. 17. 4.

The supper maketh not Christ then first to beginne to bee the bread of life, but that wee should feele the force of that bread. He once gaue his flesh for the life of the world, & dayly giueth it to them that bee his. Wee must beware that we do not too much abace or aduance the signes. The eating of the flesh of Christ is not faith, but rather the effect of faith. 4. 17. 5.

So thought Chrysostome and Augustine: and in what sense Augustine said, that in beleeuing we eat the flesh of Christ. 4. 17. 6.

They do not say enough, which passing ouer the mention of flesh and bloode, doe thinke that wee are made partakers onely of the spirite of Christ. The mysterie of the Supper is so great, that neither the tongue can expresse with speaking, nor the heart comprehend with thinking the greatnesse thereof. 4. 17. 7.

How farre the perfect communicating of Christ extendeth. Where is declared that Christ, which from the beginning was the life giuing word of the father, made the flesh which he took vpon him to be also life giuing to vs. 4. 17. 8, 9.

The faithfull doe truly eate of the same flesh howe great distance of places soeuer there be between them and it. 4. 17. 10.

The mysterie of the supper consisteth of two things, the bodily signes, and the spiritual truth: Which spiritual truth containeth three things, signification, matter, and effect. 4. 17. 11.

Of the transubstantiation of bread & wine into the body and blood of Christ, which the craftsmen of the court of Rome haue forged. 4. 17. 12, 13. &c. & 20.

They are without testimony of antiquity. And in what sense the old writers said, that in the consecration is made a secret turning. Also the signification of the supper agreeth not, vnlesse the substance of the outward signes remaine. 4. 17. 14.

The bread is a sacrament to none but to men to whom the worde is directed. And heere are confuted certaine arguments of the teachers of transubstantiation. 4. 17. 15.

Of some men, which though they do at one word graunt that the substance of the signes remaineth, yet placing the body of Christ in breade and vnder breade, they fall backe into the locall presence, and saine a being euery where. 4. 17. 16, 17, 18, 20.

A confutation of their obiections. 4. 17. 21, 22, 23. &c.

It is prooued that this doctrine is not maintained, neither by the testimony of Augustine, nor by authoritie of scripture. 4. 17. 28, 29. 30. 31.

The Table.

A confutation of certaine other of their obiections, and chiefly of this that they say, that whatsoeuer wee teach of spirituall eating, is against the true and reall eating: where also is declared that the body of Christ is in the supper offered to the infidels, but they receiue it not. 4.17.33.

Neither can the saying of Augustine bee drawn to this purpose, that the Sacraments are nothing appeared by the infidelitie of men. Which is proued by diuerse other testimonies of the same man. 4.17.34.

How the body and bloud of Christ is giuen to vs in the Supper, and what manner of presence of Christ we ought to hold therein 4.17.18,19,32.

Of the exposition of the words of Christ in the supper. 4.17.20,21.

The body of Christ is contained in quantitie, and comprehended in heauen vntill the last day, as it is proued by the scriptures, 4.17.26,27.

Of the papistes carnall adoration, and concomitance, and consecration of the host (as they call it) and carrying it about in pompe. 4.17.35,36,37.

The mysterie of the supper ought to stirre vs vp to giuing of thanks, to exercise vs in remembering the death of Christ, to kindle vs to holines of life, and chiefly to charity. 4.17.37,38.

In the papacie the Supper (the true ministracion whereof is not without the word) is turned into a dumme action. And heere is spoken of the laying vp of the Sacrament to bee extraordinarily distributed to sicke men. 4.17.39.

The doctrine of the papistes, when they go about to prepare men to the worthinesse of eating the body of Christ, doth in cruell wise torment consciences: And the duell coule not by any readier way destroy men. Of the best remedie to auoid this destructi-on. They erre which in the supper doe require of the faithfull perfection of faith. 4.17.41,42.

As touching the outwarde vsage of the ministracion of the Supper, there are manie things indifferent: And how it ought to bee ministred most comely. 4.17.43.

Of the small assemble at this daie at the partaking of the Supper, which is a token of contempt, wherewith the holy fathers in olde time were much displeas'd: And how the custome which commandeth men to communicate oncc euery yeere, was a most certaine inuention of the diuill. 4.17.44,45,46.

It is proued by authoritie of the scripture and by the vsage of the old Church, fower hundred yeeres before the death of Gregory, and by many other argumentes, that the constitution which tooke away from laic men the cup of the Lord, came out of the diuels worke-shop. 4.17.47,48,49,50.

Of the concomitance of the bloud in the flesh of Christ, which is a popish inuention. 4.17.47.

The Supper of the Lord is profanely abused, if it be giuen to all men without choice. Of the dutie of ministers in receiuing the viwoorthie. 4.12.5.

A brieue sum of those things which wee ought to knowe concerning the two Sacraments. And why the supper is oftentimes ministred, and Baptisme but once. 4.18.19.

Swearing.

An exposition of the thirde commandment, in which these three things are conreined, that we neither thinke or speake anie thing of God, nor of his word and honorable mysteries, nor yet of any of his workes, otherwise than reuerently. 2.8.22.

A definition of Swearing: where is declared that it is a kinde of worshipping of God. And therefore wee must beware that our othes containe not any dishonor to the name of God, which is done in forswearing: or any contempt of it, which is done in superfluous othes, or in which the name of any other than God is vsed. 2.8.23,24,25.

It is proued by Scripture against the Anabaptists: that all othes are not forbidden vs, that Christ in the Gospell changed nothing as touching the rule of Swearing, set forth in the lawe. 2.8.26. Which is proued by his owne example: and not onely publike, but also priuate othes are permitted, keeping the moderation which the lawe commandeth. 2.8.27.

Temples.

OF Temples of Christian men for assemblies of the congregation. 3.20.30.

The Table.

It is prooued by the authoritie of the old Church, and the reasons of Augustine, that it is not expedient, that there shoulde bee any images in Christian temples. 1. 11. 13.

The preaching of the word and the Sacramentes, are liuely images which onely are fit to bee in Christian Temples, 1. 11. 7. 13.

The wickednesse of the Nycene Synode which was holden by the commandement of Irene the Emperesse, and the filthy follies thereof in allowing images in Temples, and the worshipping of them. 1. 11. 14, 15, 16.

Of the garnishing of Temples and holie thinges in the olde Church. 4. 4. 8. and 4. 5. 18.

Temptations.

Of diuerse kindes of Temptations: and in what sence it is said that God tempteth vs. 3. 20. 46.

Testament, old, and new.

Of the likenes of the old, and new Testament: Where is declared, that they are all one in substance and matter, but onely doe differ in ministracion. The likenes standeth chiefly in three points. 2. 10. 1, 2.

The first point is, that the old Testament did not holde the fathers in earthly felicitie, but had chiefe regarde to the life to come. Which is prooued by Paul, which saith that the promises of the Gospell are contained vnder it. 2. 10. 3.

The same also is prooued by the lawe and the Prophetes: First, by considering the wordes of the couenant: I am your God, 2. 10. 7, 8.

Againe, I will bee the God of your seed after you, Sect. 9. Also by the life of the holy Fathers, as Adam, Abel, Noe, Sect. 10. Abraham, Sect. 11. Isaac, Jacob, Sect. 12. 13. 14. And by many testimonies of Dauid. Sect. 15, 16, 17, 18. Of Iob, Sect. 19. Generally of all the latter prophets. Sect. 20. But namely of Ezechiel. Sect. 21. Of Esaie and Daniel. Sect. 22. A conclusion of this point with rehearsing certaine testimonies out of the new Testament. Sect. 23.

The second point is that the olde Testament did not stand vpon the merits of men, but vpon the free mercie of God. The third point is that the couenant of the Fathers with God, did then stand vpon like knowledge of Christ the mediator. 2. 10. 4.

Also in signification of Sacraments the Israelites vnder the law were equal with the Christian people. 2. 10. 5, 6.

There are fower differences of the olde Testament from the newe, whereunto we may adde a fift. The first is, that although in the old time also the Lords wil was to direct the soules of his people to the heauenly inheritance: Yet to the ende that they might bee the better nourished in the hope thereof, hee gaue it them to bee beholden, and after a certaine manner tasted vnder earthly benefites. But nowe the grace of the life to come, being more cleerely reueiled by the Gospell, hee directeth our mindes the straight way to the meditation thereof, leauing the inferior manner of exercising which hee vsed among the Israelites. 2. 11. 1.

Therefore the old Church is compared to an heire vnder age, which is governed by Guardians 2. 11. 2.

For this reason, the fathers so much esteemed this life, and the blessings thereof. 2. 11. 3.

The second difference is in figures wherewith the olde Testament did shewe forth the image and shadowe of spirituall good thinges. The newe Testament giueth the present truth and perfect bodie. There is also a reason shewed why the Lorde kept this order: And a definition of the old testament 2. 11. 4.

In this sence it is saide, that the Iewes were by the introduction or schooling of the lawe ledde vnto Christ: before that he was deliuered in the flesh. 2. 11. 5. which appeared in the most excellent Prophets that were endued with singular grace of the spirite. Sect. 6.

The third difference, is taken out of the one and thirde Chapter of Jeremie, and the thirde Chapter of the second Epistle to the Corinthians, that the old Testament is littall, and the new Testament is spirituall: the old bringeth death, the newe is the instrument of life. 2. 11. 7, 8.

The fourth difference is, that the Scripture calleth the olde Testament, the Testament of bondage, because it engendreth fear in mens mindes: but the new is called the Testament of libertie, because it raiseth them vp to confidence and suretie. The three latter differences are comparisons of the lawe and the Gospell. The first containeth also the promises made before the law. The fathers liued so vnder the lawe and the olde Testament, that they staid not there, but alwaies aspired to the new, yea and embraced a certaine communicating thereof.

2.11.9,10.

The fifth difference is, that before the coming of Christ, the Lorde had seuered one nation, in which hee would keepe the covenant of his grace, in the meane time neglecting all other nations. So the calling of the Gentiles is a certaine signe, where-with the excellencie of the new Testament is set forth about the olde: a thing so incredible, that it seemed yet newe to the Apostles themselves, being exercised in reading of the Prophets, and endured with the holy Ghost 2.11.11,12.

A conclusion of this matter, and an answer to diuers objections of some men, which saie that this varietie in the Church, this diuerse manner of teaching, so great change of vsages and ceremonies, is a great absurditie. Where is declared that the constancie of God appeereth in this chaunging, and hee hath done nothing but wisely, righteously, and in mercie, when he gouerneth his Church, after one sort in childhood, and after another sort in ripier age, and also when hee did keepe close in one people the shewing forth of his grace before the coming of Christ, which afterwarde he powred forth vpon all nations.

2.11.13,14.

Thefe.

An exposition of the eight Commandement: where is treated of diuers kindes of Thefte, and some which although men iudge other wise, yet are accounted Theftes before God. And so hee that doth not performe that which by the office of his calling hee oweth to other, is a Thefe.

2.8.45.

What we ought to do, that we may obey this commandement, is shewed by diuers examples according to the diuersitie of persons and offices. 2.8.46.

Traditions.

For as much as the Lord, willing to teach a rule of true righteoufnesse, hath drawn all the partes thereof to his owne will, thereby it appeereth, that all the good workes which men deuise of their owne wits, are nothing woorth before him: But the true worshipping standeth vpon obedience onely, which is the beginning, mother, and preseruer of all vertues. 2.8.5.

Of Traditions of men, that is to say, ordinances proceeding from men, concerning the worshipping of God: And of the vngodlinesse and necessitie of them. 4.10.1, 2, 3, 6, 7, 8.

A diuision of popish constitutions, which they call Traditions of the Church, into such as containe ceremonies, and other which are said to pertaine to discipline. The wickednesse of both sortes, because they place the worship of God in them, and consciences are bound with precise necessitie of them. 4.10.9.

For them the commaundement of God is made voide 4.10.10.

A true marke of mens Traditions, which ought to be reiected of the Church, and of all godly men. 4.10.16.

A confutation of the pretence which some men vse that defende Popish Traditions to bee of God, because the Church cannot erre, and is governed by the holy Ghost. 4.10.17.

It is a mere mockerie to say, that the Apostles were authors of the Traditions, wherwith the Church hath heretofore been oppressed 3.10.18, 19, 20.

The example of the Apostles, when they commaunded the Gentiles to abstaine from things offered vnto Idols, from strangled, and from bloud, is falsly alleaged to excuse the tyrannie of the Popes lawes. 4.10. 21, 22.

The Lords kingdome is taken from him, when hee is worshipped with the lawes of mens Traditions: which is prooued by examples and testimonies of scripture to haue alwaies bene a most haunous offence in the sight of God. 4.10. 23, 24.

The inuentions of men cannot bee defended by the example of Meneha, which being a private man offered sacrifice, nor of Samuel which sacrificed in Ramath. 4.10.25. nor of Christ which willed men to beare the burdens that the Scribes and Pharisees did binde together. 4.10.26.

Of holy and profitable ordinances of the Church, and the ende that they tende vnto. 4.10.1.

Of such ordinances of the Church as ought to bee accounted holy, namely those which serue for comlineffe, or doe preferue order and peace in the Church. 4.10.27,28,29. We must wisely consider, which bee of that sort. 4.10.30.

It is the dutie of Christian people, to obserue such ordinances: And what errors herein are to be taken heede of: And howe in the meane time, the libertie of consciences may still bee preferued safe. 4.10.31,32.

Tributes.

Of Tributes, Taxes, Impositions, and Finances, which are paid to Princes: And howe Princes may vse them with a good conscience. 4.20.13.

Trinitie.

A confutation of them which in this matter doe condemne the name of person, and reiect it for newnesse. 1.13.3,4,5.

The holy doctors haue bene compelled to inuent certaine new wordes, to defende the truth of God against certaine subtil men, which mocked it out with shifting: as against Arius they inuented this worde Homoousson Consubstantiall, and against Sabellius the name of three properties or persons. 1.13.4,16.

The diuers sentences of Hierome, Hilarie, and Augustine, in the vse of theic wordes. 1.13.5.

What we call a person, when we entreat of the Trinitie. 1.13.6.

Of the error of Seruetus, in the taking of this word Person. 1.13.22.

As God hath more cleerely opened himselfe by the comming of Christ, so hee is since that time more familiarly made knowne in the three Persons. 1.13.16.

Testimonies of Scripture, whereby is shewed the distinction of the Father from the Word, and of the Word from the Spirit. 1.13.17.

Also in the Scripture there is a distinction made of the Father, from the Word and the Spirit, and of the Spirit from them both, as well by obseruation of order, as by prophecies ascribed to them. 1.13.18.

This distinction of Persons maketh not against the most simple vnitie of God. 1.13.19.

In what sense the Fathers say, that the Father is the beginning of the Sonne, and yet that the Sonne hath his essence of himselfe. 1.13.19.

A brieue summe of those things which wee ought to beleecue concerning the one essence of God & the three persons. 1.13.20.

And herein we must dispute soberly, and with great moderation, that neither our thought, nor our tooing, doe passe beyond the bonds of the word of God. 1.23.21.

A confutation of the doing errors of Seruetus in this point of doctrine. 1.13.22.

A confutation of the error of certaine lewde men, which say, that the Father is truly and properly the one onely GOD, which in making the Sonne and the holy Ghost, did powre his Godhead into them. 1.13.23.

It is false which they say, that when mention is made of God in the Scripture, onely the Father is meant thereby. 1.13.24.

Also it is false which they dreame of vndiuided substances, of which every one hath a part of the essence. 1.13.25.

An answer to their obiection, that Christ, if he be properly God, is wrongfully called the sonne of God. 1.13.26.

An answer to many places which they bring out of Irenaeus for prooue of their opinion, where hee affirmeth the Father of Christ to be the one onely and eternall God of Israel. 1.13.27.

Also to the places of Tertullian. Sect. 28.

It is prooued that Iustine, Hilarie, and Augustine, doe make of our side. 1.13.19.

The Sonne is of the same substance with the Father. 4.8.16.

Forasmuch as the grace of healing which was in the olde time giuen to the Apostles, hath long agoe ceased in the Church. Sect. 19. 20. And though it still remained, yet this their wicked obseruation is farre from that holie ceremonie of the Apostles. A declaration of the blasphemies thereof when they coniure the oyle, and ascribe vnto it that which is proper to the holie Ghost. 4. 19. 21.

Vowes.

Of Vowes which are made against the expresse worde of God: whether they may well be vowed of Christian men, and howe they are to be esteemed. 4. 13. 1, 6.

Three things are to bee considered in Vowes: Who it is to whom we vowe, namely God which delighteth in obedience. 4. 13. 2. Who we be that do Vowe, that wee measure our owne strength and looke vpon our calling, that wee neglect not the benefite of libertie which God hath giuen vs. Sect. 3. And with what minde we Vowe. Sect. 4.

Of the Priestes, Monkes, and Nonnes Vowe of single life. 4. 13. 3, 17, 18, 19.

There be two endes of Vowes, two haue respect to the time past, and two to the time to come. 4. 13. 4, 5.

There is one common Vowe of all the faithfull which they make in baptsime. 4. 13. 6.

Of the rashnesse and superstition of the world in making of Vowes. 4. 13. 1, 7.

W

Of Warres.

Warres are lawfull, when Magistrates are driuen of necessitie to take weapon in hand, to execute publike reuenge vpon those that trouble the peace of their dominion, whether they bee ciuill or forreine enemies. 4. 20. 11.

It maketh not to the contrarie heereof, which manie alleage, that there is not in the newe Testament anie testimonie or example which proueth that Warre is a thing lawfull for Christians. But Magistrates ought to take great heede, that in taking of weapon in hand, they nothing at all followe their own lustes. As Warre, so garisons also, leagues and ciuill fortifications are things lawfull for Christians to vse. 4. 20. 12.

Will of God.

Of the secret will of God. Also of another Will, whereunto answereth Willing obedience. 3. 20. 43. and 3. 24. 1, 7.

Will of Man.

Whether the Will of man bee in euerie part through defiled and corrupted, so that it bringeth forth nothing but euill: Or whether it yet reteine some libertie of choise. Where is declared the common saying taken out of the Philosophers, that all things by naturall disposition couet that which is good. And there is shewed that the libertie of wil cannot be proued thereby. 2. 2. 26.

The soule hath not onely a weake power but no power at all of it selfe to aspire to goodnes. And sith the whole man is subiect to the dominion of sin, it is proued by testimonies of scripture and of Augustine, that the will of man is bound with most streight bondes. 2. 2. 27.

Man by his fall lost not his Will, but the soundnesse of his Will, so that hee cannot moue, much lesse applie himselfe to goodnes, but is necessarily drawn or lead vnto euill, howbeit not by compulsion but voluntarily. Which is proued by Augustine and Eernerde. A large declaration of the difference betweene compulsion and necessitie. 2. 3. 5.

Sith the Lorde both beginneth and perfecteth good in our harts, sith he worketh in vs to will, that is to saie the good will, sith he createth a newe hart, taketh away the stonie hart and giueth a fleshy hart, it followeth, that the Will of man is viterlic corrupted and hath no goodnesse at all. 2. 3. 6.

It is cleerely proued by reasons and diuerse testimonies of Scripture, that God worketh good will in them that bee his, not onely in preparing or turning them from the beginning so as it may afterwarde doe some good of it selfe. But because it is his onely worke that Will conceiue a loue of goodnes, that it is enclined to the studie thereof, that it is stirred and moued to an endour.

The Table.

endeavour to followe it, and againe that the choise, studie, and endeavour doe not faile, but proceed to effect, finally that man goeth constantly forward in them and continueth to the end. 2. 3. 7. 8. 9.

Therefore it is prooued by the authoritie of Scripture & of Augustine that this which hath bin taught these many ages, that God so moueth our will, that it is afterwarde in our owne choise to obey or disobey his motion and other like sayings are viterly false. 2. 3. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14.

Also in doings, which of themselves are neither righteous nor vnrighteous, and belong rather to the bodily than the spirituall life, the wil of man is not free, but by the speciall motion of God is enclined to clemencie, mercy, wrath, feare, and other diuerse affections, when it pleaseth him to make way for his providence. Which is prooued by scripture, by daily experience, and by the authoritie of Augustine. 2. 4. 6, 7.

Workes.

A comparison of the purenes of God with all the righteousness of men. 3. 12. 4, 5.

All the offspring of Adam being diuided into fewer kinds of men, it is prooued that they haue no holines, or righteousness: First in them which are endued with no knowledge of God, in whom although there do sometime appeere excellent qualities (which are the gifts of God) yet there is in them nothing pure. 3. 14. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6.

The same is shewed in them which being professed by Sacraments, are Christians onely in name, denying God in their deeds: Also in hypocrites which with vaine false colours doe hide the wickenes of their hart. 3. 14. 7, 8.

Finally, it is prooued that euen the children of God truly regenerated by his spirite, can not stande by any righteousness of their owne workes before the iudgement of God, because they can bring forth no good worke that is not sprinkled with some vncleannes of the flesh, and therefore damnable. Moreover although they could bring forth anie such worke, yet one sin is enough to blot out the remembrance of all former righteousness. 3. 14. 9, 10, 11.

A confutation of the Papistes shifts concerning the righteousnes of workes: and specially of the same horrible monster of workes of supererogation. 3. 14. 12, 13, 14, 15.

When we entreate of workes wee must thrust two pestilences out of our minds: that we put no trust in the righteousness of our owne workes, and that we ascribe no glorie vnto them. 3. 14. 16.

The scripture setteth out and declareth fewer kinds of causes in stablishing our saluation: And it is prooued that in them all there is no regard of workes. 3. 14. 17.

Where sometimes the Saints do bolden themselves with remembrance of their own innocencie and vprightnes: how the same is to be taken: and howe it doth in no wise abate any thing from the free righteousness in Christ. 3. 14. 18. 19, 20.

Where the Scripture saith that the good workes of the faithfull do moue God to doe them good, the order is therein rather expressed than the cause. 3. 14. 21.

Why the Lorde in the Scripture calleth good workes ours, and promiseth rewarde to them. 3. 15. 3.

A confutation of the Sophisters inuention, concerning morall workes, whereby men bee made acceptable to GOD, before that they bee grafted into Christ. 3. 15. 6. & 17. 4.

Those rewardes are giuen to the workes of the faithfull, which the Lorde in his lawe hath promised to the followers of righteousness: but thereof there are three causes to be considered. 3. 17. 3.

We may note in the scripture two acceptances of man with God, of which the later although it haue respect to the good workes of the faithfull, yet is also the free mercede of God. 3. 17. 4, 5.

When it is said that God doth good to them that loue him, heere is not rehearsed a cause why he should doe them good, but rather the manner of what sort they be by his grace. 3. 17. 6.

An exposition of certaine places wherein the scripture giueth to good workes the name of righteousness. And there is shewed that those places are not against the doctrine of iustification of faith. 3. 17. 7.

One good worke or manie do not suffice for righteousness before God, although one sinne suffice to condemne. And here the principle hath no place, the contraries haue all one rule. 3. 18. 10.

Why the Lorde saide that he rendereth to workes that which hee had freely giuen before Works. 3. 18. 3. And therein he helpeth our weakenesse least we should be discouraged. 3. 18. 4, 6, 7.

Hereupon hangeth the righteousnesse of the good Workes which the faithfull doe, that by pardon they are allowed of God. 3. 18. 5.

THE ENDE OF THE TABLE.

TO THE CHRISTIAN AND STVDIOUS READERS OF this Booke, Augustine Marlorate wifheth health.

Whoeuer shall reade and peruse these two Tables following, and especially the latter, may maruell what I meant (after so many impressions and corrections of this worke) to collect and gather all the places of holy Scriptures therein alleged: and a great part of the authorities therein expounded, whereas if any fruit or profit thereof were to be had, the same long before might haue bene done: and especially about three yeeres past, when the author himselfe was so diligent therein: who besides the many and profitable additions (which it containeth) hee himselfe setting the same in order, with his owne handes, and reducing it to a most exact perfection did then set and publish it forth, in such sort, that in foure booke being diuided into Chapters and diuers Sections, hee hath right woorthily and in familiar manner, comprised the summe of the whole Christian Religion. And certainly I cannot denie but it would haue bene very good and commodious, if that any one man would haue taken the paine, faithfully and truly to haue collected those places: which thing I thought once to haue done by the aduise of the Imprinter, seeing that my charge and office did else where call mee, as also when I had perused and set it in another order than it was before, and had then finished it, I was compelled to omit it, or at the least to surcease for the time. And after that this booke being put forth both in Latine and French, was set to sale in euery place, because I sawe no man who then did take the paine to reduce the places of Scriptures to a Table, and vnderstanding how profitable the same would be to all men: I could not choose but after my power, and as leisure serued in those troublesome times, to employ my whole care and trauell therein. And because all things should be done and come forth more certaine and in better order: I would not give credite, nor trust to the numbers which the Imprinter had before set and made: for when I had diligently conferred them all, I found many false, many omitted, and some disorderly set: And surely that hath bene very soone to such as are not best skilfull in examining and perusing the places of holy Scripture to be soone deceiued. Wherefore all things diligently restored, and that supplied which seemed to want, I did so order the places of Scripture collected out of the olde and new Testament, that if there were any, through forgetfulness, or by any other means omitted or euerskiped: (as it cannot be but that in a great harvest some one eare of corne shall escape the reapers hands) I durst warrant so few shall be found, that this Table being brought to triall you shall not finde one much more plentifull or larger. Nevertheless I do pray and request the readers, that if they do finde any, they shall aduertise the Imprinter, whereby the same may better be examined and corrected. And this is to be noted, that such whole verses as I haue comprised in this Table, they were not wholly but in part alleged, much lesse expounded in the Institution: which thing I did vpon good consideration. For oftentimes it happeneth that in diuers places of the Institutions, some authorities are alleged, which are proued but by some part of the verse. And because in noting the places and numbers, we must use repetitions (which for the most part bring a lothsomnesse to the reader) I thought it better to put in the whole verse, than by often divisions, to use vaine and superfluous repetitions. And as concerning the commoditie which the reader may gather by this my trauell (besides that which by use and experience I am taught by these Tables, which for mine owne priuate studie and exercise I wrote vpon the Institutions heretofore set foorth) I darst to affirme this much that they which are not exercised in entreating the holy Scripture, and yet desirous to serue the Church of God, doe diligently endeouour themselves thereunto, they shall finde a large and plaine way, both with dexteritie to expound the writings of the Prophets and Apostles, as also aptly to apply the authorities here alleaged, and such like to the edifying of the Church, which is the very end of the whole. And although wee want not good Commentaries to discover vnto vs the naturall sense of the Scripture, which we doe now studie and apply: yet because they who wrote the same, and who with good successse haue trauelled therein, were contented with the plaine and sincere exposition of the text: none could tell by the use of the said Commentaries onely (vlesse they were well practised in the principles of religion) how and to what common place they ought to apply the argument then in hand. But who can be so contented to use this Table, when soeuer he shall finde the places which he entreateth, he shall see how and to what end the same is to be applied, whether to the confirmation of true doctrine, or to the confuting of the aduersaries, or to the reconciling of such places as seeme to be repugnant. And this shall be very commodious and profitable, not onely for the amplifying of any argument, but also to satisfie them, which are desirous to be confirmed in the principall points of Christian Religion. For it is manifest how simple and slender is their oration and speech, which bring and alleage nothing else, but as they read in the Commentaries: where the authors themselves (being most woorthie and well learned) doe chiefly desire breuitie, because the readers should use and studie the common places themselves, to the ende they should the more largely be applied to those things which in the Commentaries are but breesely expounded. Again, for as much as we haue not alwaies in readinesse, what good authors haue written vpon the Scripture: and very few Commentaries vpon some bookes, and namely vpon this Institution, are to be found or had: This Table expounding the obscure and hard authorities, shall greatly further and helpe the readers. For they shall either finde some readie interpretation, or some entrance whereby to search and finde out the true sentence. And as touching the translation, I trust it shall not seeme strange to the reader, in that I haue rather followed the selfe same words, as they be in the Bible, than as they be alleaged by Caluini in this his Institution. For he being a man most excellently well learned, and of great reading (as by his works it doth appeere, how readie and familiar the Scriptures were to him) had not alwaies the bookes in readinesse, or lying open before him, when he wrote: neither was it necessarie that what soeuer he did auouch out of the old or new Testament, he should expresse or write it in the selfe same wordes: for it is sufficient, that the sense be faithfully retained, and the true proprietie of the wordes obserued, and so to eschew the cauillings of all men, saving such as will finde fault in that, which in the least part cannot be followed nor obserued. Being therefore perswaded, that neither he himselfe will be offended, nor the reader mislike, if the sentences in the Bible be translated according to the Hebrew, as concerning the olde Testament, and according to the Greeke, as touching the new Testament: I haue aduertured to shrouch the authorities of the Scriptures in another order (as concerning the wordes) than they are alleaged in this booke of Institutions. And therefore sometimes that which is recited in the thirde person, this Table doth expresse in the seconde, and so contrariwise: but yet so, that the sense and meaning is alwaies referued, which thing euerie man shall easily perceiue, if diligently and without hastie iudgement, he doe conferre euerie thing together: for else curious heads doe loose that suite, which by aduised reading they might haue and receiue. And as concerning the names and numbers of the bookes, and of the Chapters of the olde Testament, we haue not followed the common translation, but that which is most agreeable to the Hebrew. And therefore we doe aduertise the readers, that they doe not take the first booke of the Kings, for the first of Samuel: nor the seconde of Kings, for the second of the same Prophet: which is so done by them, who heretofore haue quoted the Chapters in this imprinted booke, because they followed the Concordances of the Bible, called the great Concordances, which is collected according to the common translation: and by that meanes, as it may evidently appeere

The Table.

to all men some bookes of the Olde Testament are not lightly intituled: and the Psalmes otherwise and in another order diuided, than did the Hebrewes. And forasmuch as all the principall pointes of religion are in this Booke copiously and faithfully expounded, we may easilie refute the false opinions of the Adversaries. Whosoever shall come to the reading thereof, either with a minde to learne, or a desire to profite: there is no doubt, but he shall very much profite himselfe, and helpe others: whose consciences he may so strengthen and assure, as they neede not to quaille in any point, because they be assured, that their Faith is grounded vpon the firme foundation of the Prophetes and Apostles, who wrote and spake, being inspired by the holy Ghost, who hath willed and commanded his most precious and deare word, to be read, heard, and handled, in all feare and reuerence, without adding therunto, or taking from the same: leaſt we be woorthily reproboued of our folly. Let vs therefore, in all simplicitie and feare of God, read so wholesome and necessarie things, and dayly proceede therein, in the grace and knowledge of God, who onely is the Saviour, heade and Doctor of the Church: To whom now and for ever be all glory. Calend. M. lviij. 1562.

ANOTHER TABLE IN WHICH

are contained the places of the Bible according to the course of the olde and new Testament.

If at any time you do finde two numbers in the margent, the first signifieth the Chapter of the Bible, the second sheweth the verse of the same Chapter: but if you finde one number alone, then that signifieth the Verse onely. The first number put after the text signifieth the Booke of the Institutions, the second the Chapter, and the third the Section.

GENESIS.

- 1.1  N the beginning God created heauen and earth. 1.1.4.20
- 2 And the spirit of God was vpon the deepes. 1.1.3.14. & 1.1.3.22

- 23 And in the cuening he brought in Lelia his daughter to Jacob. 2.10.12
- 27 Fill vp the weeke of daies of this coupling, and I will giue her vnto thee for the worke by which thou shalt serue mee in seuen other yeeres. 2.10.12
- 30.1 But Rachel seeing that she was vnfruct-full, she enuied her sister, and said vnto hir husband, giue me children, otherwise I will die. 2.10.12
- 2 Whether or no am I a God that hath taken from thee the fruit of thy wombe? 1.
16.7
- 31.19 And Rachell stole away the idols of her father. 1.11.8
- 23 Who tooke his brethren vnto him, & following after him seuen daies, he tooke him in the mount Gilead. 2.10.12
- 40 Day and night I was oppressed with heat and cold, and sleepe was farre from mine eies. 2.10.12
- 53 Therefore Jacob swore by the feare of his father Isaac. 2.9.27
- 32.1 Jacob went on the iourney that he had taken in hand, & the Angels of the Lord met him. 1.14.5
- 7 Jacob feared wonderfully, &c. 2.10.12
- 10 I am not worthe of the least of all thy compassions, and all the truth which thou hast shewed vnto thy seruant: for with my staffe haue I passed ouer this Jordan.
3.22.14, & 3.20.26
- 11 Deliuer me from the hand of my brother Esau, because I feare him very much, least he comming, doe strike the mother with her sonnes. 2.10.12, & 3.20.14
- 28 For if thou were strong against God, how much more shalt thou preuaile against men? 1.14.5
- 29 Jacob asked him, tell mee what is thy name? he answered, why dost thou seeke after my name the which is manuellous?
and he blessed him in that place. 1.13.10
- 30 And Jacob called the name of that place Phanuell, saying, I sawe the Lord face to face, and my soule is safe. 1.13.10
- 33.3 And he going forth worshipped prostrate on the earth seuen times, vntill his brother drew nigh. 2.10.12
- 34.5 Jacob vnderstood that he had rauished his daughter Dina. 2.10.12
25. Simon and Leui the brethren of Dina went into the citie boldlie with their swords and all the male being slaine, &c.
2.10.12, & 4.1.24
- 29 You haue troubled me, and haue made mee bee hated of the Chananites and Pharaites inhabitants of this countrie. 2.
10.12
- 35.18 But her soule departing for grieffe, &
death being now at hand, she called, &c.
2.10.12
- 21 Ruben went, and slept with Bala the

 me. 2. 10. 12
 43. 14 My omnipotent God make him fauourable towards you, & that he let loofe with you your brother that he holdeth in chaines and this Beniamin: for I shall be as once destitute without children. 2.
 4. 6
 45. 8 I was not sent hither by your counsell, but by the will of God. 1. 17. 8

- 12 The Lord shall open his best treasure, the heauen, and he shall giue raine vnto thy land, &c. 1.16.5
- 29 And alwaies thou shalt suffer reproch, and thou shalt be oppressed by violence, neither hast thou any to deliuer thee. 4.20.25
- 36 The Lord shall leade thee and the king which thou dost ordaine ouer thee, into a nation which thou dost not knowe, nei- ther thy fathers, &c. 2.11.1
- 65 For the Lorde shall giue vnto thee a fearefull hart, and failed eyes, and a soule consumed with greefe. 2.4.6
- 29.2 You haue seene all that the Lord did before you in the land of Egypt &c. 2.2.20
- 4 And the Lord gaue not vnto you an vn- derstanding hart, and seeing eyes, and eares which might heare, vntill this pre- sent day. 2.2.20
- 18 Least there bee amongst you a man or woman, or familie, or tribe, whose hart this day is contrarie from the Lord our God, that it should goe and serue, &c. 3.17.5
- 19 And when hee hath heard the wordes of this orthe, he blisse himtelse in his hart, saying: Peace shall bee vnto me, and I will walke in the wickednesse of my hart: and so he take with drunkennesse thirt. 3.17.5
- 20 And the Lorde shall not forgiue him, but then most of all shall his rage fume and his zeale against that man, and al the curses shall light vpon him that are writ- ten in this booke. &c. 3.3.7
- 29 The secrete things belong vnto our Lorde God, but those that bee manifest, vnto vs and our children for euer, that we may doe euery thing of this lawe. 1. 17.2. & 3.21.3
- 30.2 And thou shalt returne vnto him, and thou shalt be obedient vnto his govern- ment, as I haue commaunded thee this day, with thy children, &c. 3.3.6
- 3 The Lord thy God shall bring thee back from thy captiuitie, and hee shall haue mercie of thee, and hee shall gather thee together againe from amongst all the na- tions amongst whome hee had scattered thee. 4.1.24
- 6 The Lord thy God will circumsise thy hart, and the hart of thy seede that thou maist loue the Lorde thy God, &c. 2.5.8 & 2.5.12. & 3.3.6. & 4.16.3
- 10 If thou shalt for all this heare the voice of the Lord thy God, and shalt keepe his precepts and ceremonies which be com- maunded in this lawe, &c. 1.7.5
- 11 The commandment that I doe com- mand thee this day, is not about thee, neither a faire off. 2.5.12
- 13 Neither is it set beyonde the sea, that thou shouldest say: who of vs shall goe ouer the sea and fetch it vs, that wee may heare it? 2.5.12
- 14 But the worde is very neere vnto thee, in thy mouth and hart, that thou maiest doe it. 2.5.12. & 3.24.3
- 15 Consider that this day I haue put be- fore thy sight life and good, and contrari- wise, death and euill. 3.17.1
- 19 I doe call heauen and earth this day to witness, that I haue put before you, life and good, blessing and cursing: choose therefore life, that thou maiest lue and thy seede. 2.5.4. & 2.7.3
- 32.5 They haue corrupted themselues to- ward him by their vice, not being his children, but a froward and crooked ge- neration. 1.8.6
- 8 When the almightie diuided the na- tions, when he separated the sonnes of A- dam, he appointed the bounds of the peo- ple, &c. 2.11.11. & 3.21.5
- 15 The welbeloued is waxen fat: he hath kicked, being swolen vp with fat, hath forsaken God his maker, &c. 3.8.5
- 17 They haue offered vp to deuils, and not to God. 4.13.17
- 21 They haue prouoked mee with that which

 35 Vengeance is mine, and I will reward,
 &c. 2.8.56. &c 4. 20.19
 49 Set your harts vpon all the words that I testific vnto you this day, that you may commaunde them vnto your children, that they may obserue and doe all the words of the law. 2.7.13
 33.3 All holy men be in his hand. 2.10.9
 29 Blessed art thou O Israel, who is like thee O people which art saued in the Lord, &c. 2.10.8
 34.5 And Moses the seruant of the Lorde died in the lande of Moab, the Lord commaunding. 4.6.11

- 1.7. Swarue not from it, neither to the right hand nor to the left, that thou maiest vnderstande all things that thou doest. 4.9.12
 8 The volume of this law shall not depart from thy mouth, but thou shalt meditate thereon day and night, &c. 4.9.12 2.1 Who going forth, entred the house of a woman harlot, named Rahab, &c., 3.24.11
 9 I haue knowen that the Lorde hath de-liuered vnto you the lande, for why, the feare of you hath fallen vpon vs, and all the inhabitants of the land hath fainted, 2.4.6
 11 And wee hearing these things, feared wonderfully, and the hart of vs fainted, neither was there any courage left in vs at the entrance of you: For the Lorde your God, hee is God in heauen above, and in earth beneath. 2.4.6
 5.14 I am the cheefe of the host of the Lord. 1.14.5
 7.19 And Josua said to Acam, my sonne, giue glorie vnto the Lorde God of Israel, and confesse and shewe vnto mee what thou hast done. 2.8.24
 10.13 And the Sunne & Moone stood still.
 1.16.2
 11.20 It was the iudgement of the Lorde, that their harts shoulde bee hardened,
 and that they shoulde fight against Israel.
 1.18.2
 24.2 Your fathers dwelt beyonde the floud, from the beginning, euen Thare the

- father of Abraham, and the father of Neghar and they serued strange gods. 1.
 11.8. & 3.24.2
 3. I tooke your father Abraham from the borders of Mesopotamia, and I brought him into the land of Chanaan, &c. 3.24.2

- 2.1. And the Lord went vp from Gulgal to a place of, &c. 1.14.2 18 And when the Lorde had raised vp them iudges, in those daies, he was moo-ued with compassion, and did heare the grones of their afflictions, &c. 3.3.25. & 3.20.15
 19 Yet after the Iudge was dead, they were turned, and they did much woorse than their fathers did, following strange gods. 3.3.25
 3.9 And they cried vnto the Lord, which raised vnto them a sauour, and hee deli-uered them. 3.20.15. & 4.20.30 12 And the children of Israel began againe to doe cuill in the sight of the Lord.
 3.20.15
 15 And afterwarde they cried vnto the Lord, which raised them vp a sauour, &c.
 3.20.15
 6.11 The Angell of the Lorde came and sate vnder the Oke. 1.14.6 14 And the Lorde looked vpon him and said: go in this thy strength and thou shalt deliuer Israel from the bande of the Median. 1.13.10. & 1.14.5
 24 But the spirite of the Lorde clothed Gedion, who sounding a trumpet, called together the house of Abiezer that it should follow him. 2.2.17 27 I will put this fleece of wooll in the threshing place: if dew shall bee in the onely fleece, & drinelle on all the ground,
 &c. 4.14.18
 8.27 And Gedion made thereof an Ephod, and put it in his citie Ephra, and all Israel went a whooring there after it, which was the destruction of Gedion and his house. 4.10.25
 9.20 But if frowardly, let fire come forth from Abimelech, and consume the inhabitants of Sechem, and the towne of Mello,
 &c. 3.20.15
 11.30 Jephthe vowed a vow vnto the Lord, saying:

saying : if thou shalt deliuer the sons of Ammon into my hands.&c. 4.13.3
 13.10 Behold, the man appeared vnto mee which I did see before. 1.14.6
 16 To whom the Angel answered, if thou compell me, I will not eate of thy bread, but if thou wilt make burnt offering, offer that vnto the Lord. 1.13.10
 28 Why dost thou inquire after my name, that is maruellous? 1.13.10
 19 Therefore Manoah tooke a kidde of the Goates and meate offerings, and put it vpon the ground, offering it vnto the Lorde.

4.10.25
 22 We shall die the death, because we haue scene the Lord. 1.13.10. & 1.14.5
 23 If the Lord would kill vs, he would not haue receiued a burnt offering & meate offerings a our hands. 1.11.10
 16.28 O Lorde my God bee mindfull of me, and giue me nowe mine old strength, that I may reuenge mee of my enimies. 3.20.15
 21.15 In those daies there was no king in Israel, but euery one did that that seemed right in his owne eyes. 4.20.9

1.13. BVt Anna spake in her hart and onely her lips did moue, and her voice was not at all heard, wherefore H. li thought she was drunken. 3.20.33
 2.6 The Lorde doth kill and quicken, hee doth lead into hell and bringeth backe againe. 3.20.52
 9 He will keepe the feete of his saints: and the wicked shall keepe silence in darkness. 2.18.18
 10 And he will giue rule vnto his king: and he will exalt the horne of his anointed. 2.6.2
 25 And they heard not the voice of their father, because the Lord would kill them. 1.18.3. & 3.24.14
 34 And this shall be a signe vnto thee, that shall come vpon thy two sons, Ophne and Phinies: they shal die both on one daie. 1.18.1

9.8 And you shall see, and if so it goe vp by the way of his coastes against Bethjames, he will did this great euill, &c. 1.16.9
 7.3 If you do turne vnto the Lord with all your harts, put away the strange Gods from amongst you, Baalim and Ascaroth, and prepare your harts vnto the Lorde, &c. 3.3.5
 6 And in that day they fasted, and they saide there: wee haue sinned against the Lord. 4.12.17
 17 He built there an altar to the Lorde. 4.10.25
 8.7 They haue not cast off thee, but me that I should not rule ouer them. 4.20.6
 11 This shall bee the right of your king which shall rule you, hee shall take your sonnes and put them in his chariots, &c. 4.20.26
 10.6 And the spirit of the Lord shall come vpon thee, and thou shalt prophetic with them, and thou shalt bee changed into another man. 2.2.17, & 2.3.4
 9 Therefore when he had turned his back to go from Samuel, god gaue him another hart, and all these signes chanced in that day. 3.2.12
 26 Saul also went home to Gibeah, & with him part of the army, whose hart God had touched. 2.2.17
 11.6 Then the spirite of the Lord came vpon Saul, when he heard these words, &c. 2.4.6
 15 And all the people arose in Gilgall, and made Saul their king, before the Lorde, &c. 1.8.6
 12.22 And the Lorde will not forsake his people, for his great names sake because the Lord swore hee woulde make you his people. 3.21.5
 14.44 And Saul saide, God do so, and more alio vnto me, thou shalt die the death Ionathan. 2.8.24
 15.11 It repenteth me, that I haue made Saul king, because he hath forsaken me, & hath not done as I commanded him: and Samuel was sad, and cried vnto the Lord all night. 1.17.12 & 3.20.5
 22 Whether will the Lord haue burnt sacrifice and offerings, and not rather that the voice of the Lord should be obeyed, &c. 4.10.17 & 4.18.9
 23 For

- 23 For rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, & not to trust in the Lorde as the sin of idolatrie, for that thou hast cast awaie the worde of the Lorde, &c. 3.4.33. & 4.10.17
- 29 For the triumpher in Israel will not spare, neither will hee be changed by repentance, neither is he man that he should repent. 1.17.12
- 30 But he said, I have sinned, but honor me, I pray thee, before the seniors of my people, &c. 3.3.4
- 35 But Samuel did bewaile Saul: and it repented the Lorde that hee had made Saul king ouer Israel. 3.20.15
- 16.1 And the Lorde said vnto Samuel, how long wilt thou bewaile Saul? seeing I haue cursed him, as that he shall not reign &c. 3.20.15
- 13 Samuel tooke therefore his horne of oyle, and annointed him in the middest of his brethren. 1.8.7. & 2.2.17
14. And an euill spirite did vexe him from the Lorde. 1.14.17. & 2.4.5
- 18.10 And after another day, the euill spirit of God entred Saul. 1.14.17. & 2.4.5
- 19.9 And the euill spirite of the Lorde was vpon Saul, and hee sate in his house, and held a Iaueline in his hand, &c. 2.4.5
- 23.26 And Saul and his men went on the one side of the hil, and Dauid and his men on the other side. 1.16.9
27. And a messenger came vnto Saul, and saide: make haste and come, because the Philistines haue inuaded thy country. 1.16.9
- 24.7 The Lorde keepe me, that I do not this thing vnto my Lorde the annointed of the Lorde, that I shoulde lay my hande vpon him, which is the annointed of the Lorde. 4.20.28
11. But mine eie hath spared thee: for I said I will not stretch out my hand against my Lorde, because he is the annointed of the Lorde. 4.20.23
- 16.9 And Dauid said vnto Abisai, kill him not: for who shal stretch forth his hand against the annointed of the Lorde, and be blamelesse? 4.20.28
- 12 All of them did sleepe, because the drouisnesse of the Lorde fell vpon them. 1.18.2
- 23 The Lorde shal reward every man according to his righteousnes and faithfulness, for the Lorde hath deliuered thee into my hands, &c. 3.17.14
- 4.1.13 And they tooke their bones, and buried them in a groue at Iabes, and they fasted seuen daies. 4.12.17

II. SAMVEL.

- 5.8. T Herefore it is saide in a prouerbe the blinde and lame shall not enter into the temple. 4.16.31
- 7.14 The which if he shall doe anie thing wickedly, I will correct him with the rod of men, and in the plagues of the sons of men. 3.4.32
- 17 Because thou O Lorde God of the hostes of Israell, hast reuealed vnto thy seruant, saying: I will builde a house to thee, &c. 3.20.13
- 28 Now therefore, O Lorde God, thou art God, and thy wordes are true, thou hast spoké vnto thy seruant these good things, 3.20.14
- 10.12 Be thou a stout man, and let vs fight for our people, and for the citie of our God, and the Lorde will doe that seemeth good in his owne eies. 1.17.9
- 11.4 Dauid hauing sent messengers, brought her, who when she came vnto him, he slept with her. 4.1.24
- 15 Hee wrote in a letter: put Vria in the front of the battle where the greatest skirmish is, and forsake him, that being stroken he may die. Ibidem
- 12.12 Thou didst it priuily, but I will doe this in the sight of all Israel. 1.18.1
- 13 And Dauid said vnto Nathan, I haue sinned against the Lorde. And Nathan said vnto Dauid: the Lorde hath put away thy sin, thou shalt not die. 3.3.4. & 3.4.10. & 3.4.31. & 4.1.14
14. Notwithstanding for because thou madest the enemies of the name of god blaspheme for this thing, the son that is born vnto thee shall die. 3.4.33
- 16.10 The Lorde hath commanded him that he should curse Dauid, and who is it that dare say, why hast thou done so? 1.17.8. & 1.18.1. & 1.18.4
- 22 Therefore they spread Abolon a tent vpon the top of the house, and he went in

- in vnto the concubines of his father, before all Israel. 1.18.1 & 1.18.4
- 17-7. And Chusay saide vnto Absolon, it is not good counsell that Achitophel gaue this time. 1.17.7
- 14 The profitable counsell of Achitophel is scattered abroad in the becke of the Lord, that the Lord might bring vpon Absolon euill. 1.17.7. & 2.4.6
- 22.20 And he brought me forth into largenesse, he deliuered me because it pleased him. 3.17.5
- 21 The Lord hath giuen vnto mee according vnto my rightcoufnesse, and according vnto the cleannesse of my hands. 3.17.5
- 24.1 And the wrath of the Lord was againe kindled againt Israel, and he moued Dauid againt them in that hee saide vnto Iacob: goe number Israel and Juda. 1.14.18
- 19 But the hart of Dauid stroke him after he had numbred the people: and Dauid said, &c. 3.3.4
- 20 And going forth, he worshipped the king, grouching with lus face towards the earth. 1.12.3

I. KINGS.

- 1.16. B Ethiabe bowed her selfe and worshipped the king. 1.12.3
- 21 It shall come to passe, when my Lord the king shall sleepe with his Fathers, my sonne and I shall bee counted offenders. 3.11.3
- 2.5 Thou knewest what Joab the sonne of Seruia hath done vnto me, and what hee hath done to the two captains of the host of Israel. 4.20.10
- 6 Thou shalt doe therefore according to thy wisdom, and thou shalt not bring his gray haire peaceably vnto the grave. 4.20.10
- 8 Thou hast also with thee Semei the sonne of Gera the sonne of Gemini, of Beniamin, which cursed mee with an euill curse, &c. 4.20.10
- 8.23 Which keepest covenants and mercies with thy seruants, which walke before thee with all their harts. 3.17.5
- 46 If they sinne againt thee (for there is not a man that sinneth not) and being angrie thou shalt deliuer them vnto their enemies, &c. 2.7.5. & 3.14.9. & 4.1.15
- 47 And if they shall repent them with all their harts in the place of their captiuitie, &c. 4.1.25
- 58 That he may bow our harts vnto him, that wee may walke in all his waies, and that we may keepe his commandements and ceremonies, &c. 2.3.9
- 11.12 Notwithstanding, in thy daies I will not doe it for Dauid thy fathers sake, But I will rent it out of the hande of thy sonne. 2.6.2
- 23 God stirred him vp an aduerfarie, &c. 1.18.1
- 31 I will rent the kingdome out of Salomons hands, and I will giue vnto thee ten tribes. 1.18.1
- 34 Neither will I take the whole kingdome out of his hande, but I will ordaine him a captaine all the daies of his life for Dauids sake, &c. 2.6.2
- 39 And I will for this, afflict the seede of Dauid, but not for euer. 2.6.2
- 12.10 And the yoong men saide vnto him which were brought vp together with him, speake thus vnto this people, &c. 1.17.7
- 15 And the king harkened not vnto the people, before the Lord was aduerfarie vnto him, &c. 1.17.7. & 1.18.4. & 2.4.6
- 20 Neither did any followe the house of Dauid, but the tribe of Juda onely, &c. 1.18.4
- 28 Counsel being taken, he made two golden calues, and said vnto them: goe not further vp to Ierusalem, behold thy gods Israel which brought thee, &c. 4.2.8
- 30 And this thing turned to sinne, for the people went to worship euen to day. 4.20.32
- 31 And hee made a house in high places, and priestes of the rascals of the people which were not of the sonnes of Leui. 4.2.8
- 15.4 But for Dauids sake the Lord his God gaue him a light in Ierusalem, that hee should raise vp his sonne after him, and that hee should establish Ierusalem. 2.6.2
- 18.10 The Lord thy God liueth, there is no nation or kingdome into the which my Lord hath not sent, &c. 2.8.37

The Table.

- 41 And Elias said to Ahab: come vp and eate and drinke, because there is a founde of much raine. 2.10.3
- 42 But Elias came vp vnto the top of Carmel, and he put his face groueling on the earth betwene his knees. 2.20.3
- 43 And he saide vnto his boy, goe vp and looke towardes the sea: who when hee went and saw and had beholden, he said, there is nothing: and he saide vnto him againe returne seuen times. 2.20.3
- 19.8 And hee walked in the strength of that meate forty daies and forty nightes, euen vntill the hill of God Horeb. 4.12.20
- 18 I haue left vnto my selfe in Israel seuen thousande men, whose knees haue not bowed before Bale. 4.1.2
- 21.12 They proclaimed a fast, and set Naboth amongst the cheefe of the people. 4.12.17
- 28 And the worde of the Lord came vnto Elias the Thesbite, saying. 3.3.25
- 29 Hast thou not seene Ahab humbled before me? because he was humbled before of me, I will not bring the euill in his daies, &c. 3.3.25. & 3.10.15
- 22.6 The king of Israel gathered therefore about forty Prophets. 4.9.6
- 21 A spirite went forth and stood before the Lord and said, I will deceiue. 1.14.17 & 1.17.7. & 1.18.1
- 22 And he said, I will goe out and I wil be a lying spirite in the mouth of all his Prophets. 4.9.6
- 27 Thus saith the king, send this man into prison, and maintaine him with the bread of tribulation, & with the water of greefe, vntill I returne in peace. 4.9.6
- peace, he went therefore from thence a furlong of ground. 3.2.3.2
- 6.15 Out alas maister, what shall we doe? 1.14.11
- 16 There be moe with vs than with them 1.14.12
- 17 Lord open the eies of this boy, that he may see. And the Lord opened the eies of the lad, & he saw, and behold, a mountaine full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elizei. 1.14.7.8.11
- 31 The Lord doe so, and so vnto me, if the head of Elizei the sonne of Saphat shall stand vpon him this day. 2.8.24
- 10.7 And when letters came vnto them they tooke the sonnes of the king, and slue senentie men, &c. 1.18.4
- 10 Knowe now that there shall fall vnto the earth nothing of the worde of the Lorde the which the Lorde hath spoken, &c. 1.18.4
- 16.10 And when hee had seene the altar that was at Damascus, hee sent to Vria the priest the paterne thereof, and the likenesse, according to the worke thereof. 4.10.23
- 17.24 The king of Affyria brought me frō Babylon and from Cutha, &c. 4.10.23
- 25 And when they began to dwell there, they feared not the Lorde, and the Lorde sent Lions vnto them that they might kill them. 4.10.23
- 32 Thus they feared the Lorde, and appointed out priestes out of themselves for the high places, &c. 3.2.13. & 4.10.23 & 4.15.22
- 33 And when they feared the Lorde they did serue also their Gods, according to the maner of the people from whence they were brought, &c. 3.2.12
- 34 Euen vnto this present day they followe the ancient custome, they feare not the Lorde, neither keepe his ceremonies, &c. 3.2.13
- 19.4 And make praiser for the rest that be found. 3.20.14
- 35 It came to passe in that night, the Angel of the Lord came and stroke in the campe of the Assyrians one hundredth fourescore and siue thousand. 1.14.6
- 20.1 Set thy house in an order, for thou shalt die and not liue. 1.17.12

II. KINGS.

- 5.17. AND Naaman saide, as thou wilt: but I pray thee graunt vnto mee thy seruant, that I take the burden of two Asses of earth: for hereafter thy seruant will offer no burnt offering nor sacrifice to strange gods, but vnto the Lorde. 3.2.32
- 18 This is the onely thing that thou shalt pray vnto the Lorde for thy seruant, when my Lorde shall goe into the Temple, &c. 3.2.32
- 19 And hee saide vnto him, depart in

The Table.

2 Then Ezechias turned his face to the wall, and he prayed to the Lord. 3.3.4
 3 I beseech thee, Lord remember I pray thee, how I haue walked before thee in truth and in a perfect hart, and haue done the thing that thou likest of. 3.14.19 & 3.20.10
 5 Behold, I haue healed thee, the third day thou shalt goe vp to the Temple of the Lord. 1.17.12

9 Wilt thou that the shadow goe forwards two degrees, or that it goe backward for many. 4.14.18
 11 And Isaas called vpon the Lord and he brought backe the shadowe by the lines by the which it went down into the clocke of Achar. 1.16.2

21.4 And he built Altars in the house of the Lord, of the which the Lord spake, I will put my name in Ierusalem. 4.10.23

- be wished for than life it selfe. 3.2.28.& 3.17.14
- 65.1 Vnto thee, O God, is praise in Sion, vnto thee shall the voue be paid. 3.20.29
- 3 Thou hearest praiers, because of this shall all flesh come vnto thee. 3.20.13
- 5 Blessed is he whom thou choofest, he shall dwell in thy courts, &c. 3.21.5
- 68.19 Thou art gone vp on high, and hast led captiuitie, &c. 1.13.11
- 21 Vnto the Lord God belong the issues of death. 3.25.4
- 36 Thou art terrible O God out of the holy places: the God of Israell hee giueth strength to the people. 1.11.14
- 69.3 I am sunke downe into a deepe mire, in the which there is no bottome, &c. 4.7.
13
- 5 That I am constrained to repay that I tooke not. 2.16.5
- 22 For they gaue me in my meat gall: and when I thirsted they gaue mee vineger to drinke. 4.17.15
- 29 Let them be wiped out of the booke of the liuing, and let them not be written amongst the iust. 2.10.18. & 3.24.9
- 71.2 For thy righteousnes sake rescue me, and deliuer me. 3.11.12
- 72.8 He shall rule from sea to sea, and from the fluds vnto the endes of the earth. 2.
11.1
- 11 And all kings shall worship him and all nations shall serue him. 4.5.17
- 73.2 It wanted but a little but my feet were readie to fall, my steps had almost slidden.
2.10.16. & 3.9.6
- 17 Vntil I entred the secret places of god, and I vnderstood what shoulde become of them at the last. 2.10.16. & 3.9.6
- 26 My flesh & heart is consumed, but God is the rocke of my heart, and my portion for euer. 2.11.2
- 74.2 Be mindfull of thy flocke which thou didst purchase long ago: and of thine alotted inheritance which thou hast redeemed: the mount Sion in which thou wast wont to dwell. 3.20.14
- 9 We see not our signes, there is not one propher more, nor any with vs that knoweth how long. 2.15.1
- 75.7 For neither from the East, nor from the West, nor from the South doth preferment come. 1.16.6
- 77.10 Whether or not hath God forgotten to be mercifull: will hee shutte vp his mercies in displeasure? 3.2.17
- 11 At last I thought, this is my infirmite, the right hand will change the course of the most high. 3.2.31
- 78.8 And let them not be as their fathers, a disobedient and rebellious nation, a generation that set not their hearts aright, and whose spirits neuer beleueed God truly.
2.5.11
- 36 They flattered him with their countenances, but they lyed vnto him with their toongs. 3.3.25
- 37 Their heart was not right toward him, neither were they faithful in his couenant
3.3.25
- 49 He cast vpon them the fiercenes of his anger, violence, indignation, and vexation, by the sending out of euill spirits. 1.
14.7
- 60 That hee might leaue the Tabernacle Silo, the Tabernacle where hee dwelt amongst men. 2.6.2
- 67 And hee put away the Tabernacle of Ioseph, and chose not the tribe of Ephraim.
2.6.2. & 3.21.6
- 70 And he chose Dauid his seruant, from the folds of sheepe tooke he him. 2.6.2
- 79.9 Helpe vs, O God of our saluation, for the glorie of thy name, and deliuer vs, and be mercifull vnto our sins, for thy names sake. 3.20.14
- 13 And wee thy people and sheepe of thy pasture shall praise thee for euer: and from generation to generation wil set forth thy praise. 3.7.10
- 80.2 Thou which sittest between the Che-rubins shew thy brightnes. 1.13.24. & 2.8.
15. & 4.1.5
- 4 Turne vs againe O God, and cause thy face to shine that we may be saued. 3.2.
28
- 5 O Lord God of hostes, how long wilt thou bee angry against the praier of the people? 3.20.16
- 18 Let thy hand be with the man of thy right hand, with the tonne of man, whom thou hast made strong for thy selfe. 2.
6.2
- 81.11 I am the Lord thy God which haue brought

The Table.

- brought thee out of the land of Ægypt. 3.
2.31
- 82.1 God standeth in the assembly of gods, hee plaicth the iudge in the midst of gods. 4.20.4.& 4.20.6.& 4.20.29
- 3 Reuenge the poore & fatherles, let loose the miserable and afflicted. 4.20.9
- 4 Deliuer the feeble and needie from the hands of the wicked. 4.20.9
- 6 I haue said, you are gods, and you are all sonnes of the most high. 1.14.5.& 4.
20.4
- 84.2 O Lord of hostes, how amiable are thy Tabernacles. 4.1.5
- 3 My soule longeth and fainteth for the courts of the Lord, my heart and flesh cry vnto the liuing God. 2.11.2
- 8 They shall go from strength to strength, each of them shall appeare before God in Sion. 4.7.21
- 86.2 Keepe my life because I am one that doth good to other: O God keepe thou thy seruant. 3.20.10
- 5 For thou O Lord, art good and merci-full, of great kindnes vnto all that cal vpon thee. 3.2.29
- 11 Direct me O Lord in thy waies, then shal I walke in thy truth: constraime my heart that it may feare thy name. 2.2.27.& 2.3.9
- 88.17 Thy furies hath passed ouer mee, and thy terrours haue destroyed mee. 3.4.
34
- 89.4 I haue made a couenant with my chosen, I haue sworne to Dauid my seruant. 4.
1.17
- 5 Thy seede I will establishe for euer, and will set vp thy throne from generation to generation. 4.1.17
- 31 If his children forsake my law, & walke
not in my iudgements. 3.4.32.& 4.1.
27
- 22 If they breake my statutes, and keepe not my commandments. 3.4.32
- 33 I will visite their transgressions with the rod, and their iniquities with whips. 3.4.
32.& 4.1.27
- 34 And my louing kindnes will I not take from him, neither will I falsifie my truth.
3.4.32.& 4.1.27
- 36 I haue once sworne by my holines, I will not faile Dauid, 2.15.3
- 37 His seed shall be for euer: & his throne shall be before me as the sunne. 2.
15.3
- 38 It shall abide sure as the moone, which is a sure witness in heauen. 2.15.3
- 90.4 A thousand yeeres is before thee as yesterday which is past, yea as a watch in the night. 3.2.42
- 7 For we are consumed by thine anger, and by thy wrath are we troubled 3.4.34
- 9 For all our daies were spent, thou being angrie we ended our yeeres sooner than a thought. 3.25.12
- 11 Who knoweth the power of thine anger? as euery man feareth thee, so is the indignation of thy anger fearee towards them. 3.25.12
- 91.1 The man sitting in the secret of the most high, shall abide vnder the shadowe of the almightie. 1.17.6.& 2.8.42
- 3 For he will deliuer thee from the snare of the hunter, and from the noisome pestilence. 1.17.11
- 11 For hee will commaund his Angels for thy sake, that they keepe thee in all thy waies. 1.14.6.& 2.8.42.& 3.20.23
- 15 He will call vpon me, therefore I will heare him, I will be present with him in affliction, I will deliuer him, and will make him glorious. 3.20.14
- 92.6 How great are thy workes O Lord, wonderfull profounde be thy counsels. 2.
10.17
- 7 A dullerd doth not know this, neither doth a foole vnderstand it. 1.5.9
- 13 The iust shall flourish as the Palme, and shall grow as a Cedar in Libanus. 2.10.17
- 14 Those that be planted in the house of the Lord, shall flourish in the courts of our
God. 2.10.17
- 93.1 The Lord is king, and is clothed with maiesty, he hath, I say, put on strenght, & hath girded himself, the world also shall be so established that it cannot be moued.
1.6.3
- 5 Holines becommeth thy house O Lord,
for euer. 1.6.4
- 94.11 The lord knoweth that the thoughts of man are vaine. 2.2.25. and 3.
14.1
- 12 Happie is the man O Lorde, whome thou hast chastened, and whom thou hast instructed

- instructed in thy law. 3.4.34
- 19 In the passions of many thoughts within me thy comforts recreated my soule. 3. 20.7
- 95.7 If to day you shall hear his voice. 3.2.6
- 8 Harden not your harts as in Membah, and in the day of Massa in the wilderness. 2.5.11
- 96.10 Say amongst the nations, the Lorde reigneth, and the world shall be stablished that it shake not, &c. 1.6.3
- 97.1 The Lorde reigneth: let the earth reioice: and let the multitude of the Isles be glad. 1.6.3
- 7 Worship him all yee gods. 1.13.11
- 10 The Lorde keepeth the soules of his faintes, hee will deliuer them out of the hands of the wicked. 2.10.16
- 11 Light is sowne for the righteous, and gladness for them that bee of an vpright hart. 2.10.16
- 99.1 The Lorde raigneth, let the people tremble: hee sitteth betweene the Cherubins, let the earth be moued. 1.6.3. & 2.8.15
- 5 Exalt the Lorde God and fall downe before his footestool: for he is holy. 1. 11.15. & 4.1.5
- 9 Exalt the Lorde our God and fall downe before his holy mountaine: for our Lord God is holy 1.11.15
- 100.3 Know yee that the Lorde is God: he made vs and not we our selues: we be his people and the sheepe of his pasture. 3.2. 6. & 3.21.5
- 101.3 I will set no wicked thing before mine eyes, I hate them that fall away, they shall neuer cleaue vnto me. 4.20.9
- 8 Betime will I destroy all the wicked of the land, that al wicked doers, may be cut off from the cite. 4.20.10
- 102.14 Thou wilt arise, that thou maiest haue mercy on Sion. 1.13.11
- 16 And all nations shall feare the name of the Lorde, and all the kings of the earth thy glory. 1.13.11
- 18 And hee shall haue consideration of the prayer of the humble and not despise their praier 3.20.28
- 19 The which shall be written for generations to come: and the people that shall be created, shall praise the Lorde. 3.20.28
- 22 That men may celebrate the name of the Lorde in Sion, and his praise in Jerusalem. 3.20.28
- 26 For first, thou laicdest the foundations of the earth: and the heauens be the worke of thy hands. 1.13.11. & 2.10.15
- 27 The which shall perish, but thou dost abide, and all things shall waxe olde as a garment, &c. 2.10.15
- 28 But thou art the same for euer, and there shall be no end of thy yeeres. 2. 10.15
- 103.8 The Lorde is full of compassion and mercy, slowe to anger, and of much mercie 3.2.29
- 17 But the louing kindnes of the Lorde, endureth for euer and euer, towardes them that feare him. 2.10.15
- 20 Shew forth the Lorde, yee his angels which excell in power, execute his will in obeying the voice of his words. 1.14.5. & 3.20.43
- 104.2 He is clothed with light, as with a garment. 1.5.1
- 4 Which maketh his spirites his embassadors, & his ministers a flame of fire. 1.16.7
- 15 And wine that maketh the hart of man glad, and oile that maketh his face shine. 3.10.2
- 27 All things depend vpon thee, that thou maiest giue them their meate in due time. 1.16.1 28. And thou giuing, they do gather: and thou opening thy hande, they be filled with good things. 1.16.1
- 29 But if thou hide thy face, they are troubled: and if thou take their spirite from them, they die, and they bee turned into dust. 1.16.1
- 30 Againe, liuing things be created, if thou send forth thy spirit, and thou dost renewe the face of the earth. 1.16.1
- 105.4 Seeke alwaies his face. 4.1.5
- 6 O yee seed of Abraham which loue him, yee sonnes of Jacob which be his elect. 3. 21.5
- 25 He turned their harts to hate his people, that they might deale craftily with his seruants. 1.18.2. & 2.4.24
- 106.3 O blessed which keepe iudgement, and which do alwaies that which is right 3.17.10

The Table.

- 4 Remember me O Lord, with the fauour wherewith thou fauourest thy people, and haue regard of me, with thy fauing helth, that I may see the happines that is prepared for the elect, and that I may reioice the ioy of thy people. 4.1.4
- 13 But incontinent they forgot him, neither followed they his counsell. 3.20.15
- 31 And it was imputed vnto him for righteousnes for euer. 3.17.7,8
- 37 For they killed their sonnes and daughters for sacrifices to diuels. 4.13.17
- 46 And made them be fauoured of al them lead them captiues. 2.4.6.
- 47 Saue vs O Lord our God, and gather vs from among the nations, that wee may confesse thy holy name, and celebrate thy prayers. 3.20.28
- 107.4 Which wandred in the deserts, in the solitary places thorowe pathes, who found not a citie to dwell in. 1.5.7
- 6 They cried vnto the Lorde in their perils, who deliuered them out of their anguishes. 3.20.15
- 13 Then they cried vnto the Lord in their trouble, and hee deliuered them from their distresse. 3.20.15
- 16 For he hath broken the gates of brasse, and burst the bars of iron. 2.16.9
- 19 And they cried vnto the Lorde, &c. 3.20.15
- 25 Who by his commandement doth stir vp the stormie windes, which doth lift vp on hie the waues thereof. 1.16.7
- 29 And the storme being still, hee maketh the sea calme, so that the waues cease, &c. 1.16.7
- 40 For God poureth contempt vpon princes, and maketh them to erre in desert places out of the way. 2.18.2. & 2.2.17. & 2.4.4
- 43 Whosoeuer therefore is wise will remember these things, and he will consider the louing kindnes of the Lord. 1.5.7
- 110.1 The Lord saide vnto my Lorde, sit thou on my right hand, vntill I make thy enemies thy foote stool. 2.15.3. & 2.16.16
- 4 The Lorde swaue, neither repenteth it him, that thou art an euerlasting priest according to the order of Melchisedek. 2.11.4. & 2.15.6. & 4.18.2. & 4.19.28
- 6 Messias shall iudge among the nations, and all shall be full of dead bodies, when he shall smite the heads ouer many nations. 2.15.5
- 111.1 I will praise the Lord with my whole hart, in the assemblie and congregation of the iust. 4.14.8
- 2 Great are the works of the Lorde, which are inquired out of all them which be delighted therewith. 1.18.3
- 10 The beginning of wisdom is the feare of the Lord. 2.3.4. & 3.2.26
- 112.1 The man is blest that feareth the Lorde, and is greatly delighted with his commandements. 3.17.10
- 6 The memorie of the righteous shall remaine vntill, &c. 2.10.16
- 9 His righteousness remaineth for euer, and his horne shall be exalted with glory. 2.10.16
- 10 The wicked shall not attaine that that they desire. 2.10.16
- 113.6 And hee doth abase himselfe to behold things in heauen and earth. 1.16.5
- 7 Who raiseth vp the feeble out of the dust, and lifeth the poore out of the dirt. 1.5.7
- 9 Which maketh the barren woman to dwell with a familie, and a ioyfull mother of children. 1.16.7
- 115.3 And our God is in heauen, who doth what he will. 1.16.3. & 1.18.1. & 1.18.3. & 3.24.15
- 3 Their Images be siluer and gold, a worke that was wrought out by the worke of man. 1.11.4
- 8 To whom they be like that make them, and so is he, whosoeuer trusteth in them. 1.11.4
- 116.1 I loue the Lord because he hath heard my prayer. 3.20.28
- 7 Returne O my soule vnto thy quiet place, because the Lord hath bin beneficiall vnto thee. 3.2.17
- 12 What shall I repay the Lord for all his benefits bestowed on me? 3.20.28
- 13 The cuppe being taken wherewithall thanks being giuen, I will call vpon the name of the Lord, for receiued saluation. 3.20.28
- 14 And I will pay my vowes now vnto the Lorde before all his people. 4.13.4
- 15 For

The Table.

- 15 For precious in the sight of the Lorde is the death of his saines. 2.10.14.and 2.10.18
- 18 I will pay my vowes now before al the people. 4.13.4
- 117.2 For his louing kindnesse doth excell toward vs, and the truth of the Lorde shall continue for euer. 3.2.7
- 118.6 The Lorde standing with me, I will not feare whatsoever man doth endeuor to bring against me. 1.17.11
- 18 The Lorde hath chastened me sore, but he hath not suffered mee that I shoulde die. 3.4.32
- 25 Ah Lorde, saue I pray thee: Ah Lorde
giue I pray thee prosperous successe. 2.6.2
- 26 We wish vnto him all good things that commeth in the name of the Lorde, and we haue wished vnto you good things out of the house of the Lorde. 2.6.2
- 119.1 O blessed be they which in their life walking doe keepe the streight way, according to the law of the Lorde. 3.17.10
- 10 When I doe seeke thee with all my hart, let me not stray from thy commandements. 2.2.25. & 4.14.8
- 14 I am delighted in the way of thy testimonies, more than in all riches. 3.2.15
- 18 Pull the veile from my eyes, that I may see the wonderfull wisdom that is hid in thy lawe. 2.2.21
- 34 Teach me that I may holde thy lawe, and that I may keepe it with all my hart.
2.2.25
- 36 Incline my hart vnto thy testimonies, and not to couetousnesse. 2.3.9 & 2.5.11
- 41 And let thy louing kindnesse come vnto me, and thy saluation, according to thy word. 3.2.31
- 43 And take not altogether out of my mouth the worde of truth, for I looke for thy iudgements. 3.2.17
- 71 It was good vnto me that thou didst humble me, that I might learne thy righteousnesse. 3.4.32
- 76 I pray thee that thy louing kindnesse may happen vnto mee, that it may comfort mee according to thy worde, that hath giuen hope vnto thy seruant. 3.3.4.
& 3.20.14
- 80 Let my hart be wholly in thy statutes, that I be not ashamed. 2.2.27
- 89 Thy word, O Lorde, abideth euerlasting in heauen. 4.8.6
- 103 How sweete is thy worde vnto my taste, truly vnto my mouth it is more sweete than honie. 3.2.15
- 105 Thy word is a lanterne vnto my feet, and a light vnto my wates. 1.17.2. & 2.7.
12. & 4.8.6
- 111 Thy testimonies haue bene vnto me as an euerlasting heritage, for they be the ioy of my hart. 3.2.15
- 112 I haue set my minde vpon thy decrees that I might keepe them vnto the ende, and that for euer. 2.5.11
- 127 Wherefore I haue loued thy precepts more than golde. 3.2.15 133. Frame my steps according to thy worde, and let no vanitie haue rule ouer
me. 2.3.9
- 121.4 Behold hee neither slumbreth nor sleepeth that keepeth Israel. 3.20.3
- 130.1 From the depth of euils I haue called vpon thee, O Lorde. 3.20.4
- 3 If thou O Lorde wilt marke iniquities, O
Lorde who shall stande vnder it? 3.12.1.
& 3.17.14
- 4 But with thee is mercie, and therefore thou art feared. 3.3.2. & 3.16.3
- 131.2 It were euill with me, if I haue not compared and iudged my soule like vnto awayned childe with his mother, and my soule in mee is like vnto a wayned childe. 3.7.9
- 132.2 Be thou mindfull, O Lorde, of all things with the which Dauid hath bene afflicted. 3.20.25
- 7 Let vs goe vnto his tabernacle and worship before the footstool of his feet.
4.1.5
- 11 Of the fruit of thy body will I set vp thy throne. 2.13.3
- 13 The Lorde hath chosen Sion, and hath taken it vnto him for a seate. 4.1.17
- 14 This is my rest for euer, heere will I dwell because I haue chosen her. 4.1.5
- 133.3. Because the Lorde hath commaunded that there shall be their blessing and life euerlasting. 2.11.2.
- 135.15 The Idols of the Gentiles be siluer and gold, a worke brought forth by the hands of men. 1.11.4
- 138.1. I will confesse thee with all my whole.

- whole hart, and before the iudges will I praise thee. 4.14.8
- 2 I will confesse thy name for thy louing kindnes, and for thy truth. 3.2.7
- 8 Forsake not the workes of thy handes.
3.24.6
- 140.14 Surely the righteous will praise thy name, and the vertuous will abide in thy sight. 2.10.16
- 141.2 Let my prayer be esteemed as incense before thee, and the lifting vp of my hands, as the euening sacrifices. 3.20 14. & 4.18.17
- 142.6 Therefore O Lord I call vnto thee, and say: thou art my hope and portion in land of the liuing. 2.11.2
- 8 And I will be vnto the iust as a crowne, because thou hast bene beneficiall vnto
me. 3.20.26
- 143.2 Deale not with thy seruant O Lorde according to thy law, for there is none liuing iust before thee. 2.7.5. & 3.12.2. & 3.
14.16. & 3.17.14. & 3.20.8
- 5 Yet I remember the times past, I meditate of all thy works. 3.2.31
- 144.15 Blessed bee the people that lue so, yea blessed bee the people whose God is the Lord. 2.10.8. & 3.2.28
- 145.3 Great is the Lorde and most worthe to be praised, whose greatnes is vnsearch-able. 1.5.8
- 5 I will talke of the comelines of the mai-estie of thy glorie, and of thy admirable works. 1.5.8
- 8 The Lorde is gracious and mercifull, patient and of great goodnesse. 1.10.2.
& 3.20.9
- 9 The Lorde is good vnto all, and his mercie excelleth all his works. 1.5.5
- 13 Thy kingdome is an cuerlasting kingdome, and thy dominion doth raigne throughout all ages. 1.13.24
- 18 The Lord is nere to all that call vpon him, yea to all that call vpon him in truth.
3.20.3. & 3.20.7. & 3.20.14
- 19 He doth whatsoever they woulde that feare him, and he heareth their cries and saueth them. 3.20.5. & 3.20.13
- 147.9 Which giueth to beasts their foode, and to yong rauens that call vpon him.
1.16.5
- 10 Hee doth not allow of the strength of a horse, and is not delighted with the legs of man. 2.2.10
- 20 He hath not dealt thus with all nations, neither hath hee declared to them his iudgements. 3.21.6

PROVERBES.

- 1.7. THe feare of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge. 3.2.26
- 2.21 The righteous shall inhabit the earth, and the vpright shall liue long ther-
in. 2.11.2

- 7 He was punished and afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth, he was led as a sheepe vnto the slaughter, and he was still as a Lambe before the sheerers, and opened not his mouthe. 2.16.5
- 8 Without delay and without iudgement was he taken, and who shall shew his generation? for he was cut out of the land of the liuing, &c. 2.15.3
- 10 Yet the Lorde would breake him in weakening him, that when hee should make his Soule an offering for sinne, he might see his seede, &c. 2.7.2
- 12 For he shall beare their iniquities. 2.16.5. & 3.11.8
- 12 And hee was reckened among the transgressors. 2.16.5
- 54.13 And all thy children shall be taught of the Lord, and much peace shall be to thy children. 1.7.5. & 2.2.20 & 3.20.10 & 3.24.14
- 55.1 O, all you that thirst, come to the waters, and you that haue no money come, byc meate and eate, &c. 2.2.10. & 3.1.3. & 3.15.4
- 2 Wherefore doe you lay out your money, and not for that which is meate and your labor for that that doth not iustifie? 3.14.15. & 4.10.15
- 3 Encline your eares and come vnto me, harken and your Soule shall liue, and I will strike an euerlasting couenant with you, euen the sure mercies of Dauid. 2.6.3. & 3.2.6
- 4 Behold,

The Table.

- 4 Behold, I gaue him for a witnes to the people, for a prince and master vnto the people. 2.6.3.& 2.15.1
- 6 Seeke the Lord whilst he may be found, call ye vpon him whilest he is neere. 3.3.20
- 56.1 Keepe iudgement and do iustice, for my saluation is at hand to come and my righteousnes to be reueiled. 3.3.20
- 2 Blessed is the man that doth this & the son of man that laieth hold of it, that is to say, keeping the Sabbath that hee pollute it not, &c. 2.8.29
- 7 Those will I bring to my holy mountaine, and make them ioyfull in my house of prayer, their sacrifice and burnt offerings shall be acceptable on my altar, because my house shall be called the house of prayer for all people. 3.10.29
- 10 Their watchmen are all blind, they haue no knowledge, they be dumme dogs, &c. 4.9.3
- 57.15 Thus saith the high and excellent, he that inhabiteth the eternitie, and whose name is holy, &c. 3.12.6
- 58.8 It is such a fast that I haue chosen, that a man should afflict his soule for a day, or that he should bow his head? &c. 4.12.19
- 6 And do not I chose rather this fast, to loose the bands of iniquitie, &c. 3.3.6
- 7 And hide not thy selfe from thine owne flesh. 3.7.6
- 9 Then shalt thou call, and the Lord shall heare: thou shalt cry, and he shall say, here I am. 3.20.14
- 13 If thou turne away thy foote from the Sabbath, so that thou doe not thy owne will on my holy day, &c. 2.8.3.1.& 2.8.3.4
- 59.1 Behold, the Lords hand is not shortened, that he cannot saue, neither is his care heauie that it can not heare. 3.11.21
- 2 But your iniquities haue separated between you and your God, and your sinnes hath hid his face from you that hee will not heare. 2.12.1.& 3.11.21
- 7 Their feet do run to euill, and they make haste to shed innocent blood: the thoughts of them are vaine thoughts, desolation and destruction is in their pathes. 2.3.2
- 36 And when the Lord did see (and that being abashed and woondred) that there was none, that there was none I say, that would offer himselfe, hee made his arme the safegard thereof, and his righteousnes did sustaine it. 3.14.6
- 17 Hee put on righteousnes for a breastplate, and the helmet of saluation on his head, &c. 1.11.12
- 20 And the rede[m]ptor shall come to Sion, and vnto them that turne from their wickednes in Jacob. 3.3.20.21
- 21 My spirit which is vpon thee, and my my word which I haue put in thy mouth, shall neuer depart out of thy mouth, neither out of the mouth of thy seed, &c. 1.7.4.& 1.9.1.& 4.1.5
- 60.2 Beholde, darkenes shall couer the earth and a mist the people, but the Lord shall rise vpon thee, and his glorie shall appeare vpon thee. 2.3.1
- 6 All they of Saba shall come, bringing gold and incense, & they shall shew forth the praises of God. 4.5.17
- 7 All the sheepe of Cedar shall be gathered vnto thee. 4.5.17
- 19 The Sunne shal serue thee no more for day light, & the brightnes of the moone shall not shew to thee, &c. 2.2.10
- 61.1 The spirit of the Lord God is vpon me, for because the Lord annointed me, and sent me that I should shew glad things vnto the weake, &c. 2.15.2.& 3.3.20 & 3.4.3.& 3.12.7
- 3 And they shall be called trees of righteousness, and the planting of the Lord that he might be glorified. 3.14.16
- 63.10 But they did rebel and vexed his holy spirit. 1.13.15
- 16 For thou art our father, though Abram be ignorant of vs, and Israel knoweth vs not, thou Lord art our father, our redeemer. 3.20.25.36
- 7 O Lord, why hast thou made vs to grie from thy waies? why hast thou hardened our hearts: that we should not feare thee? 2.4.4.& 3.3.21
- 64.5 Beholde thou art angrie because we haue sinned. 3.20.3
- 6 We haue bin all as an vnclean thing, and al our righteousnes is as a filthy cloth, and we all do fade like a leafe, &c. 3.12.5

The Table.

- 65.1 I haue bene sought of them that asked not: I was found of them that sought me not, &c. 3.24.2
- 2 I haue stretched out my handes all the day to a rebellious people which goe not in a good way. 3.24.16
- 16 He that will blesse himselfe in the earth, shall blesse himselfe in the true God: and he that will sweare, shall sweare by the true God, &c. 2.8.23
- 24 It shall come to passe, that before they call, I will answer: and as yet they speaking, I will heare. 3.20.14
- 25 They shall no more hurt nor destroy in my holy mountaine, &c. 4.10.10
- 66.1 Heauen is my throne, and the earth my footstool: where is that house therefore that you build for me? and where is that place of my rest? 3.20.30. & 4.17. 24
- 2 But to whom shall I haue regard, but vnto him that is humble & of a broken spirit, and who doth tremble at my word? 3.12.6
- 22 For as the new heauen and the newe earth that I will make shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seede and name continue. 2.10.22
- 23 And there shall be continuall newe Moones and continuall Sabbaoths, and all flesh shall come that it may worshipping before me. 2.8.30
- 24 Their wormes shall not die, and their fire shall not be put out, and they shall bee lothsome vnto all flesh. 3.25.12

I E R E M I E.

- 1.6 O Lord God, beholde, I cannot speake, for I am a child. 4.8.3
- 9 Beholde, I haue put my worde into thy mouth. 4.8.3
- 10 Behold this day haue I set thee ouer the nations and ouer kingdoms, to plucke vp and to roote out, and to destroy and scatter, that thou maist builde and plant. 4. 8.3
- 2.13 For my people haue committed two euils, they haue forsaken me the fountain of liuing waters, to digge them pits, euen broken pits that can hold no waters. 3.20. 14
- 3.1 They say, if a man put away his wife, and she go from him, & become an other mans, &c. 2.8.18. & 4.1.25

2 Lift vp thy eyes vnto the high places, & beholde where thou hast not plaid the harlot, &c. 2.8.18

12 Go and crie these words towardes, the North, and say: thou disobedient Israell, returne saith the Lord, and I will not let my wrath fall vpon you, for I am mercifull, &c. 4.1.25

4.1 O Israell, if thou returne, returne vnto me, saith the Lord: and if thou put away thine abominations out of my sight, then shalt thou not remouee. 2.5.10 & 3.3.6

4 Breake vp your fallow ground, and sowe not among the thornes: bee circumcised to the Lord, and take away the foreskins of your hearts, ye men of Iudah, and inhabitants of Ierusalem, &c. 2.5.8, & 3.3.6, 7, & 4.16.21

9 And in that day, saith the Lord, the heart of the king shall perish, & the heart of the princes, and the priest shall be astonish'd, and the prophetes shall woonder. 4. 9.6

11 At that time shall it be said to this people, and to Ierusalem, a drie winde in the high places of the wilderness, cometh toward the daughter of my people, &c. 1. 16.7

14 O Ierusalem, wash thine heart from wickednes, &c. 2.5.8

5.3 O Lord, are not thy eyes vpon the truth? thou hast striken them but they haue not sorrowed: thou hast consumed them, but they haue refused to receiue correction: they haue made their faces harder than a stone, and haue refused to turne. 3.4.3.5. & 3.14.8

7 How should I spare thee for this? thy children haue forsaken me, and sworne by them that are no Gods, &c. 2.8.23

14 Because ye spake such words, behold, I will put my word into thy mouth, like a fire, and this people shall be as wood, and it shall deuoure them. 3.24.13

6.13 For from the least of them, euen to the greatest of them, euery one is giuen to couetousnes: and from the Prophet euen to the Priest, they shall deale falsly. 4.9.3

7.4 Trust

The Table.

- 7.4 Trust not in lying words, saying, the Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord: this is the Temple of the Lord. 4.2.3
- 5 For if you amende and redresse your waies, and your workes, if you execute iudgement betweene a man & his neighbour, &c. 3.17.1
- 13 Therefore now, because ye haue done all these workes, saith the Lord, and I rose vp early and spake vnto you: but when I spake you would not heare me, neither when I called would yee answere. 2. 5.11
- 14 I will doe vnto this house, whereupon my name is called, &c. as I haue done vnto Shib. 2.5.11
- 22 For I spake not vnto your Fathers, nor commanded them, when I brought them out of the Lande of Egypt, concerning burnt offerings and sacrifices. 4.10.15
- 23 But this thing commanded I them, saying, obey my voice, so I will be your God, &c. 4.10.15,17
- 27 Therefore shalt thou speake all these wordes vnto them, but they will not heare thee: thou shalt also cry vnto them, but they will not answere thee. 2.5.11
- 28 This is a nation that heareth not the voice of the Lord their God, nor receiueth discipline. 2.5.11
- 9.32. Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, nor the strong man glorie in his strength, neither the rich man glorie in his riches. 3.13.1
- 24 But let him that glorieth, glory in this, that he vnderstandeth and knoweth me, for I am the Lord which sheweth mercie and iudgement, and righteousness in the earth, &c. 1.10.2
- 10.2 Be not affraide for the signes of heauen, though the heathen be affraide of such. 2.16.3
- 8 But altogether they dote and are foolish, for the stone is a doctrine of vanity. 1.11.5
- 11 The Gods that haue not made the heauens and the earth, shall perish from the earth, and from vnder these heauens. 1.13.23
- 23 O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himselfe, neither is it in man to walke and so direct his steps. 2.16.6
- 24 O Lord correct me, but with iudgement, not in thine anger, least thou bring me to nothing. 3.4.3.2
- 11.7 For I haue protested vnto your Fathers, when I brought them vp out of the land of Egypt, vnto this day, rising earely, and protesting, saying: obey my voice. 3. 20.7. & 4.10.17
- 8 Neuerthelesse they would not obey, nor encline their eare, &c. therefore I will bring vpon them all the wordes of this couenant, which I command them to doe, &c. 3.20.7
- 11 Behold, I will bring a plague among them, which they shall not be able to escape, and though they cry vnto me, I will not heare them. 3.20.7
- 19 Let vs destroy the tree with the fruite thereof, and cut him out of the land of the liuing, &c. 4.17.15
- 12.16 And if they will learne the waies of my people, to sweare by my name, the Lord lueth, as they taught my people to sweare by Baal, &c. 2.8.23
- 14.7 O Lord, though our iniquities testifie against vs, deale with vs according to thy name: for our rebellions are many: we sinned against thee. 3.20.8
- 14 The Prophetes propheticie lyes in my name, I haue not sent them, neither did I command them, &c. 4.9.3
- 15.1 Though Moses and Samuel stood before me, yet mine affection could not be toward this people: cast them out of my sight, and let them depart. 3.20.3
- 17.1 The sinne of Israhel is written with a pen of iron, and with the point of a Diamond, and grauen vpon the table of your hart, and vpon the hornes of your Altars. 3.4.29
- 5 Thus saith the Lord, cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arme, and withdraweth his hart from the Lord. 2.2.10
- 9 The hart is deceitfull and wicked aboue all things, who can know it. 2.3.2
- 21 Take heede to your Soules, and beare no burden on the Sabbath day, nor bring it in by the gates of Ierusalem. 2.8.29
- 22 Neither carry forth burdens out of your houses on the Sabbath day, neither

The Table.

- you any worke, but sanctifie the Sabbath, &c. 2.8.29
- 27 But if you will not heare me to sanctifie the Sabbath day, and not to beare a burden, nor to goe through the gates, &c. 2.8.29
- 18.8 But if this nation, against whom I haue pronounced, turne from their wickednesse, I will repent of the plague that I thought to bring vpon them. 1.17.12
- 18 Come and let vs imagine some deuise against Jeremias: for the law shall not perish from the Priest, nor counsell from the wife, nor the worde from the Prophet. 4.9.5
- 20.2 Then Passur smote Jeremias the Prophet, & put him in the stocks that were in the high gate of Beniamin, which was by the house of the Lord. 4.9.6
- 21.12 Execute iudgement in the morning, and deliuer the oppressed out of the hand of the oppressor, &c. 4.20.9
- 22.3 Execute yea iudgement and righteousness, and deliuer the oppressed from the hand of the oppressor, &c. 4.20.9
- 23.1 Woe be vnto the Pastors that destroy & scatter the sheepe of my pasture, saith the Lord. 4.9.3
- 5 Behold, the daies come saith the Lord, that I will raise vnto Dauid a righteous branch, and a King shall raigne and prosper, and shall execute iudgement and iustice in the earth. 2.6.3
- 6 And this is the name whereby they shall call him, the Lord our righteousness. 1.13.9. & 3.11.8
- 16 Heare not the words of the Prophetes that propheticie vnto you and teach you vanitie, &c. 4.9.2
- 24 Doe not I fill heauen and earth, saith the Lord? 4.1.5
- 28 The Prophet that hath a dreame, let him tell a dreame, and he that hath my word, let him speake my word faithfully. 4.8.3
- 24.7 And I wil giue them an hart to know me, that I am the Lord, and they shall be my people, and I will be their God, for they shall returne vnto mee with their whole hart. 2.2.20
- 25.11 And this whole land shall be desolate, and astonished, and these nations shall serue the King of Babell seuentie yeares. 1.8.7
- 12 And when the seuentie yeares are accomplished, I will visite the King of Babell, and that nation, saith the Lord, for their iniquitie, &c. 1.8.7
- 29 For loe, I beeginne to plague the Citie, where my name is called vpon, & should you goe free? &c. 3.4.34
- 27.5 I haue made the earth, the man and the beast that are vpon the ground, &c. 4.20.27
- 6 But now I haue giuen al these lands vnto the hand of Nabuchadonozor the King of Babylon my seruant, &c. 4.20.27, 28
- 7 And all nations shall serue him, and his sonne and his sonnes sonne vntil the very time of his land come also, &c. 4.20.27
- 8 And the nation and kingdome which will not serue the same Nabuchadonozor King of Babell, and that will not put their necke vnder the yoke of the King of Babell, &c. 4.20.27
- 9 Therefore heare not your Prophetes, nor your Soothsaiers, nor your dreamers, nor your Inchanters, nor your Sorcerers which say vnto you thus, ye shall not serue the King of Babell, &c. 4.9.3
- 14 Therefore heare not the words of the Prophetes that spake vnto you, saying, ye shall not serue the King of Babell, &c. 4.9.3
- 17 Heare them not, but serue the King of Babell, that ye may liue, &c. 4.20.28
- 29.7 And seeke the prosperitie of the Citie, whether I haue caused you to be carried away captiues, and pray vnto the Lord for it, for, &c. 4.20.28
- 31.18 I haue hearde Ephraim lamenting thus, thou hast corrected me, and I was chastised as an vncamed Calie: conuert thou me and I shall be conuerted: for thou art the Lord my God. 2.3.5. & 3.5.8. & 3.24.15
- 19 Surely after that I conuerted, I repented, & after that I was instructed, I smote vpon my thigh, &c. 2.5.8
- 31 Behold, the daies come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new couenant with the house of Ismael, and with the house of Iudab. 2.11.7. & 3.4.29
- 32 Not according to the couenant that

The Table.

I made with their fathers, when I tooke them by the hande, to bring them out of the lande of Ægypt, the which my covenant they brake, &c. 2.5.9. & 2.11.7

33 After those daies saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, & write it in their hearts, and will be their God, & they shall be my people. 2.8.14. & 3.20. 45

34 For I wil forgieue their iniquitie, and will remember their sins no more. 3.4.29. & 3.20.45

35 Thus saith the Lord, which giueth the Sunne for a light to the day, and the courses of the Moone and of the Starres, for a light to the night, &c. 4.17.17

32.16 Now when I had deliuered the book of the profession vnto Baruch, the sonne of Neriah, I praised vnto the Lord, saying. 3.20.15

18 Thou shewest mercie vnto thousands, and recompenseth the iniquitie of the fathers into the bosome of their children after them, &c. 2.8.19

23 But they obeyed not thy voice, neither walked in thy lawes all that thou commandedst them to do, they haue not done, therefore thou hast caused this whole plague to come vpon them, &c. 2.5.11

39 And I will giue them one heart & one way, that they may feare me for euer, for the wealth of thee, and of their children after them, &c. 2.3.8

33.8 And I will cleanse them from all their iniquity, whereby they haue sinned against me: yea I will pardon all their iniquities, whereby they haue sinned against me, &c. 3.20.45. & 4.1.20

16 And in those daies shal Iudah be saued, and Ierusalem shal dwell safely, and he that shall call her is the Lord our righteousnes, &c. 1.13.9

42.2 Heare our praiere, we beseech thee, & pray for vs vnto the Lord thy God, &c. 3.20.14

9 Thus saith the Lord God of Israell vnto whom ye sent me to present your praieres before him, &c. 3.20.14

43.10 Cursed be he that doth the worke of the Lord negligently, &c. 4.20.6

50.20 In those daies, and at that time, saith the Lord, the iniquitie of Israell, shall bee sought for, and there shall be none: and the sins of Iudah, and they shall not bee found, &c. 3.4.29

23 How is the hammer of the whole world, destroyed and broken? how is Babel become desolate among the nations, &c. 2.4.4

25 The Lord hath opened his treasure and hath brought the weapons of his wrath, for this is the worke of the Lord God of hostes, in the land of the Chaldeans, &c. 1.18.1

LAMENTATIONS.

3.8 Also when I cry and shout, hee shutteth out my praiere, &c. 3.20.16

38 Out of the mouth of the most high proceedeth not euill and good? 1.17.8

4.20 The breath of our nostrils, the Anointed of the Lorde was taken in their nets, of whom we said, vnder his shadowe wee shall bee preserued aluie among the heathen, &c. 2.6.2

EZECHIEL.

1.20 Whether their spirit lead them they went, and thither did the spirit of the wheels lead them, & the wheeles were lifted vp besides them, for the spirit of the beasts, &c. 4.19.2

2.3 Son of man, I send thee to the children of Israell, to a rebellious nation that hath rebelled against me: for they and their fathers haue rebelled against me: euen vnto this very day. 3.24.13

4 They are impudent children, and stiff hearted: I do send thee vnto them, &c. 3.24.12

3.17 Son of man, I haue made thee a watch man vnto the house of Israell: therefore hear the word at my mouth, & giue them warning from me, &c. 4.8.3

18 The same wicked man shall die in his iniquity: but his blood will I require at thine hand, &c. 4.2.5. & 4.3.6

7.26 Calamitie, shall come vpon rumor: then shall they seeke a vision of the prophet: but the law shall perish from the priest, & counsell from the auncient, &c. 1.18.2. & 4.9.6

10.4 Then the glorie of the Lord went vp

The Table.

- from the Cherub, and stood ouer the doore of the house, &c. 4.2.3
- 5 And the sound of the Chermbins wings was heard into the outer court, &c. 14.8
- 11.19 And I will giue them one heart and I will put a new spirit within their bowels: and I will take the stony heart out of their bodies, and wil giue them an hart of flesh, &c. 1.13.10.& 2.3.8.& 2.5.5.& 3.24.1
- 20 That they may walke in my statutes & keepe my iudgements, and execute them: and they shall be my people, and I will be their God, &c. 2.5.5
- 12.2 They are a rebellious house, &c. 3.24.13
- 13 My net also will I spread vpon him, and he shall be taken in my net, and I wil bring him into Babel, to the land of the Caldeans, yett shall he not see it, though he shall die there, &c. 2.4.4
- 13.9 They shall not be in the assembly of my people, neither shall they be written in the writing of the house of Israell, &c. 2.24.9 & 4.1.4
- 13.9 And if the Prophet bee deceiued when hee hath spoken a thing, I the Lorde haue deceiued that Prophet, &c. 1.18.2
- 14 Though these three men Noah, Daniel, and Iob were among them they shoulde deliuer but their own soules by their righteousness, &c. 3.20.23
- 16.20 Moreover thou hast taken thy sons and thy daughters, whom thou hast borne vnto me, & thise hast thou sacrificed vnto them to be deuoured, &c. 2.2.11. & 4.16.24
17. 20 And I will spread my nette vpon him, and he shall be taken in my net, and I will bring him to Babel, and will enter into iudgement with him, therefore his trespass, that he hath committed against me, &c. 2.4.4
- 18.4 The soule that sinneth shall die, &c. 2.8.4.& 3.4.28
- 9 He that hath walked in my statutes, and kept my iudgements to deale truly, he is iust, he shall surely liue, saith the Lord God, &c. 3.17.15
- 20 The same soule which sinneth shall dy: the son shall not beare the iniquite of the father, neither shall the father beare the iniquite of the sonne, &c. 2.8.9. & 2.8.19. & 2.8.20. & 2.8.59. & 3.2.24
- 21 But if the wicked will returne from all his sins, that he hath committed, & keepe all my statutes and do that which is lawfull and right, he shall surely liue and not die. 1.3.24 & 3.4.13. & 3.17.15
- 23 Haue I any desire that the wicked should die, saith the Lord God? or shall hee not liue, if he returne from his waies? 4.1.2.5
- 24 But if the righteous returne from his righteousness, and commit iniquite, & do according to all the abominations that the wicked man doeth, shall hee liue? 3.4.29. & 3.14.10
- 27 Against whom I haue set my nett with away from his owne way, that he hath committed, and doeth that which is lawfull and right, hee shall saue his soule aliae, &c. 3.4.29
- 31 Cast away from you all your transgressions, whereby you haue transgressed, and make you a new heart, and a new spirit, &c. 3.3.6
- 32 For I desire not the death of him that dieth, saith the Lord God: canst therefore one an other to returne, and liue ye. 4.1.25
19. 12 And the East winde dried vpher fruit, &c. 1.16.7
- 20.11 And I gaue them my statutes, and declared my iudgments vnto them, which if a man doe, hee shall liue in them, &c. 3.17.3
- 12 Moreover I gaue them also my sabbathes, to bee a signe betweene mee and them, that they might know that I am the Lord that sanctifieth them, &c. 2.8.29
- 42 And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I shall bring you into the lande of Israell, into the land, &c. 3.13.1
- 43 And there shall you remember your waies, and all your works wherein ye haue been defiled, &c. 3.13.1
- 22.8 Thou hast despised my holy things, and hast polluted my Sabbathes, 2.8.29

- 3.2 Iohn saide, repent: for the kingdome of heauen is at hand. 3.3.2. & 3.3.5. & 3.3.19
- 6 And they were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins. 3.4.6. & 4.15.6. & 4.16.24
- 11 Indeede I baptize you with water to amendement of life, &c. 4.11.6. & 4.15.8. & 4.16.25
- 12 Which hath his fanne in his hande, and will make cleane his floore, & gather his wheat into his garner, but will burne vp the chaffe with vnquencheable fire. 3.25. 1.2. & 4.1.13. & 4.1.19
- 10 Then said Iesus vnto him, auoid Satan: for it is written, thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him onely shalt thou serue. 1.12.3
- 11 Then the diuel left him: and behold, the angels came and ministred vnto him. 1.14.6
- 17 From that time Iesus began to preach, and to saye, Amende your liues for the kingdome of heauen is at hande. 2.9.2. & 3.3.2. & 3.3.19
- 19 Follow me and I will make you fishers of men. 4.16.3. I
- 5.3 Blessed are the poore in spirit, for theirs is the kingdome of heauen. 3.17.10
- 4 Blessed are they that mourne, for they shall be comforted. 3.8.9
- 8 Blessed are the pure in hart: for they shall see God. 3.25.6
- 10 Blessed are they which suffer persecuti- on for righteoufnes sake: for theirs is the kingdome of heauen. 3.8.7
- 12 Reioyce and be glad, for great is your reward in heauen, &c. 3.18.1
- 13 Yee are the salt of the earth, &c. 4.3.3. & 4.5.14. & 4.8.4
- 14 Yee are the light of the world, &c. 4.3.3. & 4.5.14. & 4.8.4
- 15 Nether doe men light a candle and put it vnder a bushell, but on a candle- sticke,

- sticke, and it giueth light vnto all that are in the house. 1.11.14
- 16 Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works & glorifie your father which is in heauen. 3.16.3
- 17 Thinke not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets. I am not come to destroy them, but to fulfill them. 2.7.14
- 19 Whosoever therefore shall breake one of these least commandements, and teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdome of heauen: but whosoever shall obserue, &c. 2.8.59
- 21 Ye haue heard, that it was saide vnto them of the olde time, thou shalt not kill: for whosoever killeth, shall be culpable of iudgement. 4.20.10
- 22 But I say vnto you, whosoever is angry with his brother vnadusedly that be culpable of iudgement, &c. 2.8.7. & 2.8.39
- 25 Agree with thine aduersarie quickly, whiles thou art in the way with him least, &c. 3.5.7
- 26 Verily I say vnto thee, thou shalt not come out thence, till thou hast paid the vttermost farthing. 3.5.7. & 3.25.6
- 28 Whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her, hath committed adulterie with her already in his hart. 2.8.7
- 34 Swear not at all neither by heauen, &c. 2.8.26. & 4.13.12
- 39 But I say vnto you, resist not euill: but whosoever shall smite thee on the right cheeke, turne to him the other also. 4.20.19. & 4.20.20
- 44 Loue your enemies: bless them that curse you, &c. 2.8.57. & 3.7.6. & 4.13.12
- 45 That yee may be the children of your father which is in heauen: for he maketh his sunne to arise on the euill, and on the good, &c. 3.20.15. & 3.24.16. & 3.25.9
- 46 For if you loue them which loue you, what rewarde shall you haue? do not the pubhcans euen the same? 2.8.58
- 6.2 Therefore when thou giuest thine almes, thou shalt not make a trumpet to be blown before thee, as the hypocrites do in the synagogues, and in the streets, to be praised of men. Verily I say vnto you, they haue their rewarde. 3.7.2
- 6 But when thou prayest, enter into thy chamber: and when thou hast shut the doore, pray to thy father which is in secret, &c. 3.20.29
- 7 Also when you pray, vse no vaine repetitions as the heathen, for they think to be heard, for their much babbling. 3.20.29
- 9 After this maner therefore pray ye, Our father which art in heauen, halowed be thy name, &c. 3.20.6. & 3.20.34
- 11 Giue vs this day our daily bread. 2.5.14
- 12 And forgiue vs our detts, as we also forgiue our detters. 3.4.38. & 4.1.23
- 21 For where your treasure is, there will your hart be also. 3.2.25. & 3.18.6. & 3.25.1
- 23 But if thine eye be wicked, then all thy body shall be daike. Wherefore if the light which is in thee be darknesse, how great is that darknesse? 3.2.25
- 7.7 Aske, and it shall be giuen you: seeke, and yee shall finde: knocke, and it shall be opened vnto you. 3.20.13
- 11 If ye then which are euill, can giue to your children good giftes, can giue to you more shall your father which is in heauen, giue good things to them that aske him. 3.20.36
- 12 Therefore, whatsoeuer ye wolde that men should doe vnto you, euen so doe ye to them. For this is the lawe and the prophets. 2.8.53
- 15 Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheepes clothing, but inwardly they are rauening wolves. 4.9.4
- 8.4 Then Iesus said vnto him, see thou til no man: but goe, and shew thy selfe vnto the priest, & offer the gift that Moses commanded, for a witness to them. 3.14
- 10 And when Iesus heard this, he was mouled, & said to them which followed him: verily I say vnto you, I haue not found so great faith euen in Israel. 3.2.13
- 11 Many shall come from the East and from the West, and shall sit downe with Abraham, and Isaac and Iacob, in the kingdome of heauen. 2.10.23. & 4.16.13
- 12 And the children of the kingdome shall be cast out into vtter darknesse: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. 3.25.12
- 13 Then Iesus saide vnto the Centurion goe thy waies, and as thou hast beleued, so be it vnto thee. And his seruant was healed the same hower. 3.10.11
- 25 Then

The Table.

- 25 Then his disciples came & awoke him, saying: maister, saue vs, we perish. 3. 2. 2 1
- 29 Iesus the sonne of God, what haue we to doe with thee? art thou come hither to torment vs before the time? 1. 14. 19
9. 2. And loe, they brought to him a man sicke of the palsie lying on a bed, and Iesus seeing their faith, saide to the sicke of the palsie, sonne, be of good comfort: thy sinnes are forguien thee. 3. 2. 13. & 3. 4. 35. & 3. 20. 9
- 3 Certaine of the Scribes saide within themselues, this man blasphemeth. 1. 13. 12
- 4 But when Iesus saue their thoughts, &c. 1. 13. 12
- 5 For whether is it easier to say, Thy sinnes are forguien thee, or to say, Arise and walke? 4. 19. 29
- 6 And that yee may know that the sonne of man hath authoritie to forgive sinnes in earth, (then saide he to the sicke of the palsie,) arise, take vp thy bed and goe to thy house. 1. 13. 12
- 12 The whole neede not a phisicion, but they that are sicke. 2. 12 4
- 13 For I am not come to call the righteous, but the sinners to repentance. 3. 3. 20 & 3. 1 2. 7. & 3. 14 5
- 15 Can the children of the mariage chamber mourne, as long as the bridegroom, &c. 3. 3. 17. & 4. 1 2. 17
- 29 Then touched he their eyes, saying according to your faith, be it vnto you. 3. 2. 43. & 3. 4. 22. & 3. 20. 11. & 4. 19. 18
- 34 But the Pharisees saide, hee casteth out diuels, through the prince of diuels. 3. 3. 22
- 35 And Iesus went about all cities, and townes, preaching in their synagogues, and preaching the Gospell of the kingdom, &c. 2. 9. 2
10. 1 And hee called his twelue disciples vnto him, and gaue them power against vnclene spirits, &c. 4. 3. 5
- 5 Go not into the way of the gentiles and into the cities of the Samaritans enter ye not. 2. 11. 12
- 8 Heale the sicke: cleanse the leapers, raise vp the dead, cast out diuels, &c. 1. 13. 13
- 18 And ye shall be brought to the gouernours and kings for my sake, in witnessifing to them and to the Gentiles. 3. 4. 4
- 20 For it is not yee that speake, but the spirite of your father that speaketh in you. 4. 19. 8
- 28 And feare yee not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soule: but rather feare him which is able to destroy both soule and body in hell. 1. 15. 2 & 3. 25. 7
- 29 Are not two sparrowes solde for a farthing, and one of them shall not fall on the ground without your father? 1. 16. 1. & 1. 16. 5. & 1. 17. 1
- 30 Yea, and all the haire of your head are numbred. 1. 16. 2
- 31 Feare ye not therefore, ye are of more value than many sparrowes. 1. 17. 6
- 33 But whosoeuer shall deny mee before men, him will I also deny before my father which is in heauen. 4. 1. 26
11. 10. For this is he of whom it is written: behold, I sende my messenger before my face, which shall prepare thy way before thee. 3. 3. 19
- 11 Among them which are begotten of women, arose there not a greater than John Baptist: notwithstanding he that is least in the kingdome of heauen, is greater than he. 2. 9. 5
- 13 For all the Prophets and the law prophesied vnto John. 2. 11. 5, 10
- 23 And thou Capernaum, which art lifted vp vnto heauen, shalt be brought downe to hell: for if the great works which haue been done in thee had been done among them of Sodome they had remained to this day. 3. 24. 15
- 25 At that time Iesus answered, and said: I giue thee thanks, O father, Lorde of heauen and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise, and men of vnderstanding, and hast opened them vnto babes. 3. 2. 34
- 27 Neither knoweth any man the father, but the sonne, and he to whom the sonne will reueale him. 4. 8. 5
- 28 Come vnto me all yee that be wearie and laden, and I will ease you. 3. 3. 20. & 3. 4. 3. & 3. 12. 7. & 3. 18. 9
- 29 Take my yoke on you, and learne of mee that I am meeke and lowly in hart and yee shall finde rest vnto your soules. 3. 18. 9
- 30 For

The Table.

- 30 For my yoke is easie, and my burden light. 5.19.3
- 12.24 But when the Pharisees heard it, they said, This man casteth the diuels no otherwise out, but through Beelzebub the prince of diuels. 3.3.22
- 31 Euery sinne and blasphemie shal be forgiven vnto men: but the blasphemie against the holy Ghost shall not be forgiven vnto men. 1.13.15. & 3.3.21. & 3.3.22
- 32 And whosoever shall speake a word against the sonne of man, it shall be forgiven him: but whosoever shall speake against the holy Ghost it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, nor in the world to come. 3.5.7
- 41 The men of Ninive shall rise in iudgement, with this generation, and shal condemne it: for they repented at the preaching of Ionas, &c. 3.24.15
- 43 Now when the vnclene spirit is gone out of the man, he walketh throughout drie places, seeking rest, and findeth none. 1.14.14. & 14.19
- 13.4 And as he sowed, some seedes fell by the way side, & the fowles came & deuoured them vp. 3.22.10. & 4.14.11. & 4.17.33
- 5 And some fell vpon stony ground where they had not much earth, and anon they sprong vp, because they had no depth of earth. 4.17.33
- 7 And some fell among thornes, and the thornes sprong vp, and choked them. 4.17.33
- 9 He that hath eares to heare, let him heare. 3.23.13
- 11 Because it is giuen vnto you, to know the secretes of the kingdome of heauē, but vnto them it is not giuen. 1.7.5. & 3.24.13
- 16 But blessed are your eies, for they see: and your eares, for they heare. 2.9.1
- 17 For verily I say vnto you, that many prophetes and righteous men haue desired to see those things which yee see, and haue not seene them, &c. 2.11.6
- 14 The kingdome of heauen is like vnto a man, which soweth good seede in his filde. 4.1.13
- 29 But he saide, nay: least while ye goe about to gather the tares, ye plucke vp also with them the wheate. 4.12.11
- 31 The kingdome of heauen is like vnto a graine of Mustardseed, which a man taketh and soweth in the filde 4.19.34
- 33 Another Parable spake he vnto them, saying: the kingdome of heauen is like vnto leuen, which a woman taketh and hideth in three peckes of meale, till it be all leuened. 4.19.34
- 39 And the enemy which soweth them, is the diuell, &c. 1.14.15
- 47 The kingdome of heauen is like vnto a net: that was cast into the Sea, and gathered of all kinde. 4.1.13. & 4.16.31.
- 14.25 And in the fourth watch of the night, Iesus went vnto them, walking on the Sea. 4.17.29
- 15.3 Why doe ye also transgresse the commandement of God by your tradition? 4.10.10
- 4 For God hath commanded, saying, honor thy Father and Mother, and he that curseth Father and Mother, let him die the death. 2.8.36
- 8 This people draweth neere vnto me with their mouth, and honoreth me with their lips, but their hart is farre off from me. 3.10.31
- 9 But in vaine they worship me, teaching for doctrines, mens precepts. 4.10.15. & 4.10.23
- 13 Euery plant which mine heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted vp. 2.3.9. & 3.2.12. & 3.23.1. & 3.24.6
- 14 Let them alone: they be the blind leaders of the blinde, and if the blind leade the blinde, both shall fall in the ditch. 3.19.11. & 4.9.12
- 24 I am not sent, but vnto the lost sheepe of the house of Israel. 2.11.12
- 16.6 Take heed and beware of the leauen of the Pharisees, and Saduces. 4.10.26
- 12 Then vnderstood they that he had not said that they should beware of the leuen of bread, but of the doctrine of the Pharisees and Saduces. 4.10.16
- 17 Thou art Christ the Sonne of the liuing God. 4.6.6
- 17 Blessed art thou Simon the Sonne of Ionas, for flesh and blood hath not reuealed it vnto thee, but my Father which is in heauen. 2.2.19. & 3.1.4. & 3.2.34
- 18 And I say also vnto thee that thou art

The Table.

- Peter*, and vpon this rocke I will build my Church. 4.6.3. & 4.6.5
- 19 And I will giue vnto thee the keyes of the kingdome of heauen: and whatsoever thou shalt bind vpon earth, shall be bound in heauen: and whatsoever thou shalt loose, on the earth shall be loosed in heauen. 3.4.12. & 4.1.22. & 4.2.10. & 4.6.4. & 4.11.1. & 4.12.4
- 23 Get thee behinde me, Satan: thou art an offence vnto me, &c. 4.7.28
- 24 If any man will follow me, let him forsake himselfe, and take vp his crosse and follow me. 3.7.2. & 3.8.1
- 27 For the Sonne of man shall come in the glorie of his Father, with his Angels: and then shall he giue to euery man according to his deeds. 3.18.1
- 17.2 And was transfigured before them: and his face did shine as the Sunne, and his clothes were as white as the light. 4.17.17
- 5 While he yet spake, beholde, a bright cloude shadowed them: and beholde, there came a voice out of the cloude, saying: this is my welbeloued Sonne in whom I am well pleased, heare him. 2.15.2. & 3.2.32. & 3.8.1. & 3.20.48. & 4.8.1. & 4.8.7
- 18.10. For I say vnto you, that in Heauen their Angels alwaies behold the face of my Father which is in heauen. 1.14.7. & 1.14.9
- 11 For the Sonne of man is come to saue that which was lost. 2.12.4
- 15 If thy brother trespass against thee, goe, and tell him his fault betwene thee and him alone: if he heare thee, thou hast wonne thy brother. 4.12.3
- 17 And if he will not vouchsafe to heare thee, tell it vnto the Church: and if he refuse to heare the Church also, let him be vnto thee as a heathen man, and as a publicane 4.8.15. & 4.11.2. & 4.12.3
- 18 Verily I say vnto you, whatsoever yee binde on earth, shall be bound in heauen, and whatsoever yee loose on earth shall be loosed in heauen. 3.4.12. & 3.4.20. & 4.1.22. & 4.2.10. & 4.8.4. & 4.12.4. & 4.12.9
- 19 Againe, verily I say vnto you, that if two of you shall agree in earth vpon any thing, whatsoever they shall desire, it shall be giuen them of my Father which is in heauen. 3.20.30
- 20 For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the middes among them. 4.1.9. & 4.6.4. & 4.9.2
- 22 If say not to thee, vnto seuen times: but vnto seuentie times seuen times. 4.1.23
- 29 And his fellow therefore fell downe and besought him, saying, haue patience with me, and I will pay thee all. 4.1.23
- 19.6 Wherefore they are no more twaine, but one flesh: let not man therefore put aunder that which God hath coupled together. 4.15.22
- 11 All men cannot receiue this saying, saue them to whom it is giuen. 2.8.42. & 4.13.17
- 12 For there are some chaste, which were so borne of their Mothers belly: and there be some chaste which be made chaste by men: and there be some chaste, which haue made themselues chaste for the kingdome of heauen, &c. 2.8.42
- 13 Then were brought vnto him little children, that he should put his hand vpon them, and pray: and the Disciples rebuked them. 4.16.7
- 14 Suffer little children to come vnto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdome of heauen. 4.16.7. & 4.16.17. & 4.16.26
- 15 And when hee had put his handes on them, he departed thence. 4.3.16
- 17 There is none good but one, euē God: but if thou wilt enter into life, keepe the Commandements. 1.15.13, 24. & 3.18.9
- 18 Thou shalt not kill: thou shalt not commit adulterie: thou shalt not steale, &c. 2.8.3.5, 36, 37, 38, 39. &c. to the end of the Chapter
- 19 Honour thy Father and thy Mother, &c. 2.8.12, 35
- 21 If thou wilt be perfect, goe, sell that thou hast, and giue to the poore, and thou shalt haue treasure in Heauen, &c. 4.13.13
- 25 And when his Disciples heard it: they were exceedingly amazed, saying, who then can be saved? 2.7.5
- 26 And Iesus beheld them and said vnto them: with men this is vnpossible, but with God all things are possible. 2.7.5
- 28 And

The Table.

- 28 And Iesus said vnto them, verily I saye to you : that when the sonne of man shall sit in the throne of his maicstie, ye which followed me in the regeneration, shall sit also vpon twelue thrones : and iudge the twelue tribes of Israell. 2.16.18.& 3.25.10
- 29 And whosoever shall forsake houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my names sake, hee shall receive an hundred folde more, and shall inherite life euerlasting. 3.25.10
- 20.1 For the kingdome of heauen is like vnto a certaine houtholder, which went out at the dawning of the day, to hire labourers into his vineyard. 3.18.3
- 25 Ye know that the Lordes of the Gentiles haue domination ouer them, & they that are great, exercise authoritie ouer them. 4.11.8.& 4.11.9
- 26 But it shall not bee so among you: but whosoever will bee great among you, let him be your seruant. 4.11.8
- 28 Euen as the sonne of man came not to be serued, but to serue, and to giue his life for the rancome of many. 2.16.5
- 21.9 Moreover, the people that went before, and they also that followed cried, saying : Hosanna: the sonne of Dauid: blessed be hee that commeth in the name of the Lord, &c. 2.6.4
- 22 Whatsoever ye shall aske in praier if ye beleeue, ye shall receiue it. 3.20.11
- 25 The baptisme of Iohn whence was it? from heauen or of men? then they reasoned among themselues saying, if we shall say from heauen, he will say vnto vs, why did ye not then beleeue him. 4.19.5
- 31 Whether of them twaine did the will of the father? they saide vnto him, the first. Iesus said vnto them, verily I say vnto you, that the Publicanes and the harlots shall go before you into the kingdome of God. 2.8.14.& 3.7.2
- 22.2 The kingdome of heauen is like vnto a certaine king, which married his sonne. 3.24.8
- 12 Friend how camest thou in hither, & hast not on a wedding garment? 4.17.45
- 13 Bind him hand and foote, take him away, and cast him into vtter darknesse: there shall bee weeping and gnashing of teeth. 3.25.12
- 14 For many are called, but few are chosen. 3.24.6
- 23 The same day the Sadduces came to him, which say that there is no resurrection 2.10.23
- 30 For in the resurrection, they neither make wiues, nor wiues are bestowed in marriage, but are as the Angels of God in heauen. 1.14.9.& 1.15.3.& 2.12.6.& 3.25.11.& 4.1.4
- 32 I am the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob: God is not the God of the dead, but of the liuing. 2.10.6 & 4.16.3
- 37 Thou shalt loue the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soule, and with all thy mind. 2.8.11.& 2.8.51.& 3.3.11
- 39 And the second is like vnto this, thou shalt loue thy neighbour as thy self. 2.8.11
- 23.4 For they binde heauie burdens, and greuous to be borne, and lay them on mens shoulders, but they themselues will not moue them with one of their fingers 4.10.1.& 4.10.16
- 8 But be not ye called Rabbi: for one is your doctor to wit, Christ, and all ye are brethren. 4.8.3
- 9 And call no man your father vpon the earth: for there is but one, your father which is in heauen 3.20.38
- 23 And ye leaue the weightier matters of the law, as iudgement, and mercie, and fidelitie, these ought ye haue done, and not to haue left the other. 2.8.52
- 25 Woe vnto you scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites, for ye make cleane the outer side of the cup, & of the platter, but within they are full of biberie and excesse. 3.4.36
- 37 Ierusalem, Ierusalem, which killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent to thee: how often would I haue gathered thy children together, &c. 3.24.16
- 24.11 And many false prophets shall arise and shall deceiue many. 4.9.4
- 14 And this Gospell of the kingdome shall be preached through the whole world, for a witness vnto all nations: and then shall the end come. 3.4.4
- 24 For there shall arise false Christs, and false

- false Prophets, and shall shew great signes and wonders: so that if it were possible, they should deceiue the verie elect. 4 9.4
- 30 And then shall appeare the signe of the sonne of man in heauen, and then shall all the kindreds of the earth mourne, & they shall see the son of man come in the clouds of heauen with power and great glorie. 2.
 16.17
- 36 But of that day and houre knoweth no man, no not the Angels of heauen, but my Father onely. 1.14.9
- 45 Who then is a faithfull seruant, and wife, whom his master hath made ruler ouer his household, to giue them meate in season? 4.16.3.1
- 25.3 The foolish tooke their lampes, but tooke no oyle with them. 3.5.7
- 21 Then his master saide vnto him, it is well done good seruant and faithfull: thou hast bene faithfull in litle, I will make thee ruler ouer much: enter into thy masters ioy. 2.3.11
- 23 It is well done good seruant and faith-full, thou hast bene faithfull in litle, &c.
 2.3.11
- 29 For vnto euerie man that hath, it shall be giuen, and he shall haue abundance:
 and from him that hath not, euen that hee hath, shall be taken away. 2.3.11. and 3.
 15.4
- 31 And when the sonne of man commeth in his glorie, and all the holy Angels with him, then shall he sit vpon the throne of his glorie. 2.16.17
- 32 And before him shall bee gathered all nations, and hee shall separate one from an other, as a shepheard separateth the sheep from the goats. 2.16.17. & 3.25.9
- 34 Come ye blessed of my father, inherite the kingdome prepared for you from the foundations of the world. 3.18.1. & 3.18.
 2. & 3.18.3. & 3.24.16
- 35 For I was an hungred, and yee gaue mee meate: I thirsted, and yee gaue mee drinke, &c. 3.18.1
- 40 Verily I say vnto you, in as much as ye haue done it vnto one of the least of these my brethren, ye haue done it to me. 3.
 18.6
- 41 Depart from me ye cursed, into euerlasting fire, which is prepared for the deuill and his angels. 1.14.14. & 1.14.19. & 3.
 25.5
- 46 And these shall go into euerlasting paine, and the righteous into life eternal. 3.
 25.5
- 26.10 Why trouble yee the woman? for she hath wrought a good worke vpon me 3.25.8
- 11 For ye haue the poore alwaies with you, but me shall ye not haue with you alwaies
 4.3.1. & 4.17.26. & 4.17.28
- 12 For in that shee powred this ointment
 vpon my bodie, shee did it to burie mee. 3.
 25.8
- 15 And he said to them, what will ye giue me, and I will deliuer him vnto you? and they appointed vnto him thirtie peeces of filuer. 4.18.14
- 26 And as they did eate, Iesus tooke the bread: and when hee had giuen thanks he brake it, and gaue it to the disciples, and said, take, eate: this is my bodie.
 4.14.20. & 4.16.30. & 4.17.1. & 4.17.20.
 & 4.19.23
- 27 Also he took the cup, and when hee had giuen thanks hee gaue it to them, saying, drinke ye all of it. 4.9.14
- 38 Then said Iesus vnto them my soule is verie heauie euen to the death: forie yee here, and watch with me. 2.16.12. and 3.
 8.9
- 39 So he went a litle further, and fell on his face, and praied, saying: O my Father, if it be possible let this cup passe from me, neuerthelesse not as I will, but as thou wilt. 2.16.12
- 53 Thinkest thou that I cannot now pray to my father, and hee will giue mee more than twelue legions of Angels. 1.14.8
- 74 Then began hee to curse himselfe and to sweare, saying, I know not the man. 4.1.
 26
- 75 Then Peter remembered the words of Ie-sus, which said vnto him, Before the cock crow thou shalt denie me thrise. So hee went out, and wept bitterly 3.3.4
- 27.4 I haue sinned betraying the innocent blood, but they saide, what is that to vs?
 see thou to it. 3.3.4
- 12 And when hee was accused of the chiefe Priests and elders, he answered nothing

- nothing. 2.16.5
- 14 But he answered him not to one word in so much that the gouernour maruelled greedily. 2.16.5
- 23 Then said the gouernour, but what coul hath he done? then they cried the more saying, let him be crucified. 2.16.5
- 24 When Pilate saw that he auailed nothing, but that more tumult was made, he tooke water & wathed his hands before the multitude, saying, I am innocent of the blood of this iust man: looke you to it. 2.16.5
- 46 And about the ninth houre Iesus cried with a loud voice, saying, Eli, Eli, Lama sabachthani? that is, my God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? 2.16.11
- 50 Then Iesus cried againe with a loude voice, and yeelded vp the Ghost. 4.19.23
- 52 And the graues did open themselues, and many bodies of the faintes which slept, arose. 2.10.23. & 3.25.7
- 53 And came out of the graues after his resurrection, and went into the holy citie, and appeared to many. 2.10.23
- 66 And they went and made the sepulchre sure with the watch and sealed the stone. 3.25.3
- 28.5 But the Angel answered and saide to the women, feare ye not, &c. 1.14.6
- 6 He is not here, for he is risen, as he saide, &c. 4.17.29
- 7 Tell his disciples, that hee is risen from the dead, &c. 1.14.6
- 11 Now when they were gone, beholde, some of the watch came into the citie, & shewed vnto the hie priests all the things that were done. 3.25.3
- 12 And they gathered themselues together with the elders, and tooke counsell, and gaue large money to the iouldiers 3. 25.3
- 13 Saying, Say, his disciples came by night and stole him away while we slept 3. 25.5
- 18 All power is giuen vnto me in heauen and earth. 3.15.5
- 19 Go therfore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, & the Sonne, and the holy Ghost. 1.13.16. & 4.3.6. & 4.8.4. & 4.14.20. & 4.15.6. 18.20. 22. & 4.16.27. & 4.19.28
- 20 I am with you alwaies, vntill the end of the world. 1.16.14. & 4.8.8. & 4.8.11. & 4. 17.26. & 4.17.28. & 4.17.30

M A R K E.

1. THe beginning of the Gospel of Iesus Christ the son of God. 2.9.2
- 4 Iohn did baptise in the wildernes, & preached the baptisme of amendment of life for remission of sinnes. 3.5.19. and 4.19. 17
- 15 And saying the time is fulfilled, and the kingdome of God is at hand, repent and beleue the Gospel. 3.3.19
- 3.15 And that they might haue power to heale sickneses, and to cast out diuels. 1. 13.13
- 28 Verily, I say vnto you, all sins shall bee forgiven vnto the children of men, and blasphemies, wherewith they blaspheme. 3.5.7
- 29 Put hee that blasphemeth against the holy Ghost, shall neuer be forgiven, but is culpable of eternall damnation. 1.13.15. & 3.3.22
- 6.7 And gaue them power ouer vncleane spirits. 1.13.13
- 13 And they cast out many diuels, & they annointed many that were sick with oyle, and healed them. 4.19.18. & 4.19.21
- 7.33 Then hee tooke him aside from the multitude, and put his fingers in his eares, and did spit, & touched his toong. 4.19.23
- 8.38 For whosoever shall bee ashamed of me and of my words among this adulterous and sinful generation, of him shall the sonne of man be ashamed also, &c. 4.1. 26
- 9.24 Lord, I beleue: helpe my vnbeliefe. 4.14.7
43. To goe into hell, into the fire that neuer shall be quenched. 3.25.12
- 44 Where their womne dieth not, and the fire neuer goeth out. 3.25.12
- 10.9 Therefore, what God hath coupled together, let no man separate. 4.1.1
- 30 But he that receiue a hundred fold new at this present: houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, & children, & lands with persecutions: and in the world to come eternall life. 3.18.3
- 11.24 Whatsoeuer ye desire when ye pray, beleue

The Table.

- belceue that ye shall haue it and it shal be done vnto you. 3.20.11
- 12.18 Then came the Saducēs vnto him (which say, that there is no resurrection) and they asked him, saying. 3.25.5
- 13.32 But of that day and houre knoweth no man, no not the Angels which are in heauen, neither the Sonne himselfe; saue onely the Father. 2.14.2
- 14.22 And as they did eate, Iesus tooke the bread, & when he had giuen thanks, he brake it and gaue it to them, and said, take, eate: this my body. 4.17.1. & 4.17.20
- 33 And he tooke with him Peter, & Iames and Iohn, and he began to be afraide, and in great heaumes. 3.8.9
- 34 And said vnto them, my Soule is very heauy, euen vnto the death: tarie here and watch. 2.16.12
- 15.18 Thus the Scripture was fulfilled, which saith. And he was counted among the wicked. 2.16.5
- 16.9 He appeared first to Marie Magdalene, out of whom he had cast seuen Diuels. 14.14
- 15 Goe ye into all the world, and preach the Gospell to euery creature. 4.3.4. & 4.3.12. & 4.16.27. & 4.19.28
- 16 He that shall belceue and be baptised, shall be saued, 4.15.1. & 4.16.28
- 19 So after the Lorde had spoken vnto them, he was receued into heauen, and sat at the right hand of God, 2.14.3. & 4.17.27

LVKE.

- 1.6 Both were iustified before God and walked in all the commandementes and ordinances of the Lord, without reproofe. 3.17.7
- 15 And he shall be filled with the Holy Ghost, euen from his Mothers wombe. 4.16.17
- 17 For he shall goe before him in the spirite and power of Elias: to turne the hearts of the Fathers to their children, and the disobedient to the wisdome of the iust men, to make readie a people prepared for the Lord. 4.16
- 31 For loe, thou shalt conceive in thy wombe, and beare a Sonne, and shalt call his name Iesus. 2.16.1
- 32 He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the most high, and the Lord shall giue vnto him the throne of his Father Dauid. 2.14.4. & 2.15.3
- 33 And he shall raigne ouer the house of Iacob for euer, and of his kingdome shall be none ende 2.14.3. & 2.15.3
- 34 Then said Marie vnto the Angel, how shall this be, seeing I know no man? 17.25
- 35 And the Angell answered, and said vnto her, the holy Ghost shall come vpon thee, and the power of the most high shall ouershadow thee: therefore also, that holy thing which shall be borne of thee, shall be called the Sonne of God. 2.14.5
- 43 And whence commeth this to me that the Mother of my Lord should come to me? 2.14.4
- 54 He hath vpholden Israel his seruants, being mindfull of his mercie. 2.10.4
- 72 That he would shew mercy towards our Fathers, and remember his holy covenant. 2.10.4
- 73 And the oth which he sware to our Father Abraham. 2.10.4
- 74 That we being deliuered out of the handes of our enemies, should serue him without feare. 3.16.2
- 77 And to giue knowledge of saluation vnto his people by the remission of their finnes. 3.11.22
- 79 To giue light to them that sit in darkness, and in the shadow of death, and to guide our feete into the way of peace. 2.12.4
- 2.11 That is, that vnto you is borne this day in the City of Dauid a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord. 2.15.5
- 13 And straight way there was with the Angell a multitude of heauenly Soldiers, praising God, &c. 1.14.5
- 37 And there was a widow about fourescore and foure yeeres, and went not out of the temple, and serued God with fasting, and prayers night and day. 4.12.16
- 52 And Iesus increased in wisdome, and stature, and in fauour with God and men. 2.14.2
- 33 And he came into all the coastes about Jordan, preaching the baptisme of repentance

The Table.

- tance for the remission of sins. 3.3.19.& 4.15.7.& 4.19.17
- 8 Bring forth therefore fruits woorthie amendment of life, and begin not to say with your selues, we haue Abraham our father: for I say vnto you, that God is able of these stones to raite vp children vnto Abraham. 3.3.5
- 14 The souldiers likewise demanded of him, saying, and what shall we do? and he said vnto them, doe violence to no man, neither accuse any falsely, and be content with your wages. 4.20.12
- 16 John answered, and said to them all, indeede I baptize you with water, but one stronger than I, cometh, whose shooes larcher I am not woorthie to vnloose: he will baptize you with the holy Ghost, and with fire. 3.1.3,4.& 4.15.6,7
- 22 And the holy Ghost came downe in a bodily shap like a Doue, vpon him, and there was a voice from heauen, saying, thou art my beloved son: in thee I am wel pleased 4.17.21
- 23 And Iesus himselve began to bee about thirtie yeeres of age, being as men supposed the sonne of Ioseph, which was the son of Elie. 4.25.27,29
- 38 Which was the sonne of Enos, which was the son of Setib, which was the sonne of Adam, which was the sonne of God. 2.
12.7.& 2.13.3
- 4.17 And there was deliuered vnto him the booke of the prophet Esaías: and when he had opened the booke he found the place where it was written. 4.19.23
- 18 The spirit of the Lord is vpon mee because he hath annointed me, that I should preach the Gospell to the poore: he hath sent me, that I should heale the broken in heart. 2.15.2.& 3.3.20.& 3.4.3
- 5.13 And touched him, saying, I wil, bee thou cleane. And immediately the leprosie departed from him.
- 14 And he commanded him that he should tell it to no man: but goe, saith he, & shew thy selfe to the priest, and offer for thy cleansing, as Moses hath commanded, for a witness vnto them. 3.2.4
- 34 Can ye make the children of the wedding chamber fast, as long as the bridegrome is with them? 4.12.17
- 6.13 And when it was day, hee called his disciples, and of them hee chose twelue, which also hee called Apostles. 4.3.5
- 23 Reioice ye in that day, and be glad, for behold, your reward is great in heauen,
&c. 3.1.8.1
- 24 But woe be to you that are rich, for you haue receiued your consolation. 3.19.9
- 32 Be ye mercifull therefore, as your father also is mercifull. 3.7.6
- 7.29 Then all the people that heard, and the publicanes iustified God, being baptised with the baptisme of Iohn. 3.11.3
- 35 But wisdome is iustified of all her children. 3.11.3
- 36 And one of the Pharisees desired him that he would eat with him: and he went into the Pharisees house, and sat downe at
the table. 3.4.37
- 47 Wherefore I say vnto thee, many finnes are forgien her: for she loued much. To whom a little is forgien, hee doth loue a little. 3.4.32
- 8.2 And certaine women, which were healed of euill spirits, and infirmities, as Marie which was called Magdalen, out of whom went seuen diuels. 1.14.14
- 7 And some fell among thornes and the thornes sprung vp with it, and choaked it.
3.2.10
- 13 But they that are on the stones, are they which when they haue heard, receiue the word with ioy, but they haue no roots, which for a while beleeue, but in the time of tentation go away. 3.2.10
- 15 But that which fell on good ground, are they which with an honest, and good hart heare the word, and keepe it, and bring forth fruit with patience. 4.14.11
- 9 23 If any man will come after mee, let him denie himselfe, and take vp his crosse daily and follow me. 3.15.8
- 26 For whosoever shall be ashamed of me, & of my words of him shall the son of man be ashamed when hee shall come in his glorie, and in the glorie of the father, and of the holy Angels. 1.14.9
- 55 But Iesus turned about, and rebuked them, and said, ye know not of what spirit ye are. 3.20.15
- 10.1 After these things the Lord appointed other 70. also, and sent them two and two

The Table.

- two before him,&c. 4.3.4
- 6 And if the soune of peace be there your peace shall rest vpon him: if not, it shall returne to you againe. 3.23.14
- 16 He that heareth you, heareth me: and he that despiseth you despiseth me. 4.3.3.& 4.8.4
- 18 I saw Sathan, like lightning, fall downe from heauen. 1.14.18
- 20 Neuertheless, in this reioice not, that the spirits are subdued vnto you: but rather reioice, because your names are written in heauen. 3.24.9
- 21 The same houre reioiced Iesus in the spirit and said, I confesse vnto thee father, Lord of heauen & earth, that thou hast hid these things from the wise and learned, and hast reuealed them to babes, euen
so, father, because it so pleased thee. 3.
2.34
- 22 All things are giuen me of my father:
and no man knoweth who the son is, but the father: neither who the father is, saue the son: and he to whom the son will re-ueale him. 3.2.1. and 4.18. 20
- 23 Blessed are the eies, which see that ye see.
2.9.1
- 24 For I tell you, that many prophets and kings haue desired to see these things, which ye see, & haue not seene them,&c.
2.9.1. & 2.11.6
- 25 Maister, what shall I doe, to inherite enall life? 4.13.13
- 27 And he answered, and saide, thou shalt loue thy Lord God, with all thy heart, and with all thy soule, & with all thy strength, and with all thy thought, and thy neighbour as thy selfe. 2.8.11
- 30 And a certaine man went downe from Ierusalem to Iericho, and fell among theeues. 1.5.19
- 36 Which now of these three, thinkest thou, was neighbour to him that fell among the theeues? 2.8.57
- 11.2 And he said vnto them when ye pray, say, Our father which art in Heauen. 3.
10.6. & 3.20.34
- 3 Our daily bread giue vs for the day. 2.5.
14
- 21 When a strong man sitteth, & keepeth his place, the things that he possesseth are in a peace. 3.14.13. & 1.14.8
- 22 But when a stronger than he commeth vpon him, and ouercommeth him, he taketh from him, all his armour wherewith he trusted, and deuideth his spoiles. 1.14.
18
- 39 And the Lord said vnto him, indeed ye Pharisees make cleane the outside of the cup, and of the platter, but the inward part is full of rauening and wickednes. 3.4 36.
- 12.5 Feare him which after he hath killed, hath power to cast into hell, &c. 1.15.2
- 10 And whosoever shall speake a worde against the soune of man, it shall bee forgiuen him: but vnto him that shall blaspheme the holy Ghost, it shall neuer bee forgiuen. 1.13.15. & 3.3.21, 22. & 3.5.7
- 14 Man, who made me a iudge, or a diuider ouer you? 4.11.9. & 4.11.11
- 14.21 Go out quickly into the places and streetes of the Citie, and bring in hither the poore and the maimed, and the halt, and the blind. 4.16
- 15.7 I say vnto you, that like wise ioy shall be in heauen for one sinner that conuerteth, more than for ninetie and nine iust men, which need no amendment of life. 1.
14.7
- 20 And when he was yet a great way off, his father saw him, and had compassion, and ran and fell on his necke and kissed him.
3.20.37
- 16.2 And he called him, and said vnto him, how is it that I heare this of thee? giue an account of thy stewardship, for thou maist be no longer steward. 3.10.5
- 9 And I say vnto you, make you friends with the riches of iniquitie, that when you shall want, they may receiue you into cuerlasting habitations. 3.18.6
- 15 Yee are they which iustifie your selues before men, but God knoweth your hearts,
&c. 3.11.3. & 3.1.2.2
- 16 The law and the prophets endured vntill Iohn, and since that time the kingdome of God is preached, and euery man pres-seth into it. 2.7.16
- 22 And it was so, that the begger died, and was carried by the Angels into Abrahams bosome, &c. 1.14.7. & 1.15.2. & 3.25.6
- 17.3 If thy brother trespass against thee, rebuke him: and if hee repent, forgive him.

- him. 3.7.6
- 4 And the Apostles said vnto the Lord, increase our faith. 4.14.7
- 7 Who is it also of you, that hauing a seruant plowing or feeding cattle, woulde saye vnto him by and by, when hee were come from the field, &c. 3.14.15
- 10 So likewise yee, when yee haue done all these things which are commanded you, say, we are vnprofitable seruants, we haue done that which was our dutie to do. 3.14.14. & 3.15.3
- 14 And when he sawe them, he saide vnto them, go shewe your selues to the Priests. And it came to passe, that as they went, they were clenfed. 3.4.4
- 29 And when hee was demanded of the Pharisees, when the kingdome of God should come, he answered them and said: the kingdome of God commeth not with obseruation. 2.15.4
- 18.1 And he spake also a parable vnto them to this ende, that they ought alwaies to pray, and not to waxe faint. 3.20.7
- 13 But the Publican standing a farre off, woulde not lift vp so much as his eyes to heauen, but smote his breast, saying: O God, be mercifull to me a sinner. 3.4.18. & 3.12.7
- 14 I tel you, this man departed to his house iustified, rather than the other: for euery man that exalteth himselfe, shall bee brought low, and he that humbleth himselfe shall be exalted. 3.4.35. & 3.11.3
- 42 And Iesus saide vnto him receive thy sight, thy faith hath saued thee. 4.19.12
- 10 17 And he said vnto him, well, good seruant because thou hast bin faithfull in a very little thing, take thou authoritie ouer ten cities. 2.3.11. & 3.15.4
- 26 Vnto all them that haue it shall be giuen, and from him that hath not euen that he hath shal be taken from him. 2.3.11. & 3.15.4
- 20.27. Then came to him certaine of the Sadduces, which deme that there is any resurrection, &c. 2.10.23. & 3.25.5
- 37 And that the dead shall rise againe, euen Moses shewed it besides the Bush, when he saide, the Lorde is the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. 2.10.9
- 38 For he is not the God of the dead, but of them which liue. 4.16.3
- 21.15 For I will giue you a mouth & wisdom, where against, all your aduerfaries shall not be able to speake or resist. 4.3.12
- 28 And when these things begin to come to passe, then looke vp, and lift vp your heades, for your redemption draweth nere. 3.9.5
- 22.17 And hee tooke the cup, and gaue thanks, and saide, take this, and part it among you. 4.17.20. & 4.17.43. & 4.18.8
- 19 And he tooke bread, and when he had giuen thanks, hee brake it, and gaue to them, saying, this is my body, which is giuen for you: doe this in the remembrance of me. 4.3.6. & 4.15.20 & 4.16.30 & 4.17.1, 20, 37
- 20 Likewise also after supper he tooke the cup, saying, this cup is the new Testament in my blood, which is shed for you. 2.11.4. & 2.17.4. & 4.17.6, 20
- 5 The kings of the Gentiles raigne ouer them, and they that beare rule ouer them: are called gracious lordes. 4.11.8, 9. and 4.20.7
- 26 But ye shall not be so: but let the greatest among you, bee as the least: and the chiefest, as he that serueth. 4.11.8
- 32 But I haue praied for thee, that thy faith faile not, &c. 3.24.6. & 4.7.27, 38
- 43 And there appeared an Angell vnto him from heauen, comforting him 1.14.6 & 2.16.12
- 44 And his sweate was like drops of blood, trickling downe to the groundes. 2.16.12. & 3.8.9
- 61 Then the Lord turned backe, and looked vpon Peter: and Peter remembered the worde of the Lord, how he had saide vnto him, Before the cocke crowe, thou shalt denie me thrise. 3.4.35
- 62 And Peter went forth, and wept bitterly. 3.3.4
- 23.42 And he saide vnto Iesus Lorde remember mee, when thou comest into thy kingdome. 3.14.1. & 4.16.31
- 43 Then Iesus said vnto him, verily I say vnto thee, to day shalt thou be with me in Paradise. 3.25.6
- 46 And Iesus cried with a lowd voice, and said, Father into thy handes I commende my

- my spirite, &c. 1.15.2. & 3.25.6
- 24.5 They said vnto them, why seeke yee him that liueth among the dead? 1.14.6
- 6 Hee is not heere, but is risen: remember how he spake vnto you when hee was yet in Galilee. 3.25.3
- 11 But their words seemed vnto them a fained thing, neither beleueed they them. 3.2.4
- 12 Then arose Peter, and ran vnto the sepulchre, and looked in, and saw the linnen clothes laid by themselues: and departed wondering in himself at that which was come to passe. 3.2.4
- 16 But their eyes were holden, that they could not know him. 4.17.29
- 26 Ought not Christ to haue suffered these things, and to enter into his glorie? 2.17.6 & 3.18.7. & 4.17.32
- 27 And hee began at Moses, and at all the Prophets, and interpreted vnto them in all the scriptures the things that were written of him. 1.9.3. & 3.2.34
- 31 But hee was taken out of their sight. 4.17.29
- 39 Behold mine hands and my feete: for it is my selfe: handle me and see: for a spirite hath not flesh and bones, as yee see me haue. 2.14.2. & 3.25.3. & 4.17.29
- 44 All must bee fulfilled which are written of me in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the Psalmes. 3.5.8
- 45 Then opened he their vnderstanding, that they might vnderstand the scriptures 3.2.34
- 46 Thus it is written, and thus it behooued Christ to suffer, and to rise againe from the dead the third day. 2.12.4. & 3.3.19
- 47 And that repentance, and remission of sins should bee preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Ierusalem. 2.12.4. & 3.3.1. & 3.3.19
- 49 But tarrie yee in the citie of Ierusalem, vntill yee be endued with power from on high. 4.3.12
- 51 And it came to passe, that as hee blessed them, hee departed from them, and was caried vp into heauen. 4.17.27
- word was God. 1.13.6. & 1.13.11. & 1.13.22
3. All things were made by it, &c. 1.13.7. & 1.13.17
- 4 In it was life, and the life was the light of of men. 1.13.13. & 1.15.4. & 2.2.19. & 2.6.1. & 4.17.8
- 5 And the light shineth in the darknes, and the darkenesse comprehended it not. 2.2.12
- 9 That was the true light which lighteneth euery man that cometh into the world. 2.12.4
- 10 He was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not. 2.12.4
- 12 But as many as receiue him, to them he gaue power to be the sonnes of God, euen to them that beleuee in his name. 2.6.1. & 3.1.4. & 3.20.36 & 3.22.10
- 13 Which are borne not of bloud, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the wil of man, but of God. 2.2.19. & 2.13.2 & 3.1.4
- 14 And the word was made flesh, and dwelt among vs, and we saw the glory thereof, as the glory of the onely begotten sonne of the father, full of grace and truth. 1.13.11. & 2.12.4. & 2.14.1. & 2.14.8
- 16 And of this fulnes haue all we receiued, and grace for grace. 2.13.1. & 2.15.5. & 3.11.9. & 3.20.1
- 17 For the lawe was giuen by Moses, but Grace and truth came by Iesus Christ. 2.7.16
- 18 No man hath seene God at any time: the onely begotten sonne, which is in the bosome of the father, hee hath declared him. 1.13.17. & 2.2.20. & 2.9.1. & 4.17.30
- 23 I am the voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, make straight the way of the Lorde, as saide the Prophet Esaias. 2.9.5
- 29 Beholde the Lambe of God which taketh awaie the sinnes of the world. 2.14.3. & 2.16.5. & 2.17.4. & 3.4.26. & 4.15.7
- 32 So John bare witnes saying, I saw the spirite come down from heauen like a doue, and it abode vpon him. 2.15.5. & 4.19.20
- 33 And I knewe him not: but hee that sent me to baptize with water, he saide vnto me

- me, vpon whome thou shalt see the spirite come downe and tarric still on him, that is hee which baptiseth with the holy Ghost. 2.15.5
- 36 Behold the Lambe of God. 2.9.5
- 40 Andrew, Simon Peters brother, was one of the two which had hearde it of John, and that followed him. 4.6.5
- 42 And he brought him to Iesus, &c. 4.6.5
- 51 Hereafter shall ye see heauen open, and the angels of God ascending and descending vpon the sonne of man. 1.14.12. and 2.9.2
- 2.2. And Iesus was called also, and his disciples vnto the marriage. 4.13.3
- 9 Now when the gouernour of the feast had tasted of the water that was made wine, &c. 4.17.3
- 15 Then he made a scourge of smal cords, and drane them all out of the temple, with the sheepe and oxen, and powred out the changers money, and ouerthrewe the tables. 4.19.23
- 19 Iesus answered and said vnto them, destroy this temple, and in three daies I will raise it vp againe. 2.14.4. & 3.25.7
- 21 But the spake of the Temple of his body. 2.14.4. & 3.25.7
- 23 Now when he was at Jerusalem, at the Pascheouer in the feast, many beleued in his name, when they sawe his miracles which he did. 4.2.5
- 24 But Iesus did not commit himselfe vnto them, because he knew them all. 3.2.12
- 3.3 Verily, verily, I say vnto thee, except a man be borne againe, he cannot see the kingdome of God. 2.3.1. & 4.16.17
- 5 Except that a man bee borne of water and of the spirite, he cannot enter into the kingdome of God. 4.16.2.5
- 6 That which is borne of the flesh is flesh: and that which is borne of the spirite, is spirite. 2.1.6. & 2.3.1
- 13 For no man ascendeth vp to heauen, but he that hath descended from heauen, euen the sonne of man which is in heauen. 2.14.2. & 4.17.50
- 14 And as Moses lifted vp the serpent in the wilderness, so must the sonne of man be lift vp. 2.14.4. and 4.18.20
- 16 For God so loued the world, that hee gaue his onely begotten sonne, that whosouer beleueth in him, should not perish, but haue life euerlasting. 2.12.4. and 2.16.4. and 2.17.1. and 3.14.17. & 3.24.5 & 3.24.7
- 23 And John also baptiseth in Enon besides Salem, &c. 4.15.6
- 27 Man can receiue nothing, except it be giuen him from heauen. 2.2.20
- 33 He that hath receiued his testimonie, hath sealed that God is true. 3.2.8
- 34 For hee whome God hath sent, speaketh the worde of God: for God giueth him not the spirite by measure. 2.15.1. and 2.15.5
- 36 Hee that beleueth in the Sonne, hath euerlasting life: and hee that obiecth not the sonne, shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him. 4.16.31
- 4.1 Now when the Lord knewe, that the Pharisees had hearde, that Iesus made and baptiseth moe disciples than John. 4.15.6
- 14 But whosoeuer drinketh of the water that I shall giue him, shall neuer be moie a thirst: but the water that I shall giue him, shall be in him a well of water, springing out into euerlasting life. 3.1.3
- 22 Yee worship that which ye knowe not: wee worship that which wee knowe: for saluation is of the Iewes. 1.5.12. & 1.6.4. & 2.6.1
- 23 But the howre cometh, and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the father in spirite and truth, &c. 3.20.30 & 4.10.14
- 24 God is a spirit, &c. 1.13.24
- 25 I knowe well that Messias shall come which is called Christ: when he is come, he will tell vs all things. 2.15.1. & 4.8.7
- 25 Behold, I say vnto you, lift vp your eyes, and looke on the regions, for they are white already vnto haruist. 4.16.31
- 42 And they saide vnto the woman, now we beleue not because of thy saying: for we haue heard him our selues, and know that this is in deede the Christ, the saviour of the world. 3.2.5
- 53 Then the father knewe that it was the same howre in the which Iesus had saide vnto him, thy sonne liueth, And hee beleued and all his houshold. 3.2.5
- 5.8 Iesus said vnto him, misetake vp thy led, and

- and walke. 4.19.29
- 17 My father worketh hitherto, & I worke. 1.13.7.& 1.13.12.& 1.16.4.& 2.14.2
- 38 Therefore the Iewes sought the more to kill him: not only because he had broken the Sabbath: but saide also that God was his father, and made himselfe equall with God. 1.13.12
- 21 For like as the father raiseth vp the dead, and quickeneth them, so the sonne quickeneth whom he will. 2.14.3
- 22 For the father iudgeth no man, but hath committed all iudgement vnto the sonne. 2.14.3.& 2.16.18
- 23 Because that all men shoulde honour the sonne, as they honour the father: he that honoureth not the sonne, the same honoureth not the father, which hath sent him. 2.6.2.& 2.14.3
- 34 He that heareth my worde, and beleueth in him that sent mee, hath euerlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but hath passed from death to life. 2.9.3.& 3.15.6.& 3.24.5.& 3.25.1.& 4.16.26
- 25 The houre shall come, and now is, when the dead shall heare the voice of the sonne of God, and they that heare it, shall liue. 2.5.19.& 2.12.4.& 3.14.5
- 26 For as the father hath life in himselfe, so likewise hath he giuen to the sonne, to haue life in himselfe. 4.17.9
- 28 Maruell not at this for the houre shall come in the which all that are in the graues, shall heare his voice. 3.25.4. and 3.25.7
- 29 And they shall come forth, that haue done good vnto the resurrection of life: but they that haue done euill, vnto the resurrection of condemnation. 3.17.1
- 32 There is another that beareth witness of me, &c. 1.13.17
- 35 Hee was a burning, and a shining candle: and yee would for a season haue reioyced in his light. 2.9.5
- 36 For the worke which the father hath giuen me to finish, the same works that I doe, beare witness of me, that the father sent me. 1.13.13
- 44 How can you beleue, which receiue honor one of another, and seeke not the honor that commeth of God alone? 3.11.9
- 46 For had yee beleued Moses, ye would haue beleued me: for he wrote of mee. 2.9.1
- 6.27 Labour not for the meate which perissheth, but for the meate that endureth vnto euerlasting life, which the sonne of man shall giue vnto you, &c. 3.18.1. & 4.14.25
- 29 This is the worke of God, that yee beleue in him whom he hath sent. 3.19.10
- 35 I am the bread of life: hee that commeth to me shall not hunger, and he that beleueth in me shall neuer thirst. 3.24.5 and 4.17.4
- 37 All that the father giueth mee, shall come to me, and him that commeth to me, I cast not away. 3.22.7.& 3.24.6
- 38 For I came downe from heauen, not to doe mine owne will, but his will which sent me. 2.14.2
- 39 And this is the fathers will, which hath sent mee, that of all which he hath giuen mee, I shoulde loose nothing, but shoulde raise it vp againe at the last day. 3.22.7. and 3.22.10. & 3.24.6. and 3.24.7. and 3.25.8
- 40 And this is the will of him that sent me, that euerie man which seeth the sonne, and beleueth in him shoulde haue euerlasting life, &c. 3.22.10. & 3.24.6
- 44 No man can come vnto me, except the father which sent me drawe him, and I will raise him vp at the last day. 2.2.20. & 2.5.5. & 3.2.34. & 3.22.7. & 3.24.1
- 45 It is written in the prophets, and they shall bee all taught of God. Euerie man therefore that hath heard, and hath learned of the father commeth vnto mee. 1.3.10. & 2.2.20. & 2.3.7. & 2.5.5. & 3.2.34. & 3.24.1. & 3.24.14
- 46 Not that any man hath seene the father, saue hee which is of God, hee hath seene the father. 3.2.34. & 3.22.10. & 3.24.1
- 47 He that beleueth in me, hath euerlasting life. 1.13.13
- 48 I am the bread of life. 3.11.9. & 4.17.4. and 4.15.8
- 49 Your fathers did eate Manna in the wildernes, and are dead. 2.10.6
- 50 This is the bread which commeth downe from heauen, that he which eateth of it, should not die. 2.10.6. & 4.17.34

The Table.

- 51 I am the liuing bread, which came downe from heauen: if any man eate of this bread: he shall liue for euer: and the bread that I will giue is my flesh, which I will giue for the life of the world. 3. 11. 8.
& 4. 17. 5. & 4. 17. 14
- 53 Then Iesus said vnto them, verily, verily I say vnto you, except yee eate the flesh of the sonne of man, and drinke his blood, yee haue no life in you. 3. 11. 9. & 4. 17. 6
- 54 Whosocuer eateth my flesh & drinketh my blood, hath eternall life, & I will raise him vp at the last day. 3. 11. 9. & 4. 17. 34
- 55 For my flesh is meate indeede, and my blood is drinke indeede. 2. 17. 5. & 4. 17. 8
- 56 Hee that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him. 4. 17. 33
- 57 As the liuing father hath sent me, so Iue I by the father, and hee that eateth mee, euen he shall liue by me 2. 17. 5
- 65 Therefore said I vnto you, that no man can come vnto me except it be giuen vnto him of my father. 3. 23. 13
- 70 Haue not I chosen you twelue, and one of you is a diuell? 3. 22. 7. & 3. 24. 9
7. 16 My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me. 2. 8. 26. & 4. 8. 4
- 37 Now in the last & great day of the feast, Iesus stood and cried saying: if any man thirst, let him come vnto me and drinke. 2. 16. 14. & 3. 1. 2 & 3. 1. 3. & 4. 19. 6
- 39 For the holy Ghost was not yet giuen, because that Iesus was not yet glorified. 4. 17. 2
8. 12 Then spake Iesus againe vnto them, saying, I am the light of the world: hee that followeth me, shall not walke in darkness but shall haue the light of life. 2. 14. 3.
& 3. 2. 1. & 3. 11. 12. & 4. 19. 23
- 16 For I am not alone, but I and the father, &c. 1. 13. 17
- 29 But he that sent me, is true: & the things that I haue heard of him, those speake I to the world. 2. 8. 26
- 30 As he spake these things, many beleued in him. 3. 2. 5
31. Then said Iesus to the Iewes which beleued in him: if yee continue in my word, yee are verily my disciples. 3. 2. 12
34. Verily, verily, I say vnto you, that whosocuer committeth sinne, is the seruant of sinne. 2. 2. 27
- 44 Yee are of your father the diuell, &c. 1. 14. 15. he hath bin a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him: when hee speaketh a lie, then speaketh hee of his owne: for hee is a liar, and the Father thereof. 1. 14. 16. & 1. 14. 18. & 1. 14. 19
- 47 He that is of God, heareth Gods words, yee therefore heare them not because yee are not of God. 4. 2. 4
- 50 And I seeke not mine owne praise, but there is one that seeketh it, and iudgeth. 2. 14. 2
- 56 Your father Abraham reioyced to see my day: and he saw it, and was glad. 2. 9. 1. & 2. 10. 4
- 58 Iesus said vnto them, verily, verily I say vnto you, before Abraham was, I am. 2. 14. 2 9. 3 Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents: but that the workes of GOD should be shewed on him. 1. 17. 1
- 5 As long as I am in the world, I am the light of the world. 2. 14. 3
- 6 As soone as he had thus spoken he spat on the ground, and made clay of the spittle, and annointed the eyes of the blind with the clay. 4. 19. 18
- 7 And saide vnto him, go wash thee in the poole of Sileam (which is by interpretation, sent) hee went his way therefore, and washed, and came againe seeing. 4. 19. 19
- 23 And said vnto him: giue glory vnto god, &c. 2. 8. 24
- 31 Nowe wee know that God heareth not sinners: but if any man be a worshipper of God, and doth his will him heareth hee. 3. 20. 7. & 3. 20. 10
10. 3 To him the porter openeth, and the sheepe heare his voice, and he calleth his owne sheepe by name, and leadeth them out. 3. 24. 6
- 4 And when hee hath sent forth his owne sheepe, hee goeth before them, and the sheepe followe him: for they knowe his voice. 3. 22. 10. and 4. 2. 4
- 5 And they will not follow a stranger, but they flee from him: for they knowe not the voice of strangers. 3. 22. 10
- 7 Then said Iesus vnto them againe, verily, verily,

The Table.

- verily I say vnto you, I am the doore of the sheepe. 4.19.13 9 I am the dore: by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in, and goe out, and finde pasture. 2.14.3 11 I am the good shepherd, the good shepherd giueth his life for his sheepe. 2.14.3.
 & 4.19.14
 14 I am the good shepherd, and know mine
 &c. 4.2.4
 15 As the father knoweth mee, so know I the father, and I lay down my life for my sheepe. 2.16.5
 16 Other sheepe I haue also, which are not of this folde: them also must I bring, &c.
 3.24.6
 17 Therefore doth my father loue me, because I lay downe my life, that I might take it againe. 2.12.4 18 No man taketh it from me, but I laie it downe of my selfe: I haue power to laie it downe, and I haue power to take it againe: this commandement haue I re-ceiued of my father. 2.12.4. & 2.16.5 26 But yee beleuee not: for yee are not of my sheepe, &c. 3.22.10 27 My sheepe heare my voice, and I knowe them, &c. 3.24.6
 28 And I giue vnto them eternall life and they shall neuer perishe, neither shall anie plucke them out of my hande. 3.15.5. &
 3.21.1. & 3.22.7. & 3.24.6
 29 My Father which gaue them me is greater than all, and none is able to take them out of my fathers hand. 3.22.10
 30 I and my father are one. 2.8.26
 34 Is it not written in your law, I saide, yee are Gods? 4.26.31 35 If he called them Gods, vnto whom the worde of God was giuen, and the Scripture cannot be broken. 4.20.4 37 If I doe not the workes of my father beleuee me not. 1.13.13 11.25 I am the resurrection and the life: he that beleueth in mee, though hee were dead, yett shall he liue. 1.13.13. & 2.12.4.
 & 3.25.9 & 4.16.17
 41 Father, I thanke thee, because thou hast heard me. 1.13.13
 43 As he had spoken these things, he cried with a loud voice: Lazarus come forth.
 4.19.29
 44 Then he that was dead, came forth bound hand and foote with bandes, and his face was bound with a napkin. Iesus said vnto them loose him, and let him go.
 4.19
 47 Then gathered the high priests, and the pharisees a councill, and said: what shall we do? &c. 4.9.7 12.27. Father, saue me from this houre: but therefore came I vnto this houre. 2.12.4.
 & 2.16.12
 28 Father glorifie thy name, &c. 2.12.4 31 Nowe is the iudgement of this worlde:
 now shall the prince of this worlde be cast out. 1.14.13
 32 And I, if I were lift vp from the earth, wil draw all mine vnto me. 3.25.6 39 Therefore could they not beleene because that Esaias saith againe. 3.24.13 41 These things said Esaias, when hee saue his glory and spake of him. 1.13.11. & 1.
 13.23
 43 For they loued the praise of men, more than the praise of God. 3.11.9
 49 For I haue not spoken of my selfe, &c. 4.
 8.13
 13.4 He riseth from supper, and laicth aside his vpper garment, and tooke a towel, and girde himselfe. 4.19.23
 15 For I haue giuen you an example that ye should do, euen as I haue done to you. 3.
 16.2
 18 I speake not of you all: I knowe whom I haue chosn, &c. 3.22.7. & 3.24.9 34 A new commandement giue I vnto you, that ye loue one another as I haue loued you, that euen so yee loue one another.
 3.16.2
 14.1 Yee beleuee in God, beleuee also in
 me. 1.13.13. & 2.6.4 5 Thomas saide vnto him: Lorde we knowe not whither thou goest: howe can wee then knowe the way? 4.17.23
 6 I am the way, and the truth, and the life,
 &c. 1.13.17. & 2.6.1. & 3.20.21. & 4.16.17
 8 And Philip said vnto him: Lorde, shew vs the father, and it sufficeth vs. 4.17.13 10 Beleueest thou not, that I am in the Father, and the Father in me? the wordes which I spake vnto you, I spake not of my selfe: but the father that dwelleth in mee, he doth the works. 2.14.2. & 4.8.13 11 Beleuee

The Table.

- 11 Beleeue me, that I am in the father and the father in me: at the least beleeue me, for the very works sake. 2.13.13
13 And what fouer yee aske in my name, that will I doe, that the father may be glorified in the sonne. 3.20.17
16 And I will pray the father, and he shall giue you another comforter, &c. 1.13.17 & 4.8.11
17 Euen the spirite of truth, whome the worlde cannot receiue, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but yee know him, for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you. 3.1.4. & 3.2.39
26 But the comforter, which is the holy Ghost whom the father will sende in my name, hee shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, which I haue tolde you. 2.2.1. & 3.1.4 & 4.8.8. & 4.8.13
28 For my father is greater than I. 1.13.26
30 Hereafter will I not speake many things vnto you: for the prince of this worlde cometh, and he hath nought in me. 1.14.18
15.1 I am the true vine, and my father is an husbandman: euerie branch that beareth not fruite in me, he taketh away: and euerie one that beareth fruite, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more. 2.3.9. & 2.14.3. & 4.19.34
3 Now are yee cleane through the worde, which I haue spoken vnto you. 3.6.3
5 I am the vine, yee are the branches: he that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruite: for without me, &c. 2.2.8. & 2.3.9. & 2.5.4. & 4.19.34
10 If yee shall keepe my commandements yee shall abide in my loue, euen as I haue kept my fathers commandementes and abide in his loue. 3.16.2
16 But I haue chosen you, and ordeined you, that yee go and bring forth fruite, and that your fruite remaine, &c. 3.22.3. & 3.22.8. & 4.1.6
19 If ye were of the world, the world would loue his owne: but because yee are not of the world: but I haue chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you 3.22.7
26 Euen the spirite of truth, which proceedeth of the father, &c. 1.13.17
16.2 They shall excommunicate you, &c. 4.2.6
7 It is expedient for you, that I go away, &c. 1.13.26. and 2.16.14. and 3.25.3. and 4.17.26
11 Of iudgement, because the prince of the world is iudged. 1.14.13
12 I haue yet many things to say vnto you, but yee can not beare them away. 3.21.2. & 4.8.14
13 When he is come which is the spirite of truth, he will leade you into all truth: for he shall not speake of himselfe, but whatsoever he shall heare, that shall he speake, &c. 1.9.1. and 3.2.34. and 4.8.8. and 4.8.13
20 Verily, verily, I say vnto you, that ye shall weepe and lament, and the worlde shall reioice: and yee shall sorrowe, but your sorrowe shall be turned to ioy. 3.8.9
24 Hitherto haue yee asked nothing in my name: aske and yee shall receiue, that your ioy may be full. 3.20.17
26 In that day shall yee aske in my name, &c. 3.20.18
28 I am come out from my father, & came into the world: againe, I leaue the world, and go to my father. 4.17.26
17.3 And this is life eternal, that they know thee to be the onely very God, and whom thou hast sent Iesus Christ. 1.13.26. & 2.6.1. & 3.2.3
5 And nowe glorie mee, thou father with thine owne selfe, with the glorie which I had with thee, before the world was. 1.13.8. & 1.13.22. & 2.14.2
6 I haue declared thy name vnto the men which thou gauest me out of the worlde: then they were, and thou gauest them me 3.24.1. & 3.24.6
9 I pray for them: I pray not for the world but for them which thou hast giuen me, for they are thine 3.22.7
12 While I was with them in the worlde, I kept them in thy name: those that thou gauest mee, I kept, and none of them is lost, but the childe of perdition, that the scripture might be fulfilled. 3.22.7. & 3.24.6, 7, 9
15 I pray not that thou shouldst take them out of the worlde: but that thou keepe them from cull. 2.5.11
19 And

- 19 And for their sakes sanctifie I my selfe, that they also may be sanctified through thy truth. 2.13.14.& 2.15.6.& 2.17.6.and 3.11.12
- 21 That they all may be one, as thou father art in me, & I in thee, euen that they may be also one in vs: that the world may beleeue, that thou hast sent me. 3.2.24
- 18.4 Then Iesus knowing all things that shoulde come vnto him : went forth, and saide vnto them : whome seeke yee? 2.16.5
- 36 Iesus answered : my kingdome is not of this worlde, if my kingdome were of this worlde, my seruants woulde surely fight, that I shoulde not bee deliuered to the Iewes : but nowe is my kingdome not from hence. 2.15.3
- 37 Euerie one that is of truth, heareth my voice. 4.2.4
- 38 Pilate saide vnto him, what is truth? and when hee had saide that, hee went out againe vnto the Iewes, and saide vnto them, I finde in him no cause at all. 2.16.5
- 19.30 Now when Iesus had receiued of the vineger, hee saide, it is finished, &c. 4.18.3,13
- 34 But one of the souldiers, with a speare, pearfed his side, and forthwith came there out bloud and water. 4.14.22
- 36 Not a bone of him shall bee broken. 1.16.9
- 20.8 Then went in also the other disciple, which came first to the sepulchre, and he saw it and beleued. 3.2.4
- 17 Touch me not, for I am not yet ascended to my father, &c. 2.12.2.& 4.17.29
- 19 The same day then at night, which was the first day of the weeke, and when the doores were shut where the disciples were assembled for feare of the Iewes, came Iesus and stood in the middes, &c. 4.17.29
- 22 And when he had saide that, he breathed on them, and saide vnto them : receiue the holy Ghost. 4.19.7,29
- 23 Whosoever finnes yee remit, they are remitted vnto them : and whosoever finnes yee retaine, they are retained. 3.4.10.& 4.1.22.& 4.2.10.& 4.6.3.& 4.6.4.& 4.8.4.& 4.11.1.& 4.12.4
- 28 Thou art my Lorde, and my God. 1.13.11
- 31 But these things are written, that yee might beleue, that Iesus is Christ the sonne of God, and that in beleueing, yee might haue life, &c. 3.2.6
- 21.15 Simon sonne of Joanna, louest thou me more than these? he saide vnto him, yea Lord, thou knowest that I loue thee : he said vnto him, feede my lambes. 4.6.3. & 4.11.1. & 4.19.28
- 8 When thou wast young, thou girdedst thy selfe, & walkedst whither thou wouldest, but when thou shalt bee olde, &c. 3.8.10

A C T E S.

- 1.3 TO whome also he presented himselfe aliuie after that he had suffered by many infallible tokens being seen of them by the space of fortie daies, and speaking of those things which appertained to the kingdome of God. 2.16.14.& 3.25.3.& 4.17.17
- 5 For Jolm in deede baptised with water, but yee shall bee baptised with the holy Ghost, within these few daies. 4.15.18
- 8 But ye shall receiue power of the holy Ghost, when he shall come on you : and yee shall be witnesses vnto me both in Ierusalem, and in all Iudea, and in Samarina, and vnto the vttermost part of the earth. 4.3.12.& 4.19.28
- 9 And when hee had spoken these things while they beheld, he was taken vp, for a cloude tooke him out of their sight. 2.16.14 & 3.25.11.& 4.17.17.& 4.17.27
- 10 Beholde two men stood by them in white apparell. 1.14.6
- 11 This Iesus which is taken vp from you into heauen, shall so come, as yee haue seene him goe into heauen. 1.14.6.& 2.16.17.& 4.17.24,27
- 15 And in those daies Peter stood vp in the middes of the disciples, and saide (now the number of names that were in one place, were about an hundred and twentic) 4.3.15
- 23 And they presented two, Ioseph called Barsabas, whose surname was Iustus, and Matthias. 4.3.13.& 4.3.14
- 26 Then they gaue forth their lots : and the

- the lor fell on Matthias, and he was by a common consent counted with the eleven Apostles. 4.3.15
- 23 And there appeared vnto them cloven tongues, like fire, and it fate vpon each of them. 4.15.8
- 4 And they were all filled with the holy Ghost, and beganne to speake with their toonges. 4.19.8
- 21 Whofouer shall call on the name of the Lord, shall be saued. 1.13.20
- 23 Him, I say, haue ye taken by the hands of the wicked, being deliuered by the determinate counsell and foreknowledge of God, and haue crucified and slaine. 1.18. 1.& 3 22.6
- 24 Whom God hath raised vp, and loosed the sorrowes of death, because it was vnpossible, that he should be holden of it. 2.26.11. & 2.16.12
- 33 Since then that he by the right hand of God hath bene exalted, and hath receiued of his Father the promise of the holy Ghost, he hath shed fourth this which ye now see and heare 2.16.15
- 37 Men and brethren, what shall we doe? 3.3.4. & 4.16.23
- 38 Amend your liues, and bee baptised euery one of you in the name of Iesus Christ, for the remission of sinnes: and ye shall receiue the gift of the holy Ghost. 4.15.7. & 4.16.23.
- 39 For the promise is made vnto you, and your children, and to all that are a far off, euen as many as the Lord our God shall call. 4.16.15
- 41 Then they that gladly receiued his word, were baptised: and the same day, there were added to the Church about three thousand soules. 4.15.7. & 4.17.6
- 42 And they continued in the Apostles doctrine, and fellowship, and breaking of bread, and prayers. 4.17.5. & 4.17.3.5. & 4.17.44
- 3.6 Then saide Peter: Siluer and Golde haue I none, but such as I haue, that giue I thee: in the name of Iesus Christ of Nazareth, rise vp and walke. 1.13.13. & 4.19.18
- 15 And ye killed the Lord of life, whom God hath raised from the dead, whereof we are witnesses. 2.17.1
- 18 But those things which God before had shewed by the mouth of all his Prophets, that Christ should suffer, &c. 1.18.1
- 19 Amend your liues therefore, & turne, that your sinnes may be put away, &c. 3.20
- 21 Whom the heauen must containe vntill the time that all things be restored, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Prophetes, since the world began. 2.16.15. & 4.17.29
- 25 Ye are the children of the Prophetes, and of the couenant, which God hath made vnto our Fathers, &c. 2.10.23. & 4.16.15
- 26 First, vnto you God hath raised vp his Sonne Iesus, & him he hath sent to blesse you, in turning euery one of you from your iniquitie. 3.3.20
- 4.12 Neither is there saluation in any other: for among men there is giuen none other name vnder heauen, whereby we must be saued. 2.16.1
- 28 To doe whatfoeuer thine hand and thy counsell had determined before to be done. 1.18.1. & 1.18.3
- 32 And the multitude of them that beleueued, were of one hart and of one soule: &c. 4.1.3
- 5.4 Thou hast not lied vnto men, but vnto God. 1.13.15
- 16 There came also a multitude out of the Cities round about vnto Ierusalem, bringing sicke folk, and them which were vexed with vncleane spirites, who were all healed. 4.19.18
- 29 We ought rather to obey God than men. 3.3.19
- 31 Him hath God lift vp with his right hand, to be a Prince and a Sauiour, to giue repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sinnes. 3.3.19
- 41 So they departed from the councill, reioycing that they were counted worthy to suffer rebuke for his name. 3.8.7
- 6.1 And in those daies, as the number of the Disciples grew, there arose a murmuring of the Grecians towardes the Hebrewes, because that their widowes were neglected in the daylie ministring. 3.2.6
- 2 Then the twelue called the multitude

- of the Disciples together, and said : It is not meete that we should leaue the word of God to serue the tables. 3.2.6. & 4.3. 15. & 4.11.9
- 3 Wherefore brethren, looke you out among you seuen men of honest report, &c. 4.3.9
- 6 And they praied, and laid their handes on them. 4.3.16
- 7 And the word of God increased and the number of the Disciples was multiplied in Ierusalem greatly, &c. 3.2.6
- 10 But they were not able to resist the wisdom, and the Spirit by the which he spake. 3.3.22
- 75 And he gaue him none inheritance in it, no, nor the breadth of a foote : &c. 2. 10.1.3
- 28 Wilt thou kill me, as thou diddest the Egyptian yesterday ? 4.20.10
- 41 Our fathers had the tabernacle of witness in the wilderness, as he had appointed, speaking vnto Moses, that he should make it according to the fashion that he had seene. 2.7.1
- 48 The most high dwelleth not in Temples made with hands, &c. 3.20.30. & 4.1.5
- 53 Which haue receiued the law by the ordinance of Angels, and haue not kept it. 1.14.9
- 55 But he being full of the holy Ghost, looked stedfastly into heauen, and saw the glory of God, and Iesus standing at the right hand of God. 3.25.3. & 4. 17. 17. & 4.17.29
- 55 And said: behold, I see the heauens open, and the Sonne of Man standing at the right hand of God. 2.16.15. & 4.17.29
- 59 And they stoned Steuens, who called on God, and said, Lord Iesus receiue, &c. 1. 13.1. & 1.15.2. & 3.25.6
- 8.13 Then Simon himselfe beleued also, and was baptised, and continued with Philip, and wondered when hee saw the signes, &c. 3.2.10
- 14 They sent vnto them Peter and Iohn. 4. 6.7. & 4.15.8
- 25 Which when they were come downe praied for them, that they might receiue the holy Ghost. 4.19.6
- 36 For as yet he was come down on none of them, but they were baptised onely in the name of the Lord Iesus. 4.15.6. & 4.19.31
- 17 Then laid they their handes on them, and they receiued the holy Ghost. 4.15.8. & 4.19.31
- 18 And when Simon saw, that through laying on of the Apostles handes, the holy Ghost was giuen, he offered them money. 3.2.10
- 22 Repent therefore of this thy wickednesse, and pray God, that if it be possible, the thought of thine hart may be forgiven thee. 4.1.26
- 27 And he arose, and went on, and beheld, a certaine Eunuch of Ethiopia, Candaces Queene of the Ethiopians chiefe Governour, who had the rule of all hir treasure, and came to Ierusalem to worship. 3. 2.32
- 31 And he said how can I, except I had a guide ? &c. 3.2.32
- 37 And Philip said vnto him, if thou belieuest with all thy hart, thou maist, &c. 4. 14.8. & 4.16.23
- 38 And they went downe both of them into the water, both Philip and the Eunuche, and he baptised him. 4.16.22. & 4.16.31
- 9.1 And Saul yet breathing out threatenings, and slaughter against the Disciples of the Lord, &c. 3.2.6
- 3 Now as he iourneyed, it came to passe, that as he was come nere to Damascus, suddenly there shined round about him a light from heauen. 4.17.17
- 4 And he fell to the earth, & heard a voice, saying vnto him: Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me ? 3.25.3. & 4.17.29
- 6 Arise and goe into the Citie, and it shall be told thee what thou shalt doe. 4.3.3
- 10 And there was a certaine Disciple at Damascus named Ananias, and to him said the Lord in a vision, Ananias, and he said, behold, I am here, Lord. 3.2.6
- 13 Lord, I haue heard by many of this man, how much euill he hath done to thy Saintes at Ierusalem. 1.13.13
- 14 Moreouer here he hath authoritie of the high Priester, to binde all that call vpon thy name. 1.13.13
- 15 He is a chosen vessel vnto me, &c. 4.3.5
- 17 Then Ananias went his way, and entered

- red into the house, and put his hands on him, and said, brother Saul, the Lord hath sent me (euen Iesus that appeared vnto thee in the way as thou camest) that thou mightest receiue thy sight, &c. 4. 19.10
- 19 So was Saul certaine daies with the Disciples which were at Damascus. 3.2.6
- 25 Then the Disciples tooke him by night, and put him through the wall, and let him downe in a basket. 3.2.6
- 36 There was also at Ioppa, a certaine woman, a Disciple named Tabitha, which by interpretation is called Dorcas: she was full of good workes and almes which she did. 3.2.6
- 38 Now forasmuch as Lidda was nere to Ioppa, and the Disciples had heard that Peter was there, they sent vnto him two men, &c. 3.2.6
- 40 But Peter put them all foorth, and kneeled downe and praied, &c. 4.19.2
- 10.2 A deuout man, and one that feared God with all his household which gaue much almes to the people, &c. 3.24.10
- 3 He saw in a vision euidently (about the ninth houre of the day) an Angell of God comming in to him, &c. 4.3.3
- 15 And it came to passe as Peter came in, that Cornelius mette him, and fell downe at his feete, and worshipped him. 1.10.3
- 31 And said, Cornelius thy praier is heard, and thine almes are had in remembrance in the sight of God. 3.2.32
- 34 Of a truth I perceiue, that God is no Acceptor of persons. 3.17.4. & 3.23.10
- 42 And he commanded vs to preach vnto the people, and to testifie, that it is he that is ordained of God a Iudge of quick and dead. 2.16.17
- 43 To him also giue all the Prophetes witnesse, that through his name all that beleue in him shall receiue remission of finnes. 3.4.25. & 3.5.2
- 44 While Peter yet spake these words, the holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word. 4.16.31
- 48 So he commanded them to be baptised in the name of the Lord, &c. 4.15.15
- 11.3 Thou wentest in to men vncircumcised, and hast eaten with them. 4.6.7
- 4 Then Peter began, and expounded the thing in order to them. 4.6.7
- 15 Then I remembered the worde of the Lord, how he said Iohn baptised with water, but you shall be baptised with the holy Ghost. 4.15.18
- 18 When they heard these things, they held their peace, and glorified God, saying: Then hath God also to the Gentiles, graunted repentance vnto life. 3.3.21
- 26 In somuch, that the Disciples were first called Christians in Antiochia. 3.2.6. & 4.16.31
- 29 Then the Disciples euery man according to his abilitie, purposed to send succour, &c. 3.2.6
- 12.15 Then said they, it is his Angel. 1.14.7
- 13.2 Separate me Barnabas, & Saul, for the worke wherunto I haue called the. 4.3.14
- 3 Then fasted they, and praied, and laid their hands on them, and let them goe. 4.3.15. & 4.12.14. & 4.12.16
- 36 Howbeit, Dauid after he had serued his time, by the counsell of God he slept, and was laid with his Father, and saw corruption. 3.20.23
- 38 Be it knowne vnto you therefore men and bretheren, that through this Man is preached vnto you the forgiuenesse of finnes. 3.11.3. & 3.11.22
- 39 And from all things, from which yee could not be iustified by the law of Moses, by him euery one that beleueth, is iustified. 2.17.5. & 3.11.3
- 43 Which spake to them, and exhorted them to continue in the grace of God. 2.5.8
- 48 And when the Gentiles heard it, they were glad, and glorified the word of the Lord: and as many as were ordained vnto eternall life beleueed. 3.2.11. & 3.14.2.13
- 52 And the Disciples were filled with ioy, and with the holy Ghost. 3.2.6
- 14.16 Who in times past suffered all the Gentiles to walke in their owne waies. 1.5.13. & 2.11.11
- 20 Howbeit, as the Disciples stood round about him, he arose vp, and came into the Cittie, &c. 3.2.6
- 25 We must through many afflictions enter into the kingdome of God. 3.8.1. & 3.18.7. & 3.2.8

The Table.

- 23 And when they had ordained them elders by election in euerie Church, & praised, and fasted: they commended them to the Lord, in whom they beleueed. 4.3.7.
12.15. & 4 12.16
- 15.7 And when there had bene great disputation, Peter rose vp, and said vnto them: Ye men and brethren, ye know that a good while agoe, among vs, God chose out me, &c. 4.6.7
- 9 And he put no difference betweene vs and them after that by faith hee had purged, &c. 3.14.8. & 4 14 4
- 10 Now therefore why tempt ye God, and lay a yoke on the disciples necks, &c. 3. 2.6
- 11 But we beleuee, through the grace of the Lord Iesus Christ, to be saved, euen as they do. 3.5.4
- 20 But that we write vnto them, that they abstaine themselues from filthinesse of idols, and fornication, & that that is strangled, &c. 4.10.17. 21
- 29 That is, that yee abstaine from things offered to idols, &c. 4.10.17
- 16.1 Then came he to Derben and to Lystra: and behold, a certaine disciple was there, named Timotheus, a womans sonne, which was a Iewesse & beleueed, &c. 3.2.6
- 3 Therefore Paul would that he should go forth with him, and hee tooke and circumcised him, bicause of the Iewes which were in those quarters, &c. 3.19.12
- 14 And a certaine woman named Lydia, a seller of purple, of the citie of the Thyatirians, which worshipped God, &c. 3.24.13
- 15 And when shee was baptised, and her household, &c. 4.16.8
- 33 And was baptised with all that belonged vnto him straight way. 4.16.8
- 37 Then saide Paul vnto them, after that they haue beaten vs openly vncondemned, which are Romanes, they haue cast vs into prison: and now would they put vs out priuily? nay verily: but let them come and bring vs out. 4.20.19
- 17.27 That they should seeke the Lord, if so be they might haue groped after him, & found him, though doubtlesse hee be not far from euery one of vs. 1.5. 3,8,13
- 28 For in him we lue, and mooue, and haue our being, as also certaine of your owne poets haue said, for wee are also his generation. 1.15.5. & 1.16.1,4
- 29 Forasmuch then as we are the generation of God, we ought not to thinke, that the Godhead is like vnto golde, or siluer, or stone, grauen by art and the inuention of man. 1.11.2
- 30 And the time of this ignorance God regarded not, but now hee admonisheth all men euery where to repent. 3.3.7
- 32 Now when they heard of the resurrection from the dead, some mocked, &c. 3. 25.7
- 18,18 After that he had shorne his head in Cenchrea: for he had a vow. 4.19.26
- 23 Strengthening all the disciples. 3.2.6
- 19.1 And found certaine disciples, and said vnto them, &c. 3.2.6
- 3 Vnto what were yee baptised? and they said vnto Iohns baptisme. 4.15.8,18
- 4 Iohn verily baptised with the baptisme of repentance, saying vnto the people, that they should beleuee in him which should come after him, &c. 4.15.7
- 5 So when they heard it, they were baptised in the name of the Lord Iesus. 4.15.6, 8,18
- 6 And Paul laid his hands vpon them, and the holy Ghost came vpon them, and they spake with toongs, and prophesied. 4.3.15
- 12 So that from his body were brought vnto the sicke kerchifes or handkerchifes, & the diseases departed from them, and the euill spirits went out of them. 4.19.18
- 13 Then certaine of the vacabond Iewes, exorcistes, tooke in hande to name ouer them which had euill spirits, the name of the Lord Iesus, saying: wee adure you by Iesus, whom Paul preacheth. 4.19.24
- 20.1 Now after the tumult was ceased, Paul called the disciples vnto him, and embraced them, &c. 3.2.6
- 10 But Paul went down, and laid himselfe vpon him, & embraced him, saying: trouble not your selues, for his life is in him. 4. 19.19
- 17 Wherefore from Miletum he sent to Ephesus, and called the elders of the Church 4.3.8
- 18 Ye know from the first day that I came to Asia, after what manner I haue bene with you at all seasons. 4.3.7

The Table.

- 10 And how I kept backe nothing that was profitable, but haue shewed you, and taught you openly, and throughout euery house. 4. 1. 2. 2. & 4. 3. 6. & 4. 12. 2
- 21 Witnessing both to the Iewes and to the Grecians, the Repentance towardes God, and Faith towardes our Lord Iesus Christ. 3. 2. 1. & 3. 3. 2, 5
- 26 Wherefore I take you to recorde this day, that I am pure from the blood of all men. 4. 4. 3. & 4. 12. 1
- 28 Take heede therefore vnto your selues, and to all the flocke, whereof the holy Ghost hath made you ouerseers, to feede the Church of God which he hath purchased with his owne blood. 2. 14. 2. & 3. 5. 2. & 3. 11. 8. & 3. 13. 11. & 4. 3. 8. & 4. 5. 8
- 29 For I know this, that after my departing, shall greuous wolues enter in among you not sparing the flocke. 4. 9. 4
- 30 Moreouer of your owne selues shall men arise speaking peruerse things to draw Disciples after them. 4. 9. 4
- 31 Therefore watch, and remember that by the space of three yeeres I ceased not to warne euery one night and day with teares. 4. 3. 6
- 36 And when he had thus spoken, he knecled downe, and praied with them all. 4. 19. 2
21. 4 And when we had found Disciples, we taried there seuen daies. 3. 2. 6
22. 1 Ye men, brethren, and Fathers, heare my defence now towardes you. 3. 20. 19
- 16 Arise and be baptised, and wash away thy finnes, in calling on the name of the Lord. 4. 15. 15
- 18 And I saw him saying vnto me: make hast and get thee quickly out of Ierusalem, for they will not receiue thy witness concerning me. 4. 17. 17, 29
- 25 And as they bound him with thonges, Paul said vnto the Centurion that stood by, is it lawfull for you to scourge one that is a Romane, and not condemned? 4. 20. 19
23. 1 And Paul beheld earnestly the counsell, and said: Men and brethren, I haue in all good conscience serued God vntill this day. 3. 17. 14
- 8 For the Sadduces said, that there is no Resurrection, neither Angell, nor Spirit, &c. 1. 14. 9. & 1. 15. 2. & 2. 10. 23. & 3. 25. 5
- 12 And when the day was come, certaine of the Iewes made an assembly, & bound themselues with an oth, saying, that they would neither eate nor drinke, till they had killed Paul. 4. 13. 3
24. 12 And they neither found me in the Temple disputing with any man neither making yniore among the people, neither in the synagogues, nor in the city. 4. 20. 19
- 15 And haue hope towardes God, that the Resurrection of the deade which they themselues looke for also, shall be both of iust and vniust. 3. 25. 9
- 16 And herein I endenour my selfe to haue alway a cleare conscience towardes God, and towardes men. 3. 19. 16. & 4. 10. 4
25. 10 Then saide Paul: I stand at Cesars iudgement seate, where I ought to bee iudged: To the Iewes I haue done no wrong, as thou very well knowest. 4. 20. 19
- 11 For if I haue done wrong, or committed any thing woorthy of death, I refuse not to die: but if there be none of these things whereof they accuse me, no man can deliuer me vnto them: I appeale vnto Cesar. 4. 20. 19
26. 17 Deliuering thee from the people, and from the Gentiles, vnto whom now I send thee. 3. 2. 1
- 18 To open their eies, that they may turne from darkensse to light, and from the power of Satⁿ vnto God that they may receiue forgiveness of finnes, and inheritance among them, which are sanctified by Faith in me. 3. 2. 1
- 20 But shewed first vnto them of Damascus, and at Ierusalem, and throughout all the coast of Iudea, and then to the Gentiles, that they should repent, and turne to God, and doe workes worthe amendment of life. 3. 3. 5
28. 15 And from thence when the brethren heard of vs they came to mee vs. 4. 6. 17
- 16 So when we came to Rome, the Centurion deliuered the prisoners to the Generall Captaine, &c. 4. 6. 15
- 25 Well spake the holy Ghost by Isaias the Prophet, vnto our Fathers. 1. 13. 15

The Table.

ROMANES.

- 1.1 Paul a seruant of Iesus Christ, called to be an Apostle, put apart to preach the Gospell of God 2.14.6. & 4.3.10
- 2 Which he had promised before by his Prophetes in the holy Scriptures. 2.10.3
- 3 Concerning his Sonne Iesus Christ our Lord which was made of the seede of Dauid, according to the flesh. 2.13.1.3. & 2.14.6
- 4 And declared mightily to be the sonne of God, touching the spirite of sanctification by the resurrection from the dead. 2.16.13. & 4.19.22
- 5 By whom we haue receiued grace and Apostleship, that obedience might be giuen vnto the Faith in his name among all the Gentiles. 3.2.6 & 3.2.8. & 3.2.29
- 7 Grace be with you, and peace from God our Father, & from the Lord Iesus Christ. 1.13.13
- 9 For God is my witnes, whom I serue in my Spirite in the Gospell of his Son, that without ceasing I make mention of you. 2.8.27
- 16 For I am not ashamed of the Gospell of Christ, for it is the power of God vnto saluation to euery one that beleeueth, to the Iewe first, and also to the Grecian. 2.9.4. & 2.10.3. & 3.2.29. & 4.1.5
- 17 For by it the righteouines of God is reuealed, from Faith to Faith: as it is written, the iust shall lue by Faith 3.2.29.3.2. & 3.11.19
- 19 Forasmuch as that, which may be known of God, is manifest in them: for God hath shewed it vnto them. 1.5.1.13
- 21 Because that when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were thankfull, but became vaine in their imaginations, &c. 1.5.12
- 22 When they professed themselues to be wise, they became fooles. 1.4.1
- 23 For as they regarded not to know God, euen so God deliuered them vp vnto a reprobate minde, to do those things which are not conuenient. 1.18.2
- 2.6 Who wil reward euery man according to his workes. 3.16.3. & 3.18.1
- 11 For there is no respect of persons with God. 3.23.10

- 12 For as many as haue sinned without the law, shall perish also without the law, & as many as haue sinned in the law, shall be iudged by the law. 2.2.22
- 13 For the hearers of the law are not righteous before God: but the doers of the law shall be iustified. 3.11.15. & 3.17.13
- 14 For when the Gentiles which haue not the law, doe by nature the things contained in the law, they hauing not the law, &c. 2.2.22
- 15 Which shew the effect of the law written in their harts, their consciences also bearing them witnes, and thoughtes accusing one another, &c. 3.19.15. & 4.10.3
- 25 If thou be a transgressor of the law, thy cir cumcision is made vncircumcision. 4.14.24
- 3.4 Yea, let God be true, and euery man a lier, &c. 4.15.17
- 9 What then? are we more excellent? no, in no wise, for we haue already proued, that all, both Iewes and Gentiles are vnder sinne. 3.4.6
- 10 As it is written: there is none righteous, no not one. 2.1.9 & 2.3.2. & 2.5.3
- 12 There is none that doth good, no not one. 2.3.3
- 15 Their feete are swift to shed blood, &c. 2.3.3
- 19 Now we know, that whatsoever the law saith, it saith it to thē that be vnder the law, that euery mouth may be stopped, & all the world be culpable before God. 2.7.8. & 2.10.3. & 3.4.6
- 20 Therefore by the works of the law shall no flesh be iustified in his sight: For by the law commeth the knowledge of sinne. 2.5.6. & 2.7.7. & 3.11.19
- 21 But now is the righteouines of God made manifest without the law, hauing witnes of the law, and of the Prophetes. 2.9.4. & 2.10.3. & 3.11.18.19
- 24 And are iustified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Iesus. 2.5.3. & 2.16.5. & 2.17.5. & 3.4.30 & 3.11.4.19. & 3.15.6. & 3.20.45
- 25 Whom God hath set forth to be a reconciliation through Faith in his blood, to declare his righteouines, by the forgiveness of the sins that are passed through the patience of God. 4.15.3

The Table.

- 26 To shew at this time his righteousness, that he might be iust, and a iustifier of him which is of the faith of Iesus. 3.11.12.& 3.13.1.& 3.13.2.& 3.14.17
- 27 Where is then thy reioicing? It is excluded. By what law? of workes? nay: but by the law of faith. 3.11.13.& 3.13.2
- 4.2 For if Abraham were iustified by workes, he hath wherein to reioice, but not with God. 3.11.13.& 3.11.18
- 3 Abraham beleued God, & it was counted to him for righteousness. 3.17.8,10
- 4 Now to him that worketh, the wages is not counted by fauour, but by debt. 3.11.20
- 5 But to him that worketh not, but beleueueth in him that iustificeth the vngodly, his faith is counted for righteousness. 3.11.3.6
- 6 Euen as Dauid declareth the blessednes of the man, vnto whom God imputeth righteousness without works, saying: 2.17.5 & 3.11.4,20,22
- 7 Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are couered. 3.11.11
- 10 How was it then imputed? when he was circumcised, or vncircumcised? &c. 4.16.3
- 11 After he receiued the signe of circumcision, as the seale of the righteousness of the faith which he had, when hee was vncircumcised, &c. 4.14.5, 21,23, and 4.16.20
- 12 And the father of circumcision, not vnto them onely which are of the circumcision, &c. 4.16.12
- 13 For the promise that hee should be the heire of the world, was not giuen to Abraham, or to his seede, through the lawe, but through the righteousness of faith. 3.14.11
- 14 For if they which are of the lawe, bee heires, faith is made voide, & the promise is made of none effect. 3.11.11. and 3.13.3
- 15 For the lawe causeth wrath: for where no law is, there is no transgression. 2.7.7. and 3.11.19
- 17 As it is written: I haue made thee a father of many nations, euen before God whom he beleued, who quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which bee not as though they were. 2.10.11. & 3.2.15. & 3.14.5
- 21 And being full certified that what he had promised he was able also to performe. 3.2.31
- 25 Who was deliuered to death for our sins, and is risen againe for our iustification. 2.16.5. & 2.16.13 & 2.17.5
- 5.1 Then being iustified by faith, we haue peace toward God through our Lord Iesus Christ. 3.2.16. & 3.13.5
- 3 Kowing that tribulation bringeth forth patience, &c. 3.8.3
- 5 And hope maketh not ashamed, because the loue of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the holy Ghost, which is giuen vnto vs. 3.1.2. & 3.2.12
- 8 But God setteth out his loue toward vs, seeing that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for vs. 2.12.4. & 2.16.4. & 3.4.25
- 9 Much more then, being now iustified by his blood, wee shall bee saued from wrath through him. 2.16.5
- 10 For if when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his son, much more being reconciled, we shall bee saued by his life. 2.16.2,4,5. & 2.17.3,6. & 3.11.21. & 3.14.6
- 12 As by one man sin entred into the world, and death by sin, & so death went ouer all men, forasmuch as all men haue sinned. 2.1.6,8. & 2.13.4
- 15 But yet the gift is not so, as is the offence: for if through the offence of one many be dead, much more the grace of God, & the gifte by grace, which by one man Iesus Christ, &c. 3.5.4
- 16 Neither is the gift so, as that which entred in by one that sinned: for the faulte came of one offence vnto condemnation, but the gift is of many offences to iustification. 2.17.3
- 19 For as by one mans disobedience many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one shall many also be made righteous. 2.1.4. & 2.16.5. & 2.17.3. & 3.11.4,9,12.3. & 4.14.21
- 20 Moreover, the law entred therupon, that that offence should abound: neuer theles, where sin abounded, there grace abounded much more. 2.5.6. & 2.7.7

The Table.

- 6.3 Knowye not, that all we which haue been baptised into Iesus Christ haue bin baptised into his death? 4.15.5
- 4 We are buried then with him in baptisme into his death, that like as Christ was raised vp from the dead by the glorie of the father, so wee also should walke in newenes of life. 2.8.31. & 2.16.7,13. & 3.3.5. & 4.16.16,21. & 4.19.3
- 6 Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sinne might be destroyed, that hence forth we should not serue sin. 3.3.9,11
- 12 Let not sinne therefore reigne in your mortall body, that ye should obey it in the lustes thereof. 3.3.13
- 14 For sinne shall not haue dominion ouer you: for ye are not vnder the law, but vnder grace. 3.19.6. & 4.15.12
- 18 Being then made free from sinne, yee are made the seruants of righteounes. 3.6.3. & 3.16.2
- 19 I speake after the maner of men, because of the infirmity of your flesh, for as yee haue given your members seruants to vncleanesse, and to iniquitie, to commit iniquity, &c. 2.24.18. & 3.25.8
- 23 For the wages of sinne is death: but the gift of God is eternall life through Iesus Christ our Lord. 2.8.58,59. & 3.4.28. and 3.14.21.
- 7.1 Know ye not brethren, for I speake to them that know the law, that the law hath dominion ouer a man as long as hee liueth? 4.15.12
- 7 What shall we say then? is the law sin? God forbid. Nay I know not sinne by the law: &c. 2.5.6. & 2.7.6
- 12 Wherefore the lawe is holy, and the commaundment is holy, and iust and good. 2.9.4
- 14 For we know that the lawe is spirituall, &c. 2.8.6
- 15 For I allow not that which I doe: for what I would that doe I not, but what I hate, that do I. 2.2.27
- 18 For I know, that in mee, that is, in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing: for to will is present with me, &c. 2.1.9
- 19 For I do not the good thing, which I would, but the euill, which I would not, that do I. 2.2.27. & 3.3.11
- 20 Now if I doe that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but the sinne that dwelleth in me. 2.2.27
23. But I see another law in my members, rebelling against the law of my mind, and leading me captiue into the law of sinne, which is in my members. 3.3.14
- 24 O wretched man that I am, who shall deliuer me from the body of this death? 3.9.4. & 3.11.11. & 4.15.12
- 8.1 Now then there is no condemnation to them that are in Christ Iesus, which walke not after the flesh, but after the spirite. 3.4.28 & 4.15.12
- 3 For that that was impossible to the law, in as much as it was weak because of the flesh, God sending his owne sonne, in the similitude of sinfull flesh, and for sin, condemned sinne in the flesh. 2.7.5. & 2.12.4. & 2.13.1,4, & 2.16.6. & 3.25.2. & 3.4.27. & 3.11.23
- 6 For the wisdom of the flesh is death: but the wisdom of the spirit is life and peace. 2.3.1
- 7 Because the wisdom of the flesh is enemie against God: for it is not subiect to the law of God, neither in deed can be. 2.1.9 & 3.3.8. & 3.20.24
- 9 Now ye are not in the flesh but in the spirit, because the spirit of God dwelleth in you: but if any man hath not the spirit of Christ, the same is not his. 3.1.2. & 3.2.39. & 4.17.12
- 10 And if Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sinne: but the spirit is liue for righteounes sake. 2.1.6. & 3.1.3. & 3.2.24. & 3.25.3 & 4.17.12
- 11 But if the spirit of him that raised vp Iesus from the dead, dwell in you, hee that raised vp Christ from the dead, shall also quicken your mortall bodies, because that his spirit dwelleth in you. 1.13.18. & 3.1.2. & 3.2.39 & 3.25.38. & 4.17.12
- 14 For as many as are lead by the spirit of God, they are the sons of God. 3.2.39
- 15 For ye haue not receiued the spirit of bondage, to feare againe: but ye haue receiued the spirit of adouption, &c. 2.11.9. & 2.14.5. & 3.1.3. & 3.2.11. & 3.13.5. & 3.20.1. & 3.24.1. & 4.19.22
- 16 The same spirit beareth witness with our spirit, that wee are the children of God.

The Table.

- God. 3.2.39
- 17 If we be children, we are also heires, euen the heires of God, & heires annexed with Christ, &c. 2.12.2
- 19 For the feruent desire of the creature, waileth when the sons of God shal be reueiled. 3.9.5 & 3.25.2
- 20 Because the creature is subiect to vanitie not of it owne will, &c. 2.1.5
- 22 For we know that euerie creature groweth with vs also, & trauelleth in paine together vnto this present. 2.1.5 & 3.25.2
- 23 And not onely the creature, but we also which haue the first frutes of the spirite, euen we do sigh in our selues, waiting for the adoption, euen the redemption of our body. 3.18.3 & 3.25.11
- 24 For we are faued by hope: but hope that is feene, is no hope, &c. 2.9.3
- 25 But if we hope for that we see not, we do with patience abide for it. 3.2.4.13.2. & 3.25.1
- 26 Likewise the spirit also helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what to pray as we ought, &c. 3.20.5
- 27 But he that searcheth the hearts knoweth what is the meaning of the spirite, for he maketh request for the funts, &c. 3.20.5.3.4
- 29 For those which he knew before, he also predestinate to bee made like to the image of his sonne, that he might be the first borne among many brethren. 2.13.2. and 3.1.1.3. and 3.8.1. & 3.15.8. & 3.18.7. and 3.24.1
- 30 Moreover, whom he did predestinate, them also he called: And whom he called, them also he iustified: And whom he iustified, &c. 2.5.2. and 3.14.2.1. & 3.18.4. and 3.24.6
- 32 Who spared not his owne son, but gaue him for vs all to death, how shall he not with him giue vs all things also? 2.14.7. & 2.17.6. & 3.24.5
- 33 Who shall lay any thing to the charge of Gods chosen? it is God that iustificeth, 3.11.2.6.11
- 34 Who shall condemne? it is Christ that is dead, yea or rather which is risen again, who is also at the right hand of God, &c. 2.16.13. & 2.16.16. & 2.16.18. & 3.20. 20
- 35 Who shall separate vs from the loue of Christ? shall tribulation, or anguish, or persecution, or famine, or nakednes, or perill, or sword? 3.13.5. & 3.2.28.
- 36 For thy sake are we killed all the day long, we are counted as sheepe for the slaughter. 3.9.6. & 3.25.3. & 3.14.19
- 38 For I am perswaded, that neither death, nor life, nor Angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to com. 3.2.16. & 3.2.40. & 3.15.8. & 3.24.6
- 39 Nor height, nor depth, nor anie other creature shall bee able to separate vs from the loue of God, which is in Christ Iesus our Lord. 3.2.16.28, 40
- 43 For I would wish my selfe to be separated from Christ, for my brethren that are my kinsmen according to the flesh. 3.20. 35
- 5 Of whom are the fathers, and of whom concerning the flesh, Christ came, who is God ouer all blessed for euer, Amen. 1.13. 11 & 2.13. 1.3. & 2.14.6
- 6 For all they are not Israelites, which are of Israell 3.22.4. & 4.2.3
- 7 Neither are they all children, because they are the seed of Abraham: but in Isaac shall thy seed be called. 3.21.7. & 4. 16.14
- 8 That is, they which are the children of the flesh, are not the children of God, but the children of the promise are accounted for the seed. 3.21.7
- 11 For ere the children were borne, and when they had don neither good nor euil, that the purpose of God might remaine according to the election, not by workes, but by him that calleth. 3.22.4
- 12 It was said vnto her, the elder shall serue the yoonger. 3.2.25
- 13 As it is written, I haue loved Iacob, and haue hated Esau. 3.21.7. & 3.22.11
- 14 What shall wee say then? is there vnrighteousnes with God? God forbid. 3. 22.8
- 15 I will haue mercie on him to whom I will shew mercie: and I will haue compassion on him to whom I will haue compassion. 3.22.6
- 16 So then it is not in him that willet, nor in him that runneth, but in God that sheweth

The Table.

- sheweth mercie. 2.5.4,17.& 3.2.4.1
- 17 For this same purpose haue I stirred thee vp, that I might shew my power in thee, &c. 3.24.14
- 18 Therefore he hath mercy on whom he will, and whom he will he hardeneth. 1. 18.2.& 3.12.11
- 20 But, O man, who art thou that pleadest against God? &c. 3.23.14, & 3.24.16
- 21 Hath not the potter power of the clay to make of the same lump, &c. 3.17.5
- 22 What and if God would, to shew his wrath, and to make his power knowen, suffer with long patience the vessels of wrath? &c. 1.14.18.& 3.23.1
- 24 Euen vs, whom he hath called, not of the Iewes onely, but also of the Gentiles. 3.24.16
- 32 For they haue stumbled at the stumbling stone. 1.13.23
- 33 Behold, I lay in Sion, a stumbling stone, and a rocke of offence. 1.10.11. And whosoever beleueth on him, shall not be confounded. 1.13.13
- 10.3 For they being ignorant of the righteousness of God, and going about to establish their owne righteousness, &c. 3. 11.13
- 4 For Christ is the ende of the lawe, for righteousness vnto euery one that beleueth. 1.6.2. & 2.6.4. & 2.7.2. & 3.2.6. & 4.8.13
- 5 That the man that doth these things shall liue thereby. 3.11.14,17.& 3.17.3
- 6 But the righteousness of Faith speaketh on this wise: Say not in thy hart, who shall ascend into heauen? &c. 1.17.2
- 7 Or, who shall descend into the deepe? that is, to bring Christ againe from the dead. 1.17.2
- 8 This is the worde of Faith which wee preach. 2.5.12. & 3.2.29,30. & 4.14.14
- 9 For if thou shalt confes with thy mouth the Lord Iesus, and shalt beleue in, &c. 3.11.14
- 10 For with the hart, man beleueth vnto righteousness, and with the mouth man confesseth to saluation. 3.2.2,8
- 11 Whosoever beleueth in him, shall not be ashamed. 1.13.13
- 14 But how shall they call on him, in whom they haue not beleued, &c. 3.20.1, 11
- 17 Then Faith is by hearing, and hearing, &c. 3.20.27. & 4.1.5. & 4.6.3.1. & 4.8. 9. & 4.16.19
- 11.2 God hath not cast away his people which he knew before, &c. 3.22.6
- 4 But what faith the answer of God to him? I haue rescued vnto my selfe seuen thousand men, which haue not bowed the knee to Baal. 4.1.2
- 5 Euen so then at this present time, is there a remnant, through the election of grace. 3.21.1
- 6 And if it be of grace, it is no more of works: or else were grace no more grace, &c. 3.14.5
- 16 For if the first fruites be holy, so is the whole lump, and if the roote be holy, so are the branches. 4.16.15
- 17 And though some of the branches be broken off, and thou being a wilde Olive tree, wast graft in for them, and made partaker of the roote, and fannelle of the Olive tree. 3.1.1
- 20 Well, through vnbeleefe they are broken off, and thou standest by Faith, be not high minded, but feare. 2.3.22.& 3.24.6
- 26 And so all Israel shall be saved, as it is written: The deliuerer shall come out of Sion, and shall turne away the vngodlines from Iacob. 3.3.21
- 29 For the giftes and calling of God are without repentance. 4.16.14
- 32 For God hath shut vp all in vnbeleefe, that he might haue mercie on all. 2.7.8. & 3.23.11. & 3.24.16
- 33 O the deepnes of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God: how vnsearchable are his iudgements, & his waies past finding out? 1.17.2. & 3.23.5
- 34 For who hath knowne the mind of the Lord? or who was his counsellor? &c. 3. 2.34.& 4.18.19.& 4.19.2
- 35 Or who hath giuen vnto him first and he shall be recompenced? 3.14.5. & 3. 22.3. & 3.23.11
- 36 For of him, and through him, and for him, are all things, &c. 2.8.13
- 12.1 I beseech you therefore brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye giue vp your bodies a liuing sacrifice, holy and acceptable vnto God which is your reasonable seruing of God. 3.7.1. & 3.16.3. & 4.18.16

The Table.

- 2 And fashion nor your felues like vnto this world, but be ye changed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prooue what is the will of God, good, and acceptable, and perfect. 2.1.9. & 4.16.4
- 3 As God hath dealt to euery man the measure of faith 4.13.3. & 4.16.4. & 4.17.3.2
- 4 For as wee haue many members in one body, & all members haue not one office. 3.16.2
- Whether we haue propheticie, let vs propheticie according to the proportion of our faith. 4.16.4 & 4.17.3.2
- 7 Or an office, let vs waite on the office, or he that teacheth, on teaching. 4.3.8
- 8 Or hee that exhorteth on exhortation: hee that distributeth, let him doe it with simplicitie: he that ruleth, with diligence: he that sheweth mercie, with cheerefulness. 4.3.8.9. and 4.11.1. and 4.20.4
- 10 Be affectioned to loue one another with brotherly loue: in giuing honor, goe one before another. 3.7.4
- 14 Bless them that persecute you: bless, I say, and curse not. 4.20.20
- 19 Deerly beloued, auenge not your felues, but giue place vnto wrath: for it is written: Vengeance is mine I will repay, saith the Lord. 4.20.19
- 21 Be not overcome of euil, but overcome euil with goodnes. 4.20.20
- 13.1 Let euery soule be subiect vnto the higher powers: for there is no power but of God: and the powers that be, are ordained of God. 3.19.15. & 4.10.3.5. & 4.20.4.7.23
- 4 For hee is the minister of God for thy wealth: but if thou do euill, feare: for he beareth not the sword for nought, for hee is the minister of God, to take vengeance on him that doth euil 4.20.10. & 4.20.17. & 4.20.19
- 5 Wherefore ye must bee subiect, not because of wrath onely, but also for conscience sake. 3.19.15. & 4.10.3. & 4.29.22
- 6 For, for this cause ye pay also tribute: for they are Gods ministers, applying themselves for the same thing. 4.20.13
- 8 Owe nothing to any man, but to loue one another: for he that loueth another, hath fulfilled the law. 2.8.53
- 3 For thus, thou shalt not commit adulterie, thou shalt not kill, thou shalt not steal, thou shalt not beare false witness, thou shalt not couet: and if there bee any other commandement, it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely: Thou shalt loue thy neighbour as thy selfe. 2.8.57
- 14 But put ye on the Lord Iesus Christ, and take no thought for the flesh, to fulfill the lustes of it. 3.1.1 & 3.10.3
- 14.1 Him that is weake in the faith, receiue vnto you, but not for controuersies of disputations. 3.19.11
- 5 This man esteemeth one day aboue another day, & an other man counteth euery day alike: let euery man be fully perswaded in his minde. 2.8.33
- 10 For we shal al appeare before the judgement seat of Christ. 1.13.11. & 3.5.8
- 11 For it is written I hue, saith the Lord: And euery knee shall bow to me, and all tooings shall confesse vnto God. 1.13.11, 23. & 3.25.7
- 13 Let vs not therefore iudge one another any more: but vse your iudgement rather in this, that no man put an occasion to fall, or a stumbling blocke his brother. 3.19.11
- 14 I know, and am perswaded through the Lord Iesus, that there is nothing vneclean of it selfe: but vnto him that iudgeth any thing to be vneclean, to him it is vneclean. 3.19.8
- 17 For the kingdome of God is not meate and drinke: but righteousnes and peace, and ioy in the holy Ghost. 2.15.4
- 22 Hast thou faith? haue it with thy selfe before God: blessed is hee that condemneth not himselfe in that thing which he alloweth. 3.19.8
- 23 For he that doubteth is condemned if he eate, because he eateth not of faith: & whatsoever is not of faith is sin. 3.5.10. & 3.15.6. & 4.13.17. & 4.15.2.2
- 15.1 We which are strong, ought to beare the infirmities of the weake and not to please our felues. 3.19.11
- 5 Now the God of patience and consolation, graunt that you be like minded one towards another, according to Christ Iesus. 4.2.5
- 6 That ye with one minde and with one mouth

The Table.

- mouth may praise God, euen the Father of our Lord Iesus Christ. 3.20.29.31
- 8 Now I say, that Iesus Christ was a Minister of the circumcision, for the truth of God, to confirme the promises made vnto the Fathers. 3.2.32. & 4.16.15
- 12 There shall be a roote of Iesse, and he that shall rise to reigne ouer the Gentiles, in him shall the Gentiles trust. 1.13.13
- 19 So that from Ierusalem, and rounde about vnto Illyricum, I haue caused to abound the Gospell of Christ. 4.3.4
- 20 Yea, so I enforced my selfe to preach the Gospell, not where Christ was named, &c. 4.3.4
- 25 But now goe I to Ierusalem, to minister vnto the Saintes. 4.6.14
- 30 Also brethren, I beseech you for our Lord Iesus Christes sake, and for the loue of the Spirit that yee would striue with me by prayers to God for me. 3.20.20
- 16.3 Greete Priscilla and Aquila my fellow helpers in Christ Iesus. 4.6.14
- 7 Salute Andronicus and Tenia my Cousins and fellow prisoners which are notable among the Apostles, and were in Christ before me. 4.3.5
- 20 The God of peace shall tread Satan vnder your feete shortly. 1.14.18. & 3.15.5
- 25 By the reuelation of the mystery, which was kept secret since the world began. 2.9.4
- 26 But now is opened, and published among all nations by the Scriptures of the Prophetes, &c. 2.9.4
- 12 Now this I say, that every one of you sayeth. I am Paul, &c. 4.13.14
- 13 Is Christ deuided? was Paul crucified for you? Either were ye baptised into the name of Paul? 3.5.2. & 4.15.13
- 20 Where is the wise? where is the scribe? where is the disputer of this world? &c. 2.2.20
- 21 For seeing the worlde by wisdomed knew not God in the wisdomed of God, it pleased God by the foolishnes of preaching to saue them that beleue. 2.6.1
- 23 But we preach Christ crucified: vnto the Iewes, euen a stumbling blocke and vnto the Grecians, foolishnes. 3.24.14
- 26 For brethren, you see your calling how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mightie, not many noble are called. 3.23.10
- 30 But ye are of him in Christ Iesus who of God is made vnto vs wisdomed and righteounes, and sanctification, &c. 2.15.2. & 2.16.19. & 3.3.19. & 3.4.30. & 3.11.6.12. & 3.14.27. & 3.15.5. & 3.16.1
- 2.2 For I esteemed not to know any thing among you, saue Iesus Christ, and him crucified. 1.13.13. & 2.12.4,5. & 2.15.2. & 3.2.1
- 4 Neither stood my word and my preaching in the enticing speech of mans wisdomed, but in plaine euident of the Spirit 1.8.1. & 4.1.6. & 4.14.11
- 5 That your Faith should not be in the wisdomed of men, but in the power of God. 3.2.35
- 8 Which none of the Princes of this world hath known, for had they known, &c. 1.5.12. & 2.14.2. & 4.17.30
- 10 But God hath reuealed them vnto vs by the Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea the deepe thinges of God. 1.13.14. & 3.2.34
- 11 For what man knoweth the thinges of a man, saue the spinte of a man which is in him, euen so the thinges of God knoweth no man, but the Spire of God. 3.2.34
- 12 Now we haue receined not the Spire of the world, but the Spire which is of God, that we might know the thinges that are giuen to vs of God. 3.2.39. & 4.8.11

I. CORINTHIANS.

- 1.1 Paul called to be an Apostle of Iesus Christ, through the will of God, and our brother Sofenes. 4.3.10
- 3 Grace be with you and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Iesus Christ. 1.13.13
- 9 God is faithfull by whom ye are called vnto the fellowship of his Sonne Iesus Christ, &c. 3.5.5
- 11 For it hath bene declared vnto me my brethren, of you by them that are of the house of Cloe, that there are contentions among you. 4.1.14

The Table.

- 13 Comparing things spirituall with spirituall things. 4.16.3.1
- 14 But the naturall man perceiueth not the things of the spirit of God: for they are foolishnesse vnto him: neither can he know them, because they are spirituallly discerned. 2.2.20.& 3.2.34
- 16 For who hath knowen the minde of the Lorde, that hee might instruct him? but we haue the minde of Christ. 1.13.14. & 3.13.4
- 3.2 I giue you milke to drinke, and not meate: for yee were not able to beare it: neither yet now are ye able. 3.19.13
- 3 For whereas there is among you enuying, and strife, and diuisions, are yee not carnall, and walke as men? 2.5.4. and 4.1.14
- 4 For when one saith, I am Paulus, another, I am Appollos, are yee not carnall? 4.4.2.& 4.13.14
- 6 I haue planted, Appollo watered, but God gaue the encrease. 4.14.11
- 7 So then neither is hee that planteth any thing, neither he that watereth but God that giueth the encrease. 2.5.4.3.2.3.14.& 4.1.6
- 8 And euery man shall receiue his wages according to his labour. 3.16.3 & 3.18.1
- 9 For we together are Gods labourers, ye are Gods husbandry, and Gods building. 2.5.17.& 4.1.6
- 11 For other foundation can no man lay, than that which is laide, which is Iesus Christ. 3.15.5.& 4.6.6
- 12 And if any man build on this foundation, golde, silver, or precious stones, timber, hay, or stubble. 3.5.9
- 13 Euey mans worke shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it because it shall be reuealed by the fire, &c. 3.5.9
- 14 If any mans work that he hath buile vpon, abide, he shall receiue wages. 3.5.9
- 15 If any mans worke burne, he shall lose, but he shall be safe himseife: neuertheless yet as it were by the fire, 3.5.9
- 16 Knowe yee not that ye are the temple of God, and that the spirit of God dwelleth in you? 1.3.15.& 3.6.3.& 3.16.2. and 3.25.7.& 4.3.1
- 19 For the wisdom of this world is foolishnesse with God: for it is written, Hee catcheth the wise in their owne craftinesse. 2.5.7.& 2.2.20
- 21 Therefore let no man reioice in men: for all things are yours. 4.19.1
- 4.1 Let a man so thinke of vs, as of the ministers of Christ, and disposers of the secrets of God. 4.3.6.& 4.8.1
- 4 For I knowe nothing by my selfe, yet am I not thereby iustificed: but he that iudgeth me, is the Lord. 3.12.2. & 3.17.14
- 5 Therefore iudge nothing before the time, vntil the Lord come, who will lighten things that are hid in darknesse, and make the counsels of the hart manifest, &c. 3.2.4
- 7 For who separateth thee? and what hast thou, that thou hast not receiued? if thou hast receiued it, why reioicest thou, as though thou hadst not receiued it? 2.5.2 & 3.7.4 & 3.24.12
- 1.5 For in Christ Iesus I haue begotten you through the Gospell. 4.1.6
- 5.1 It is heard certainly that there is fornication among you, and such fornication as is not once named among the Gentiles, &c. 4.1.14
- 2 And ye are puffed vp and haue not rather sorrowed, that hee which hath done this deepe, might bee put from among you. 4.1.15
- 4 When yee are gathered together, and my spirit, in the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ, that, such a one I say, by the power of our Lorde Iesus Christ. 4.1.1. 5.& 4.12.4
- 7 Be deliuered vnto Satan, for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saued in the day of the Lord Iesus. 4.12.5,6
- 6 Knowe ye not that a little leauen leauenneth the whole lump? 4.1.2.5
- 7 For Christ our pascheouer is sacrificed for vs. 4.12.13.& 4.18.3
- 11 If any that is called a brother, bee a fornicator, or couetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner, with such a one eate not. 4.1.15.& 4.1.2.5
- 12 For what haue I to doe, to iudge them also, which are without? doe ye not iudge them that are within? 4.1.1.5
- 4.6 Put a brother goeth to law with a brother, and that vnder the infidels. 4.20.21

TheTable.

- 7 Now therefore there is vtterly a fault among you, because ye go to lawe, one with another. 4.1.14
- 9 Know yee not that the vnrighthouse shall not inherite the kingdom of God? &c. 3.4. 21. & 3.24.10
- 10 Be not deceiued, neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor wantons, nor buggerers, nor theuous, nor couetous, nor drunkards, nor railers, nor extortioners shall inherite the kingdom of God. 3.4.21
- 11 But ye are iustified in the name of the Lord Iesus, and by the spirit of our God. 1. 13.14. & 3.1.1. & 3.6.3. & 3.14.6. & 3.24. 10
- 13 Meates are ordained for the belly, and the belly for the meates: but God shall destroy both it, and them, &c. 3.25.8. & 4.19.7
- 15 Know ye not, that your bodies are members of Christ? &c. 3.6.3. & 3.25.8. & 4.17.9
- 19 Know yee not, that your bodie is the temple of the holy Ghost which is in you, whom you haue of God? &c. 1.13.15. & 3.3.9. & 3.25.7. & 3.25.8. & 4.3.1
- 20 For yee are bought for a price: therefore glorifie God in your body, & in your spirit: for they are Gods. 2.17.5. & 3. 25.7
- 7.2 Neuerthelesse, to auoide fornication, let euerie man haue his wife, and let euerie woman haue her owne husband. 2.8. 143
- 3 Let the husbände giue vnto the wife due beneuolence, and likewise also the wife vnto the husband. 4.12.16
- 5 Defraud not one another, except it bee with consent for a time, that ye may giue your selues to fasting, and prayer: and againe come together that Satan tempt you not for your incontinencie. 4.12.16
- 7 I would that all men were euen as I my selfe am: but euerie man hath his proper gift of God, one after this maner, and an other after that. 2.8.42
- 9 But if they cannot abstaine, let them marie: for it is better to marie than to burne. 2.8.43. & 4.13.17
- 14 For the vnbeleeuing husband is sanctified by the wife, and the vnbeleeuing wife is sanctified by the husbände, else were your children vncleane: but nowe are they holy. 2.1.7. & 4.16.6. & 4.16.15. & 4. 16.31
- 19 Circumcision is nothing: and vncircumcision is nothing: but the keeping of the commandemans of God. 4.14.24
- 21 Art thou called being a seruant? care not for it: but if yet thou maist be free, vse it rather. 4.20.1
- 23 Ye are bought with price: bee not seruants of men. 4.20.32
- 31 And they that vse this world, as though they vsed it not: for the fashion of this world goeth away. 3.10.14. & 4.19.7
- 34 The vnmarried woman careth for the things of the Lord, that she may bee holy both in body and in spirit, &c. 3.10.1.4. & 4.19.7
- 35 And this I speake, for your owne commodities, not to tangle you in a snare. 4. 10.2
- 8.1 And as touching things sacrificed vnto idols, we know, that wee haue knowledge, &c. 4.10.22
- 4 For though there be that are called gods, whether in heauen, or in earth, &c. 1.13. 11
- 6 Yet vnto vs there is but one God, which is the father, of whom are all things, and we in him. and one Lorde Iesus Christ, &c. 1.13.11. & 2.3.6. & 2.14.3. and 2. 15.5
- 9 But take heede least by any meanes this power of yours be an occasion of falling to them that are weake. 3.19.11. and 4.10. 22
- 9.1 Am I not an Apostle? am I not free? haue I not seene Iesus Christ our Lord? are yee not my worke in the Lord? 3.14. 15. & 4.1.14. & 4.17.17. & 4.17.29
- 2 For ye are the feale of my Apostleship in the Lord. 4.1.6
- 5 Or haue wee not power to lead about a wife being a sister, as well as the rest of the Apostles, and as the brethren of the Lord, and Cephas? 4.12.25
- 12 Neuertheles, we haue not vsed this power but suffer all things, that wee should not hinder the gospel of Christ. 3.4.15
- 16 And woe is vnto me, If I preach not the gospel. 4.5.6
- 19 For though I bee free from all men, yet haue

The Table.

- haue I made my self seruant vnto all men, that I might win the more. 3.19.12
- 20 And vnto the Iewes I becom as a Iew, that I might win the Iewes,&c. 4.19.26
- 22 To the weake I become as weake, that I may win the weak: I am made all things to all men, that I might by al meanes saue some. 3.19.12
- 10.1 Moreover, brethren I would not that ye should be ignorant, that all our fathers were vnder the cloude, and all passed through the sea. 2.10.5
- 2 And were all baptised vnto Moses in the cloud, and in the sea. 4.15.9
- 3 And did all eate the same spirituall meat
4.14.23. & 4.18.20
- 4 And did all drinke the same spirituall drinke, for they dranke of the spirituall rocke that followed them: and the rocke was Christ. 1.13.10 & 2.9.1. & 4.14.26. & 17.15.21,22
- 5 But with many of them God was not pleas'd: for they were ouerthrowen in the wildernes. 4.14.24
- 11 And all these things came vnto them for ensamples, and were written to admonish vs, vpon whom the ends of the world are come. 2.10.5. & 3.2.22
- 12 Wherefore let him that thinketh hee standeth, take heed lest he fall. 3.2.40. & 3.24.6
- 13 There hath no tentation taken you but such as appeareth to man, &c. 3.20.40
- 16 The cup of blessing which we blesse, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? the bread which we breake, is it not the communion of the body of Christ?
4.17.10. & 4.17.15. & 4.17.22. & 4.17.38.
and 4.18.8
- 17 For we that are many, are one bread & one bodie, because we all are partakers of one bread. 4.17.14
- 23 All things are lawfull for mee, but all things are not expedient: all things are lawfull for me, but all things edifie not. 3.
19.12
- 25 Whatsoeuer is sold in the shambles, eate ye, and aske no question for conscience sake, 3.19.11
- 28 But if any man say vnto you, this is sacrificed vnto idols, eate it not because of him that shewed it, and for thy conscieence, &c. 3.19.6. & 4.10.4
- 29 And the conscience I say not thine but of that other, &c. 3.19.11. & 4.10.4
- 31 Whether therefore ye eate or drinke, or whatsoeuer ye do, do all to the glorie
of God. 3.20.44
- 32 Giue none offence, neither to the Iewes nor to the Grecians, nor to the Church
of God. 3.19.11
- 11.4 Euerie man praying or prophecyng hauing any thing on his head dishonoureth his head. 4.19.26
- 5 But euerie woman that praieth or proph-ecieth bareheaded, dishonoureth her head.
4.10.29
- 7 For a man ought not to couer his head:
forasmuch as he is the image and glorie of God: but the woman is the glorie of the man. 1.15.4
- 16 But if any man lust to be contentious, we haue no such custome, neither the Churches of God. 4.10.31
- 20 When ye come together therefore into one place, this is not to eate the Lordes supper. 4.18.12
- 22 Haue ye not houses to eate and drinke in? despise ye the Church of God? &c.
4.10.29
- 23 For I haue receiued of the Lord that which I also deliuered vnto you, &c. 4.17.
35,50
- 24 And when hee had giuen thanks hee
brake it, & said, take, eat, this is my body, which is broken for you: this doe you in remembrance of me. 4.17.1. and 4.
17.20
- 25 After the same maner also he tooke the cup, when he had supped, saying this is the new Testament in my blood, &c. 4.17.20
- 26 For as often as ye shall eat this bread & drinke this cup, ye shew the Lordes death vntill he come. 4.16.30. & 4.17.37
- 28 Let a man therefore examine himselfe, and so let him eat of this bread, and drinke of this cup. 4.1.15. & 4.16.30. & 4.17.40
- 29 For he that eateth & drinketh vnworthily, eateth and drinketh his owne damnation, because hee discerneth not the lordes body. 4.1.15. & 4.16.30. & 4.17.33,34 40.
- 31 For if we would iudge our selues wee should not be iudged. 3.3.18
- 32 But

The Table.

- 32 But when we are iudged, we are chastened of the Lorde, because we shoulde not be condemned with the worlde. 3.4. 33.& 3.8.6
- 12.3 Wherefore, I declare vnto you, that no man speaking by the spirite of God calleth Iesus execrable,&c. 2.2.20
- 6 And there are diuersities of operations, but God is the same, which worketh all in all. 2.3.6,9
- 8 For to one is giuen by the spirit, the word of wisdom, and to another the word of knowledge, by the same spirit. 4.3.11
- 10 And to another diuersities of toongs, and to another the interpretation of toongs. 1.13.14.& 3.2.9
- 11 And all these things worketh euen the selfe same spirite, distributing to euerie man feuerally as hee will. 1.13.14.and 4.13.3
- 12 For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of the body which is one, though they be many yet are but one body: euen so is Christ. 1.13.16.& 3.7.5.& 3.16.2.& 4.17.2 2
- 13 For by one spirite are wee all baptized into one body, whether we are Iewes or Grecians,&c. 4.24.7.and 4.15.15.and 4.16.22
- 25 Least there should bee any diuision in the body: but that the members shoulde haue the same care one for another. 3.28.20
- 28 And God hath ordained some in the Church, as first Apostles, secondly prophets, thirdly teachers, then them that do miracles: after that the giftes of healing, helpers,&c. 4.3.8.& 4.11.1.& 4.20.4
- 31 But desire you the best giftes, and I will yet shew you a more excellent way. 3.2.9
- 13.1. Though I speake with the toongs of men and Angels, and haue not loue, I am as sounding brasie, or a tinkling Cymball. 2.5.4
- 2 If I had al faith, so that I could remooue mountaines, and had not loue, I were nothing. 3.18.8
- 3 And though I feede the poore with all my goodes, and though I giue my body that I bee burned, and haue not loue, it profiteth me nothing. 4.13.13
- 4 Loue suffereth long: it is bountifull: loue enuieith not: loue doth not boast it selfe: it is not puffed vp. 3.7.5,6
- 9 For we knowe in part, and we prophesie in part. 3.2.20
- 10 But when that which is perfect, is come, then that which is in part, shall bee abolished. 3.2.13
- 12 For now we see through a glasse darkly: but then shall we see face to face, &c. 3.22.11.& 4.18.20
- 13 And now abideth faith, hope and loue, euen these three: but the chiefest of these is loue. 3.18.8
- 14.15 What is it then? I wil pray with the spirite, but I will pray with the vnderstanding also, &c. 3.20.5.& 3.20.32
- 16 Else, when thou blefsest with the spirit, how shall he that occupieth the roome of the vnlearned, say Amen at thy giuing of thanks, &c. 3.20.33
- 29 Let the Prophets speake two or three, and let the other iudge. 4.8.9.& 4.9.13

- 10 But I laboured more abundantly than they all, yet not I, but the grace of God which is in me. 2.3.11.& 4.1.6
- 12 Now if it be preached, that Christ is risen from the dead, how say some among you, that there is no resurrection of the dead? 3.25.7.& 4.1.14
- 13 For if there bee no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen. 3.25.3
- 14 And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching in vaine, and your faith is also in vaine. 3.25.3
- 16 For if the dead bee not raised, then is Christ not raised. 2.13.2
- 17 And if Christ be not raised, your faith is vaine, &c. 2.13.2.& 2.16.13

 20 But now is Christ risen from the dead, and was made the first frutes of them that slept. 2.16.13
 21 For sith by man came death, by man came also the Resurrection of the dead. 2.1.6
 22 For, as in Adam all men die, euen so in Christ shall all be made aliuē. 4.16.17
 25 For he must reigne till he hath put all his enemies vnder his feete. 2.16.16
 28 And when all things shall be subdued vnto him, then shall the Soune also himselfe be subiect vnto him, &c. 1.13.26.& 2.8.30. & 2.14.3. & 2.15.5. & 3.20.42. & 3.25.12
 36 Thou foole, that which thou lowest is not quickned, except it die. 3.25.4
 39 All flesh, is not the same flesh, but there is one flesh of men, &c. 3.25.8
 41 There is another glorie of the Sunne, an other glory of the Moone, an other glory of the Starres: for one Starre differeth from another star in glory. 4.19.34
 45 The first Man Adam was made a liuing Soule: and the last Adam was made a quickning Spirite. 1.15.4. & 3.1.2
 46 Howbeit that was not first made which is spirituall, but that which is naturall, and afterward that which is spirituall. 4.16.31
 47 The first man is of the earth, earthly: the second man is the Lord from heauen. 2.12.7. & 2.13.2. & 2.13.4. & 4.17.25
 50 Flesh and blood cannot inherite the kingdome of God, &c. 4.16.17
 51 Beholde I shew you a secrete thing, we shall not all sleepe, but we shall all be changed. 2.16.17. & 3.25.8
 52 In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trumpet: for the trumpet shall blow, and the dead shall be raised vp incorruptible, and we shall be chaunged. 2.16.17
 53 For this corruption must put on incorruption, &c. 3.25.7
 54 So when this corruptible hath put on incorruptible, and this mortall hath put on immortallitie, &c. 3.25.10

- 6 Who also hath made vs able Ministers of the new Testament, not of the letter, but of the Spirit: for the letter killeth, but the Spirit giueth life. 1.9.3. & 2.7.2. & 3.1.4. & 4.1.6. & 4.14.11
- 7 If then the ministration of death written with letters and engrauen in stones was glorious, so that the children of Israel could not behold the face, &c. 2.7.7
- 8 How shall not the ministration of the spirit be more glorious? 1.9.3
- 9 For if the ministerie of condemnation was glorious, much more doth the ministration of righteoussesse exceede in glorie. 4.3.3
- 14 Therefore their mindes are hardened: for vntill this day remaineth the same couering vntaken away in the reading of the olde Testament, which vaile in Christ is put away. 2.10.23
- 15 But euen vnto this day when Moses is read, the vaile is laid ouer their harts. 2. 10.23
- 17 Now the Lord is the Spirit, & where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is libertie. 2.2.8
- 18 But we all behold as in a mirror, the glorie of the Lord, with open face, and are changed into the same Image, &c. 1. 15.4. & 1.15.5. & 3.2.20. & 3.3.9
- 4.4 In whom the God of this world hath blinded the minds, that is, of the Infidels, that the light of the glorious Gospell of Christ, which is the image of God, &c. 1.14.13. & 1.14.18. & 1.18.2. & 2.4.1

- 3 But neither yet Titus which was with me, though he were a Grecian, was compelled to be circumcised. 3.19.12
- 6 God accepteth no mans person, &c. 3. 23.10
- 7 When they saw the Gospell of the vncircumcision was committed vnto me, as the Gospell of the circumcision was vnto Peter. 4.6.7
- 8 For he that was mightie by Peter in the Apottlehip ouer the circumcision, was also mightie by me towards the Gentiles. 4.1.6. & 4.6.7
- 9 And when Iames, and Cephas, and Iohn knew of the grace that was giuen vnto me, &c. 4.6.13
- 14 But when I saw, that they went not the right way to the truth of the Gospell, I said vnto Peter before all men, if thou, &c. 4.12.3
- 16 Know that a man is not iustified by the workes of the law, but by the Faith of Iesus Christ, &c. 3.17.2
- 19 For I through the Law am dead to the Law, and that I might liue vnto God, &c. 2.16.7
- 20 Thus I liue yet, not I now, but Christ liueth in me, &c. 4.19.35
- 3.1 O foolish Galathians, who hath bewitched you, that ye should not obey the truth, &c. 1.11.7. & 4.1.27. & 4.18.11
- 2 Receiued yee the Spirit by the workes of the law, or by the hearing of the Faith preached? 3.2.3.3. & 4.1.6
- 6 Yea rather as Abraham beleeued God, and it was imputed to him for righteousnesse. 3.17.8
- 8 For the Scriptures forseeing, that God would iustifie the Gentiles through faith, preached before the Gospell vnto Abraham, &c. 3.11.3
- 10 For as many as are of the workes of the Law, are vnder the curse: for it is written, cursed is euery man that continueth not in all thinges, &c. 2.7.5. & 2.7.17. & 2.16.2. & 3.11.19
- 12 And the Law is not of Faith: but the Man that shall doe those things shall liue in them, 3.11.18. & 3.11.19
- 13 Christ hath redeemed vs from the curse for vs, &c. 2.7.15. & 2.8.57. & 2.16.2. & 2.16.6. & 2.16.19. & 2.17.4. & 3.4.27. & 3.11.12. & 3.19.3. & 4.13.21
- 16 Now to Abraham and to his seed were the promises made, &c. 2.6.2. & 2.13.3. & 4.14.21
- 17 And this I say, that the Law which was foure hundredth and thirtie yeeres after, cannot disanull the covenant that was confirmed afore of God in respect of Christ, that it should make the promises of no effect. 3.11.20
- 18 For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more by the promise, but God gaue it vnto Abraham by promise. 3.11.17
- 19 Wherefore then serueth the Law? it was added because of the transgression, &c. 1.14.9. & 2.5.6. & 2.7.2
- 21 Is the Law than against the promises of God? God forbid, &c. 3.11.19. & 3.4.6
- 22 But the Scripture hath concluded all vnder sinne, that the promise by the Faith of Iesus Christ should be giuen to them that beleue. 3.4.6
- 24 Wherefore the Law was a Schoole master to bring vs to Christ, that we might be made righteous by Faith. 2.7.2. & 2.7.11. & 2.11.5
- 27 For all ye that are baptised into Christ, haue put on Christ. 2.1.3. & 3.1.3. & 4.14.7. & 4.15.6. & 4.16.21. & 4.19.8
- 28 There is neither Iewe nor Grecian: there is neither male nor female: for yee are all one in Christ Iesus. 2.11.11. & 4.20.7
- 4.1 Then this I say, that the heire as long as he is a child, differeth nothing from a seruant, though he be Lord of all. 2.11.2. & 2.11.5. & 2.11.13
- 2 But is vnder Tutors and Governours, vntill the time appointed of the Father. 4.10.14
- 3 Euen so we, when we were children, were in bondage vnder the rudiments of the world, 4.10.14
- 4 But when the fulnes of time was come, God sent forth his son, borne of a woman, &c. 2.16.5. & 2.7.15. & 2.11.11. & 2.12.7. & 2.13.1. & 2.13.3. & 2.17.5. & 4.20.15
- 5 That hee might redeeme them which were vnder the Law, that we might receiue

 6 And because yee are the Sonnes, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Sonne into your hearts, which crieth, Abba, that is, Father. 2.14.5. and 3.1.3. and 3.2.11 and 3.13.5. and 3.20.37 7 But euen then, when ye knew not God, ye did seruite vnto them which by nature are not Gods. 1.4.3. and 1.12.3 8 But now, seeing ye know God, yea are rather knowne of God, &c. 4.1.27. and 4.
 10.10. and 4.19.7
 10 Ye obserue daies, and monethes, and times, and yeeres. 2.8.33 11 I am in feare of you, lest I haue bestowed on you labor in vaine. 2.8.33 12 For it is written that Abraham had two Sonnes, one by a seruant, another by a free woman. 2.11.9. & 4.2.3 24 By the which thinges, another thing is meant: for these Mothers, are the two Testamentes, &c. 2.11.9
 25 For Agar or Sima is a Mountaine in Arabia, and it answereth to Ierusalem that now is, &c. 3.2.6
 26 But Ierusalem, which is aboue, is free:
 and is the Mother of vs all. 4.1.1 28 We are after the manner of Isaac, children of the promise. 4.16.12
 30 Put out the seruant and her sonne, &c.
 3.18.2
 5.1 Stand fast in the libertie therefore wherwith Christ hath made vs free, &c. 3.19.2
 & 3.19.14. & 4.10.8. & 4.10.9. and 4.20.1
 4 Who so euer are iustified by the Law, ye are fallen from grace. 3.19.14 5 For we through the spirite, waite for the hope of righteousnesse through faith. 3.
 2.43
 6 In Christ Iesus neither circumcision auaieth any thing, nor vncircumcision,
 &c. 3.11.20
 13 For brethren, ye haue beene called vnto libertie: onely vse not your libertie,
 &c. 3.19.11
 14 For all the law is fulfilled in one word, which is, Thou shalt loue thy neighbour as thy selfe, 2.8.53
 17 For the flesh lusteth against the spirite, and the spirite against the flesh, &c. 2.7.5
 and 2.2.27
 19 Moreover the workes of the flesh are

- manifest, which are adulterie, fornication, vncleanesse, wantonnesse. 2.1.8. &
 3.14.1. and 4.15.10
 6.10 While we haue therefore time, let vs do good vnto al men, &c. 3.7.6. & 3.20.38 14 But God forbid that I should reioyce, but in the crosse of our Lord Iesus Christ, whereby the world is crucified vnto me;
 and I vnto the world. 2.16.7 15 For in Christ Iesus, neither circumcision auaieth any thing, nor vncircumcision, &c. 4.14.24
 17 From henceforth let no man put me to businesse, for I beare in my body the markes, &c. 3.18.7. and 3.25.8

- 2.1 That were dead in trespasses, and sins, &c. 3.24.10
- 2 Wherein in time past yee walked, according to the course of this world, and after the Prince that ruleth in the ayre, &c. 1.14.13. & 1.14.18. & 2.4.1. & 3. 24.10
- 3 Among whom we also had our conuersation in time past, in the lustes of our flesh, in fulfilling the will of the flesh, and of the minde, &c. 2.1.6. & 2.1.11. & 4.16.17
- 4 But God which is rich in loue, through his great loue wherewith hee loued vs. 3.14.5
- 5 Euen when we were dead by sinnes he quickned vs, &c. 3.5.19
- 6 And hath raised vs vp together, and made vs to sit together in the heavenly places in Christ Iesus. 2.16.16. & 3.15.6. & 3.25.1
- 8 For by grace are ye sau'd through faith, and that not of your selues: it is the gift of God. 3.13.2. & 3.14.11
- 9 Not of woikes, least any man should boast himselfe. 3.13.2
- 10 For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Iesus vnto good works, &c. 2.3. 6 & 3.3.21. & 3.14.5. & 3.15.7. & 3.23.13
- 11 Wherefore remember that yee being in time past Gentiles in the flesh, and called vncircumcision, &c. 4.14. 12. & 4.16.15
- 12 That ye were, I say, at that time without Christ, and were alienates from the common wealth of Israel, &c. 1.4.3. & 1. 5. 12. & 2.6.1. & 3.24.10. & 4.14.12. & 4.16. 3. & 4.16.24
- 14 For he is our peace, which hath made of both one, &c. 2.7.17. & 2.11.11. & 3 2.28. & 3.2.3 2. & 3.13.4 & 4.16.13
- 16 And that he might reconcile both vnto God in one body by the Crosse, &c. 3.17.2
- 19 Now therefore, ye are no more strangers and foreiners: but Citizens, &c. 3.25.1
- 20 And are built vpon the foundation of the Apostles and Prophetes, &c. 1.7.2 & 4.2.1. & 4.2.4. & 4.6.5
- 21 In whom all the building coupled together, groweth vnto an holy Temple in the Lord. 3.15.5. & 3.16.2
- 3.2 If ye haue heard of the dispensation of the grace of God, which is giuen me to youward. 4.1.4.2
- 7 Whereof I am made a minister by the gift of the grace of God, &c. 3.22.7
- 10 To the intent, that now vnto principalities, and powers in heauenlic places, &c. 1.1 8.3. & 2.11.12. & 3.24.16
- 12 By whom we haue boldnesse and entrance by confidence, &c. 3. 2.15. & 3. 13.5. & 3.20.12
- 14 For this cause, I bowe my knees vnto the Father of our Lord Iesus Christ. 3. 2.15
- 1; Of whom is named the whole family in heauen and in earth. 2.14.7
- 16 That he might graunt you according to the riches of his glory, that ye may be strengthened, &c. 2.12.5
- 17 That Christ may dwell in your hartes by Faith, &c. 2.9.3. & 2.12.5. & 4.17.5
- 18 That ye being rooted and grounded in loue, may be able to comprehend with all Saintes, &c. 2.12.5. & 3.2.14. & 3. 14.19
- 19 And to know the loue of Christ, which passeth knowledge, &c. 2.12.5

- 3 Induoring to keepe the vnitie of the Spirit in the bond of peace. 4.12. 11. & 4.12.13
- 4 There is one body, and one Spirit, &c. 4.1.3.

The Table.

- 4.1.3.& 4.3.1.& 4.6.10
 5 There is one Lord, one Faith, and one
 baptisme. 1.13.16.& 4.2.5
 7 But vnto euery one of vs is giuen grace,
 &c. 2.15.5.& 3.1.2.& 4.6.10
 8 When he ascended vp on high, he led captiuitie captiue, &c. 1.13.11.& 2.16.16 10 He that descended, is euen the same that ascended far above all heauens, &c.
 2.16.14.& 4.3.2.& 4.6.10
 12 He therefore gaue some to be Apostles, and some to be Prophetes, &c. 4.1.15.5. & 4.3.4.& 4.6.10.& 4.8.12
 12 For the gathering together of the Saintes, that for the workes of the ministerie, &c. 4.1.5
 13 Till we all meete together, in the vnitie of Faith, &c. 4.14.8 14 That we be no more henceforth children, wauering and carried away with euery winde of doctrine, &c. 4.3.1 15 But let vs follow the truth in loue, and in all things grow vp into him, &c. 2.16.
 15. & 3.1.1. & 3.1.3. & 4.3.2. & 4.6.9. &
 4.17.9
 16 By whom all the body being coupled and knit together by euery ioynt, &c. 2.
 13.1.1.& 4.6.9
 17 This I say therefore, and testifie in the Lord, that ye hencefoorth walke not, &c.
 2.3.1
 18 Hauing their cogitation darkened, and being strangers, &c. 2.3.1 20 But you haue not so learned Christ.
 3.2.6.& 3.6.4
 22 That is, that yee cast off, concerning the conuersation in time past, the olde man, &c. 3.3.8.& 3.6.4 23 And be renewed in the Spirit of your minde. 2.1.9 & 2.3.1.& 3.3.8.& 3.7.1 24 And put on the new man, which after God is created, &c. 1.15.4
 23 Neither giue place to the diuel. 1.14.18 28 Let him that stole, steale no more, but let him rather labor, &c. 3.24.10 30 And grieue not the holy spirit of God, by whom, &c. 2.5.8
 5.1 Be ye therefore followers of God as deare children. 3.6.3 2 And walke in loue, euen as Christ hath loued vs, and hath giuen himselfe, &c. 2.
 17.5. & 4.19.23
 6 Let no man deceiue you with vaine
 wordes, for such things, &c. 3.2.27 8 For yee were once darkent'ed, but are now light in the Lord, &c. 3.16.2. & 3.
 24.10
 14 Awake thou that sleepest, and stand vp from the dead, and Christ shall giue thee light. 2.5.19 23 For the husband is the wines head, euen as Christ is the head of the Church,
 &c. 3.6.9.& 4.6.9
 25 And gaue himselfe for it. 4.1.17. &
 4.8.12
 26 That he might sanctifie it, and cleanse,
 &c. 3.3.11. & 3.6.3. & 4.1.13. & 4.15.2.
 & 4.16.22
 27 That he might make it vnto himselfe a glorious Church, not hauing, &c. 3.3.11.
 & 4.1.10
 28 So ought men to loue their wiues as their owne bodies, &c. 4.19.35.
 29 For no man euer yet hated his owne flesh, but nourisheth, and cherisheth it, euen as the Lord doth the Church. 4.
 19.35
 30 For we are members of his bodie, of his flesh, &c. 2.12.2. & 2.12.7. & 3.1.3.
 & 4.17.9
 32 This is a great mysterie, but I speake concerning Christ, and concerning the Church. 4.12.24
 6.1 Children obey your Parentes in the Lord: &c. 2.8.36. & 2.8.38. & 4.20.29
 4 And ye Fathers, prouoke not your children to wrath, &c. 4.20.29 9 Neither is there respect of persons with
 him. 3.23.10
 10 Finally my brethren be strong in the Lord, &c. 2.5.8
 12 For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, &c. 1.14.13. & 1.17.8 13 For this cause, take vnto you the whole armour of God, &c. 1.14.13. & 2.5.11 16 About all take the shielde of Faith, wherewith ye may quench all, &c. 3.2.
 21. & 3.20.21
 18 And pray alway with all manner of prayer and supplication in the Spirit, &c.
 3.20.5. & 3.20.7. & 3.20.12
 19 And for me, that utterance may be gi-uen vnto me: that I may open my mouth boldly, &c. 3.20.20

I. THESSALONIANS.

- 2.18. T Herefore wee would haue come vnto you (I Paul) &c. 1.17.11
 19 For what is our hope, or ioy, or crowne of reioicing? 3.25.10
 3.5 Euen for this cause, when I could no longer forbear, I sent him that I might know of your faith, &c. 3.20.46. & 4.1.6
 12 And the Lord increase you, and make you abound in loue one toward another, &c. 2.5.6
 13 To make your hearts stable, and vnblabelable in holines before god, &c. 3.17.15
 4.3 For this is the will of God, euen your sanctification, &c. 3.16.2
 7 For God hath not called vs vnto uncleannes, but vnto holines. 3.16.2 & 3.19.2. & 3.23.13
 15 For this say we vnto you by the worde of the Lord, that we which liue, and are remaining in the comming of the Lorde, shall not preuent those which sleepe. 3.25.8
 16 For the Lord himselfe shall descende from heauen with a shout, and with the voice of the Archangell, and with the trumpet of God: and the dead in Christ shall first rise. 1.14.8. & 2.16.17
 17 Then shall we which liue and remaine, be caught vp with them also in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the aire: and so shall we be euer with the Lord. 2.16.17
 5.2 For you your selues knowe perfectly, that the day of the Lord shall come, euen as a theefe in the night. 4.19.34
 9 For God hath not appointed vs vnto wrath, but to obtaine saluation by the means of our Lord Iesus Christ. 3.16.2

II THESSALONIANS.

- 1.4 S O that we our selues reioice of you in the Churches of God, because of your patience and faith in all your persecutions and tribulations that ye suffer. 3.2.11
 5 Which is a token of the righteous iudgment of God, that ye may bee counted worthy of the kingdome of God, for the which ye also suffer. 3.2.11. & 3.18.7
 6 For it is a righteous thing with God, to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you. 3.9.6. & 3.18.7. & 3.25.4
 7 And to you which are troubled, rest with vs when the Lord Iesus shall shew himself from heauen with his mightie Angels. 3.18.7
 9 Which shall bee punished with euerslasting perdition, from the presence of the Lord, and from the glorie of his power. 3.25.12
 10 When he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to bee made maruellous in all them that beleue (because our testimonie toward you was beleued) in that day. 3.25.10
 11 Wherefore, wee also pray alwaies for you, that our God may make you worthy of his calling, and fulfill al the good pleasure of his goodnes, and the worke of faith with power. 2.5.8 & 3.2.35
 2.3 Let no man deceiue you by any means, for that day shall not come except there come a departing first, and that that man of sinne be disclosed, euen the son of perdition. 4.9.7
 4 And exalteth himselfe against all that is called God, or that is worshipped, 10

17 In all things it became him to be made like to his brethren, that he might be mercifull, and a faithfull high priest in things concerning God. 2.13.1.& 2.16.2,19

3.14 We bee made partakers of Christ, if we keep sure vnto the end that beginning wherewith we are vpholden. 3.2.16

4.9 There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God. 2.8.29

14 Hauing therefore a great high priest, that hath entred into heauen, euen Iesus the sonne of God, let vs hold this profession. 2.7.2.& 4.4.2.1

15 We haue not a high priest that cannot be touched with the infirmitie of our flesh, but was in all things tempted in like sort, yet without sin. 2.12.1,7.& 2.13.1. and 2.16.12. and 4.17.2.4

16 Let vs approach therefore with boldnes vnto the throne of grace, that we may receiue mercie, and finde grace to helpe at time of need. 3.20.1.2,17

- 9.1 The first Testament had also ordinances of obligation, and a worldly sanctuarie. 4.14.21
- 7 But into the second went the high priest alone once euery yere, nor without blood which he offered for himselfe and for the people. 2.7.17. and 2.15.6
- 8 Whereby the holy Ghost this signified, that the way into the holiest of all, was not yet opened, whilest as yet the first tabernacle was standing. 2.7.17. and 2.15.6
- 9 Wherein were offered gifts and sacrifices that could not make holy, concerning the conscience of him that did serue. 2. 7.17. & 2.11.14. & 4.14.25
- 11 But Christ being come a hie priest of good things to come. 2.16.16. & 4.14.21. and 4.18.2
- 12 Neither by the blood of goats & calves, but by his owne blood entred he once into the holy place. 2.17.4. and 4.18.3
- 13 For if the blood of buls & goats, & the ashes of an heifer sprinkling them that are vncleane, sanctifieth as touching the purification of the flesh. 2.17.4
- 14 How much more shall the blood of Christ, which through the eternall spirite offered himselfe without spot to God, &c. 2.16.6. & 3.16.2. & 4.14.11
- 15 And for this cause he is the Mediator of a new Testament, that through death, &c. 2. 7.17. & 4.17.4
- 16 For where a testament is, there must be the death of him that made the testament 4.18.5
- 22 And all things almost according to the law, was purified by blood, and without shedding of blood there was no remission 2.15.6. & 2.17.4
- 26 But now once in the ende of the world hath he appeared to put away sinne by the sacrifice of himselfe. 4.18.3
- 27 And as it is ordained for men that they shall once die, and after that commeth the iudgement. 2.16.17. & 3.25.8

- 10.1 For the law hauing the shadowe of good things to come, and not the verie image of the things, can neuer with those sacrifices which they offer yecrely, sanctifie the commers thereto. 2.7.16, 17. & 2.
11.4. & 4.14.23
- 2 For would they not then haue ceased to haue bene offered because that the offerers once purged, should haue had no more conscience of sinne. 3.19.15. & 4.
10.3. & 4.14.25
- 4 For the blood of buls and goats cannot take away sin. 4.14.25
- 7 Then I said, lo, I come (in the beginning of the booke it is written of mee) that I should do, O God, thy will. 2.16.5
- 8 Aboue, when he said, sacrifice, and offerings, and burnt offerings, and sinne offerings, thou wouldest not haue, neither hast thou pleasure therein which are offered by the law, &c. 2.16.5
- 10 By the which will we are sanctified, euen by the offering of the bodie of christ once made. 3.6.3. & 4.18.3
- 14 For with once offering hee hath consecrated for euer, those that are sanctified. 3.
5.2. & 4.18.3
- 19 Wherefore brethren, seeing wee haue libertie to enter the holy place through the blood of Iesus. 3.20.20
- 20 By the new and liuing way which hee hath prepared for vs through the vaile, that is, his flesh. 3.20.18
- 26 If we sinne willingly after that we haue receiued the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sin. 3.3.21, 23. & 4.18.3
- 27 But a feareful looking for of iudgment, and violent fire which shall deuoure the aduersaries. 3.25.12
- 29 Of how much more sorer punishment thinke ye, shall he ye worthy, which treadeth vnder foote the son of God, & counteth the blood of the testament as an vnholie thing, wherewith he was sanctified, and doth despise the spirite of grace. 3.3.

25.1
- 3 By faith we vnderstand, that the worlde was made by the worde of God, in such sort, that the things that we see, were not made of things that did appeare. 1.5.13.
& 1.6.1. & 1.16.1
- 6 Without faith it is vnpossible to please him, for hee that commeth to God must beleue that God is, and that he doth reward them that seeke him. 3.11.15. & 3.
14.4 & 3.20.40
- 7 By faith we being warned of God of the things which were as yet not seene, &c. 3.
2.30.
- 9 By faith he abode in the land of promise as a stranger, &c. 2.10.13
- 17 By faith Abraham offered vp Isaac when he was tried, and he that had receiued the promises, offered his only begotten son. 3.19.6
- 21 He worshipped God leaning vpon his staffe. 1.11.15
- 12 3 Consider him therefore that indured such speaking against of sinners least yee should be wearied & faint in your minds. 3.3.15
- 5 And you haue forgotten the exhortation, which speaketh vnto you as vnto children: My sonne, despise not the challe-ning of the Lord, neither faint in thy mind when thou art reprooued of him. 3.4.
32
- 8 For if you be without correction, wherof all are partakers, then are ye bastards and not sons. 3.8.6
- 9 Moreouer, wee haue had the fathers of our bodie, which corrected vs, and we gaue them reuerence, should we not much rather be in subiection vnto the father of spirits, that we might liue? 1.15.2
- 17 For ye know how that after ward when he would haue inherited the blessing, hee was reiected, for he found no place to repent, although he sought the blessing with teares. 3.3.24
